The defendants do not, in support of their aforesaid claim of right, in so far as the same is based solely upon riparian ownership, direct our attention to any decision by the courts of this state which does more than vaguely hint at any possible merit in such a claim. We are, however, referred to a line of decisions by the courts of certain of the older states wherein a qualified right of an upper riparian proprietor to impound the waters of a stream has been recognized. We have examined these cases only to find that they have reference in the main to a mere temporary detention of water by dams during periods of scant flow in order to the uninterrupted operation of mills or water wheels which would otherwise be insufficiently supplied with their usual and expected quantum of water required for their continued activities; the water being presently returned to the stream. Such cases have no bearing upon such an extensive, prolonged, and indefinite storage, withdrawal, and sequestration of the waters which form the usual and ordinary flow of such a stream as the San Joaquin river to the inevitable detriment of not one but all of the lower riparian owners and users of such waters. The asserted right of the defendants herein as riparian owners along said river and incidentally the asserted rights and claims of all those who have appeared herein as amici curiæ claiming similar rights in similar rivers in this state, would, if permitted, put an end to the whole doctrine of riparian rights, not only as to these plaintiffs and all other lower riparian owners similarly situated, but also as to the defendants themselves, since any person or aggregation of persons having the financial ability and acquiring a riparian ownership in lands above those of the defendants along the yet higher reaches of said river would thus become entitled to exercise all the rights which the defendants are here claiming, even against them, with the resultant drying up of the defendants' own reservoirs. Two answers might well be suggested to the claims of the defendants and of their supporting amici curiæ of a present right to thus break down and destroy the long-established doctrine of riparian rights upon the ground of public policy. One of these is to be found in the apt expression of our Chief Justice Shaw in his admirable review of the "Development of the Law of Waters in the West" above referred to, wherein he says:

> "The obvious answer on the question of policy is that the objection comes too late, that it should have been made to the Legislature in 1850, prior to the enactment of the statute adopting the common law. When that was done, the riparian rights became vested, and thereupon the much more important public policy of protecting the right of private property, became paramount and controlling. This policy is declared in our constitutions, has been adhered to throughout our national history, and it is through it that the remarkable progress and development of the country has been made possible."

And the other equally apt answer is to be found in the opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss in the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., supra, wherein that learned jurist said:

> "The riparian owners have a right to have the stream flow past their land in its usual course, and this right, so far as it is of regular occurrence and beneficial to their land is, as we have frequently said, a right of property, 'a parcel of the land itself.' Neither a court nor the Legislature has the right to say that because such water may be more beneficially used by others it may be freely taken by them. Public policy is at best a vague and uncertain guide, and no consideration of policy can justify the taking of private property without compensation. If the higher interests of the public should be thought to require that the water usually flowing in streams of this state should be subject to appropriation in ways that will deprive the riparian proprietor of its benefit, the change sought must be accomplished by the use of the power of eminent domain. The argument that these waters are of great value for the purposes of storage by appropriators and of small value to the lower riparian owners defeats itself. If the right sought to be taken be of small worth, the burden of paying for it will not be great. If, on the other hand, great benefits are conferred upon the riparian lands by the flow, there is all the more reason why these advantages should not without compensation, be taken from the owners of these lands and transferred to others."

The defendants herein, however, make the contention that the foregoing disastrous consequences to the plaintiffs particularly and to the law of riparian rights generally will not occur, for the reason, as they expressly plead and show, the said defendants have entered into a certain original contract and certain supplementary contracts thereto with Miller & Lux, a riparian owner of large tracts of land in the same immediate region as are the lands of these plaintiffs, and that the defendants' obligations under said contracts compel them to a certain limited reservoiring of the waters of said river, dependent upon the consent of their cocontractor and to the making of certain releases and restorations of the said impounded waters to and also at the will of the other party to said agreement. It would be illuminating to quote these contracts in full for the purpose of showing the admissions which this appellant made therein as to the particular lower riparian owner with which it was dealing as to the right of the latter to the full ordinary flow of the waters of said stream; but we deem it sufficient to say at this point in the opinion, with relation to said contracts, that these plaintiffs were not parties thereto or otherwise bound or other than indirectly benefited thereby, and that said contracts between the parties thereto were of course subject to change or even abrogation by the parties thereto at any time, and that without the plaintiffs' concurrence or consent. They cannot, therefore, be held to have their individual rights to require that the waters of said river be permitted to continue to unobstructedly flow as by nature they are wont to do, affected by the existence of private agreements between other riparian owners along said stream to which they were not parties. A further consideration of these contracts may become appropriate at a later point in this opinion.

[13, 14] We have thus disposed, we think, of the assertion by the appellant of a right to reservoir and indefinitely divert and detain the waters of this stream to the extent claimed by it merely as an upper riparian owner to the detriment of the plaintiffs as shown by the evidence in the case and the findings of the trial court sufficiently based thereon. The appellant makes the further claim of right to reservoir, sequester, and eventually use the waters of said river to the full extent of its disclosed plans, in that regard based upon its asserted right so to do as an appropriator of the waters of said stream. Primarily it may be said that, in so far as the rights and claims of the appellant as an appropriator rest upon the contention that the waters in and to the use or diversion of which such rights and claims are asserted are flood or waste waters of said stream, that contention has been fully disposed of by what has been decided in an earlier part of this opinion. In so far as the appellant claims any right arising out of its previous appropriation of the water of said river made under and in conformity with sections 1410 to 1422, inclusive, of the Civil Code relating to the acquisition of waters in this state by appropriation in accordance with the method therein provided, such claim of right is sufficiently disposed of by the numerous decisions of this court which are collated and commented upon in the case of Duckworth v. Watsonville Water Co., 170 Cal. 425, 150 P. 58, wherein Mr. Justice Shaw made the following significant statement:

> "The argument on this point is partly, if not entirely, based on the theory that an appropriation of water, under the Code, constitutes a grant by the state of a right to take the water appropriated, a grant which confers upon the appropriator a title or right to the water superior to private rights, riparian or otherwise, existing at the time of the appropriation. This theory seems to persist in the minds of members of the bar. It finds no support in the decisions of this court. It has long been settled in this state that an appropriation under the Code divests no existing private right, that its effect is merely to give a preference over a subsequent appropriator or diverter who takes under no other right or title, and to fix the date of the posting of the notice as the inception of the claim under it. De Necochea v. Curtis, 80 Cal. 402, 405, 20 P. 563, 22 P. 198; Wells v. Mantes, 99 Cal. 584, 34 P. 324; Alta Land Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 223, 24 P. 645, 20 Am. St. Rep. 217; Cave v. Tyler, 133 Cal. 566, 65 P. 1089; Santa Cruz v. Enright, 95 Cal. 113, 30 P. 197; Frederick v. Dickey, 91 Cal. 358, 27 P. 742; Coonradt v. Hill, 79 Cal. 593, 21 P. 1099; Watterson v. Saldunbehere, 101 Cal. 112, 35 P. 432; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 390, 4 P. 919,

10 P. 674; Palmer v. Railroad Commission, 167 Cal. 163, 138 P. 997."

In the petition for rehearing in the above last-cited case it was particularly insisted that a significant change had been made in section 1410 of the Civil Code by the amendment thereof in 1911, whereby it was claimed the rights of appropriators of waters were greatly enlarged. In disposing of that contention, this court said:

> "It ought not to be necessary to remind any one that a law of this character is not retroactive, or that it cannot operate to divest rights already vested at the time it was enacted. The amendment may possibly be effective as a dedication to general public use of any riparian rights which the state, at the time it was enacted, may still have retained by virtue of its ownership of lands bordering on a stream, rights in the stream which it would in such cases have in common with owners of other abutting land. It could not affect the riparian rights of the other owners, nor the rights of any person or corporation claiming under them, nor rights previously acquired from riparian owners by prescription, nor rights acquired from the state prior to that time by appropriation under the Code, in reliance upon the implied offer of the state to allow its riparian rights to be acquired in that manner, as indicated in the opinion."

In the yet more recent case of San Bernardino v. Riverside, 186 Cal. 7, 198 P. 784, the foregoing views of this court upon this subject were restated and approved.

[15-17] The appellant herein, however, contends that it has gained certain definite additional rights as an appropriator of the waters of said river by virtue of the provisions of the so-called Water Commission Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 1012), and of the various later acts of the Legislature supplementary to or amendatory thereof. In this claim the appellant is quite ardently supported by certain amici curiæ asserting similar enlarged rights to the use of the waters of the various streams of this state having their sources in the high Sierras. Sections 11 and 42 of said act are the portions thereof whereupon the appellant and the amici curiæ who agree with it rely for the asserted right to reservoir and store practically unlimited amounts of the waters of this and other rivers of this state. The portion of section 11 thereof, thus relied upon, reads as follows:

> "All waters flowing in any river, stream, canyon, ravine or other natural channel, excepting so far as such waters have been or are being applied to useful and beneficial purpose upon, or in so far as such waters are or may be reasonably needed for useful, and beneficial purposes upon lands riparian thereto, or otherwise appropriated, is and are hereby declared to be public waters of the state of California and subject to appropriation in accordance with the provisions of this act. If any portion of the waters of any stream shall not be put to a useful or beneficial purpose to or upon lands riparian to such stream for any continuous period of ten consecutive years after the passage of this act, such non-application shall be deemed to be conclusive presumption that the use of such portions of the waters of such stream is not needed upon said riparian lands for any useful or beneficial purpose; and such portion of the waters of any stream so non-applied, unless otherwise appropriated for a useful and beneficial purpose is hereby declared to be in the use of the state and subject to appropriation in accordance with the provisions of this act."

In so far as the foregoing portion of said section of said act is concerned it would seem to have no application to the facts of the instant case, since, as we have seen, the trial court has found upon what we deem sufficient evidence that all of the waters flowing in the San Joaquin river down to and upon and over the lands of the plaintiffs herein have been and are being applied to useful and beneficial purposes upon the plaintiffs' said lands riparian thereto, and have been so applied by them for more than ten consecutive years last past. It follows that such waters are not the proper subject of appropriation under the express terms of said section of said act. Section 42 of said act reads as follows:

> "The word 'water' in this act shall be construed as embracing the term 'or use of water'; and the term 'or use of water' in this act shall be construed as embracing the word 'water.' Whenever the terms stream, stream system, lake or other body of water or water occurs in this act, such term shall be interpreted to refer only to surface water, and to subterranean streams flowing through known and definite channels. But nothing in this act shall be construed as giving or confirming any right, or title, or interest to or in the corpus of any water; provided, that the term 'useful or beneficial purposes' as used in this act shall not be construed to mean the use in any one year of more than two and one-half acre feet of water per acre in the irrigation of uncultivated areas of land not devoted to cultivated crops."

It is the contention of appellant herein and its supporting amici curiæ that the concluding clause in the section above quoted expressly so limits the language of section 11 thereof above referred to in respect to the term "useful or beneficial purposes," used therein, as to confine riparian owners using the waters of the rivers and streams of this state for the irrigation of uncultivated areas of their said lands "not devoted to cultivated crops" to the use in any one year of not to exceed 2½ acre feet of water per acre of their said riparian lands. The only possible theory upon which the Legislature of this state could be conceded to be empowered to arrogate to itself the right to determine what are the "useful and beneficial purposes" to which lands held in private ownership shall be devoted or to which those riparian rights, which are an integral part and parcel of such lands and which are already vested rights, shall be limited in their use and enjoyment to the extent declared in the above-quoted concluding clauses of section 42 of said Water Commission Act, is that put forward by certain of the amici curiæ herein to the effect that such an arrogated act of legislation is justifiable as a proper exercise of the police power of the state. It may be conceded that the phrase "police power of the state" has, as to its scope and meaning, been subjected to a quite severe strain of recent years in the endeavor to so expand it as to cover all sorts of legislation sought to be enacted in the asserted interest of modern progress, but we have yet to be referred to a case wherein it has been judicially so far expanded as to invest the legislative department of this state with arbitrary power to destroy vested rights in private property when such rights are being exercised and such property is being employed in the useful and in nowise harmful production of wealth, and when such use and the product thereof cannot be said or shown to be inimical to public health or morals or to the general welfare, but, on the contrary, must be conceded to be beneficial to each and all of these. The use to which the owners of lands contiguous to a river devote its soil by the aid of the waters of such river in the annual production of crops or cattle is such a use. The extent to which such riparian landowners need and use and are entitled to have the benefit of the flow and overflow of such waters under their vested riparian rights therein is a matter which depends upon the circumstances of each particular case; upon location, aridity, rainfall, soil porosity, responsiveness, adaptability to particular forms of production, and many other elements, which render the question essentially one for judicial inquiry and determination in all cases involving the proper use of water upon both cultivated and uncultivated areas. To concede that the state Legislature has the right arbitrarily to fix as to the latter the amount of water which the riparian proprietor may take and use thereon would be to concede an equal power to make a like arbitrary fixation in respect to cultivated areas also, entirely regardless of the foregoing elements which are necessarily the determining factors in such fixation. To concede this would be to concede to the legislative department of the state government the arbitrary power to destroy vested rights in private property of every kind and character.

In the case of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, this court had under consideration the extent to which the state had attempted to invest the said commission under the Water Commission Act above referred to with judicial power to determine what is and what is not water subject to appropriation under the terms of said act. In the main opinion, holding that such a question would be a judicial question which said commission could be invested with no power to decide, Mr. Justice Sloane said:

> "What is unappropriated water is a constantly fluctuating question, depending upon the seasonal flow of the stream, the annual rainfall, the forfeiture of prior appropriations and default in the use of riparian rights. To conclude the rights of would-be appropriators by the extrajudicial and perhaps arbitrary action of a board of water commissioners would be to deprive such applicant of a valuable property right without due process of law."

In a concurring opinion, Mr. Chief Justice Shaw, approving this conclusion, states in apt and terse sentences, enforced by ample citation of authority, that the effect of section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution is to vest in the courts the entire judicial power of the state, and that it is not within the power of the Legislature to vest in any other state body any general judicial power to establish and declare the right and title to private property. If this be true, it must be equally and obviously true that, whatever of judicial power the Legislature cannot confer upon agencies of its own creation, other than courts, it cannot arrogate to itself the right to exercise. It is to be noted as highly significant in this immediate connection that the numerous amici curiæ who have presented briefs upon this appeal are in quite radical and vigorous disagreement as to the proper basis of the appellant's asserted rights in the premises. The appellant claims the right to invoke public policy and the police powers of the state in aid of its project for the sequestration of the waters of the San Joaquin river to the full extent of such proposed sequestration, and lays claim to this right both as a riparian owner and as an appropriator of the waters of said stream. The Attorney General of this state appears as amicus curiæ herein to assert that the public interest is directly opposed to the extension of the riparian right so as to include the storage of waters, and that to accord the appellant that right to anything like the extent of its asserted claim would destroy the basis of rights on which much present development in this state depends, and render insecure the basis of rights for much future development. In this insistence the Attorney General is joined by the United States Bureau of Reclamation and by the Irrigation District Association of California, embracing a score or more of the districts of this state. The latter, however, while insisting that the right of storage of these waters should be denied to the appellant as a riparian owner, argues that such right should be allowed to it as an appropriator where such diversion will not result in injury to lower riparian owners. The James J. Stevinson Company, a corporation, and an extensive owner of lower riparian lands upon said river, appears as amicus curiæ to protest against the exercise of the asserted rights of the appellant to the diversion and storage of the waters of said stream either as a riparian owner or as an appropriator, and to urge that the state possesses no power to enact legislation such as that attempted by the Water Commission Act, which would have the effect of destroying already vested rights of riparian owners as established by this court in Lux v. Haggin, supra, and since repeatedly reaffirmed in the cases already cited in this opinion. Certain other public utility power companies appear by eminent counsel to uphold in its entirety the claim of the appellant. "When doctors disagree, who shall decide" as to where the public interest and public welfare lie? Or who shall venture to say that these lie altogether on the side of those quasi public corporations or associations, which, while fulfilling certain public utility functions, are nevertheless organized primarily for private gain, as against the lesser material interests. but not less vitally important vested rights, in private property, in the other scale of the balance? If the state were here essaying to uphold an effort on its part to work out impartially, unselfishly and in the interests of the whole people some general plan or system for the equitable adjustment of rights and uses in its flowing streams with a view to the conservation, development, and distribution of the dynamic forces and generative and fertilizing fructibilities of their waters, it might well be argued that public policy, public interest, and a most liberal interpretation of the police powers of the state might rightfully be invoked in support of such an effort. But can the same be properly said or claimed in a case wherein one or many privately owned and operated institutions, organized primarily for personal and private gain, and only incidentally and secondarily assuming to act in the public interest and welfare, are engaged in controversies in the courts with other private individuals or associations over the asserted and disputed property rights and interests of each of the respective parties to such controversies? We do not feel called upon in this case to so declare.

[18] It is further urged by the appellant herein. and also by certain amici curiæ having identical aims and interests to those of the said appellant, that, because of the fact that this appellant is a lessee and licensee of the United States government, which is the owner of certain of the lands through which the San Joaquin river and its tributaries flow, and on which are or will be located certain of the reservoirs and storage systems now in course of construction or contemplated by it, and because of the fact that the San Joaquin river is a navigable stream, and because the United States government in aid of commerce is in control of all navigable rivers, and because of the fact that the United States government has not only in the past expended large sums of money in the improvement of navigation along the lower reaches of said river but has in more recent years adopted the act of Congress known as the Federal Water Power Act (41 U. S. Stats. at Large, 1063 [U. S. Comp. St. § 9992¼ et seq.]), which said act was intended, among its other purposes, to promote the improvement of navigation upon and along navigable rivers, and because under the provisions of said act and in aid of the administration thereof the appellant has been granted leases and licenses to enter upon, occupy, and use the said lands of the United States and to construct, operate, and maintain thereon a large portion of its contemplated system of reservoirs and storage plants for the purpose of conserving and storing the waters of said river and of thereby developing and transmitting electric power, that said appellant in so doing will be exercising and carrying forward the plans and purposes of the United States government in aid of the navigation of said river, and that in so doing it is in the rightful possession of rights and powers superior to those possessed and claimed by the plaintiffs as lower riparian owners along said stream. In aid of the foregoing assertion of the appellant herein, it may be stated that the Attorney General of the United States has authorized the presentation by oral argument and by briefs as amicus curiæ of the views of that department of the federal government in support of the appellant's aforesaid claims.

We do not deem it necessary in this case to consider or attempt to determine what the full powers and rights of the United States government may be by virtue of the fact that it continues to be the owner of public lands along the upper reaches of navigable rivers and their tributaries beyond the point of their possible or practical navigability. It will suffice for the purposes of the present case to state that the findings of the trial court disclose that the United States government has neither expressly nor by any fair or reasonable implication undertaken to transfer to the appellant herein any right or authority to exercise whatever rights or powers the federal government may possess or be entitled to exercise in aid of navigation upon said river; nor does it appear therefrom, nor was it made to appear by any evidence in the case, that the proposed plans and projects of the appellant for the sequestration, storage and use of the waters of said stream would be in any degree in aid of navigation. On the contrary, the evidence in the case disclosed that the appellant's proposed sequestration and storage of said waters contemplated the diversion from said river of a very large quantum of its waters, that such sequestration thereof was to continue for long and indefinite periods of time, regardless of the seasonal flow of said river, and that certain large and important units of its said proposed reservoir and storage systems were to be cyclic. It further appeared by both the pleadings and evidence offered by the appellant itself that it was under certain contracts with Miller & Lux Corporation, a very large lower riparian owner of said stream and user of the waters thereof for irrigation and other uses, not to return the said waters when finally released by it to said river in aid of navigation, but to deliver the same to the other party to said contracts in furtherance of its private and particular uses thereof as such riparian proprietor along said stream. Under such a state of the record we utterly fail to perceive upon what possible theory the appellant herein can predicate its asserted right as the lessee and licensee of the federal government to a superior use of the waters of said river as in aid of navigation.

Finally, the appellant herein has pleaded and attempted to prove an estoppel on the part of the plaintiffs to interfere with the appellant's alleged project and plans for the construction of its proposed system of reservoirs and storage plants upon the upper reaches of said river and its tributaries arising out of their laches in the assertion of their right to the injunctive processes of the courts if such right they ever had. We do not deem it necessary in this already much extended opinion to go into the details of the appellant's averments and proofs in support of its said plea of estoppel further than to say that the findings and conclusions of the trial court sufficiently dealt with said matter, and that such findings and conclusions were fully supported by the evidence in the case. The trial court found that, as to the appellant's constructive work upon the Huntington Lake reservoir and also upon the Shaver Lake reservoir, and as to the amount of water inpounded in each of these, the plaintiffs had estopped themselves by laches from asserting the present right to enjoin the maintenance and use of these two reservoirs to the extent of the appellant's past and present utilization of the same and of the waters stored or to be stored therein; but that, as to the other and as yet uncompleted and unused units of its reservoir and storage system, no such estoppel had been shown. As to the former two reservoirs, the trial court exempted them and the appellant's use thereof from the terms of its judgment, and from its action in so doing the plaintiffs have taken no appeal. With respect to the appellant's contention and attempted showing that the plaintiffs had not come into the court of equity with clean hands, we entirely agree with the trial court that there was and is no merit in said contention; nor do we deem it necessary to further elaborate upon other points urged by the appellant and by certain of the amici curiæ in support of this appeal.

The main propositions advanced herein have been given full consideration, and, for the reasons educed in the course of such consideration, it is ordered that the judgment herein be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SULLIVAN, J.

SHENK, J. I dissent. The decision in this case is important because of its effect generally upon the conservation of the waters of the state. The main opinion, it seems to me, will result in checking the progress of the state of California in conserving this most important natural resource. It unnecessarily pulls the teeth of the Water Commission Act. In order to have the beneficial use of less than 1 per cent. of the maximum flow of the San Joaquin river on their riparian lands, the plaintiffs are contending for the right to use the balance in such a way that, so far as they are concerned, over 99 per cent. of that flow is wasted. This is a highly unreasonable use or method of the use of water. The opinion not only supports the plaintiffs in that contention, but invalidates sections 11 and 42 of the Water Commission Act, which constitute an endeavor on the part of the state to gather unto itself the waters of the state not used for a reasonably beneficial purpose and make them available for appropriation and use by the state and its inhabitants. It also supports the riparian proprietor in what may be called a vested right to an unreasonable use of water as against an appropriator. It perpetuates the doctrine to that effect announced before the adoption of the Water Commission Act, one of the purposes of which unquestionably was to abrogate the former rule. It affirms the rule laid down in Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 P. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, where it was said that, as between a riparian owner and an appropriator, the riparian owner is not limited in his use of the water by any measure of reasonableness. That case was decided in 1909 before the adoption of the Water Commission Act in 1913. In section 11 of that act the Legislature has provided that all waters flowing in any river, except in so far as the same are or may be reasonably needed for useful and beneficial purposes upon lands riparian thereto or otherwise appropriated, are declared to be public waters of the state and subject to appropriation in accordance with the provisions of the act. In section 42 it is provided that the term "useful or beneficial purpose," as used in the act, shall not be construed to mean the use in any one year of more than 2½ acre feet of water per acre in the irrigation of uncultivated areas of land not devoted to cultivated crops. These statutory provisions are in line with the declared policy of the state. In Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 135, 211 P. 11, 15, it was said that "the declared policy of this state

[is] to require the highest and greatest duty of water because of the immense importance to the state of the economical use of water," and, as stated in Antioch v. Williams Irr. Dist., 188 Cal. 451, at page 461, 205 P. 688, 693:

> "It may without exaggeration be said that the full use of the waters of the rivers and mountain streams for irrigation, power and like beneficial purposes, is absolutely necessary to the continued growth and prosperity of the state."

The rule that limits the right to the use of water to that which is reasonably necessary for beneficial purposes is now general throughout the Western states, and prevails in this state except as between a riparian owner and an appropriator. The rule of reason in the conservation and use of water has been applied as between appropriators California, etc., Co. v. Madera, etc., Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 P. 718. It has been applied to the owners of underground water or percolating waters. Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 138, 70 P. 663, 74 P. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35. It has been applied to riparian owners as between themselves. Harris v. Harrison, 93 Cal. 676, 681, 29 P. 325; So. Cal. Inv. Co. v. Wilshire, 144 Cal. 68, 77 P. 767; Turner v. James Canal Co., 155 Cal. 82, 95, 99 P. 520, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401, 132 Am. St. Rep. 59, 17 Ann. Cas. 823. Since the declaration of this court that the measure of reasonableness in the use of water did not apply as between a riparian proprietor and an appropriator, the state, through the Water Commission Act, has in my judgment, brought the riparian owner within the rule of reasonable use. The Legislature has the right in the first instance to prescribe the standards of beneficial use and reasonable necessity that may be applied to the use of water. If those standards be unreasonable in their entirety or in any given case they may be tested in a judicial proceeding by any party aggrieved, just as police regulations with reference to the ownership of other kinds of property may be tested. Village of Euclid, Ohio, v. Ambler Realty Co., 47 S. Ct. 114, 71 L. Ed. ——. The main opinion brushes aside sections 11 and 42 as an arbitrary usurpation of power by the state resulting in interference with and destruction of vested rights. The state of Oregon, by a similar legislative enactment, has limited the right of the riparian owner to the use of that quantity of water which is actually applied to a beneficial use, in the adoption of its "Water Code" in 1909. In upholding the validity of that provision of the act, the Supreme Court of Oregon said:

> "No one has any property in the water itself but a simple usufruct. It was within the province of the Legislature, by the act of 1909, to define a vested right of a riparian owner, or to establish a rule as to when and under what condition and to what extent a vested right should be deemed to be created in a riparian proprietor." In re Hood River, 114 Or. 112, 181, 227 P. 1065, 1087.

The state of Washington also has restricted the riparian owner to reasonable use when in conflict with an appropriator. In the case of Brown v. Chase, 125 Wash. 542, 217 P. 23, the court said that, where the supply of water in a stream is more than ample for all possible riparian uses, the presumption is that the diversion by a nonriparian user will not injure any riparian right.

In 1850 the Legislature provided that the common law of England should be the rule of decision in all of the courts of this state in so far as it was not inconsistent with or repugnant to the state and federal constitutions and laws of this state. Stats. 1850, p. 219. This provision was codified in 1872. Pol. Code, § 4468. One of the characteristics of the common law is that it contains within itself its own repealer; that is to say, it changes as conditions change and adapts itself to new conditions, ex proprio vigore. It should be applied to our conditions when our conditions are similar to those out of which the common law arose, but, when the common law is not applicable, because of different conditions, it should not be applied. 1 Kinney on Irrigation, §§ 509, 510; Motl v. Boyd (Tex. Sup.) 286 S. W. 458. In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 P. 919, 10 P. 674, the common-law doctrine of riparian rights was applied to water rights in this state. But the conditions prevailing over 40 years ago when that case was decided were far different from the conditions existing at the present time when the growth and prosperity of the state are so dependent upon the proper conservation of the excess waters of its rivers by storage for irrigation and power uses. That the common law, by its own principle, adapts itself to varying conditions and modifies its rules so as to subserve the ends of present requirements was recognized and decided in 1903 in the case of Katz v. Walkinshaw, supra. Rights to the use of real property, heretofore deemed vested, have been curtailed in the interest of the public welfare. It is axiomatic that all property is owned and possessed subject to reasonable regulations under the police power. There is nothing peculiar to a riparian right, which is part of the parcel of land itself, that should exclude it from proper limitations in the interest of the people of the state. It is difficult to conceive of a question more intimately connected with the present and future industrial and economic development of the state than the conservation of the excess waters of its great rivers. The immediate question involved in this case is: How may the waters in excess of the reasonable requirements of the riparian owners be taken and put to a beneficial use? This question the state has endeavored to solve, at least in its initiatory stage, by the adoption of the Water Commission Act.

Citation of authority would seem to be unnecessary to support the proposition that no one may acquire a vested right to waste water in any form. That precise statement was made in the case of Eden Irrigation Co. v. District Court, 61 Utah, 103, 211 P. 957, in the following language:

> "Let it be remembered that no one can acquire a vested right to waste water in any form. In this arid country water is life and may not be wasted. In this connection it is of the utmost importance to remember that no one can acquire an absolute title to water as he can to other property. A person having absolute title to property generally may ordinarily waste it, destroy it, or permit it to go to decay and become utterly useless at his pleasure. This he may not do with water."

Abundant authority to the same effect could be cited. The asserted right of a riparian owner in this state to have the waters of a river flow over or past his land, regardless of the reasonableness of the use or the benefit that such use may be to him, should therefore not be confirmed, especially when such use results in a needless waste and the deprivation of the rights of the state and of those who would use such waters for beneficial purposes under the authority of the state. The case of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, cited in the main opinion in support of the holding that sections 11 and 42 are void, did not purport to decide that the Legislature was without power to safeguard the waters of the state from wastefulness and dissipation by the adoption of proper regulations. What that case did decide was that it was not competent for the Legislature to confer upon the state water commission arbitrary power to refuse applications to appropriate waters in conformity with the provisions of the act. The power there sought to be exercised by the comsion, as pointed out in the concurring opinion, was the exercise of a judicial function which it was not competent for the Legislature to confer upon the commission. The sections of the act nullified by the main opinion do not attempt to confer judicial power on the commission. They merely declare the standards of beneficial use to be adhered to unless set aside when subjected to proper judicial test, and there is nothing in this case to indicate that those standards are unreasonable.

As to the particular facts in this case: The appellant is both a riparian owner and an appropriator on the upper reaches of the San Joaquin river. The plaintiffs are the owners of some 18,000 acres of land bordering on the river below. This tract is an uncultivated area of grazing land, not devoted to cultivated crops. In the spring and early summer it is inundated by the waters of the river to such an extent that as such waters flow down the valley they resemble a moving lake. During that season of the year the flow amounts to from 10,000 to 20,000 cubic feet of water per second. The court found that a constant flow of 180 cubic feet per second from April 1 to October 1 of each year would irrigate the lands of the plaintiffs if the same were prepared for intensive cultivation.

> "The amount of water sufficient to cover the ground 2½ feet deep is generally considered plenty if beneficially used; therefore, one second foot should, it has been said, be sufficient to irrigate one hundred to two hundred acres." Weil on Water Rights (3d Ed.) p. 522, citing Hough v. Porter, 51 Or. 318, 95 P. 732, 98 P. 1083, 102 P. 728.

The amount found by the court to be sufficient was therefore no more, and, in fact, was less, than the statute declares may be used for beneficial purposes. In the face of that finding and notwithstanding its admitted support in the evidence, the opinion proceeds to declare said sections of the statute nugatory.

The plaintiffs do not pretend to use or to be able to use the great volume of water that flows by their land on to San Francisco bay in the sense that the term "use of water" is ordinarily employed, namely, for the purpose of sinking into or moistening the soil of their lands. The use they demand is to employ this tremendous flow as a booster or a means of conveyance or of transportation to lift the very small percentage of the flow so useful to them to and over their pasture lands. A more extavagant or wasteful use of water could not be well imagined. Two and one-half acre feet of water is more than annually sinks into their lands. The balance is excess as to them, and, so far as they are concerned, passes on to the sea and is utterly wasted. This waste is not only contrary to the statutory regulation, but it works an injustice to the state which is endeavoring to conserve such waters for useful and beneficial uses by appropriators under the laws of the state.

The main opinion stresses the fact that the court found that the proposed use of the waters of the river by the appellant was and is unreasonable as against the plaintiffs, and that the use by the plaintiffs of the entire flow of the river was necessary to the enjoyment of their riparian right, and that therefore this court is bound by those findings. It may be conceded that the question of reasonableness is usually one of fact for the determination of the trial court, but it is also true that, when the facts found in the light of the evidence disclose a use or a method of use of water that is so excessive and wasteful as to be palpably unreasonable, a question of law is then presented. 40 Cyc. 563. The conclusion of the trial court that the storage plans and enterprise of the appellant will result in an unreasonable use of the waters of the river, and the further conclusion that the natural flow of the river is necessary for the plaintiffs' purposes, are predicated upon the continuance of the present status. Claim for the continuance of that status on the part of the plaintiffs is so unreasonable as to render their position inequitable and to justify the denial of the absolute injunction granted in this case. It would seem that the impounding of the waters by the appellant as proposed could only result in an equalization of the flow of the river with a constant release of sufficient water to develop the contiguous valley to a high state of cultivation and to the ultimate benefit of plaintiffs' lands. In fact it has been said, as to the overflow waters in this locality in the spring and early summer season, that "at such times the San Joaquin river itself is carrying an abundance of water, the excess waters are not needed and are not used, and are rather a detriment than a benefit to the landowners." Miller & Lux v. Enterprise, etc., Co., 169 Cal. 415, 420, 147 P. 567, 569.

If it be assumed that the plaintiffs would suffer detriment in being deprived of the use of such excess waters, wasteful though it be, and if it be assumed that it would not be necessary to reduce that detriment to damnum absque injuria, still the absolute injunction should not be granted. Such detriment would seem to be no more than the cost to the plaintiffs of conforming to a same program of conservation by the construction of necessary diversion works. The court found that such preparation would entail a large expenditure of money, but it did not find the amount that would be required. The cause should at least be remanded for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of that expenditure. In other words, whatever present detriment might accrue to the plaintiffs by reason of being deprived of the lifting facilities afforded by the flow in excess of what they reasonably need should be ascertained. The fact that the appellant possesses the power of eminent domain is not a justification for the injunction as ordered. That the appellant has that right supports the view that the trial court in this proceeding and in the injunction order itself could adequately provide for compensation to the plaintiffs for the damage suffered, if any. In such a case, when—> "the court can arrive in terms of money at the loss which plaintiff has sustained, an absolute injunction should not be granted, but an injunction conditional merely upon the failure of the defendant to make good the damage which results from its work. * * * The defendant in effect would be held to be damaging private property without just compensation first made to the owner, and, failing to make such compensation, should be enjoined from further damage. For, as was said by this court in Montecito Valley v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 177 P. 1113, in a case similar to this, 'a prohibitory injunction should only be granted if any and all other forms of relief should be found inadequate.'" Newport v. Temescal Water Co., 149 Cal. 531, 87 P. 372, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098.

In a condemnation proceeding, the court could arrive in terms of money at the loss which the plaintiffs would sustain, and no good reason appears why it may not do so in this proceeding.

I am of the opinion that sections 11 and 42 of the Water Commission Act constitute valid regulations in the interest of the conservation of the waters of the state; that, as between a riparian owner and an appropriator of water, the rule of reasonable use should apply to the one the same as to the other; that the Water Commission Act has properly established that rule, and that this court should hold in harmony with the legislative declaration when such declaration, as here, appears to be just and reasonable in recognition of the vested riparian right; that the appellant, as an appropriator of water, has the right of storage, and should have its reasonable exercise of that right, balanced only against the reasonable exercise by the plaintiffs of their riparian right; that the plaintiffs should not be upheld in their insistence that the present wasteful use or method of use of waters of the river shall continue; and that, in any event, the method of procedure suggested in Newport v. Temescal Water Co., supra, at page 538, should be adopted, viz. that of requiring the trial court in the exercise of the equity power its possesses to find the damage, if any, suffered by the plaintiffs and under the prayer of the appellant for general relief make the "injunction conditional merely upon the failure of the defendant to make good the damage." In that way the extensive project undertaken by the appellant need not be stopped, the preference and other lawful rights of the plaintiffs would be protected, and the state be not impeded in working out its highly important task of conserving the waters of the state for this and coming generations. That such is the duty of the state can admit of no doubt. Its purpose to that end is commended and urged by the Attorney General of the United States, the Attorney General of California, the attorney for the state division of water rights, and counsel for numerous irrigation districts appearing as amici curiæ herein. It seems to me that the appropriate opportunity to interpret the laws of the state in harmony with present day requirements as contemplated by the statute is presented in the case at bar.

80 Cal. App. 641

PHILLIPS v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 3126.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 12, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 10, 1927.)

1. Street railroads ⟹90(2)—Speed of street car which could not be stopped within 250 feet after collision held negligent.

Evidence that street car could not be stopped within 250 feet after accident in residence section of city held to show negligence, in action against street railway company by automobile driver who collided with street car while attempting to pass another automobile at night.

2. Street railroads ⟹112(3)—Street railway has burden of proving contributory negligence.

In action against street railway for injuries in collision between street car and automobile, burden of proving contributory negligence was on defendants.

3. Street railroads ⟹117(26)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver colliding with street car at night in attempt to pass another automobile held for jury.

In action against street railway for injuries in collision between street car and plaintiff's automobile, occurring at night, as plaintiff attempted to pass another automobile, contributory negligence held for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by Frank Phillips against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and E. E. Morris, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.
Ford, Bodkin, Watt & Herlihy, and H. L. Watt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant for damages sustained by him in a collision between his automobile and a street car operated by defendants. The defendants have appealed from the judgment.

The collision occurred on Holt avenue in the city of Pomona. Holt avenue runs east and west. There is a single street car line along the street in the south half thereof. It was stipulated by the parties "that from the south rail of the street car track to the south curb of Holt avenue was 25 feet 6 inches, and that the distance from the north rail of said track to the north curb line of Holt avenue is 37 feet, and that it is 5 feet between the rails." On either said of the street, between the curb and the sidewalk there is a row of large pepper trees. Street cars are run along the track in both directions. The collision occurred about 9 o'clock in the evening, May 5, 1923. Four automobiles were going east long the south side of the avenue, plaintiff being in the rear, driving a Ford touring car. Ahead of them, coming from the east, was the defendants' street car. Plaintiff attempted to pass to the left of the automobile ahead of him, and in doing so came into collision with the street car. His automobile was wrecked, and he was seriously injured. The plaintiff testified:

"I had not driven along Holt avenue prior to the collision, but I had crossed Holt avenue. * * * I was traveling between 15 and 18 miles per hour. * * * At that time I did not notice that there was only a single railroad track on Holt avenue. I saw one automobile ahead of me. * * * I was driving directly behind the car that was in front of me. This car was about 6 feet south of the railroad track. Another automobile came along and passed me. * * * It came out onto the street car track, and it then passed the car that was in front of me. At this time I gradually came up on the car that was in front, and I followed the other car around the car that was in front of me. I was approximately 40 feet behind the car that passed me. It was a Buick. * * * touring car, and had a top on it. * * * The first time I saw the street car this Buick dodged off the track, and there was a light coming rapidly towards me, and I tried to get off the street car track, but the street car struck me. * * * I attempted to dodge it. * * * I did not know then what it was. * * * The lights on my automobile were burning at the time of the accident. * * * I had been driving several blocks on Holt avenue before the accident, at least three or four blocks. I drove right along by the street car track. I saw the street car track. When I drove out onto the track to pass the car ahead of me I saw the track then, and I supposed it was a railroad or street car track. * * * After I got on the track, I drove along the track, and I traveled about 75 feet before the collision occurred. * * * I hadn't yet passed the other car that I had been following. I was right up to it. Probably the front end of my car was even with the back end of his (Mitchell's car) at the time of the accident, or probably a little bit further than that. A man named Mitchell was driving the car I was passing. * * * As I traveled on the railroad track I was astride the south rail. * * * The street car was lighted. I saw a light. I suppose it was the headlight I saw. * * * I didn't know cars run on those tracks. * * * I did not see any lights at the top of the street car. I didn't have time to look very much. * * * I did not see the street car before I drove on the track. I did not make any effort to ascertain whether or not a street car was coming before I drove on the track. I didn't expect a street car on that side. I don't remember that I saw the tracks before I drove on. * * * I looked straight ahead, and there was an automobile ahead of me. * * * The reason I could not see the street car was because the automobile was immediately ahead of me. The large Buick automobile was ahead of me on the street car tracks at that time. * * * I did not know it was a single track."

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

G. V. Moser testified that "the street car was going over 30 anyway, not less;" that the plaintiff's automobile was thrown or carried to a point about 80 feet west of the place of the collision; that he measured the distance from the point of collision tc the place where the street car stopped after the collision, and that it is 250 feet; that plaintiff "was traveling directly straddle of the south rail"; that the street car had one headlight, and the lights were on inside of the car. "They were very dim. They are never very bright. * * * The street car had just one headlight. It was rather dim. The headlight was approximately as high from the street as an automobile light would be." Other witnesses for plaintiff corroborated the testimony given by plaintiff and Moser. One of them gave the distance from the point of the accident to the place where the street car stopped as 265 to 275 feet. Another witness testified that he was driving west on Holt avenue at the time of the accident, traveling at the rate of 23 to 25 miles an hour, when the street car passed him, and that thereafter he "traveled * * * about 100 feet when the accident happened, and the car had traveled 500 or 600 feet while I was traveling 100 feet." While the estimate of this witness is doubtless erroneous, from his testimony together with that of other witnesses including the distance the car traveled befor coming to a stop, the jury was justified in finding that the street car was running at an excessive speed.

The motorman, who is one of the defendants, testified:

> "I was at that time operating a one-man car that was going westerly on Holt avenue at the time of the accident. * * * We had on this car straight air brakes with emergency features. * * * An emergency application of air on the wheels will slide. * * * I realized that an accident was about to take place just as it took place. I was then about 20 feet from the automobile. Prior to that I had been sitting down. I was coasting; the power was off. * * * When I realized there was going to be a collision, the first thing I did was to apply the emergency application of the air. * * * I have traveled over the street a good deal. * * * If the automobile turned out at all off the track before the collision it was right at the time of the collision. I noticed automobiles on the street at that time, and * * * I think there was about four. There was no automobile between me and Mr. Phillips. He turned right out behind the rear car. I did not see any large touring car in front of him. I was looking straight ahead down the track. * * * I didn't see any automobile turn off from in front of Mr. Phillips. * * * I saw some automobiles driving in an easterly direction. * * * They were south of the track. They were following each other. * * * I am positive they were all off the track when I first saw them. I only saw one automobile on the track, and that was the plaintiff's. * * * When the car came to a stop the brakes were set. * * * I would say from my experience as a motorman that a street car of that type, going at the rate of 15 miles an hour, under the conditions that existed there at that time, after the emergency brakes were applied, would go 80 feet. There were pepper leaves on the track that night. They kept blowing on the track there all the time. I knew that. I had experience prior to that as to what effect they would have on the brakes of the car. I knew it made it more difficult to stop with the pepper leaves on the track. * * * There was no fog that night. * * * The street is rather dark along there on account of the pepper trees. The pepper trees are so large that they reach clear out into the streets so the leaves drop on the track. They extend about half way into the street. * * * I operate along there daily and when there are pepper leaves on the track. * * * The automobiles were going at a moderate rate of speed. * * * I don't know how fast the automobile was going that was in the collision. * * * It was going a little bit faster to be able to try to get around, but it didn't get around. * * * My headlight was burning, and the car was lighted inside. There are also two red lights just below the roof, directly in front of and just below the roof. * * * The two red lights on the front of the street car were lighted that night. * * * After the accident, I walked back over where the automobile was, and saw where I had slid on the rail. * * * I could feel the brakes take hold. They took hold right at the place. Approximately right at the time."

[1] Appellants ask for a reversal of the judgment on two grounds: First, that the evidence does not show that the defendants were guilty of any negligence; second, that the evidence conclusively shows that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. It is clear from the evidence herein set out that it is sufficient to warrant the inference that, under the circumstances shown, the street car was running at an excessive rate of speed. It is certainly negligence to run a street car through a residence section of a city at such a rate of speed that it cannot be brought to a standstill, under known conditions, within a distance short of 250 feet, and the jury may have reasonably inferred from the evidence that but for such excessive speed the plaintiff would have safely passed the automobile ahead of him.

[2, 3] The burden of proving contributory negligence was on the defendants. "It is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown." Seller v. Market-Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 271, 72 P. 1006; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 241, 116 P. 513; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 343, 208 P. 125; Rosenbloom v. Southern Pacific Co., 59 Cal. App. 102, 111, 210 P. 53; Wing v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 41 Cal. App. 251, 257, 182 P. 969. In attempting to pass the automobile ahead of him, plaintiff was at all times on the south half of the street. It is unusual for a single street car track to be placed so far to one side of the center line of the street as that in question here was placed. The plaintiff did not know that it was a single track line, and, therefore, did not expect to meet a street car traveling west upon it. By reason of that assumption, he did not look for an approaching car. The Buick automobile in front of him hid the street car from his view. Had there been a double line of tracks in the street, plaintiff's acts would not have been negligent. Under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was negligent, but the question was one of fact for the jury. The case is somewhat analogous to that of Wing v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., supra. That was an action to recover damages for personal injuries received while crossing a spur track which was under construction, after having safely crossed the main tracks of the defendant. The court said:

> "The reasonable construction of plaintiff's entire testimony is that, while he looked for danger when crossing the main tracks and saw the car standing on the main tracks about six hundred feet from the crossing, he, nevertheless, considered all danger was passed when the main tracks had been crossed, and took no more notice. 'I take care of myself, not for the track, because I see I pass through the two tracks. I didn't take no more notice.' In other words, he neither regarded the spur-track in its then condition as a sign of danger nor took the precautions which the law would have required of him if it had been such. Did his failure to do so constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law, or was that a question of fact to be determined by the jury? In our opinion, it was the latter."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

* * *

80 Cal. App. 513

FANTA v. MADDEX. (Civ. 5329.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 29, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1927.)

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑79(2)—By lessor's acceptance of assignment of lease, privity of contract and of estate was created between lessor and assignee, and latter acquired leasehold estate for remainder of term.

Where lessor accepted assignee as tenant under terms of lease, subject to all terms of lease, privity of contract and privity of estate were created between lessor and assignee, and assignee acquired leasehold estate for remainder of term provided for in lease.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑79(2)—Receipt given lessee by lessor, stating balance due under lease, at time of assignment, could not operate to shorten term of lease assigned, as against assignee not party to settlement.

Receipt given lessee by lessor, adjusting difference between parties, on which was stated balance due under lease, at time of assignment, to be paid by assignee, could not operate to shorten term of lease assigned, as against assignee not a party to it.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑79(2)—Written assignment of lease superseded prior oral negotiations, so that term stated in lease controlled (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Written assignment of lease superseded previous oral negotiations, in which assignee was shown receipt given lessee, in which balance still due under lease was stated, in view of Civ. Code, § 1625, so that term stated in written lease was controlling.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑71—Time of completion of building was controlling under lease to commence on completion, even though construction was delayed.

Under lease providing for term commencing on day building should be completed, time of completion was controlling as to commencement of term, even though building was not completed until two months after it was expected to be at time of making lease.

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑235—Judgment entered on inconsistent findings on material issue, in suit for rent, could not stand.

In action for rent due under lease providing for term of ten years after completion of building, where trial court found that leased building was completed February 1, 1913, and also found that term of lease expired November 30, 1922, judgment based on such inconsistent findings on material issue could not stand.

6. Trial 🔑404(1)—Finding that building was completed "by" February 1st meant as soon as, not later than, February 1st.

In action for rent under lease providing for ten-year term after completion of building, finding that building was completed and ready for occupancy "by" February 1st meant as soon as, not later than, February 1st.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, By.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action for money by Julia Fanta, executrix of the last will and testament of B. Fanta, deceased, substituted for B. Fanta, against W. T. Maddex. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

respondent and against appellant, in the sum of $5,000, with interest thereon from February 1, 1923.

In the month of September, 1912, B. Fanta, now deceased, was constructing an apartment house on the corner of Union and Tenth streets, in the city of Los Angeles. On September 20, 1912, he entered into a lease of the apartment house then under construction and known as the "Fanta Apartments," leasing the same to Louettie A. Zuber for a term of ten years, "commencing on the day said building shall be completed and ready for occupancy for the purpose of an apartment house," and providing that the first month which the lessee should occupy the premises should be free, and that the lessee should not be required to pay any rental for such month. The rental provided to be paid by the lease was $47,600 for the ten-year term in installments as follows: $400 on the execution of the lease, for which the lessor was to give a receipt for the rental for the month of January, 1913, and $400 on the first of each and every month thereafter during the term of the lease, until the whole sum of $47,600 was paid to the lessor by the lessee. The lease further provided that should the lessee hold over after the expiration of the term with the consent of the lessor, expressed or implied, said tenancy should be deemed a tenancy from month to month at the rental of $400 per month.

At the time the lease was entered into, it was expected that the building would be completed and ready for occupancy by the 1st day of December, 1912, and that the lessee should have the use of the building, rent free, during that month, and that her rent should commence on January 1, 1913. The contractor of the building abandoned his contract, and plaintiff completed it on force account. The building, as found by the court, "was completed and ready for occupancy, for all purposes for which the same was leased, namely, an apartment house, by the 1st day of February, 1913."

During the year 1913 Louettie A. Zuber was making claim against the lessor for damages because she did not get into the premises in the month of December, 1912. She paid rent at the rate of $400 per month for the 12 months of the year 1913. In December of that year she desired to assign the lease to appellant. This assignment the lessor, B. Fanta, declined to consent to unless Louettie A. Zuber would waive her claim for damages. On December 30, 1913, Louettie A. Zuber and B. Fanta adjusted their controversy, and Fanta delivered to Mrs. Zuber, appellant's assignor, a receipt acknowledging one year's rent from January, 1913, to January, 1914. In consideration thereof appellant's assignor released B. Fanta from all claims and demands growing out of the latter's failure to complete the building on time, and at the same time appellant's assignor delivered to appellant the following instrument:

"For valuable consideration, I hereby assign, set over, and transfer all my right, title, and interest to the within lease to W. T. Maddex, subject to the same terms of said lease and all the conditions therein set out, which the said assignee hereby assumes, and subject to the mortgage of B. Fanta, now of record, covering the furniture in said building in accordance with the terms of said lease and said mortgage.

"Dated December 30, 1913.

"Mrs. L. A. Zuber.
"W. T. Maddex.

"I hereby accept the above assignee as tenant under the terms of said lease subject to all the terms of said lease and said mortgage.

"B. Fanta.

"Dated December 30, 1913."

The receipt given to Mrs. Zuber by B. Fanta is as follows:

"Received of Mrs. L. A. Zuber $4,800 in full for rent on lease September 20, 1912, on apt. building, Union avenue and Tenth street from Jan. 1, 1913, to Jan. 1, 1914. Balance of $42,800 to be paid by W. T. Maddex, her assignee. B. Fanta."

Upon the execution of the assignment of the lease, appellant entered into the possession of the premises, occupying them until the last day of February, 1923, when he surrendered the possession and moved out. On February 1, 1923, he tendered the lessor $400 as rent for such month of February, which the lessor refused.

[1, 2] By said assignment and assent respondent accepted appellant as tenant under the terms of said lease and subject to all provisions thereof. A privity of contract, in addition to a privity of estate, was created thereby between the lessor and appellant (Realty Co. v. Rea, 184 Cal. 565, 194 P. 1024), and appellant acquired a leasehold estate for the remainder of the term; that is to say, for the time remaining from the date of the completion of the building as provided in said lease. The receipt given by respondent to appellant's assignor could not operate to shorten the term of the lease, but was a mere acknowledgment by way of compromise of the receipt of rent for the premises up to January 1, 1914.

It was an adjustment of a difference between B. Fanta and Louettie A. Zuber and not binding on appellant, who was not a party to it, and could not operate to change the terms of the written assignment executed by Louettie A. Zuber and appellant, and which was accepted in writing by B. Fanta, now deceased, but formerly the plaintiff in the action and for whom respondent, as executrix of his will, has been substituted.

[3] Respondent urges that, while there is a conflict in the evidence as to whether appellant knew of the receipt given by B. Fanta to his assignor, Julia Fanta testified that all the papers were executed at the same time and as one transaction, and that appellant was shown the receipt and agreed thereto.

His agreement thereto is, at best, but an oral agreement which preceded or accompanied the written assignment of the lease executed by Louettie A. Zuber and himself, and which written assignment superseded such oral negotiations. Civ. Code, § 1625. This principle is so well established that it does not require the citation of authorities.

[4] The intention of the parties to retain all the terms of the lease is evidenced beyond any doubt by this assignment to appellant, executed at the same time, wherein it was expressly stipulated that the terms of the lease remained in force, and that the assignment was made subject to all of its terms. The contention of respondent, accepted by the trial court in its findings, that by means of a mathematical calculation of the total rental to be paid under the lease and the recitals of the receipt, the amount of rent was fully paid up by November 30, 1922, is irreconcilable with the fact that the building was not completed or ready for occupancy on the 30th of November, 1912, and the court found that the building was not completed for some two months later. The time of the completion of the building is controlling under the lease as to the commencement of the term thereof. As has been said, it is obvious from the lease that the parties understood that the building would be completed by the 1st of December, and it is equally evident therefrom that the term of the lease was fixed for the period of ten years from the date of such completion.

In the case of Lang v. Pacific Brewing, etc., Co., 44 Cal. App. 618, 187 P. 81, it was provided in the lease that the term should commence on the 1st day of August, 1907, and continue for ten years thereafter, provided that the building would be erected by that time, and it was stipulated that, in the event of the failure of the lessor to erect said building by said time, no rental should be payable by the lessee. The building was not completed by the 1st day of August, 1907, but was completed only in January, 1908, and the lessee entered into possession at that time. On the 1st day of August, 1917, the lessee surrendered possession, claiming that the term of the lease expired on that day. The lessor refused to agree to such termination and contended that the term of the lease began only when the building was completed and ready for occupancy and did not expire until ten years from that day, that is to say, on February 1, 1918. He brought an action to recover the rent for the period of six months, and the court held that, under the terms of the lease expressing the evident intent of the parties, the term of the lease did not begin until the building was ready for occupancy.

From that case we quote the following:

"They had in mind, and the lease provided for, the erection of a building on the demised premises. They also contemplated, and the lease specifies, a ten-year term. As the lease was executed May 1, 1907, and as the term did not, by its express provision, begin until the 1st day of the succeeding August, it is only reasonable to suppose that the parties likewise considered that three months was an adequate period of time within which to erect a building. * * * Viewed in the light of the circumstances under which the lease was made, and the matter to which it relates (Civ. Code, § 1647), it is not hard to conclude that the parties understood, and fully intended, that the period granted defendant to occupy, and have possession of the premises, began when the building was completed and occupied, and that the term of the lease was for the ten years thence next ensuing."

[5] The trial court in the instant case found that the leased building was completed by the 1st of February, 1913. The lease provided for a ten-year term after such completion. Hence the term of the lease, under such finding, expired by the 1st of February, 1923. The court, however, also found, in complete contradiction to the foregoing finding, that the term of the lease expired on the 30th day of November, 1922. The last-mentioned finding, in view of the fact that the leased building was not completed and ready for occupancy as an apartment house, as found by the court, until the 1st of February, 1913, involves the incongruity that the lessee is made liable to pay rent for two months prior to the occupation of the building and before the same was ready for occupancy. These two findings cannot be reconciled. The determination of the main issue in the case depends upon whether or not the term of the lease expired the 1st of February, 1923, as follows from one of such findings, or two months before that time, as it is implied by the other finding. This conflict in the findings of the trial court leaves the judgment without support.

"It is apparent, we think, that the findings above quoted are inconsistent and contradictory; and that the contradiction thus presented is not merely formal and about things not essential—such as frequently creeps into findings inadvertently. The contradiction is, in our opinion, important, material, and fatal to the judgment, * * * and how can we take one of these findings as true, and disregard others which are directly contradictory of it? The rule on this subject may safely be said to go this far, at least, that where there are contradictory findings about matters material to the merits of the case, and the determination of which, one way or the other, is essential to the correctness of the judgment, there the judgment cannot stand." Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 459, 21 P. 12.

No judgment can properly be entered when the court finds both for the plaintiff and the defendant on a material issue. Reese v. Corcoran, 52 Cal. 495; Carman v. Ross, 64 Cal. 249, 29 P. 510; Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 62, 28 P. 113; Sloss v. Allman, 64 Cal. 47, 30 P. 574; Gilman v. Curtis, 66 Cal. 116, 4

P. 1094; Randall v. Hunter, 66 Cal. 512, 6 P. 331; Kerns v. McKean, 65 Cal. 411, 4 P. 404.

[6] Respondent urges that, even though a strict reading of the findings might indicate a conflict, it would be an immaterial one—that by the use of the word "by" the court did not find that the building was completed "on" the 1st day of February, 1913. The word "by," as used in the connection in which the court used it in finding that the building was completed and ready for occupancy by February 1st means as soon as, not later than, February 1st—that that was the time the lessee was charged with occupancy, but could not possibly mean that it was completed and ready for occupancy two months earlier.

If the finding that the building was completed by February 1, 1913, be deemed correct—and there is no evidence to the effect that it was completed prior to that time—the lessor himself admitting that the building was not completed prior to that time, the term of the lease expired on February 1, 1923. On the other hand, if the finding that the total rental was fully paid up on November 30, 1922, be considered correct and be understood to mean that the term of the lease expired on that day, such finding is in conflict with the terms of the lease, as well as in conflict with the other finding that the building was completed and ready for occupancy for all purposes for which the same was leased by February 1st.

The point is made that, under the terms of the lease, the lessor could not invoke the right accorded a landlord, under section 827 of the Civil Code, to change the terms of a tenancy from month to month and increase the monthly rental from $400 to $5,000, but from the view we have taken, this point becomes immaterial, as the case must be reversed for the reasons given.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 464

PEOPLE v. FRAZER. (Cr. 1373.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 28, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑511(2)—If incriminating evidence, standing alone, connects defendant with offense, every fact testified to by accomplice need not be corroborated (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Under Pen. Code, § 1111, incriminating evidence need not be corroborative of every fact testified to by accomplice, but, standing alone, must tend to connect defendant with commission of offense.

2. Criminal law 🔑511(7)—Testimony of accomplice may be sufficiently corroborated by confession or admission of defendant.

Confession or admission by defendant, in criminal case, may be sufficient corroboration of testimony of an accomplice.

3. Criminal law 🔑517(4)—Testimony of accomplice may sufficiently prove corpus delicti to warrant introduction of admissions or confessions.

Corpus delicti may be sufficiently proved by testimony of accomplice to warrant introduction of admissions or confessions of defendant.

4. Criminal law 🔑511(7)—Testimony of accomplice, in prosecution for bribery, held sufficiently corroborated.

Testimony of accomplice, in prosecution for bribery of traffic officer, held sufficiently corroborated by evidence of defendant's admissions and manner of handling check.

5. Criminal law 🔑517(4)—Proof of corpus delicti by accomplice testimony, sufficiently corroborated, held not ground for complaint.

In bribery prosecution, proof of corpus delicti by accomplice testimony, sufficiently corroborated, held not ground for complaint by defendant.

6. Bribery 🔑1(2)—Traffic officer's fixing of bail, acceptance of check therefor, and release of prisoner held official acts, not the performance of unauthorized judicial functions.

Traffic officer, in fixing bail for reckless driving and drunkenness, and in accepting check therefor and releasing prisoner from jail, held to have been acting in his official capacity, and not performing unauthorized judicial functions affecting liability for bribery.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Thomas P. Frazer was convicted of bribery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George H. Shreve and Arthur L. Dorn, both of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. This appeal is from a judgment convicting the defendant of the crime of bribery and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The facts were as follows: The defendant was a traffic officer of National City, Cal.; on September 17, 1925, the defendant, together with a fellow officer, John J. La Porte, arrested one C. C. Young, the chauffeur of Mrs. Arthur Jacobs, on a charge of reckless driving and also on a charge of drunkenness on the streets, in violation of a city ordinance. Waiting some little time after the arrest, according to her testimony, Mrs. Jacobs approached the defendant and asked how she might get her chauffeur out of jail. She was told that the bail was $100 and that the defendant could not take a check for bail. She then says she asked the defendant to drive her to the Grant Hotel in San Diego, where she might cash a check through the manager of the hotel; that upon arriving at the hotel they found the manager to be out, whereupon she asked the defendant if he would accept a check for $50 in addition to her check for $100 and was told that he would not, but he did agree to accept a check for $100 in addition to the check for the amount of the bail and release C. C. Young; that defendant then wrote out a check for $100, payable to the city recorder of National City, and Mrs. Jacobs drew another to cash for $100, both of which were signed and delivered to defendant. The defendant gives a different version of the transaction which this appeal does not require us to repeat. The check of the city recorder was delivered to him and subsequently paid; Young was released from jail. On September 25 the defendant cashed the check made out to cash and with the proceeds opened a new account in the First National Bank of San Diego. Mrs. Jacobs, however, stopped payment on this check through the bank upon which it was drawn, the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

It is the position of appellant that inasmuch as Mrs. Jacobs was an accomplice, in the eyes of the law, the testimony falls short of that required in this: That there was no corroborating testimony of the agreement on the part of the defendant to accept the check for $100, and, in return, accept bail in the form of a check, and release the chauffeur. He claims that it falls short in two particulars: First, that there is not sufficient corroborative testimony to connect the defendant with the crime; second, that the agreement is an essential element of the offense and is here made to rest entirely upon the testimony of an accomplice. He also contends that, in fixing the amount of bail, determining that a check was sufficient, and releasing the prisoner the defendant was performing judicial functions, and that, inasmuch as he was a police officer, he could not be bribed to perform an act outside of his own official duties.

With respect to the first objection, it is necessary to recite the corroborating testimony. It consisted of testimony by the assistant cashier of the Crocker National Bank to the effect that the check was presented in due course to the bank and refused payment on account of its payment having been stopped by Mrs. Jacobs, and the identification of a photostatic copy of the check and indorsements, including the signature of the defendant, and also testimony of the assistant cashier of the First National Bank of San Diego to the effect that on September 25 the defendant presented the check to the bank last mentioned, indorsed it, received the money, opened a new account with the proceeds, and told the witness he had received the check for driving Mrs. Jacobs from National City to San Diego while off duty, and asking him if he thought it advisable under those circumstances to use it. This statement made to and the question propounded to the witness by the defendant is of greater weight than might otherwise be the case, when considered in connection with his own testimony on the stand, in substance, that after he had released Young and alighted from Mrs. Jacobs' automobile she reached out of the window saying, "Here is a remembrance for you," which remembrance turned out to be the check in question. Also, the check made out to the city recorder was introduced.

From this recital we think it is evident that every essential of Mrs. Jacobs' testimony was corroborated, except possibly that portion which relates to the agreement between Mrs. Jacobs and the defendant. And here we are confronted by the statements made by the defendant to the assistant cashier of the First National Bank of San Diego, and the question propounded by him. There was a hesitancy as to whether the check should be used. Further, on cross-examination, the defendant stated that after he had told Mrs. Jacobs that he would accept a check as bail she made offers of "fifty or one hundred," saying "It was worth anything in the world to get her chauffeur out of jail."

[1] The rule of law, under section 1111 of the Penal Code, is stated very clearly in the case of People v. Kelly, 69 Cal. App. 558, 231 P. 767, where many of the authorities are gathered, to the effect that:

> "It is not necessary that such incriminating evidence be corroborative of each and every fact testified to by the accomplice; but all that is required is that, standing alone, it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. It may be slight (People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 616) and of itself entitled to but little consideration (People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 482, 24 P. 32)."

[2] There are plenty of authorities to the effect that a confession or an admission is sufficient corroboration, and in the case of People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 574, 46 P. 612, it was held that flight, followed by an expression of astonishment by the fleeing person at being overtaken and by his statement that, had he not been surprised, he would have resisted arrest, although he attempted to explain his flight by the claim that "before the theft of the horse the defendant was, as he put it, 'taking precautions to avoid running into an officer,' being apprehensive of arrest for some breach of the peace," was sufficient coroboration of the testimony of an accomplice.

[3] It has been held in a number of cases that the corpus delicti may be sufficiently proved by the testimony of an accomplice to warrant the introduction of admissions or confessions of the defendant. People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 563, 120 P. 20; People v. Leavens, 12 Cal. App. 178, 106 P. 1103; People v. Barnnovich, 16 Cal. App. 427, 117 P. 572; People v. Tobin, 39 Cal. App. 76, 179 P. 443; People v. Snyder (Cal. App.) 239 P. 705.

[4, 5] We are satisfied that, under the rules thus laid down, there was not only sufficient corroborative testimony tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged, but also that, having been sufficiently corroborated in this respect, the appellant may not complain that the corpus delicti was proved by the testimony of the accomplice. Furthermore, the hesitancy of the defendant in making use of the check and his dubious tale of its acquirement are certainly as potent in corroboration as was the admission made by the defendant in the Armstrong Case.

We have next to consider whether the defendant could be bribed with respect to the acts done by him, to wit, fixing the bail, determining that a check would be sufficient, and releasing the prisoner from jail. Appellant says that he was exercising a delegated judicial authority and that the reward was for guaranteeing Mrs. Jacobs' check for bail. There was, in fact, no guaranty, and the contention in this particular brings home most forcibly the fact that the influence exerted by the second check did corrupt the action of the defendant and cause him to accept a check which otherwise he would have refused. It was conceded by both counsel at the trial that the custom prevailed in National City by permission of the city recorder for the officer to determine the amount of bail in such cases, in accordance with a schedule adopted by the recorder for that purpose.

[6] It does not seem to be debatable that defendant's acts were in his official capacity. The authority conferred upon him by the recorder was by virtue of his office, and not by virtue of a personal confidence reposed in the individual. This last statement is not made with the idea of indicating that it would necessarily make any difference, but only to point out more clearly that appellant was acting in his official capacity. And we think that, being an act in his official capacity, there can be no doubt that the offense was made out. In Harris v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. App. 15, 196 P. 895, a somewhat similar contention was under consideration, and, after reviewing and citing from the authorities upon the question, the rule is laid that:

> "Where an officer of the law becomes directly or indirectly vested with power to take or not to take some official action, he is guilty of bribery if he corruptly offers for a reward to forego official action." (Italics ours.)

In that case, the officer did "offer to forego official action." In this action, the official action was corruptly influenced. There is no distinction. As was said in Barefield v. State, 14 Ala. 603, quoted with approval in People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 30 P. 620, 49 Am. Rep. 700, Harris v. Superior Court, supra, and People v. Lips, 59 Cal. App. 381, 211 P. 22:

> "The offense consists, in contemplation of the statute, in poisoning and corrupting the source and fountain of justice, and although the particular deleterious consequence designed to be effected by the parties has not ensued, the state, nevertheless has an officer corrupted, and society has lost all protection for its rights, so far as the administration of the law by him is concerned."

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

80 Cal. App. 623

PEOPLE v. ARNOLD. (Cr. 1393.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1170(1) — Excluding evidence of whereabouts of prosecutrix nine months before birth of child held not prejudicial, where defendant failed to show impossibility of access.

Where state sought to prove rape by birth of child in month of November, sustaining objection to question put to mother as to whether 13 year old prosecutrix stayed at particular place during month of February, if error, held not prejudicial, where unaccompanied by offer of proof that defendant had no opportunity for intercourse during that period; it being immaterial that during such time other men may have had access to prosecutrix.

2. Criminal law 🔑918(1)—Nonprejudicial error is not available as ground for new trial.

Error, in order to be available as ground for new trial, must be shown to have been prejudicial.

3. Criminal law 🔑1170½(2)—Sustaining objection to question whether prosecutrix would kiss any men present held not prejudicial, where answered in negative before objection.

Sustaining objection to question as to whether prosecutrix, 13 years of age, would kiss any men present, if error, held not prejudicial, where witness had answered question in negative before court sustained objection, and where no motion was made to strike out answer.

4. Criminal law 🔑1170(1)—Rejecting evidence of identity of handwriting on log containing name of prosecutrix and another man, and date, held no ground for reversal, where rape at another time was claimed.

Sustaining objection to question asked handwriting expert as to whether names of 13 year old prosecutrix in rape case and another man and date written on log were not all written by same individual, prosecutrix having admitted writing names, held no ground for reversal, where acts of intercourse at different times were claimed, and where proposed testimony would probably have had no more than cumulative effect in impeaching prosecutrix.

5. Criminal law 🔑1036(1)—Excluding evidence held no ground for reversal, in absence of offers of proof, where damage inconsequential.

In rape prosecution, sustaining objection to questions held no ground for reversal, where no offer of proof was made, questions were compound and impeaching in character, and no foundation was laid therefor, and damage, if any, resulting from sustaining objections, was very slight.

6. Rape 🔑52(2)—Though defendant was claimed to be father of prosecutrix's child, court's statement that proof thereof was unnecessary, if intercourse proved, held not error.

Where several acts of rape on 13 year old girl were charged, and birth of child was shown as part of state's proof, statement of court that it was not necessary to prove that defendant was father of child, if defendant and prosecutrix had intercourse on or about date alleged in information, held proper statement of law, and nonprejudicial.

7. Criminal law 🔑1166½(12)—Charge that testimony showing rape just before May was not inconsistent with statement that act occurred in March held cured by instructions.

Statement of court that prosecutrix's testimony as to commission of statutory rape just before May was not inconsistent with former statement that act occurred in March, if error, held not prejudicial, in view of charge that testimony of prosecutrix should be carefully scanned and acted on with great caution.

8. Criminal law 🔑1159(1)—Jury held final arbiter of facts in rape prosecution.

In prosecution for rape, jury held final arbiter of facts.

9. Rape 🔑52(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction in prosecution for rape of 13 year old girl.

In prosecution for rape of 13 year old girl, evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict of guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Carl Arnold was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas Scott, Jr., and Dorris & Henderson, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape on the person of a girl of the age of 13 years. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

From the testimony given by the prosecutrix, which was corroborated by her 10 year old sister, it appears that the act of which defendant was found guilty was committed on or about March 23, 1925. There was other evidence tending to establish the case against defendant, including the facts that one witness testified to having seen defendant and the prosecuting witness in a most compromising situation on one occasion, and another witness testified that on another occasion, in the presence of herself and several other persons, defendant "grabbed Marie (the prosecutrix), and put a big bite on her neck that was about that size around (indicating), monkey bite, I think they call them." It also appears in evidence that on November 24, 1925, which was 8 months and one day after the alleged criminal act of defendant toward the prosecutrix occurred, the prosecutrix gave birth to a fully developed child. The prosecutrix testified further that approximately ten separate acts of sexual intercourse had taken place between her and defendant, some of which occurred before the date of the particular act specified in the information.

[1] The first irregularity in the trial of which appellant complains is that the trial court sustained an objection interposed by the people to the following question which had been asked by counsel for defendant of the mother of the prosecutrix: "Q. Now, during the month of February, 1925, did Marie stay at Granite all the time?"

[2] As having a bearing upon the materiality of such question, appellant urges that, because the child born to the prosecutrix was fully developed at its birth on November 24, 1925, instead of its having been conceived on March 23, 1925, it "must have been begotten late in February or early in March," and that, in order to rebut the charge that defendant was the father of the child, defendant had a right to show, first, that, because of the possible absence of the prosecutrix from Granite during the month of February, 1925, men other than defendant had opportunity of intercourse with the prosecutrix during the particular period in which, as he contends, the child was conceived; and, secondly, that defendant had no such opportunity during such time. But, assuming (without deciding) the materiality of the question, no offer of proof was made that during the month of February, 1925, no opportunity was open to defendant to have sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix; and it was immaterial that during such time men other than defendant may have had access to the prosecutrix. It is a cardinal rule that error, in order to be available as a ground for new trial, must be shown to have been prejudicial.

[3] Complaint is also made that further error was committed by the trial court in sustaining an objection to a question propounded by the attorney representing defendant to a witness as follows: "Q. Now, Marie would go up and kiss any of the men that were there, wouldn't she, and throw her arms around them?"

Appellant's argument is based upon the assumption that the answer of the witness would have been in the affirmative. However, it appears from the transcript of the proceedings had at the trial that the witness actually answered the question, "No, sir," and thereafter the court sustained an objection to the question. No motion was made to strike out the answer, and, so far as the record discloses, it was left for the consideration of the jury. It is therefore clear that no harm resulted to defendant by reason of the fact that the objection to the question was sustained by the court.

[4] The evidence shows that the prosecutrix testified that one of the acts of intercourse between her and defendant occurred on July 15, 1925. In rebuttal defendant produced a piece of log with some writing on it, which included the name of the prosecutrix, the name of a man other than defendant, and the date of July 15th—all of which, with the exception of the date, the prosecutrix admitted was in her handwriting. In connection therewith defendant asked of an expert on handwriting the following question:

> "Q. At the time you examined this Defendant's Exhibit A for the purpose of identification at the trial of the case of the people of the state of California against Carl Arnold in department 1 here about three or four months ago, I will ask you to state whether or not the names that appear there on the face of this exhibit and the date that appears on the face of it, was it written by one and the same person?"

The trial court sustained an objection to the question, and prejudicial error is predicated thereon.

The question is not clear; but, assuming that it was intended, and was understood by the witness, as an inquiry as to whether in his opinion all of the handwriting on the log was that of one individual, and that the offer of proof by defendant was sufficient to apprise the court and the opposing counsel of his intention in the premises, the materiality of the question, other than the possibility of drawing an inference from its answer that on the date in question the prosecutrix was in the company of some man other than defendant, and to reason therefrom that the prosecutrix was not telling the truth regarding the matter, is not apparent. The record discloses several conflicts in the testimony as between the prosecutrix and other witnesses; and the reception of the proposed testimony probably would have produced no result other than to act accumulatively with other similar evidence toward the impeachment of the prosecutrix, and concretely raise a question in the minds of the members of the jury as to which witness was correct with reference to the handwriting on the log, which, in itself, was of minor importance. From the evidence, including any statement which might have been made by the expert on handwriting, it is possible that the jury would have concluded either that the prosecutrix was mistaken as to the date of the alleged occurrence on July 15th, or even that she had deliberately misrepresented the facts concerning it, and yet, in view of strong corroborative evidence, have been fully convinced that she spoke the truth as to the happenings on March 23d, as charged in the information.

[5] A situation similar in many respects arises with reference to three other questions which were asked by defendant's counsel of three several witnesses, and to which questions objections were sustained by the trial court at the instance of the prosecution. In addition to the point that, as to each of such questions, there was nothing to indicate what the answer to it would have been, no offer of proof was made in connection therewith. Furthermore, one of the questions thus propounded was compound in its nature, besides being objectionable from several other standpoints, including the objection that it was impeaching in its character and that no foundation was laid therefor. Moreover, it clearly appears, considering the circumstances, that the damage, if any, which resulted to defendant by reason of the refusal of the trial court to permit any or all such or any other questions to be answered was so slight that this court would not be justified in ordering a reversal of the judgment on account thereof.

[6] Appellant presents the point that the defendant was prejudicially affected in his substantial rights by reason of the statement made by the judge of the trial court that "it isn't necessary to prove whether Mr. Arnold was the father of the child or not."

Appellant's point is that, inasmuch as the prosecution had seen fit to produce the child, and to claim that it was the result of the act of intercourse of date March 23, 1925, the prosecution was bound to stand or fall by reason of such position. It is clear that, even though it might have been satisfactorily shown that the defendant was not the father of the child, still if he and the prosecutrix indulged in the act of sexual intercourse on or about the date alleged in the information, he would be guilty of the offense charged, from which it would follow that the statement made by the judge was correct as a principle of law. We fail to see how any material harm could have resulted to defendant by reason thereof.

[7] Finally, defendant contends that, in connection with the attempt on the part of the defendant to impeach testimony given by the prosecutrix, the trial court erred by stating in the presence of the jury that the testimony given by the prosecutrix to the effect that she had sustained meretricious relations with defendant at a time fixed as "just before May" was not inconsistent with a former statement made by the witness that the act occurred on March 23d. In connection therewith the jury was instructed that it was not to infer from any remarks or rulings made by the court as indicating how the case should be decided; also that "the testimony of the prosecutrix should be carefully scanned, and be acted upon with great caution." Perhaps it was unnecessary for the trial judge to be so specific in his ruling, when the same result would have been accomplished by sustaining the objection without comment, but which latter course, to an intelligent juror, would have carried the identical meaning. But, if error was committed, which under the circumstances we are unprepared to concede, it was cured, or at least rendered innocuous, by the instructions given by the trial court to the jury to which reference has been had.

[8, 9] On the whole, while the evidence, especially as to several collateral details or incidents, was somewhat conflicting, the jury was the final arbiter of the facts. On the main issue the evidence, if not conclusive, was sufficient to support the verdict, in fact, no claim is made to the contrary. It cannot be said that, after an examination of the entire evidence, any one of the claimed errors, nor all of them combined, were so prejudicial that, had they not occurred, a different result would have been reached.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

80 Cal. App. 538

JOHNSON v. STUDLEY et ux.★

(Civ. 3142.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 30, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1927.)

1. Contracts 🔑99(3)—In action to cancel written contracts conveying property in exchange for life care, evidence held insufficient to show undue influence and fraud.

In action for cancellation of written contracts conveying entire property of aged and invalid man to defendants in exchange for life care, evidence held insufficient to show that defendants practiced deceit, or resorted to misrepresentations or other fraudulent conduct to induce conveyance.

2. Contracts 🔑99(3)—In action to cancel written contracts conveying property in exchange for life care, evidence held insufficient to show coercion.

In action for cancellation of written contracts conveying entire property of aged and invalid man to defendants in exchange for life care, evidence held insufficient to show that defendants used coercion to induce conveyance to them.

3. Contracts 🔑96—Where invalid agreed to give friends property in exchange for life care, rule affecting independent advice held not applicable; no confidential relationship existing.

Where aged and invalid man entered into agreement with friends to turn over his entire property in exchange for care and support for life, rule requiring independent advice in regard to such transaction held not applicable; there being no confidential relationship between parties.

4. Contracts 🔑96—Invalid giving friends property in exchange for life care held to have had sufficient independent advice, if necessary, to validity of transaction.

Where aged and invalid man entered into agreement with friends to turn over his entire property in exchange for care and support, rule requiring independent advice, if applicable, held satisfied; aged man having received advice from banker on whom he relied as to full significance of transaction.

5. Contracts 🔑99(3)—In action to cancel written contracts conveying property in exchange for life care, evidence held insufficient to show lack of mental capacity in grantor.

In action for cancellation of written contracts conveying entire property of aged and invalid man to defendants in exchange for life care, evidence held insufficient to show that grantor lacked mental capacity to transact business involved; there being showing that grantor conversed rationally with others as to transaction involved.

6. Evidence 🔑63—Age of 70 years does not create presumption that person is mentally incompetent to transact business affairs.

That person has reached or passed age of 70 years does not raise presumption that he has become mentally weak to extent that he is incapable of attending to his business affairs intelligently, or with full understanding of nature thereof.

7. Deeds 🔑211(1)—That grantor had serious ailment when he executed grant in consideration of care and support held not to show mental incompetency.

Fact that grantor was afflicted with serious physical malady at time of executing grant in consideration of care and support held not to warrant conclusion that he was mentally incompetent to transact business culminating in the grant.

8. Deeds 🔑17(2)—Adequacy of consideration must be determined as of time of conveyance attacked.

Sufficiency of claimed consideration for conveyance attacked must be determined from facts of transaction existing when contract was made rather than from subsequent developments.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

9. Deeds 🔑17(4)—Invalid's grant of entire property in exchange for life care held supported by valid consideration.

Conveyance by aged and invalid man in return for care and support for remainder of his life, made at time when it was possible that he might live for years, and when grantee was required to give up employment as carpenter in order to care for grantor, held supported by sufficient consideration, though grantor died within short time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by A. M. Johnson, as administratrix of the estate of Ola Bentson, deceased, against F. D. Studley and his wife to set aside and cancel a written contract. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Best & Best and Richard J. Welch, Jr., all of Riverside, for appellants.

Richardson & Scherrer, of Riverside, for respondent.

HART, J. The administratrix of the estate of Ola Bentson, deceased, the plaintiff, brought this action to have set aside and canceled a certain written contract, by the terms of which the deceased executed and delivered to defendants a quitclaim deed conveying to them certain real property, and for like relief as to said deed, also as to an assignment of a certain mortgage in which the deceased was the mortgagee, and further as to a promissory note executed and delivered by the defendants to the deceased.

The cause was tried by the court, sitting without a jury, and judgment for the full relief prayed for was awarded plaintiff. The defendants appeal from the judgment upon a record prepared in accord with the so-called alternative method.

The following is the agreement:

"This agreement made and entered into this 20th day of February, 1923, by and between F. D. Studley and Ola Bentson, witnesseth that the said Ola Bentson, on his part and for valuable consideration herein as mentioned, does agree to give clear deed to the following described real estate:

"House and three lots, described as lots 17–18–19. Frames resubdivision of block 27 original townsite of Elsinore.

"He also agrees to make a proper assignment of a note and mortgage for three thousand dollars ($3,000) which said note and mortgage is dated April 1, 1919, and due in five years with interest at six per cent.; said note and mortgage are executed by Thomas O. and May R. Boothby; and one note of said F. D. Studley in favor of Ola Bentson for three hundred dollars ($300) and assignment of mortgage and deeds are hereby acknowledged by said F. D. Studley and for the above and other valuable considerations which partly consist of six bonds of the Nevada California Electric Company for one hundred dollars ($100) each, total six hundred dollars ($600), receipt of which is also acknowledged for the above considerations. The said F. D. Studley agrees on his part that he will care for and provide a good and comfortable home in the town of Elsinore for the said Ola Bentson, and that he will care for him in sickness and in health in a good and proper manner, paying all expenses of living, clothing, doctor's bills and any other expenses that might be necessary for the comfortable care and protection for the said Ola Bentson so long as he may live and give him a reasonably fair burial at the time of his death, at his own proper cost and expense, and these transfers assignments, etc., of the deeds and bonds and notes shall also pay the said F. D. Studley for all past services that he has already rendered to the said Ola Bentson. It is understood that all interest and rent accruing from the above property is to belong to Mr. Bentson during his life for his own personal use.

"Given under our hands and seals the day first above written. F. D. Studley.
"Ola Bentson.

"Witness to the signatures of the said F. D. Studley and Ola Bentson. R. J. Horton.
"G. R. Gough."

On the day of the execution of said agreement (February 20, 1923), the deceased executed and delivered a deed, duly acknowledged, quitclaiming to the defendants lots 17, 18, and 19 in "Frames resubdivision of the original townsite of Elsinore." This deed was filed for record and recorded in the office of the county recorder of Riverside county on the 2d day of April, 1923.

On the same day the deceased, in writing, assigned to the defendants a certain mortgage executed by Thomas O. Boothby and his wife on certain real property situated in Riverside county, and given to secure a promissory note for the sum of $4,000. This mortgage was executed on April 1, 1919, and the note to secure which it was given was made payable five years from date. At the same time the deceased canceled a promissory note for the sum of $300, executed and delivered by the defendants to deceased.

The complaint charges that the above-mentioned documents were procured from the deceased by the defendants through fraud and the exercise of undue influence. It is alleged, among other things, that at the time of the execution of said instruments the deceased was afflicted with Bright's disease of the kidneys, and "so weakened mentally and physically thereby that his death could be expected within a few weeks or months, and which did actually take effect shortly thereafter, and that under such conditions his will and mind were easily susceptible to the undue influence of the will and mind of said defendants"; that said deceased was under the exclusive care, charge, and control of said defendants, and that, by reason of his "extreme old age," his mental and physical weakness and infirmity, due to the disease mentioned, defendants did then and there exercise and practice upon said deceased undue influence, and thereby succeeded in inducing him to execute the instruments above mentioned. The details of the alleged fraud and undue influence are set forth in paragraph 13 of the complaint. The court adopted substantially said paragraph as part of its findings. These allegations will be set forth herein as they are adopted by the court in its findings.

The answer admits the execution of the agreement, the deed and the assignments, but specifically denies that the same were procured by fraud or undue influence on the part of the defendants. The finding just referred to reads as follows:

> "With respect to the allegations contained in paragraph No. 13 of plaintiff's complaint, the court finds: That at all the time immediately preceding the making and execution of said purported contract and said purported deed, the said Ola Bentson had a home and house of his own sufficiently furnished to keep him in the station and condition of life that he then had been previously enjoying, and sufficient money and financial means to pay these defendants herein for any services in taking care of and nursing him, and for any food and clothing furnished by them or necessary for his then immediate care and comfort, and to pay these defendants well for such services, and for the furnishing of any food and clothing necessary for the then immediate care and comfort of himself; that said Ola Bentson during all of such time was fully cognizant of his ability to so financially pay and otherwise provide himself with such care, comfort, and food and clothing as aforesaid, and, having knowledge of his financial ability to so pay for such services, care, food, and clothing as aforesaid, did then and there, and on many divers occasions previous thereto, offer and propose to said defendant F. D. Studley that if he, said F. D. Studley, and wife, would so take care of and nurse him, and provide him with the necessary food and clothing, he (Ola Bentson) would pay them, and pay them well for it, and for him (Studley) to name the price; but said F. D. Studley and wife, having as hereinbefore found in these findings conceived the plan of obtaining title and possession to the whole of the valuable real and personal property of said Ola Bentson, and knowing that to accept said Ola Bentson's offer and proposal as aforesaid would prevent the consummation of their said plan, did then and there, and on many diverse occasions previous thereto, refuse and decline said offer and proposal, and did then and there, with the intent and purpose of carrying out said consummation said preconceived plan is hereinbefore found in these findings, and having then the opportunity to take advantage of the fact that said Ola Bentson was under their exclusive care, charge, and control, and of his old age, fatal illness, mental weakness, distress, and necessities as hereinbefore in these findings found, and having then and there and theretofore sought and gained legal advice and counsel for themselves, and sought and gained the advice and counsel of the physician then in attendance upon said Ola Bentson as to the probable length and duration of his life, and having then and there, and on diverse occasions previous thereto, sought and had a notary public come to their home for the purpose of drawing, preparing and acknowledging said purported contract and said purported deed, the said defendant F. D. Studley did then and there, and at the time of the making and execution of said purported contract and said purported deed, prevail upon and importune the said Ola Bentson to make and execute said contract and said deed against his will, and without his consent, and said Ola Bentson was caused to so do by the previous threats, coercion, and undue influence of said F. D. Studley and to the continuance thereof at the very time he made said purported contract and said purported deed used to and upon him by said Studley, who did then and there, state, and threaten that, unless he, said Ola Bentson, so made and executed said purported contract and said purported deed, he (Studley) and wife would immediately cease taking care of him, nursing and providing him with food and clothing, and said Ola Bentson thus put in fear that said defendant Studley would carry out said threats as aforesaid, and he and his wife would desert and abandon him, and no longer administer to his immediate wants and necessities, and sick and unable to move or walk about, unless assisted, and in such distress of body and mind as hereinbefore alleged and as in these findings found, and under the exclusive care, charge, and control of said defendants and no immediate opportunity available to him to seek or hire others to perform such services for him, submitted to said threats, coercion, and undue influence of said defendant Studley as aforesaid, and did make and execute said purported contract and said purported deed, which said contract and said deed so made and executed as aforesaid was and were so made wholly without adequate or any consideration whatsoever, and the act of making said purported contract, and the act of making said purported deed, was and were not the free and voluntary act or acts or deed or deeds of said Ola Bentson, but was and were the result and consummation of the acts and deeds of said defendant F. D. Studley, and his said undue influence exercised by him to and upon the will and mind of said Ola Bentson, who then on account of his mental weakness, old age, infirmity, sickness, distress, and necessities as aforesaid, and of his then relation and association with said defendants, was unable to resist the desires and importunities of the dominant mind and will of said defendant F. D. Studley."

The court also found that the property, real and personal, turned over to the defendants by the deceased as indicated above was of no greater value than $12,000.

[1] The contention of the defendants is that the findings as to fraud and undue influence and the foregoing finding are wholly without any support from the evidence. We think the contention must be sustained.

The facts as we shall state them are gleaned from the uncontradicted testimony in the case. The plaintiff's intestate, at the time of the execution of the transactions sought to be annulled by this action, resided in the town of Elsinore, in Riverside county, and was of the age of 79 years. He was an unmarried man. It is not made to appear, except in a general and indefinite way, that he had any relatives in Elsinore or elsewhere. The petition by the plaintiff for letters of administration of the estate of the deceased or the other proceedings in connection therewith are not in the record, and we are hence without information as to the relationship, if any, of the plaintiff to the deceased.

The plaintiff's intestate, who hereinafter, for brevity, will be referred to as "the deceased," or "Bentson," and the defendants were adjoining neighbors in the town of Elsinore for about four years prior to the date of the execution of the contract and other instruments above mentioned; their respective homes being separated by a small lot. The deceased owned several lots in Elsinore—those named in the deed from him to the defendants—and it appears derived a livelihood from raising thereon vegetables and chickens and selling the same to the market or such persons as desired to purchase them. He at times also performed labor for other people. The defendants are husband and wife, and lived on neighborly or intimate terms with the deceased for the period above stated. F. D. Studley was a carpenter by trade, and worked thereat whenever his services as such were needed, and was paid for his labor at the rate of $1 an hour, or $8 for eight hours' work. These wages were fixed according to the wage rate established after the entry of the United States into the war with Germany and the increase in the cost of living brought about by that event.

In the latter part of the year 1922, the health of the deceased began to fail. In November of that year, realizing the necessity for medical aid, he called in Dr. Parker, a local physician, who diagnosed and pronounced his physical ailment as that of Bright's disease of the kidneys. Down to that time the deceased, as thus he had done for the whole of the period of 4 years during which the Studleys were his neighbors, as indicated, did his own cooking, and in other respects attended to his household affairs. On one of his professional visits to the deceased in the month of November or December, 1922, Dr. Parker advised Bentson that his food, as he (Bentson) prepared it, was without sufficient nourishment, and that in his condition he should have some capable person to prepare his meals and take care of him generally.

In the month of November, 1922, one James H. Mills, with whom the deceased had been acquainted for about 8 years, was employed by the latter to construct a cement walk around his three lots described in the deed from deceased to the Studleys. After starting the work of building the walks, Mills, on one occasion, found the deceased "in bed sick." The deceased then said to Mills that "he would like to have me hunt up some one that would look after him. So I took him up some broth a couple of nights." Mills proceeded to testify: "And I went down and saw Mr. Studley, and they agreed to look after him." F. D. Studley immediately called on the deceased, and asked him what he (Studley) could do for him. Mrs. Studley soon followed her husband, and the deceased asked her to make some broth for him. "I know you are a good cook," said deceased, addressing Mrs. Studley. Mrs. Studley then went to the butcher shop, procured some meat, and Mrs. Studley, at her own home, prepared some broth and took it to Bentson. At the end of a period of about 10 days after the Studleys took upon themselves the care of the deceased, the latter had so far recovered his strength as to enable him to leave his bed and sit in a rocking chair, and occasionally take short walks about his premises. Mills testified that, while the Studleys were taking care of the deceased at the latter's home, he (Mills) on several occasions called to see the deceased and found that he was receiving proper attention and care at the hands of the Studleys. F. D. Studley continued to wait on and care for the deceased for a period of about two months. Said Studley remained with the deceased, while Mrs. Studley, at her own home, prepared food for Bentson, and took it to his (Bentson's) home. Studley testified:

> "I tried to get him (deceased) a housekeeper, and succeeded after a while in getting a lady from Pasadena. She stayed there 10 or 11 days. He hired her for a month. She went away, and I got another lady to come there."

F. D. Studley, after taking the last-mentioned woman to the home of the deceased, and after he (Studley) had shown her where she could find the usual household equipments for caring for the house, returned to his own home, but it appears that during that day he was informed by a groceryman who had but a few hours previously delivered groceries to the home of the deceased that he found the latter alone and unattended by any one; the woman last employed by said Studley having for some reason refused to accept the employment and departed from the premises. Studley thereupon and immediately went to the home of the deceased, and asked the latter what he desired him (Studley) to do for him (deceased). Although, so he testified, he knew of no relatives that Bentson had, Studley suggested to the latter that he ought to call in any relative that he might have to attend and take care of him; or, if he had no relatives, to employ some man with a wife to take up his residence with him and give him the care and attention his physical condition required. Said Studley stated to the deceased that he (Studley) had on hand a job as a carpenter and that it was necessary for him (deceased) to make definite arrangements for his care. The deceased thereupon proposed that the defendants assume that responsibility for a consideration. Studley testified:

> "Up to that time I never had charged him a penny for my services. I said 'Mr. Bentson, you could not afford to pay me what I could get elsewhere. If I go to carpentering, I can get my $8 a day. You would not want to pay that.' And he says, 'If you will take care of me, I will give you all my property.' I says, 'Mr. Bentson, that is a pretty serious matter. You better think that over pretty well before you accept anything like that.' I says, 'If you would give me your property, how do you know but what I would turn around and kick you out?' He says, 'I know you well enough to know you would not do anything of the kind.' I says, 'Mr. Bentson, you think that matter over; don't be in a hurry about it. If there is anything else that I can do—my wife's condition is not very strong, and if you are both taken sick on my hands at the same time what would I do?' As near as I can remember, his answer was, 'I don't intend or want to be much trouble to anybody,' or something to that effect. I says, 'Mr. Bentson, there doesn't anybody know when they are sick how much trouble they are going to be to anybody else. You might be in bed for months. You would have to be waited on day and night. I really don't care to enter any contract. I would rather you would get some one else.' 'Well,' he says, 'I haven't anybody else that will do anything for me. I have got to have somebody.' And every time I would go there after that he would ask me in regard to taking care of him and I kept putting him off."

Studley finally accepted the proposition, but said to Bentson: "I can't take care of you here," referring to Bentson's home. This arrangement was made in Bentson's house, and, upon a suggestion made by the deceased, John T. Kuhns, a former banker of Elsinore, but at the time referred to engaged in the real estate business and a notary public, was asked by Studley to call at the home of the deceased for the purpose of preparing a contract in accordance with said arrangement. At this point, and parenthetically, it may be remarked that the testimony of F. D. Studley that the deceased was the first to propose giving the Studleys all his property as a consideration for taking care of him for the balance of his life is at variance with that of said Kuhns, whose testimony was in substance as follows: That F. D. Studley called on him, and stated that Mr. Bentson wished to see him; that Kuhns, accompanied by Studley, started to the Bentson home, and on the way Studley explained to Kuhns that the deceased desired to make some arrangement with him (Studley) for taking care of him during the remainder of his life; that they had thus far not agreed upon the terms upon which the Studleys were to take the contract; that, when they arrived at the home of the deceased, the latter and Studley proceeded to discuss the terms, the deceased insisting that the arrangement should be that the Studleys should take care of him for a stipulated sum of money, while Studley declared that he would not enter into a contract to take care of the deceased, as indicated, unless the latter would agree to turn over to him all his property, both real and personal, Studley stating that if he accepted the responsibility of caring for the deceased he would have to devote his entire time and attention to him, and therefore would be unable to work at his trade as a carpenter so long as the deceased might live. No definite arrangement was made between the deceased and Studley on that occasion.

Kuhns the following day was again called to the Bentson home for the purpose of preparing an agreement. He stated that the deceased said:

> "We haven't gotten along any further than we were last night. We haven't come to a decision yet."

An agreement was finally reached between the deceased and F. D. Studley, whereby the deceased agreed to convey to the Studleys all his estate upon condition that they would provide for and take care of him during the balance of his life. Bentson thereupon (in the first part of January, 1923), and in pursuance of the said agreement, walked over to the home of the Studleys, and there remained and was there taken care of by the defendants until he passed away on the 10th day of May, 1923.

R. J. Horton, president of the First National Bank of Elsinore, with which the deceased had always transacted his banking business, had on several occasions been present, both at the home of the deceased and the home of the Studleys, after the deceased had been removed to the latter place early in January, 1923, when the matter of the proposed contract or proposed arrangement for the care of the deceased by the Studleys was under discussion. He testified that a short time before the contract was executed F. D. Studley called at the bank and informed him that he (Studley) and the deceased had finally agreed upon the terms upon which the Studleys were to take care of the deceased; that the deceased did not accompany said Studley to the bank on that occasion; that Studley explained to the witness that the agreement arrived at was that the Studleys were to take Bentson to their home and provide and care for him as long as he might live, and that the deceased, as a consideration therefor, was at once to convey to the Studleys all his property, both real and personal. Studley requested Horton to prepare a contract in accord with said terms, but the latter declined to do so, stating that he did not feel that he was capable of properly drafting a contract of such importance, and suggested that a lawyer be employed to do the work.

Thereafter F. D. Studley employed an attorney at Santa Ana to put the agreement in writing. After the agreement was so prepared—about a week after the said conversation at the bank between Studley and Horton—Studley appeared at the bank with the contract in writing. Horton read the instrument. Subsequently (February 20, 1923), Horton was requested by Studley and also Bentson through Studley to call at the Studley home, where the deceased had in the meantime been taken, for the purpose of witnessing the execution of the agreement and taking the acknowledgment of the execution of the deed by Bentson conveying his real property to the Studleys in pursuance of the terms of said agreement, Horton being a notary public. Horton complied with the request, and took with him to the Studleys on said occasion G. R. Gough, cashier of the bank of which the former was president.

Before the agreement, the deed and the assignments were signed by the deceased, Horton held a conversation with Bentson relative to the proposed transactions. "I told Mr. Bentson," Horton testified, "as plainly as I could, just exactly what he was signing; that he was signing away all his property, and I told him he didn't want to do that without careful consideration." Bentson stated to Horton that he required care and attention, and that he had concluded that the best thing for him to do was to enter into and carry out the agreement proposed by Studley, and as evidenced by the written contract; but, said Horton, Bentson manifested some reluctance—not "very strong reluctance," however—about signing the contract. In fact, Horton said the deceased insisted that a provision be added to the contract that "the earnings and proceeds derived from the property during his life" should belong to and be paid to him. Studley assented to this proposal, and thereupon, at the request of Bentson, Horton inserted in the written agreement the provision, the language of which is in italics as the instrument is hereinbefore reproduced. This change in the contract, Horton said, seemed to "ease" Bentson's mind, and, remarking that he "might as well sign it now as any time," he thereupon subscribed his signature to the contract, the deed, and the other instruments mentioned. Horton, as a notary public, took the acknowledgment and, as seen, the written agreement was witnessed by both Horton and Gough. While the conversation and transactions just referred to were going on, Bentson was sitting in a chair.

G. R. Gough corroborated the testimony of Horton as to the conversation between the last named and the deceased on the occasion just adverted to and as to the warning Horton gave Bentson relative to the effect of the execution by the latter of the agreement, deed, etc.

At the time of the execution of the above-mentioned instruments, the deceased had on deposit in the bank of which Horton was president approximately the sum of $500. He also then had in his safe deposit box in said bank Liberty bonds amounting to $900, Nevada-California electric bonds of the value of $600 and the note and mortgage of Boothby, originally for $4,000, but subsequently reduced by payments on the principal. These securities were converted into cash through Horton's bank, and the proceeds credited to the deposit account of the deceased. At the time the contract and other instruments were signed, Bentson instructed Horton to make a change in his account in the bank so that the Studleys, as well as himself, could draw on the account in his lifetime, and "to make it so as to create a joint tenancy" in the account, to the end that "Mr. Studley, if Mr. Bentson should die, could get the money and pay his expenses," etc. These instructions were in writing, as follows:

"For Checking % of Ola Bentson.
"Term Account No. ——
"First National Bank of Elsinore.
"Elsinore, Cal.

"Find below duly authorized signature, which you will please recognize in payment of funds or the transaction of other business on my or our account:
Ola Bentson.
"F. D. Studley.
"Estelle T. Studley.

"Sign here.
"Address ——.
"Date ——. Introduced by ——."

The instructions were not strictly followed by Horton, but, as to this, he testified that the card on which the instructions were written "was the only signature card we had. We were out of regular joint tenancy cards at the time." He stated that he did not at the time or at any other time, tell Bentson that he had not made it appear in the records or books of the bank that the account was a joint tenancy account, but that he, as well as the deceased and Studley, treated it as such in accord with the specific instruction of Bentson to that effect. Prior to, and subsequent to, the death of Bentson, the Studleys checked on the account, appropriating much if not all the money to the payment of the expenses incurred in taking care of the deceased, and upon his death in payment of funeral expenses. These considerations, however, are of no special consequence in the decision of this case. The sole questions here are, as has been shown, whether the defendants procured the transfer of the property of the deceased, including the money in the bank and the securities referred to, through misrepresentations or fraud or the exercise of undue influence upon the deceased on the part of the Studleys or either of them, and whether the deceased was mentally incompetent to transact the business. If under such circumstances the execution of the agreement and the transfer of the property of the deceased were accomplished, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover all the property so transferred, regardless of the form in which the transfer was made. It is consequently immaterial whether the effect of transferring and changing the account in the bank was or was not to create a joint tenancy in said account.

It should here be stated that Dr. Parker, who, as seen, professionally attended and prescribed treatment for the deceased, testified that he advised F. D. Studley, while the latter was waiting on Bentson at his (Bentson's) home as to the physical condition of the deceased, "and what to expect * * * I told them (the Studleys) that he (deceased) had chronic Bright's disease, and could not get well; that he might live a few months or a few years. It was an uncertain condition." In this connection it may also be stated that F. D. Studley testified that he did not understand Dr. Parker to say the deceased "might live a few months or a few years," but understood the doctor to say that he might live for years. However, it is clear from Studley's testimony that he knew and realized that the deceased, at the time the transactions involved herein were under negotiation, was a very sick man, and the disease from which he was suffering would probably sooner or later result in his death.

[2] The foregoing embraces a statement in substance of all the testimony revealing the circumstances attending and eventuating in the execution of the agreement and the other written instruments in question. It is perfectly clear therefrom that the testimony does not justify the conclusion that the defendants practiced deceit or resorted to misrepresentation or other fraudulent conduct to induce the execution by the deceased of the agreement and other papers. Indeed, the court below, in its decision, recognized this proposition, since it made no specific finding that the transactions were brought about through fraudulent representations or conduct on the part of the defendants. The fraud in the transaction, if any, is to be implied from the findings that the defendants, taking advantage of the physical and mental condition of the deceased, by threats, coerced the latter into the execution of the agreements, etc., and that, by reason of his advanced age and serious physical illness, the deceased, at the times the transactions were in process of negotiation and finally consummated, was mentally incapable of exercising volition or intelligently transacting business. The finding, however, that the defendants by threats coerced the deceased into the making of the agreement and the execution of the instruments transferring his property to the defendant is wholly without evidentiary support, as the above statement of the evidence plainly shows. Indeed, in a written opinion (incorporated in the clerk's record herein) the learned trial judge, referring to the testimony of Kuhns to the effect that on his second visit to the deceased the latter remarked, "Well, we haven't gotten along any further than we were last night—we haven't come to any decision," concisely stated the situation, as the evidence disclosed it, when he said:

> "This would indicate that Bentson and Studley were driving a bargain; that Bentson was trying to get Studley to take care of him, but they had not agreed at that time, after considering the matter for a day. This agreement was that Bentson wanted Studley to take a stipulated amount for his care, which he was willing to pay, and insisted that he wanted Mr. Studley to name the same. Studley always insisted that Bentson should convey all of his property to him, otherwise he would not consider it."

If that statement of the judge constituted all there was of the findings, in so far as threats and coercion were concerned, the judgment would be entirely without a prop to uphold it in that particular; and carefully scrutinized, the findings, so far as threats or other coercive methods are concerned, do not go much further than what is comprehended within that statement. The finding as to that matter, is, in effect, that the defendants threatened that, unless deceased came to their terms, they would cease and refuse to take further care of him. Obviously, the defendants had a right to "drive a bargain," and the further right to refuse to care for the deceased, unless he agreed to their terms as to the compensation for the services required, even though it were true that the contract thus exacted was unreasonable, or called for compensation far beyond the value of the service to be performed. In other words, the proposal of the defendant and the acceptance thereof by the deceased might have constituted an improvident or unfair agreement, in so far as the deceased was concerned, and yet it was an agreement which the defendants had the legal, even if not the moral, right to demand and induce the consummation of, provided that they did not resort to misrepresentation or fraud to procure the same, and provided further that the deceased was not mentally incompetent to transact such business or any of the business affairs of life with that degree of intelligence which would enable one to fully understand and realize the nature of the transaction and consequences thereof.

[3, 4] The trial court, in its decision, as do counsel for the respondent in their brief, stresses the proposition that the deceased in carrying out the transactions, was without independent advice as to the nature and consequences to him of the proposed agreement. The undisputed evidence shows, as has been pointed out above, that Mr. Horton, president of the bank with which the deceased had for many years deposited his money, explicitly explained to the deceased, before the agreement was consummated, and prior to its being reduced to writing, that the effect of the agreement, if executed by him, would be to transfer his entire estate to the defendants, and advised him to consider the proposition well before accepting it. If, therefore, this were a case where the relation of the parties was of a fiduciary or confidential character, the advice or caution thus given deceased by Mr. Horton, in whom we may assume the deceased had full confidence, since he had extensive dealings with him as a banker, would entirely measure up to the rule as to independent advice in such cases. The situation here, however, is not one to which the rule of independent advice is applicable. There was not, prior to the making of the agreement, a fiduciary or other confidential relation existing between the deceased and the defendants. See Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 493, 497; Hemenway v. Abbott, 8 Cal. App. 450, 463, 97 P. 190; 1 Story's Eq. Juris., § 218; Scattergood v. Kirk, 192 Pa. 263, 43 A. 1030, 1032. They were friends, it is true, and had been for several years, and no doubt the deceased had confidence in the integrity of the Studleys, and believed that they, above all others with whom he was acquainted, would give him that care and attention which his physical condition demanded. This, however, did not constitute a confidential relation within the meaning of that doctrine as it is known to the law. The entire transaction, from its inception to its consummation, involved a matter of contract only— no different in its general nature or the circumstances under which it was made from any other contract whereby one party agrees to perform certain personal services for another for a specified or stipulated compensation, and where such parties are strangers to each other, so far as relationship by consanguinity or affinity is concerned.

[5] The foregoing observations have proceeded upon the assumption that the deceased was mentally capable of transacting the business involving the transactions in controversy. But, as has been shown, the theory of the plaintiff, as is that of the decision below, is that, when the transactions in question were under consideration, and finally executed, the mind of the deceased had become so impaired or weakened from the disease with which he was afflicted that he was mentally incapable of fully appreciating the seriousness of said transactions or their effect upon his property rights; or, in other words (and this is as far as the findings really go), that his weakened mental condition rendered him easily and readily susceptible to pressure or the exercise upon him in the transactions of sinister influence by those in whom he had a high degree of confidence; that defendants, knowing of his impaired mental condition, took advantage thereof, and, as to the deceased, thus succeeded in bringing about an unfair or unreasonable bargain. As we have already stated, however, there is no evidence in the record which warrants any such conclusion. To the contrary, the uncontradicted evidence clearly shows that during all the time that the transactions were under discussion between the deceased and F. D. Studley, and at the time that they were executed, Bentson was mentally sound, and fully realized and appreciated the nature of the transactions and the effect thereof, so far as they affected him. Some five or six witnesses testified that they were acquainted with the deceased in his lifetime, met him before and after he went to the Studley home, conversed with him, and from their acquaintance with him and the character of the conversations held with him they were of the opinion that there was nothing the matter with his mentality; that he carried on his conversations intelligently, and seemed to understand everything that was said to him, and was able to discuss the subjects to which the conversations related understandingly. We will not undertake to state herein in detail all this testimony, although some of it may be briefly referred to.

Henry S. Drake and his wife met the deceased at the home of the Studleys, where the Drakes visited for a week in the month of February and prior to the time of the making of the agreement and other papers herein involved. They testified that he not only carried on his conversations in a rational manner, but frequently declared to them, or in their presence, that he was perfectly satisfied with the proposition to turn his property over to the Studleys as a consideration for the care and attention which his illness required. Both stated that he was able to sit at the family table at mealtimes, and said that he had declared that "he was very thankful to have people as good as Mr. Studley's folks to take care of him, for, if he had not had the care that he had, he would have been under the ground before that day." Henry S. Drake testified that the deceased stated that he was perfectly willing to turn his property over to the Studleys as a consideration for the aid that they were giving and intended to give him; that "he would not have any one to have his property but Mr. Studley; * * * that there was no one in the old country he wanted to have his property."

Dr. John S. Nation, a chiropractor located in Elsinore, testified that, while the deceased was at the home of the Studleys, Mr. Studley brought him to his (the doctor's) office for treatment on several different occasions; that the deceased on one occasion stated to the doctor that, "not being able to properly care for himself, he proposed to have Mr. and Mrs. Studley care for him"; that they had been "very nice and good to him"; and that he was going to leave them all the property he had; that he was "by himself," and had no one else to leave it to; and that "he had made up his mind to leave what he had to Mr. and Mrs. Studley"; that he (witness), from his acquaintance and conversations with Bentson, formed the opinion that he was mentally sound—that he was sane.

Banker Horton testified that the deceased seemed to him to be "mentally competent. He was as alert as the ordinary man mentally. I base my opinion upon my experience with him and my business transactions with him."

Thomas O. Boothby testified that, when he called on the deceased at the home of the Studleys for the purpose of making a payment of interest on his indebtedness to Bentson, the latter discussed the matter with Boothby as intelligently as he had ever discussed any business proposition with the witness, and suggested to Boothby that, since it was not convenient for him to go to the bank on account of his illness, he (Boothby) could pay the interest to Mr. Horton, who, Bentson then stated, was acting for him in his business matters.

There were several other witnesses who knew and had met and talked with the deceased prior and subsequent to the date of the execution of the transactions in dispute, and who testified that they were of the opinion that the deceased was mentally sound and capable of carrying on business in an intelligent way during the period of time covered by the negotiations and the consummation of said transactions.

But, it seems to us, more convincing evidence of the mental competency of the deceased and his ability to take good care of his own interests in the transactions could hardly be thought of than the fact that he deliberated and "bargained" several days before he came to the terms of the Studleys, and finally signed the agreement and the other papers, and refused to, or rather, as the witness Horton expressed it "showed reluctance" to, sign the papers until there was inserted in the agreement upon his suggestion and insistence a provision to the effect that he was to receive the rents, issues and profits derived from his estate during his lifetime, and that, when Horton inserted a provision in the agreement to that effect, the mind of Bentson appeared to be at "ease." Manifestly, a man of weak mind, or who was unable, by reason of a debilitated mind, to protect well his own interests or to express his real wish or intention in a transaction of such importance, would not have carried on the affairs involved herein with the degree of deliberation exhibited by the deceased therein.

[6, 7] An investigation of the record will force the conclusion that the court below planted its decision entirely upon these propositions, to wit, that, by reason of the fact that, at the times the transactions in question were under negotiation and ultimately completed as indicated, the age and serious illness of the deceased had so broken down or impaired his mentality that he was, at said times, mentally incapable of transacting business understandingly or with the ability to fully appreciate the nature thereof and its consequences to him, or at least easily influenced; that the Studleys had the confidence of the deceased, and could, therefore, the more readily impose upon or lead him into the making of an unfair or unconscientious bargain. Indeed, that these, together with the fact, as the court conceived it, that the consideration moving from the defendants to the deceased for the agreement and the transfer of his property under the terms of the agreement was inadequate, were the evidentiary factors persuading the trial court to its decision, is clearly disclosed in the discussion of the facts in the judge's written opinion filed with the record here. But it does not follow from the mere fact that a person has reached or passed the allotted three score and ten years in age that he has become mentally weak to the extent that he is rendered incapable of attending to his important business affairs intelligently, or with full understanding of the nature thereof. In other words, that fact alone affords no presumption of a grantor being incapable of understanding the nature of the transaction or of his being without sufficient mental power or volition to resist the importunities of one attempting to take advantage of him in a deal involving the proposed transfer of his property. See Rogers v. Scott, 28 Cal. App. 93, 99, 151 P. 379; Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 P. 910; Broaddus v. James, 13 Cal. App. 464, 466, 110 P. 158. Nor does the fact that the grantor was afflicted with a serious physical malady at the time of executing the grant itself warrant the conclusion that he was mentally incompetent to transact the business culminating in the execution of the grant. As is true here, as against the positive uncontradicted testimony of witnesses who were acquainted with the grantor, and who had ample opportunity to form an intelligent opinion as to his mental condition and capacity prior to, at the time of, and subsequent to, the transaction, and having no personal interest in the event of the issue, that, at the time he executed the grant, he was in a sound mental condition, fully capable of safeguarding his own interests or his property rights in any of the ordinary transactions with the general nature or character of which the average person is familiar, the mere fact that he was old when making the grant, even coupled with the fact that at such time he was afflicted with a serious physical malady, is entitled to no such weight as to justify the conclusion that the transaction was executed by him against his will or as the result of the exercise of undue influence by the grantee, or without full understanding on his part of the nature and the effect thereof upon his rights.

[8, 9] The matter of the consideration for a grant or the assignment of property is, in conceivable cases, of controlling importance, particularly where the consideration appears to be grossly inadequate. This declaration has peculiar application to suits in equity for the enforcement of executory agreements for the sale of real property. But in such cases, as in actions like the one before us, "the sufficiency of the purported or claimed consideration for a contract of the character under discussion [practically for the specific enforcement of an agreement to convey to plaintiff certain property] must be determined from the facts of the transaction as they existed when the contract was made, rather than by subsequent developments." Parsons v. Cashman, 23 Cal. App. 298, 301, 137 P. 1109, 1111. Applying that rule to the facts of the instant case, it is clear that the consideration for the conveyances moving from defendants to Bentson cannot justly be declared to be so inadequate as to constitute it a sufficient ground for vitiating the conveyances, or, of itself, or when considered in connection with the facts of Bentson's advanced age and serious illness, to be regarded (in view of the uncontradicted evidence disclosing all the circumstances leading to and attending the consummation of the transactions) as of sufficient probative significance to justify the conclusion that the agreement and the instruments thereupon following were procured to be executed by the deceased through fraud or the exercise of undue influence, or that deceased, when signing the instruments, was mentally incompetent to transact the business intelligently and freely. F. D. Studley, as we have seen, was a carpenter by trade, capable of earning $8 per day when engaged in work at the trade, and, at the time the transactions herein involved occurred, had open to him employment at said trade. The doctor attending the deceased, while stating to said Studley that Bentson was suffering from an incurable disease—a disease which would cause his death—also in effect stated to him (F. D. Studley) that the nature of the disease was such that Bentson might live a few months only, or he might linger for years. Under those circumstances, the Studleys could not know or determine how long they would be required to devote themselves to the care of the deceased, and with this understanding of the situation they entered into the agreement in question; F. D. Studley forfeiting all opportunity for work at a trade at which he could earn lucrative compensation, and giving himself over entirely to caring for the deceased. Obviously, the extent of the responsibilities imposed upon or assumed by the defendants under the agreement could not be measured at the time the instrument was executed, and, as is said in Parsons v. Cashman, supra, so it is peculiarly true here, the fairness or reasonableness of the agreement must be determined by the facts and circumstances existing at the time the transaction was had, and not by the fact that the death of the deceased, which might have been postponed for several years, according to the doctor, occurred within a few months after the agreement was made and the defendants began the performance of the services thereby required.

We think, as the foregoing discussion indicates, that the decision of the trial court is without evidentiary support. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

80 Cal. App. 377

CULLINAN et al. v. MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5472.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Pleading 🔑8(2)—Principal and agent 🔑189(1)—General allegation of agency is sufficient.

It is the general rule that an allegation that one is trustee is but a conclusion of law, though general allegation of agency is sufficient.

2. Pleading 🔑207—Objection that complaint is ambiguous or uncertain or that essential facts appear only inferentially, as conclusion of law must be raised by special demurrer.

Objection that complaint is ambiguous or uncertain, or that essential facts appear only inferentially or as conclusion of law or by way of recital must be raised by special demurrer, and cannot be urged on general demurrer.

3. Trial 🔑396(5)—Finding that one employing attorneys acted as trustee held authorized and not without issues.

In action to recover fees as attorneys for trust estate, finding that person employing plaintiffs acted as trustee held not without issues and unauthorized, where allegation of agency and trusteeship was undenied, and plaintiffs' opening statement that trusteeship was admitted was not denied, and court and counsel for plaintiffs, in subsequent proceedings, acted on defendant's tacit admission.

4. Estoppel 🔑88(1)—Admission must be of fact to create an estoppel.

Admission must be of a fact to create an estoppel, and not of a conclusion of law.

5. Estoppel 🔑88(2)—Party may be estopped to deny admission of conclusion of law if it induces opposite party to assume different position.

Party's admission of conclusion of law, which induces opposite party to assume position that he would not have otherwise assumed, may estop him to deny admission.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

6. Trial 🔑396(5)—Court may treat facts as admitted, where inference is justified.

Court may treat as admitted facts which may be justly inferred to be admitted from conduct of cause.

7. Trusts 🔑171—Since trustee must preserve and protect trust property, acts within scope of authority are binding (Civ. Code, § 2267).

Trustee is bound to preserve and protect property of trust, in view of Civ. Code, § 2267, for which he is general agent, and his acts within scope of his authority bind trust property to same extent as acts of agent bind his principal.

8. Trusts 🔑262—Evidence held to sustain finding that trustee was authorized to employ attorneys suing for fees.

In action to recover fees as attorneys for trust estate, evidence held to sustain finding that trustee acted within authority in hiring attorneys, where trustee's employment of attorneys was reasonably necessary to protect and preserve trust fund.

9. Trusts 🔑211—Generally, trustee's attorneys must look to trustee only for payment for services.

Attorneys employed by trustee must, as a rule, look to trustee for payment and not to trust fund, but, where trustee is without funds of estate, he may by agreement require attorneys to look solely to trust estate.

10. Trusts 🔑256—Action to charge trust estate with reasonable value of legal services can be maintained before payment is due.

Action to charge trust estate with reasonable value of legal services rendered for its benefit can be maintained, although payment is not yet due.

11. Trusts 🔑265—Payment for legal services rendered trust estate, which became due during pendency of suit, might be required, though action was brought before payment was due.

Though in general equity operates on parties and subject-matter as standing at commencement of action, it might require payment in suit against trust estate for legal services brought before payment was due, but payment of which became due during pendency of suit.

12. Election of remedies 🔑12—Suit to recover attorneys' fees from trustee's estate held not to preclude recovery from trust fund, where recovery could not be had from trustee's estate.

That attorneys for trust estate sought recovery for legal services from trustee's estate held not to preclude them from seeking recovery from trust fund, where recovery could not be had from trustee's estate and there was no prejudice.

13. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Omitting to find on special defenses, where findings would be adverse to appellants, is not ground for reversal.

Failure to find on special defenses is not ground for reversal, where findings would be adverse to appellants.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action for fees as attorneys for trust estate, brought by Eustace Cullinan and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Cullinan & Hickey, against the Mercantile Trust Company of California, trustee, Adelaide McColgan as administratrix of the estate of Donald A. McColgan, and others. From the judgment, Adelaide McColgan, as administratrix of the estate of Daniel A. McColgan, and others appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 193 Cal. 562, 226 P. 4; 252 P. 652.

Harrison & Harrison and L. P. Forestell, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Eustace Cullinan, Julian D. Cohn, Cohn & Cohn, and W. T. Sweigert, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck and Dunne, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco, for defendant Mercantile Trust Co.

Glensor, Clewe & Van Dine, of San Francisco, for defendants Reginald Bell and Nellie McM. Donovan.

CASHIN, J. An action by respondents to establish the reasonable value of services rendered for the benefit of a trust estate, to charge the amount thereon, and for a decree directing payment from the trust funds.

On or about May 24, 1916, Daniel A. McColgan, a money broker, with whom appellant Reginald McColgan was in partnership, loaned to California Motion Picture Corporation the sum of $26,000, the aggregate of various sums advanced by himself, the partnership mentioned, and George L. Crabtree, Reginald Bell, C. H. Williams and Nellie McM. Donovan. The loan was evidenced by promissory notes executed by the corporation to the persons mentioned in the several amounts advanced by them with the exception of the sum advanced by the partnership, which was included in a promissory note payable to Daniel A. McColgan. Each note was indorsed by Herbert A. Payne and Clarence Payne as guarantors. During the same and the following year further loans aggregating the sum of $12,165.98 were made by McColgan to the corporation and to the guarantors mentioned who were interested in the corporation, all from his individual funds and those of the partnership, with the exception of the sum of $2,500 advanced by Thomas W. Hickey and which was held in trust by McColgan for that purpose. The latter loans, with the exception of a small amount, were also evidenced by promissory notes payable to McColgan, who subsequently assigned to Thomas W. Hickey an interest in one of these to the extent of the sum advanced by him. On January 2, 1918, no part of the loans having been paid, respondents, who are attorneys at law, were employed to collect, and subsequently, as the result of their efforts and with the assent of McColgan, a bond in the sum of $41,829.65, the aggregate of the sums then unpaid, less certain deductions agreed to by McColgan, with a mortgage on real property in the city of New York securing the same, were executed by a corporation known as the "383 Park Avenue Corporation," to Daniel A. McColgan, for his benefit and as trustee for the partnership and the others interested in the loans. The instruments last mentioned were dated April 5, 1919, the bond bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum and being payable on April 5, 1924. Subsequently C. H. Williams, one of the beneficiaries, assigned to appellant Mary C. Williams his interest in the fund. Daniel A. McColgan died on May 12, 1921, whereupon an action was bought by Reginald Bell, Thomas W. Hickey, and Nellie McM. Donovan against Adelaide McColgan as administratrix of his estate, George L. Crabtree and Mary C. Williams, two of the beneficiaries mentioned, being joined as defendants, in which action it was adjudged that the instruments last mentioned were held by the deceased in trust as above stated, and the Mercantile Trust Company of California, a corporation, was appointed to succeed the deceased as such trustee, to which, pursuant to the decree, the bond and mortgage were transferred by the administratrix.

It appears from the evidence without contradiction that, between the date of the employment of respondents and the death of Daniel A. McColgan, payments on the principal and as interest on the loans aggregating the sum of $12,933.08 were made to the latter, and that between May 8, 1923, and May 23, 1924, the total amount of the unpaid portion of the loans represented by the bond and mortgage, with interest, aggregating the sum of $39,856.67, was received by Mercantile Trust Company of California as trustee.

The complaint alleged that the plaintiffs were employed to collect the unpaid amounts of the notes from the makers and guarantors thereof and the stockholders of the motion picture corporation; that they were to be paid the reasonable value of their services in the event of the success of their efforts, and then only from the amount recovered, it being further alleged that, "in making said loans and in so employing Eustace Cullinan and Thomas W. Hickey as attorneys at law as aforesaid, and in and about all the transactions herein, said Daniel A. McColgan acted for himself and also as agent of and trustee for said Reginald Bell, Nellie McM. Donovan, George L. Crabtree, C. H. Williams, Reginald McColgan, and Thomas W. Hickey, hereinafter called the beneficiaries, and he had authority from said beneficiaries so to act. Plaintiffs are informed and believe, and on such information and belief allege, that said Daniel A. McColgan so acted with the knowledge and express consent of said beneficiaries," and that the Mercantile Trust Company was about to distribute the fund without reserving sufficient to pay or paying the claim of respondents, concluding with a prayer for an order directing such payment from the fund and that distribution be enjoined pending compliance with the order.

Appellants denied the allegations of the complaint as to the reasonable value of the services, that McColgan agreed to pay therefor from the sum collected, or that any services were rendered after December 5, 1918, and denied that McColgan had express authority of appellants to employ respondents, or that he acted with their knowledge or express assent. Subsequently appellants, by permission of the court, amended their answer by denying the authority of McColgan to act and that he acted with their assent.

Defendants Mercantile Trust Company of California, as trustee, and Reginald Bell, with Nellie McM. Donovan, answered separately, denying the allegations of the complaint, but did not appeal from the judgment.

The appellants, viz. Adelaide McColgan, as administratrix, George L. Crabtree, Mary C. Williams, and Reginald McColgan, joined in an answer containing the denials above mentioned, and, as special defenses, alleging that respondents filed against the estate of the deceased a claim for the value of their services, and by so doing they elected to enforce the personal obligation of McColgan and waived any right against the fund, further alleging the action to be barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure.

The findings were in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, no findings being made on the special defenses, and judgment was entered thereon against all the defendants, fixing the reasonable value of the services rendered and adjudging that such sum be paid "only out of any money that is in the possession or shall hereafter come into the possession of the Mercantile Trust Company of California as trustee," under the trust mentioned, and directing payment to be made by the latter therefrom, the trustee being restrained from dividing the fund without reserving sufficient therefrom to pay the claim, with interest and costs.

Appellants present their appeal on the judgment roll with a bill of exceptions, urging as grounds for reversal the failure to find on the special defenses, and the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain certain findings, in particular as to the value of the services, the finding that McColgan employed defendants on behalf of the persons referred to in the complaint as the beneficiaries, that in making the loans and in employing respondents he "acted for himself and also as agent and trustee," and that services were rendered after the execution of the bond and mortgage.

[1, 2] The evidence sufficiently shows that the services in question commenced immediately after the employment, and were diligently and effectively performed; and, while the major portion thereof was rendered during the period immediately preceding the execution of the bond and mortgage, it appears that McColgan continued thereafter to seek and obtain the advice of respondents in this and other matters until December, 1920. In view of the evidence, the conclusion of the trial court as to the period covered by the services, with the exception of the finding that services were rendered between the above dated and April 18, 1921, and their value is reasonably supported and cannot be disturbed. As stated, the allegation that McColgan, in making the loans and employing respondents, acted as the agent and trustee for the persons named, was not denied. While a general allegation of agency is sufficient (2 Corp. Jur., p. 906, "Agency," 611; Kjerschow v. Daggs, 24 Ariz. 207, 207 P. 1089; Cochran v. Goodman, 3 Cal. 244), it is the general rule that an allegation that one is a trustee is but a conclusion of law (39 Cyc. "Trusts," p. 620; 12 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. "Legal Conclusions," p. 1022; Francis v. Gisborn, 30 Utah, 67, 83 P. 571; Bartholomew v. Guthrie, 71 Kan. 705, 81 P. 491, 493), and appellants contend that no issue was tendered thereby, and that as a consequence the finding of its truth was not only without the issues, but unsupported by evidence sufficient to sustain the conclusion that McColgan at the time the contract of employment was made was a trustee in the strict and accurate sense of the term, or more than a mere agent as admitted by the pleadings. It has been held that an objection that the complaint is ambiguous or uncertain, or that essential facts appear only inferentially or as a conclusion of law or by way of recital, must be raised by special demurrer, and cannot be urged on a general demurrer. Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 108 Cal. 294, 41 P. 410; Burke v. Dittus, 8 Cal. App. 175, 96 P. 330; Green v. Darling (Cal. App.) 239 P. 70; Smith v. Peters, 46 Cal. App. 47, 188 P. 811.

[3-6] In the instant case, not only was no specific objection made to the insufficiency of the allegation either by demurrer or at the trial, but respondents, as part of their opening statement, read the material parts of the pleadings, stating with reference to the allegation mentioned as follows:

> "It is admitted that, in making said loans and employing Eustace Cullinan and Thomas W. Hickey, said Daniel A. McColgan acted for himself and also as agent and trustee for these other persons whose money Daniel A. McColgan had loaned; that it is admitted that he acted as trustee and agent," —to which counsel for appellants made no reply. It is clear from the record that in the subsequent proceedings, the court and counsel for respondents acted upon appellants' tacit admission of the truth of these allegations and that the finding of the court was based thereon. It is the rule that an admission must be one of fact and not of a conclusion of law (Chamberlayne, Ev., § 1293), yet a party may, where an admission has induced the opposite party to assume a position he would not have assumed had the admission not been made, be estopped from afterwards denying it (People v. Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne & C. R. Co., 244 Ill. 166, 91 N. E. 48). Where a cause is so conducted that the court and counsel may rightly and do infer that certain facts are conceded or admitted, the court may so treat them. Godwin v. State, 1 Boyce (Del.) 173, 74 A. 1101, 1103, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 940; Pratt v. Conway, 148 Mo. 291, 49 S. W. 1028, 71 Am. St. Rep. 602. As was said in Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 P. 90:

> "It seems to us that the reformed procedure would receive a decided shock if a defendant should be permitted to stand by and without objection allow an issue to be tried as though properly presented by the pleadings and on appeal escape the consequences by claiming that the complaint failed to present such issue."

[7, 8] While the admitted allegations of the complaint that certain of the notes executed by the motion picture corporation were made payable to the individuals who advanced portions of the sums loaned tend to negate the conclusion that McColgan was thereafter until the execution of the bond and mortgage a trustee in the strict sense, yet it does not appear but that, as the result of the transactions between these parties immediately preceding the employment of respondents, such relation was created. The authority of the trustee to contract for the services was denied by appellants' amended pleading, and its extent, which depended upon facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the latter, was not directly shown. It is, however, the duty of a trustee to preserve and protect the property of the trust (26 R. C. L. "Trusts," p. 1281, § 131), for which he is the general agent, and his acts within the scope of his authority bind the trust property to the same extent as the acts of an agent bind his principal (Civ. Code, § 2267). The trust relation being admitted, and the act being shown to have been reasonably necessary to protect and preserve the fund as in cases of ordinary agency (Leake v. Sutherland, 25 Ark. 219; C. E. Parkes Grain Co. v. Townsend [Tex. Civ. App.] 267 S. W. 1011; Nebraska B. S. & L. Co. v. Conway, 127 Iowa, 237, 103 N. W. 122; 2 Corp. Jur. p. 921, "Agency," § 652), it may reasonably be inferred, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the trustee acted within his authority.

[9] As a rule, an attorney employed by a trustee must look to the trustee for payment, and can have no claim on the trust fund (6 Corp. Jur. p. 734, "Attorney and Client," § 306), but to this rule there is a well-recognized exception. When a trustee, authorized to make expenditures for the protection or safety of the trust estate, is without funds of the estate in his possession and is unwilling to make himself liable therefor, he may by agreement require those rendering the services to look solely to the trust estate (26 R. C. L. p. 1318, "Trusts," § 176; Hall v. Jameson, 151 Cal. 606, 91 P. 518, 12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1190, 121 Am. St. Rep. 137), and, when facts creating the exception appear, the creditor may proceed in equity for the satisfaction of his claim out of the trust estate (New v. Nicoll, 73 N. Y. 127, 29 Am. Rep. 111; Jessup v. Smith, 223 N. Y. 203, 119 N. E. 403; Wells-Stone Mercantile Co. v. Grover, 7 N. D. 460, 75 N. W. 911, 41 L. R. A. 252; Gill v. Carmine, 55 Md. 339; Wadsworth, Howland Co. v. Arnold, 24 R. I. 32, 51 A. 1041; Mason v. Pomeroy, 151 Mass. 164, 24 N. E. 202, 7 L. R. A. 771; Frost v. Thompson, 219 Mass. 360, 106 N. E. 1009; King v. Stowell, 211 Mass. 246, 98 N. E. 91; Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. [4th Ed.] § 1085). Whether the creditor's right to obtain satisfaction from the trust estate depends upon the trustee's right to indemnity, and hence upon the state of the account between the latter and the trust fund, or, irrespective of such right, upon the principle that a trust estate should pay for the benefit conferred thereon by the creditor, it is unnecessary to decide, as no suggestion is made that McColgan was in default under the terms of the trust agreement and the finding as to the reasonable value of the services is fully supported by the evidence.

[10, 11] It is further contended that, if respondents' right to sue accrued before the death of McColgan, the action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, and that, if the obligation was to pay when the whole fund had been collected by the trustee, then no cause of action existed at the time the complaint was filed. It is clear from the allegations of the complaint and the testimony that the agreement was to pay from the trust estate when the fund represented by the notes should be paid to the trustee, and the right to relief was not barred by the statute mentioned. The complaint was filed on May 12, 1923, alleging that the trustee was about to collect the balance unpaid under the bond and mortgage and disburse the trust fund to the beneficiaries, which distribution respondents sought to enjoin; and it appears that the collection was made in full on May 23, 1924. An action to establish the equitable right to charge the trust estate with the reasonable value of services rendered for its benefit could be maintained (Jessup v. Smith, supra; Strong v. Dutcher, 186 App. Div. 307, 174 N. Y. S. 352), though payment was not yet due (Mason v. Pomeroy, supra), and, although it is the general rule that a decree in equity operates upon the parties and subject-matter as they stood at the commencement of the action, as was said by Mr. Justice Henshaw in Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Allen, 5 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 51, 40 P. 752:

> "It only does so to subserve the ends of justice. When * * * a * * * change in the status has been brought about by the passing of time, under the very terms of the agreement, and knowledge of this change is, as here, judicially before the court, or is brought in by appropriate pleading, its decree should be addressed to the rights existing, not at the commencement, but at the time of the determination of the action."

See 21 Corp. Jur. p. 663, "Equity," § 846. In view of our conclusion that by agreement the claim was not due until the loans had been paid, a finding on the defense of the statute of limitations would necessarily have been against appellants.

[12] The second defense presented the question of the effect of the claim filed against the estate as a waiver of the right to charge the trust fund. The agreement that Mr. McColgan should incur no personal liability prevented a recovery from his estate; and the fact that respondents were mistaken in this respect would not prevent them from subsequently availing themselves of the remedy to which they were entitled under the facts of the case. McGibbon v. Schmidt, 172 Cal. 70, 155 P. 460; Snow v. Alley, 156 Mass. 193, 30 N. E. 691, 692; Doucette v. Baldwin, 194 Mass. 131, 80 N. E. 444; Herdan v. Hanson, 182 Cal. 539, 189 P. 440. As said in Mansfield v. Pickwick Stages, 191 Cal. 131, 215 P. 389:

> "'The doctrine of election as applied to a choice of remedies which precludes a party from claiming repugnant rights, is but an extension of the general principles of equitable estoppel, and proceeds upon a like theory that the inconsistent attitude of the party will put his adversary to some disadvantage' * * * under the well-settled principles of the doctrine of estoppel, the disadvantage here referred to must be a real injury, such as would, in contemplation of law, amount to a fraud upon the party invoking the estoppel."

It not being contended that the claim was acted upon by the administratrix, that proceedings were had to establish it, or that the trustee or beneficiaries were prejudiced thereby, its filing did not constitute an election to waive equitable rights in the trust fund. De Laval Pacific Co. v. United C. & D. Co., 65 Cal. App. 584, 224 P. 766.

[13] It appearing that findings on the special defenses would have been adverse to appellants this omission is not ground for reversal. United States Trading Corporation v. Newmark Grain Co., 56 Cal. App. 176, 205 P. 29; Lincoln v. Hoggard, 66 Cal. App. 197, 225 P. 770.

The trial court had jurisdiction both of the trust estate and of the cause, and no abuse of its discretion or error in its proceedings being shown, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 442

CULLINAN et al. v. MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5486.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 27, 1926.)

Trusts 🔑266—Where judgment required trustee to pay attorneys' fees, order requiring payment was appropriate and notice thereof to beneficiaries unnecessary.

Where trustee and beneficiaries and trust fund were within jurisdiction, and judgment required attorneys' fees to be paid from trust fund, and proceeding by beneficiaries for supersedeas did not stay execution of judgment, order directing trustee to satisfy charge was appropriate, and might issue without notice to beneficiaries.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Eustace Cullinan and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Cullinan & Hickey, against the Mercantile Trust Company of California, trustee, Adelaide McColgan as administratrix of the estate of Daniel A. McColgan and others. From orders requiring payment of attorney's fees, Adelaide McColgan, administratrix, and others appeal. Affirmed.

Alfred J. Harwood, Harrison & Harrison, and George D. Collins, Jr., all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Julius D. Cohn, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. Appeals from orders made after the entry of a judgment fixing the reasonable value of services rendered for the benefit of a trust estate, and adjudging that the amount thereof be paid therefrom.

The orders required the trustee to pay the amount of the judgment. The judgment mentioned was appealed from by certain of the beneficiaries of the trust, who are also the appellants here, and the judgment was affirmed by this court. Eustace Cullinan et al. v. Mercantile Trust Co., 252 P. 647, No. 1 Civ. 5472, decided December 21, 1926. The trustee, which was joined as a defendant in the original action and to which the orders were directed, took no appeal either from the judgment or the orders. The orders were made without notice to appellants, and followed a hearing on an order to show cause served on the trustee. Following their appeal from the original judgment two of the appellants applied to the Supreme Court, where the appeal was then pending, for a writ of supersedeas to stay its execution. Cullinan et al. v. Mercantile Trust Co., etc., et al., 193 Cal. 562, 226 P. 4. The court on denying the writ said:

> "The judgment as rendered required nothing of these petitioners, but they are, nevertheless, parties interested therein and aggrieved thereby and are entitled to appeal therefrom. They contend herein that the perfection of their appeal operates as a statutory supersedeas against the entire judgment, including the portion thereof requiring the payment of the fund by the trust company to the plaintiff. In this they are mistaken. Their appeal does not stay the execution of that portion of the judgment which is directed at the trust company, which has not appealed"—citing Halsted v. First Savings Bank, 173 Cal. 605, 608, 160 P. 1075.

The right of plaintiffs was adjudicated in an action to which the trustee and beneficiaries were parties defendant, and the judgment required the claim to be paid from a trust fund of which the court had jurisdiction. It having been held in the proceeding for the writ of supersedeas that the execution of the judgment as to the trustee was not stayed, the plaintiffs were entitled to the means provided by law for its enforcement. An order directing the trustee to satisfy the charge created by the judgment on the trust fund was an appropriate means for its enforcement, and, like the ordinary process for the enforcement of a money judgment, might issue without notice to appellants.

The orders are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 450

FRANCISCO & ELLINGTON, Inc., v. PASADENA TOURNAMENT OF ROSES ASS'N. (Civ. 3146.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

Findings of trial court on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

2. Contracts 🔑10(2)—Excavating contract held not void for want of mutuality after work was completed, though defendant reserved right to terminate work.

Contract for excavation held not void for want of mutuality after work thereunder was completed and stipulated payments made, though it bound contractor to complete work but allowed other party right to terminate it.

3. Work and labor 🔑28(5)—Evidence held to show that there was no change in plans for excavation after agreement constituting release and entitling contractor to recover on quantum meruit.

Evidence held sufficient to support implied finding that there was no change in plans and specifications for excavation after contractor agreed to complete work releasing him and entitling him to recover on quantum meruit.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1056(2)—Exclusion of evidence of reasonable value of services held not prejudicial, where there was no right to recovery except under contract.

Exclusion of evidence of the reasonable value of plaintiffs' work as excavators held not prejudicial, where no right of recovery existed except under contract fixing definite price.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul Burks, Judge.

Action by Francisco & Ellington, Inc., against the Pasadena Tournament of Roses Association, to recover a balance due on a contract for excavating. From a judgment allowing insufficient recovery, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Shaw & McDaniel, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hahn, Hahn & Landreth, of Pasadena, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. [1] Plaintiff was given judgment for the sum of $834.90 as the balance due upon a contract for making certain excavations in the construction of a stadium for defendant, and has appealed therefrom, contending that a much larger balance is due. Appellant's principal contention is that the findings are not supported by the evidence, in that no "binding contract between the parties" was proved and that, even assuming that there was a binding contract, "yet the plans of construction were so materially deviated from * * * on matters not contemplated within the terms of the contract that appellant is entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit." It is conceded that the judgment is for the correct amount if the contract which the defendant attempted to prove is the measure of plaintiff's right of recovery. Since the findings of the trial court from conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal, the evidence will be stated in the light most favorable to the support of the judgment, omitting contradictory evidence. Plaintiff was paid for certain extra work which was not within the terms of the agreement upon which the defendant relies. Compensation for such extra work is not involved in this action.

About February 15, 1922, the defendant undertook the construction of a stadium in the shape of a horseshoe, with the open end to the south, the surrounding embankment to be raised approximately 50 feet above the finished floor level with earth taken from within the inner line of the embankment, the floor to be about 250 feet wide by 850 feet long. W. A. Taylor was the authorized representative of the defendant and Myron Hunt was the architect of the structure. W. T. Ellington represented the plaintiff in most of the transactions between the parties; he and Herbert Francisco then being copartners, but subsequently forming the plaintiff corporation. He offered, in behalf of the copartnership, to do the contemplated excavating at 30 cents a cubic yard and Taylor agreed to that price, but stated that he "wanted him (Ellington) to make an accurate figure and submit a lump sum bid." Ellington "said he had not figured it accurately enough," that "it would require somewhere from two to three weeks for him to do it, and he didn't have time to do it right then." No "lump sum bid" was ever submitted, but it was agreed that plaintiff would "move on the job and go to it," and work was commenced about February 20th with a small force. Plaintiff had a large force at work by March 20th and continuously thereafter until the excavations were completed. After the work was commenced, Taylor received such instructions from defendant as to prevent the execution of a "lump sum" contract with plaintiff. It does not appear that either party thereafter expressed a desire to enter into such a contract, and it is a fair inference that the original understanding in that respect was abandoned by mutual consent. April 3, 1922, Taylor presented to Ellington for signature a proposed written contract, binding the plaintiff to "do all the excavation necessary in the construction of said stadium" for 30 cents per cubic yard, the yardage to be computed from the map of the premises provided by the architect "and the finished grades as shown in the plans furnished by the architect." The last clause of the proposed contract was as follows:

> "It is further agreed that first parties may terminate this agreement upon three days' notice to second parties by paying to them all money owed them to date, and in addition thereto the actual cost of removing their equipment from the premises."

Ellington refused to sign the contract, objecting particularly to the clause providing for its termination. "It was agreed by both parties that * * * the rest of the document was substantially all right." Both parties then agreed that, in the event of a termination of the contract, the amount to be paid to plaintiff would be left to the decision of Hunt. Hunt delivered to each party a letter accepting the proposal that he act as arbitrator between them, attaching thereto a copy of the proposed contract. The parties, however, never signed the contract, but the plaintiff continued the work. The plans were changed in certain particulars after plaintiff had first offered to do the excavating at 30 cents a yard. Among other changes, the tunnels were lengthened and the floor level was lowered two feet. The plaintiff made claim for extra compensation on account of the changes in the plans and on the 5th of July the parties met together in an effort to agree upon the amount of such extra compensation to which plaintiff was entitled. The conference resulted in the execution of the following document by the parties whose signatures are attached thereto:

"To W. A. Taylor and Rea P. Taylor: Copy to —M. J. J. Mitchell, President Tournament of Roses Ass'n. Mr. W. F. Creller, Chairman Building Committee. Francisco & Ellington. Architects' Superintendent.

"Referring to our memorandum A4216, contract B3801, dated June 26, 1922, regarding your settlement of extra items under your contract with Francisco & Ellington.

"After consultations with the building committee by both yourself and this office, we, in that memorandum, approved your allowing Francisco & Ellington a total added charge for various items as therein set forth, amounting to $9,000. The bill which they put in totaled something over $14,000. Other items in the bill were not allowed. After a further consultation to-day they convinced you and convinced me that there was a proper charge coming from them as the result of the change back to the original level of the bottom of the Bowl, from a level 2' higher, which latter level was contemplated at the time you made your agreement with them. You are authorized to make a settlement with them in full for all items not covered by the flat agreement to move dirt at 30 cents per yard, providing they will accept, as they have agreed to accept, an additional $3,000, bringing their total bill exclusive of the 30 cents figuring, up to $12,000.

"Our contract A4210, dated June 22, 1922, authorized you to pay Francisco & Ellington the sum of $6,000 on account of extra charges as definitely set forth in this memorandum. You are hereby authorized to pay Francisco & Ellington the further sum of * * * $8,000, which, together with the $8,000 payment referred to above, brings the total payments on account of extra charges to $12,000 as set forth above.

"As stated to you in our order of July 6th, being memorandum A4233, contract B3801, it is left to you to determine the rapidity with which you can afford to pay out these moneys and still protect yourself in the matter of the cash bond which you have put up with the owner.

"It should be definitely understood and agreed between you and Francisco & Ellington, that the acceptance of this additional $12,000 binds Francisco & Ellington to the completion of all excavating as required or directed in connection with the Stadium, under their unit price of 30 cents per cubic yard, plus only the additional $12,000 authorized by this memorandum. Myron Hunt, Architect, by Myron Hunt, K. & O. E., July 6, 1922. Approved: Pasadena Tournament of Roses Building Committee, by W. F. Creller. Approved and accepted: Francisco & Ellington, by H. Francisco."

Relative to what took place at this conference, Hunt testified:

"I did my utmost to make it plain * * * that we were making an effort to clean up the entire situation, and coming to one agreement as of this date that would settle all questions of cost and that this agreement contemplated settling for work already completed and certain work partly started and yet to be completed. * * *

"Q. Were Francisco and Ellington both there? A. Yes. * * * The agreement was that the dirt was thereafter to be placed where directed. * * * The entire settlement was accepted, and that was a part of the settlement. * * *

"Q. After this settlement of $12,000 * * * July 5, 1922, do you know whether any changes had been made in the plant * * * which caused a change in the grading? * * * A. It is just possible that pulling in 14 feet at the south end was done after that. * * * August 14th is the date of a drawing that shortened the field 14 feet and widened it 30 feet at the end. * * * It put the center of gravity of the remaining soil to be moved slightly nearer the point where it had to be dumped, perhaps a foot, * * * a very slight advantage to the contractor."

Prior to the meeting of July 5th it had been determined that the earth to be excavated would be insufficient to raise the embankment to the height planned at all points, and it was decided to leave the south ends thereof unfinished and to use the yardage thus saved in completing the remainder. The change naturally resulted in a longer average haul. This shortage of earth for the embankment was due to the lengthening of the tunnels. Hunt testified that the additional expense of the longer haul was discussed and taken into consideration in fixing the amount of extra compensation which was agreed upon at the conference. W. A. Taylor testified that he first discovered that there would be a shortage of earth in May; that he did not know whether he informed plaintiff of that fact, "but I suppose that I did, because that was in the general discussion at the time of this adjustment of July 5th, and it was what I understood all the time they were charging for and what they got paid for was the lengthened haul occasioned by the widening of the tunnels and placing the fill in a different position from * * * what the plan originally showed"; that at that conference Francisco and Ellington said that if the defendant would pay $12,000 for the extra work they "would finish * * * the excavating of the stadium, as directed, place the dirt * * * as directed" at 30 cents a cubic yard, and that no material changes were made in the plans thereafter "excepting that the south end of the cut was shortened and widened, approximately balancing the excavation. * * * It made a very little shorter haul." W. F. Creller testified that the July settlement was made with the understanding that "this would be all the extras there would be in connection with the completion of the stadium." Ralph Taylor testified that he knew on May 10th that there would be a shortage of earth and so informed Ellington a few lays later, and that Ellington replied that "he knew there would be a shortage and had known it all along"; that "it was made very plain to them (at the conference) * * * that the balance of the excavating must be done at a cost of 30 cents per yard without additional extras, to which Francisco & Ellington agreed. * * * The south end of the excavation was (thereafter) moved in some 14 feet and the width at the southerly end increased by some 28 feet. * * * Q. Do you know whether or not that change produced more earth to be excavated than if the plans had not been changed? A. There was no change made in quantity. * * * The only difference was this, that the haul was shortened slightly." July 15th, August 1st, August 16th, and September 1st, respectively, the plaintiff presented itemized bills for work done during the preceding semimonthly periods, computing the yardage at 30 cents, and received payment therefor. No claim was made for the extra compensation here sought to be recovered until after the work was completed.

[2] Appellant contends that the agreement of April 3d was void for want of mutuality, in that it purported to bind the plaintiff to complete the contemplated work "but that respondent still reserved the right to terminate the work at any time and for any unforeseen reason." If the question had arisen prior to performance, there would be much force in appellant's argument, but the contract has been executed by both parties. The plaintiff has completed the work and the defendant has made all stipulated payments therefor, except the last, which is in dispute because the plaintiff demanded a larger sum than provided by the contract, and the defendant has made no attempt to exercise its option to terminate the agreement. "Even contracts unilateral at first are sustained upon execution of the optional consideration." Marin Water, etc., Co. v. Town of Sausalito, 168 Cal. 587, 600, 143 P. 767, 773; North Confidence, etc., Co. v. Morrice, 56 Cal. App. 145, 149, 204 P. 851.

[3] Appellant contends that, if it be held that the agreement of April 3d is valid, "even then the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon quantum meruit because of the changes made in the plans and specifications after the contract was entered into." The contract of April 3d was supplemented by the agreement of July 5th, and appellant does not contend that any changes made prior to the latter date are material to the question under discussion. In appellant's reply brief it is said:

> "Appellant contends the evidence shows that two changes were made about August 1st: (1) The south end of the field was shortened 14 feet and widened 30 feet. (2) The south ends of the embankment were shortened approximately 300 feet."

The evidence hereinbefore quoted shows that the first change mentioned was to the advantage of the plaintiff. In addition to the testimony already set forth, Rea P. Taylor testified that:

> At the July conference "it was stated that this increase in length of the tunnels had caused the increase in the yardage of the fill, and that would necessitate putting more of the dirt in the wide part of the fill, leaving the toes of the fill to be filled in at a later date, from material excavated from the river channel that was then contemplated. * * * There was not enough fill called for in the original plan opposite the south end to take the dirt that was excavated from it; that was just a very small section of fill in there.
>
> "Q. I know, but there was some bank to be filled there according to the plans? A. Comparatively small.
>
> "Q. As it was finished, the lower ends of the horseshoe were practically not filled at all? A. Quite right. And at the meeting that this settlement was made, Mr. Hunt then had said that, if we did not have sufficient earth to complete absolutely all that was shown in the drawings in the way of a fill, that the earth would be available to place on the south ends of the horseshoe * * * where there was no seats to go, that earth would be available from the wash they were to cut in there with their steam shovel, or the river channel, they were to cut in there with their steam shovel.
>
> "Q. That was to be filled in from the river channel which is outside of the stadium? A. What it lacked was to be filled in from the river channel.
>
> "Q. Was it understood that plaintiffs were to do that? A. No, sir; had nothing to do with that.
>
> "Q. You say that was the conversation at the meeting in July? A. No; said if there was any material lacking we would leave it at the south end where the fill had no seats on it and it could be placed in at a later date, and the probabilities were material would be available from the channel to be dug up at a later date.
>
> "Q. Was there anything said then that the earth should be moved by them from the south end of the excavation up on the bank * * * north of the embankment and not opposite the place of excavation? * * * A. I don't remember of anything being said to the effect that the dirt would have to be placed not opposite of where it was excavated."

It appears from the foregoing testimony that, while it was not specifically stated at the July conference that the plaintiff would be required to move earth from the south end of the excavation to parts of the embankment lying farther north, the parties must have understood from what was said that it would be necessary to do so. The fills at the south ends of the embankment were "comparatively small," according to the original plans, "not enough * * * to take the dirt that was excavated" from the south end of the field, and it follows that the surplus thereof was to be deposited at other points in the embankment. The statements that it was necessary to place more earth in the wide part of the fill, "leaving the toes of the fill to be filled in at a later date," and that, "if there was any material lacking, we could leave it at the south end where the fill had no seats on it," justify the inference that the parties understood at the July conference that the south ends of the embankment were to be left unfinished and consequently that the earth from the south end of the excavation was to be placed in the embankment at points other than those opposite the place from which it was taken.

[4] The complaint consists of a general allegation of indebtedness for services performed. The answer and the findings are equally general. The foregoing evidence is amply sufficient to support the implied finding that there was no change in the plans and specifications after July 5th to the prejudice of the plaintiff or which released it from its agreement of that date binding it "to the completion of all excavating as required or directed in connection with the stadium, under their unit price of 30 cents per cubic yard, plus only the additional $12,000 authorized by this memorandum." Since the agreement is the measure of plaintiff's right of recovery, it was not prejudiced by the court's refusal to admit proof of the reasonable value of the services performed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 363

GOETTING v. GOETTING. (Civ. 5478.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1040(10)—To warrant reversal, error in overruling special demurrer on ground of uncertainty must be prejudicial and affect a substantial right.

When case has been tried and judgment rendered on facts, in order to warrant reversal because of error in overruling special demurrer interposed on ground of uncertainty, it must appear that some substantial right of demurrant has been prejudicially affected; otherwise he has no ground for complaint.

2. Husband and wife 🔑247—Where misconduct complained of occurred after amendment of statute relating to husband's power over community property, held statute relating to disposition of property in separate maintenance actions applied without retroactive construction (Civ. Code, § 172, as amended by St. 1917, p. 829, and § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35).

Where acts of misconduct, relied on by plaintiff in action for permanent support and maintenance, occurred after the amendment of Civ. Code, § 172, by St. 1917, p. 829, relating to power of husband over community property, held Civ. Code, § 137, as amended St. 1917, p. 35, authorizing court in action for separate maintenance to make same disposition of community property as in actions for divorce, was applicable without being given a retroactive effect and was properly followed by the court.

3. Husband and wife 🔑285½—Husband's duty under statute to support wife is continuing one and basis of action for separate maintenance (Civ. Code, § 155).

Under Civ. Code, § 155, a husband contracts toward his wife the obligation to support, which obligation is a continuing one, and is basis of action for separate maintenance.

4. Husband and wife 🔑247—Statute authorizing disposition of community property in actions for separate maintenance as in divorce actions held not invalid, though it incidentally divests husband of rights in such property (St. 1917, p. 35, amending Civ. Code, § 137).

Vested property rights are held subject to the laws for the enforcement of public and private duties, and hence St. 1917, p. 35, amending Civ. Code, § 137, and authorizing courts in separate maintenance actions to dispose of community property as in actions for divorce, is not invalid, though it may incidentally divest a husband of rights in community property.

5. Constitutional law 🔑93(1)—Vested property rights may be divested through operation of laws for enforcement of public and private duties.

While vested property rights cannot be divested by mere force of legislative enactment, such rights are held subject to laws for enforcement of public and private duties, and may be divested through operation of such laws.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑39(1)—Action for separate maintenance held not barred by four-year limitation statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 343).

Action for separate maintenance held not barred by four-year statute of limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 343), it being inapplicable to actions for divorce or to actions where obligation is a continuing one rather than one to recover for past derelictions.

7. Husband and wife 🔑283(1)—Power to compel husband to support wife is not limited to cases where she has cause of action for divorce, although existence of such cause of action is occasion for its exercise (Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35).

The power of court to compel a husband to provide for his wife from the community property is not confined to cases where she has a cause of action for divorce, though under Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35, existence of cause of action for divorce is made occasion for the exercise of such power.

8. Husband and wife 🔑285½—Action for separate maintenance, based on cause of action for divorce, is not barred unless divorce on grounds alleged would be barred (Civ. Code, §§ 124, 125, and 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35).

An action for separate maintenance under Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35, in which cause of action for divorce is made the ground for relief, is not barred unless a divorce on the grounds alleged should be denied under the provisions of Civ. Code, §§ 124, 125.

---

★Hearing granted by Supreme Court.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1) — Whether lapse of time before bringing action for separate maintenance is unreasonable is for trial court.

Question of whether lapse of time after misconduct complained of before bringing suit for separate maintenance is reasonable is for trial court to determine.

10. Husband and wife 🔑299(1)—Pleading in contested action for separate maintenance held sufficient to sustain award without averment that award was necessary (Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35).

In contested action under Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35, for permanent support and maintenance, allegation of existence of certain community property and prayer for the allowance of a monthly sum for plaintiff's support, held sufficient to sustain an award made without any allegation that award was necessary for plaintiff's support, in view of defendant's pleadings seeking an award of all community property, but not alleging that amount sought by plaintiff was excessive.

11. Husband and wife 🔑299(1)—In contested action for separate maintenance, any relief authorized by facts alleged and proved or admitted may be awarded (Code Civ. Proc. § 580).

While relief granted in default case for separate maintenance is governed by averments of complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, in contested cases any relief authorized by facts alleged and proved or admitted may be awarded; defendant being able, by answering, to enlarge scope of relief to any extent consistent with pleadings and embraced within issues.

12. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—In separate maintenance action, failure concerning alleged misconduct by plaintiff held not reversible error (Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35).

In action for separate maintenance under Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1917, p. 35, court's failure to find on certain allegations of answer, wherein defendant sought to justify his conduct by averring similar acts by plaintiff, held not to warrant reversal; such allegations, if true, being no bar to relief sought.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action by Frances L. Goetting against Charles L. Goetting for separate maintenance, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From a judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. Joseph Theisen, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. M. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action by respondent, Frances L. Goetting, against her husband, Charles L. Goetting, for permanent support and maintenance. The action as to Daisy L. Ford, who was joined as a defendant, was dismissed. Judgment was entered for respondent, from which the husband appealed on the judgment roll alone, urging as grounds for reversal the insufficiency of the complaint to support the judgment awarding portions of the community property to respondent, that the special demurrer thereto on the ground of uncertainty should have been sustained and that the action is barred by the provisions of section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The complaint, which was filed on October 9, 1923, alleged that the parties, who had been married for nearly 30 years, separated on August 17, 1917, that on numerous occasions during their married life, the exact dates of which respondent was unable to state, appellant, without cause or provocation, had cursed her, calling her vile and obscene names, and on numerous occasions had struck and knocked her down; further alleging that, without respondent's knowledge or consent, he had on numerous occasions prior to the separation accompanied defendant Ford to various cafes and roadhouses, remaining away from his home during the night, that since the separation he had lived with the latter in an apartment house in San Francisco, and that his conduct had inflicted on respondent great bodily harm and grievous mental suffering. The allegations of cruelty were denied by appellant, who filed a cross-complaint for divorce on similar grounds, in which he prayed that the community property be awarded to him.

[1] The averments of the complaint show that the acts of cruelty complained of were wrongfully inflicted, and were sufficient to state a cause of action for divorce. The uncertainties to which the special demurrer was directed related to the language applied to respondent and to the times and places of the commission of the acts alleged. While the special demurrer to these allegations might properly have been sustained (Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 446, 35 P. 637), as stated, the allegations were denied by answer and the case tried on the issues presented. When a case has been tried and a judgment rendered on the facts, in order to warrant a reversal on the ground of error in overruling a demurrer interposed on the ground of uncertainty, it must appear that some substantial right of the demurrant has been affected, some prejudicial error as distinguished from abstract error suffered by him, or he has no ground for complaint. Rooney v. Gray, 145 Cal. 753, 79 P. 523.

The complaint alleged that the appellant was the owner of a mercantile business, from which he derived a large income, together with deposits in certain banks; and, by the cross-complaint, this with other described property, both real and personal, was alleged to be the community property of the parties. By the prayer of the complaint respondent asked for attorney's fees and costs and for a decree awarding the sum of $400 per month for her support and maintenance, the latter sum being alleged in the prayer to be reasonable in view of the financial condition of appellant. The court found respondent's allegations of personal violence and verbal abuse to be true, that certain of these acts were committed prior to the year 1919, and others before the year 1917, and that the allegations of cruelty contained in the cross-complaint were untrue. The decree divided the real and personal property between the parties, awarded respondent the sum of $125 per month for her support, with a lien on appellant's undivided interest in one of the parcels of real estate as security for its payment.

[2] Appellant contends that, it appearing that the community property was acquired previous to the year 1917, he had a vested right to its management and control, with the power of disposition, subject only to the provisions of section 172 of the Civil Code in force prior to the amendment of that section in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 829), and that the provisions of the amendment to section 137 of the Civil Code, adopted at the same session (Stats. 1917, p. 35), granting the power in actions for separate maintenance to make the same disposition of the community property as in actions for divorce, and pursuant to which the court acted in the instant case, could be given no retroactive effect, and hence were not applicable to community property acquired before its adoption, citing Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, and Roberts v. Wehmeyer, 191 Cal. 601, 218 P. 22. Whatever force this contention might have if the action was based wholly on facts arising before the adoption of the amendment it is not necessary to discuss, as it impliedly appears from the findings that the course of conduct on which the court based its decree commenced before its adoption and continued thereafter during the years 1917 and 1918, and that the acts committed during the latter period, which were found to have caused respondent grievous mental suffering, were alone sufficient to constitute a cause of action for divorce.

[3-5] A husband contracts towards his wife the obligation to furnish support. Section 155, Civ. Code. This duty is a continuing one, upon which the action for separate maintenance is based, and its specific performance is compelled by the decree. The amendment added to the means of enforcing existing rights, and requires no retroactive construction to make it applicable to the facts of the instant case. That it might, as a means of enforcing the duty of appellant, incidentally divest him of rights in the community property, does not affect its validity. While vested property rights cannot be divested by the mere force of legislative enactment, such rights are held subject to the laws for the enforcement of public and private duties, and may be divested through their operation.

[6-9] We are of the opinion that the action was not barred by section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section has no application to actions for divorce (Morgan v. Morgan, 190 Cal. 522, 213 P. 993), and, where the action is one upon a continuing obligation to compel future support, and not to recover compensation for past derelictions, the statute is not a bar to relief (Glynn v. Glynn, 139 Ill. App. 185; Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377, 33 N. E. 805). The power of a court to compel a husband to provide for his wife from the community property is not confined to cases where she has a cause of action for divorce (Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 265; Civ. Code, § 137), but the existence of such a cause of action has been made by statute an occasion for its exercise. The object of the present proceeding being as stated, it was the evident intention of the Legislature that, when a cause of action for divorce is made the ground for relief under section 137, Civil Code, the right thereto is not barred unless a divorce on the grounds alleged should be denied under the provisions of section 124 of the Civil Code. The latter section provides no specific limitation for an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty; it being provided merely that a divorce must be denied "when there is an unreasonable lapse of time before the commencement of the action," and by the following section "unreasonable lapse of time" is defined as "such a delay in commencing the action as establishes the presumption that there has been a connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same, with intent to continue the marriage relation notwithstanding the commission of such offense." Section 125, Civ. Code. The trial court impliedly found that the period which elapsed before the commencement of the action was not unreasonable. The question whether such lapse of time is reasonable or not is for the trial court to determine (Johnston v. Johnston, 21 Cal. App. 181, 131 P. 81), and the evidence not being before us, we cannot say that its conclusion was not supported, or that as a matter of law the period which elapsed was unreasonable (Strupelle v. Strupelle, 59 Cal. App. 526, 211 P. 248).

[10, 11] It is urged that the averments and prayer of the complaint were insufficient to warrant the relief granted. After alleging the existence of certain community property, respondent asked for the allowance of a monthly sum for her support. Appellant by his cross-complaint sought, in addition to a decree of divorce, to have all the property set aside to him. In Sherman v. Sherman, 47

Cal. App. 208, 190 P. 464, an action for separate maintenance in which the defendant defaulted, it was held that an award of the community property to the wife, in the absence of allegations that an award thereof was necessary for her support and of a prayer for such relief was erroneous—this on the ground that the court was bound by the averments of the complaint, which alone were admitted by the default, and that, if other relief was sought, the defendant was entitled to notice. Such is the rule in default cases (section 580, Code Civ. Proc.); but in contested cases any relief authorized by the facts alleged and proved or admitted may be awarded (Murphy v. Stelling, 8 Cal. App. 702, 97 P. 672) and the defendant by answering may enlarge the scope of the relief to any extent consistent with the pleadings and embraced within the issues (Nathan v. Dierssen, 164 Cal. 607, 130 P. 12; Woods C. I. Ditch Co. v. Porter S. Ditch Co., 173 Cal. 149, 159 P. 427). In the instant case the question of the proper disposition of the community property was made an issue by appellant's pleading. It is not claimed that he was misled to his injury, or that, in view of the findings the monthly allowance awarded respondent which was less than the amount asked for, was excessive, or that in its division of the community property the court abused its discretion.

[12] The failure to find on certain allegations of the answer wherein appellant sought to justify his conduct by averring similar acts by respondent does not warrant a reversal (Mohr v. North Rawhide M. & D. Co., 177 Cal. 264, 170 P. 600); and these allegations if true would not bar relief (Mattson v. Mattson, 181 Cal. 44, 183 P. 443).

We find no error in the record which can reasonably be held to have been prejudicial to appellant or to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

CHARLES L. DONOHOE CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF GLENN COUNTY et al.★
(Civ. 3222.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 8, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 3, 1927.)

1. Attorney and client ⟹86—Stipulation for extension of time by attorney not of record is ineffectual to prevent dismissal five years after answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Within Code Civ. Proc. § 583, providing for dismissal of action if not brought for trial within five years after answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing for extension of time, stipulation by attorney other than defendant's attorney of record, though purporting to be defendant's attorney, is ineffectual.

2. Corporations ⟹425(5)—Defendant corporation held not estopped by attorney other than its attorney of record asking postponement and its officers not objecting.

As only defendant's attorney of record has authority to ask for postponement, it is not estopped by another attorney purporting to act for it asking therefor and its officers present making no objection, plaintiff not being justified in relying thereon.

3. Mandamus ⟹43—Court will be compelled to dismiss action, where express mandatory conditions appear.

There appearing the express mandatory conditions requiring dismissal of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 583, mandamus will lie to the court refusing to dismiss; it having no discretion in the matter.

Application by the Charles L. Donohoe Company for writ of mandate to the Superior Court of Glenn County, Claude F. Purkitt, Judge thereof. Writ granted.

See, also, 248 P. 1007.

W. T. Belieu, of Willows, and Frederick Olds, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondents.

GLENN, Presiding Justice pro tem. Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate directing respondents to dismiss as to it a certain action for the foreclosure of a mortgage pending in the superior court of the county of Glenn, wherein Frank Freeman is plaintiff and Charles L. Donohoe, Charles L. Donohoe Company, a corporation, petitioner herein, and others, are defendants.

The petition for the writ is based upon a motion for a dismissal of said action made by the petitioner, one of the defendants therein, in said superior court, and the denial thereof by said court; said motion having been so made on the ground that the said action was not brought to trial within five years after the filing of the answer of the defendants, and that no written stipulation extending the said time had been made by the said defendant. In the action referred to all of the defendants appeared by their attorney, W. T. Belieu; their answer having been filed on April 6, 1921. The case was not brought on for trial within five years after the filing of the answer, nor was the trial thereof continued beyond the said five years from the filing of the answer upon notice to, or consent of, the said W. T. Belieu, the attorney of record for the said Charles L. Donohoe Company, a corporation. Likewise, no stipulation, either oral or written, was ever made by the attorney of record for the said defendant Charles L. Donohoe Company, extending the time for the trial of said action beyond five years from the filing of the answer of the said defendants. On May 7, 1926, said Charles L. Donohoe Company, a corporation, through its said attorney, W. T. Belieu moved the said superior court for a dismissal of said action as to it, pursuant to notice of motion theretofore duly given; said motion having been based on the ground above stated. The court made its order denying the motion after hearing the evidence produced by the respective parties.

---

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 258 P 1094.

The motion should have been granted. The undisputed facts as above recited present a plain case for dismissal under the latter portion of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for the dismissal of an action which has not been brought on for trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended. That portion of the said section applicable to the facts as above set forth has frequently been held to be mandatory. Anderson v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 200 P. 963, and cases cited; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 219 P. 1006.

The answer sets forth, in substance, three grounds of defense: (1) That a written stipulation was made by the said defendant (petitioner), extending the time for the trial of the said cause beyond the said five-year period; (2) estoppel; (3) that the action of the superior court in denying the motion to dismiss is conclusive so far as this proceeding in mandamus is concerned. The answer, however, when examined in the light of the evidence produced on the hearing of the motion to dismiss, will be found to be evasive, and, in fact, tenders no material issue. There is no denial, and in the face of the record there could be none, of the fact that W. T. Belieu had been at all times the sole attorney of record for the said defendant, Charles L. Donohoe Company, a corporation, and also the further fact that there had been no written stipulation signed by him extending the time within which to bring the case to trial as provided by section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These important facts are attempted to be met by the claim of the defense that a certain attorney at law, other than the said W. T. Belieu, the attorney of record, was in fact acting as the attorney in the foreclosure case for the said Charles L. Donohoe Company. This claim is based upon the contention of the respondents, evidence as to which was introduced on the hearing of the motion to dismiss, to the effect that said attorney had so represented himself at various times to George R. Freeman, attorney for plaintiff, one of said occasions being in the presence of Charles L. Donohoe and his wife, officers of said company, in open court, and another occasion being in the chambers of the judge thereof; that it was pursuant to correspondence between said George R. Freeman and the said attorney not of record that the trial of said foreclosure action was postponed beyond the said five-year period mentioned in said section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plea of estoppel is based upon the same facts.

It might be added here that, in explanation of the position of the said attorney above referred to, it was the latter's claim that, having been the attorney of record for the Charles L. Donohoe Company in a suit to quiet title, he intended in his letters to Mr. Freeman to refer to that case, which was somewhat similar in its title to that of the foreclosure case, and disclaimed any connection with the latter suit. We refrain from referring to the facts of this feature of the case in detail or to the testimony to the effect that he was not authorized to act for said company in the foreclosure case, as it is immaterial so far as the merits of the case is concerned.

The written stipulation purporting to extend the time for the trial of said foreclosure action alleged in the answer filed herein to have been made "by the defendant in said action" consists of certain correspondence between said George R. Freeman, attorney for plaintiff in the foreclosure suit, and the said attorney, who, as above stated, was not an attorney of record for any of the defendants in said action, and who had never been associated with or requested to appear or act for the said attorney of record, W. T. Belieu. There is no assertion made of bad faith on the part of Mr. Belieu. In fact, the record shows that apparently he was entirely unaware of the communications passing between Mr. Freeman and the attorney referred to with reference to postponing the trial of the foreclosure case until about the time the notice of motion to dismiss was served.

[1] 1. Under the facts of the instant case, the purported stipulation (assuming for the purpose of this decision that the correspondence referred to above constituted such), extending the time for the trial of the action, having been made by an attorney not of record in the action, and who was without authority to enter into the same, must be disregarded. The rule of law applicable to the facts recited above is stated in 3 California Jurisprudence, p. 3, as follows:

> "A party may appear either in propria persona or through an attorney, but he cannot do both; and if, and as long as, he has an attorney of record, the court cannot recognize anyone in the conduct of the case except such attorney. It is indispensable to the orderly conduct of the case that if a party has engaged an attorney who appears in the case, that the attorney shall have the sole management and control of the action, so long as he is the attorney of record. The client, therefore, cannot assume control of the case as against his attorney."

Also, to the same general effect, are the following: Boca & Loyalton R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 153, 88 P. 718; McMunn v. Lehrke, 29 Cal. App. 298, 155 P. 473; Board of Commissioners v. Younger, 29 Cal. 147, 87 Am. Dec. 164; Mott v. Foster, 45 Cal. 72; Wylie v. Sierra Gold Co., 120 Cal. 485, 52 P. 809; Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 124 Cal. 134, 56 P. 797.

If we assume that the Charles L. Donohoe Company, a corporation, one of the defendants in the foreclosure case, desired to change its attorney in said suit, although there is no evidence to this effect other than the statement attributed to said attorney before referred to, that result could have been accomplished in the method provided by law, but not otherwise. McMunn v. Lehrke, supra; Board of Commissioners v. Younger, supra.

[2] 2. There is no merit in the plea of estoppel by respondents. The acts of estoppel relied on consist of the statements attributed to the said attorney hereinbefore referred to and the conduct of Charles L. Donohoe and his wife, officers of said company, as previously set forth herein; it being alleged in the answer of respondents that the said Charles L. Donohoe and his wife were present in court and also in the chambers of the judge thereof when said statements of said attorney were so made, and offered no objection thereto.

On the question of estoppel the facts of this case clearly bring it within the rule laid down in Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 219 P. 1006. The instant case presents a stronger one against the plea of estoppel than the case last cited. It is clear from the authorities heretofore cited that, had its been established that the Charles L. Donohoe Company directed an attorney not of record to appear for it in the foreclosure suit and request a postponement of the trial of said action (and there is no evidence to this effect other than the statements attributed to such attorney himself), and the latter had acted accordingly, the court would have been without authority to entertain the same. Even a written stipulation signed in person by a party to an action who has an attorney of record must be treated as a nullity (Mott v. Foster, supra), and disregarded by the court (Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, supra). Under these circumstances neither the plaintiff in the foreclosure suit, nor his attorney, was justified in relying upon an unauthorized consent to a postponement of the trial of said action, and waiver by way of estoppel cannot be predicated thereon.

[3] 3. Respondents earnestly contend that mandamus will not lie in this proceeding, for the reason that the superior court acted judicially upon the facts presented, and, under its discretionary power, denied the motion. There can be no question as to the correctness of the rule, and hence we refrain from referring to the many cases cited by respondents to the point. The contention of respondents, in this regard, cannot be successfully maintained under the undisputed facts of the instant case. The Supreme Court of this state, in disposing of a similar point, states the rule as follows:

> "The proposition so strongly urged in behalf of respondent that mandamus will not lie in this proceeding because the matter submitted under the motion to dismiss called for the exercise of judicial and discretionary powers of the court, which cannot be called in question in this manner, is not maintainable. As already pointed out, the requirement to dismiss after five years, in the absence of a stipulation in writing extending the time, is mandatory. There was no issue presented that the five years had not elapsed, or that there had been a stipulation made between the parties. If such an issue had been made and the court had found as a fact in the case that no answer had been filed, or that five years had not elapsed, or that there had been a written stipulation between the parties for an extension of time, it may be conceded that the decision of the court as to such facts could not be reviewed in this proceeding. But where the express mandatory conditions for a dismissal are clearly established, and without contradiction, the court was without discretion in the matter." Anderson v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 200 P. 963.

To the same effect also is the case of Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, supra.

Reference in the excerpt as quoted above from the Anderson Case to "a written stipulation between the parties for an extension of time" (italics mine) means, of course, the parties authorized to sign such; otherwise there can be no such stipulation. Bearing this in mind, we think there can be no doubt but that the express mandatory conditions requiring a dismissal as contained in section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly appear without contradiction.

The writ will issue as prayed for in the petition herein.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

80 Cal. App. 571

BENNETT v. LOGAN & BRYAN et al.★

(Civ. 3178.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 6, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1927.)

1. Brokers 🔑26—Customer, depositing bonds as security for future marginal purchases, could not defeat pledge thereof to another broker; first broker having apparent authority to repledge (Civ. Code, § 2991).

Where client of brokerage concern deposited Liberty bonds as security for future marginal purchases by him, such transaction being not merely a bailment, brokerage firm with whom bonds were deposited had apparent right to repledge them with other brokers, customer being familiar with customary manner of handling such transactions, so that such customer could not subsequently defeat pledge with second brokerage house, under Civ. Code, § 2991.

2. Brokers 🔑26—Customer, depositing bonds to open brokerage account, could not defeat right of brokerage firm with whom bonds were repledged (Civ. Code, § 2991).

Where customer opened his account by depositing $3,000 of Liberty bonds with brokerage firm, such customer could not defeat repledge of securities to another broker to secure entire indebtedness of first brokerage firm; relation between marginal customer and first brokerage firm being that of pledgor and pledgee, with implication that broker had right to repledge, in view of Civ. Code, § 2991.

3. Brokers 🔑26—Customers being subject to regulations permitting repledging of securities given for future marginal purchases, could not recover from brokerage firm to whom repledged.

Where each customer of brokerage firm ordered securities to be purchased "subject to rules, regulations, and customs of the exchange in which this order is executed," such rules, regulations, and customs thereby became special terms of contract, so, all transactions whereby brokerage firm repledged securities given as security for future marginal purchases being in strict compliance with such regulations, customers of brokerage house repledging securities could not hold liable brokerage firm to whom securities were repledged.

4. Brokers 🔑26—Repledging of securities given to brokerage firm as security for future marginal purchases held not fraud on customers.

Where customers deposited securities as security for future marginal purchases by brokerage firm, repledging of such securities by such firm with another brokerage firm held not fraud on customers; transaction being handled in good faith within rules and regulations binding upon such customers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Action by P. B. Bennett against Logan & Bryan, a copartnership, and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Will J. Thayer, of San Diego, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles (Homer D. Crotty, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. Logan & Bryan are stockbrokers, holding membership in the New York Stock Exchange, and having offices in New York City and elsewhere. For some time prior to October, 1919, George G. Prentice conducted business as a stockbroker in San Diego under the name of Prentice & Co. As such broker he purchased from Logan & Bryan for his customers certain securities, which were thereafter held by Logan & Bryan as security for the general indebtedness of Prentice & Co. At the time mentioned, "the business of Prentice & Co. was purchased by Mason & Owen, who thereafter, until the time of their failure, carried on a general brokerage business in said city of San Diego." All of such securities, purchased on the order of Prentice & Co., were, "with the consent of the purchasers, transferred to the account of Mason & Owen upon or shortly after Mason & Owen purchased the business and good will of Prentice & Co., and * * * were held by Logan & Bryan to secure the entire account of Mason & Owen." Neither Prentice & Co. nor Mason & Owen were members of any stock exchange. Other securities were purchased by Mason & Owen, for their customers, from Logan & Bryan, and were held by the latter firm as security for the general indebtedness of the former. Each and all of the securities were purchased upon a written order to either Mason & Owen or Prentice & Co., as the case was, containing the following written direction:

> "Subject to the rules, regulations, and customs of the exchange in which this order is executed, and any rules, regulations, and requirements of its board of directors, and all amendments that may be made thereto, buy for my account and risk (name of security)."

"All of the securities involved in this litigation were purchased by Logan & Bryan upon the New York Stock Exchange," and the purchasers knew that they were to be so purchased. The parties stipulated at the trial as follows:

> "That at all times mentioned in the complaint it was and is, and for a great number of years has been, a general custom of the New York Stock Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade, and of all markets on which Logan & Bryan had any transactions for the account of Mason & Owen, and of all of the Boards of Trade and Exchanges throughout the United States, and generally of the brokerage business throughout the United States, that if a broker who is a nonmember of the board or exchange, desires to trade in commodities dealt with on such Board or Exchange, that the broker must execute all orders of his customers through a member of the board or exchange, and the order of such nonmember broker did not show the individual customers, or for whose benefit any order to sell or purchase a security or a commodity was given, and that the board member carried all orders placed by the nonmember broker to the account of the nonmember broker and would charge all liability incurred in executing the orders of such nonmember broker to said nonmember broker, and would credit said nonmember broker with all assets derived from the execution of his orders, including all dividends and interest paid on the securities purchased on the order of the nonmember broker, and would hold all securities purchased and/or pledged by such nonmember broker to secure the entire indebtedness of such nonmember broker, including all advances made by such board member and commissions earned by him in executing the orders of such nonmember broker until all contracts made by such nonmember broker through the board member should be justly executed or closed, and that all members of the New York Stock Exchange, before accepting an account from a nonmember broker, required a contract from such broker substantially the same as Exhibit D of defendants' answer."

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

"Before any orders were given by Mason & Owen to Logan & Bryan * * * Mason & Owen executed and delivered to Logan & Bryan," the following written instrument, referred to in the stipulation as exhibit D:

> "Logan & Bryan, 42 Broadway, N. Y. City—Gentlemen: I hereby consent: First, That all transactions heretofore or hereafter made by you for my account are subject to the rules, regulations and customs of the New York Stock Exchange and its clearing house, or the rules, regulations, and customs of the Exchange or market upon which any transaction by my order is made for my account.
>
> "Second, that all securities, evidences of indebtedness or other property now or hereafter carried in my account or deposited to protect the same, may be loaned or pledged by you, either separately or together with other securities belonging to others, either for the sum due thereon or for a greater sum; that said securities, evidences of indebtedness or other property may be transferred to your own account on the books of the corporation, may be sold by you, either in whole or in part, without notice to the undersigned, at any time when in your judgment the margin of protection in my account shall become impaired to a point where you deem it unsafe to carry it longer, such sale to be made at public, brokers' board or private sale, less the brokerage or other expense of said sale, to be placed to the credit of the undersigned as an offset against the debit in my account.
>
> "Furthermore you shall not be required to return to me the identical bonds or other securities deposited by me or carried in my account; it being understood that bonds or securities of like kind can be returned to me. It is the purpose of this letter and consent to give to you, and I hereby expressly give, the consent provided for in section 956, subdivision 2, of the Penal Code, as added by chapter 500 of the Laws of 1913.
>
> "Very truly yours,
> "Mason & Owen,
> "By Wm. McD. Owen.
>
> "Dated Dec. 2, 1919, in the presence of A. A. Allen."

Section 956 of the Penal Law of New York (Consol. Laws c. 40), referred to in the foregoing instrument, provides:

> "* * * A person engaged in the business of purchasing and selling as a broker stocks, bonds or other evidences of debt of corporations, companies or associations, who * * *
>
> "2. Having in his possession stocks, bonds or other evidences of debt of a corporation, company or association belonging to a customer on which he has a lien for indebtedness due to him by the customer, pledges the same for more than the amount due to him thereon, or otherwise disposes thereof for his own benefit, without the customer's consent, and without having in his possession or subject to his control, stocks, bonds or other evidences of debt of the kind and amount to which the customer is then entitled, for delivery to him upon his demand therefor and tender of the amount due thereon, and thereby causes the customer to lose, in whole or in part, such stocks, bonds or other evidences of debt, or the value thereof,
>
> "Is guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both.
>
> "Every member of a firm of brokers, who either does, or consents or assents to the doing of any act which by the provisions of this or the last preceding section is made a felony, shall be guilty thereof. (Added by L. 1913, c. 500 [in effect May 14, 1913].)"

All orders for the purchase of securities given by their customers "were by Mason & Owen telegraphed to Logan & Bryan in the name of Mason & Owen." Such telegraphic orders "did not contain any information as to the name of Mason & Owen's customer." The transactions between Logan & Bryan and Mason & Owen were conducted in accordance with the custom described in the stipulation. The orders of Prentice & Co. "were executed in precisely the same manner." All of the securities mentioned in the complaint "were either negotiable in form or were indorsed in blank so as to be negotiable and to pass by delivery."

December 1, 1920, the indebtedness of Mason & Owen to Logan & Bryan "was considerably in excess of the entire indebtedness owing to Mason & Owen from all of their customers," but the securities held by Logan & Bryan "were amply sufficient to secure the indebtedness due from Mason & Owen to Logan & Bryan." On the day last mentioned, Mason & Owen, on petition of the plaintiff herein and other creditors, were adjudged to be bankrupt. Their failure "was caused by Charles F. Mason and one of the clerks of Mason & Owen, with the consent of Mason & Owen, purchasing securities as a part of the account between Mason & Owen and Logan & Bryan and charging the expense thereof against all of the securities which were carried in said account and afterward selling said securities for less than they had been purchased for. * * * Said securities purchased by Mason and his said clerk were purchased on telegraph orders given to Logan & Bryan by Mason & Owen in precisely the manner and way" that securities for the customers of Mason & Owen were purchased.

Will J. Thayer, one of the customers of Mason & Owen and now attorney for appellant herein, was duly appointed receiver of the bankrupt estate. As such receiver he petitioned the court for an order directing him "to make sale of all securities including stocks and bonds now pledged with Logan & Bryan by * * * Mason & Owen." The court, on December 2, 1920, ordered the securities involved herein to be sold and the "net proceeds derived therefrom" deposited with the receiver, and that "such sale or sales be had in the manner provided by the rules of the New York Stock Exchange." A certified copy of the order was served on Logan & Bryan and the receiver "authorized and requested" Logan & Bryan to sell the securities "in accordance with the provisions of said order." December 3, 1920, the attorney for the receiver wrote Logan & Bryan relative to the order of the court, saying, among other things, "It is the understanding of the receiver that the words, 'net proceeds derived therefrom,' refer to the proceeds of all the stock sold after the entire indebtedness owed by Mason & Owen to Logan & Bryan has been liquidated." Logan & Bryan thereafter sold such securities and, after deducting the entire amount due them from Mason & Owen, deposited the remainder with the receiver. "No claim is made by the plaintiff that said securities were not sold for the full market value at the time of sale." No notice was given to any of the customers of the time or place of such sale.

Logan & Bryan "did not file any claims in the bankrupt proceedings against the estate of Mason & Owen." Each of the customers of Mason & Owen, whose rights are involved herein, filed a claim against the bankrupt estate for the amount for which his securities had been sold as aforesaid by Logan & Bryan, less his indebtedness to Mason & Owen, and received from the bankrupt estate 62¼ per cent. thereof. No claim or demand was ever made by any of such customers against Logan & Bryan until after payment of such dividend of 62¼ per cent., and after it became apparent that there was no reasonable probability of any further substantial dividend being paid. Thereafter the plaintiff, in his own right and as assignee of twelve other customers of Mason & Owen, brought this action to recover the amount of the unpaid parts of the claims filed in the bankruptcy proceedings. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] Among the securities held by Logan & Bryan were certain Liberty bonds which had been deposited with Mason & Owen by one of the former customers of Prentice & Co. and also of Mason & Owen, but who was not indebted to Mason & Owen at the time of their failure. This customer testified:

> "I gave them the bonds so in case I wanted to buy securities I could have the bonds sold and buy the securities with it. * * * I think I did some trading with them (Mason & Owen) previously. * * * Q. By that you mean purchasing stocks on what is commonly known as margins. A. Yes, sir. Q. At the time you pledged these four Liberty bonds, * * * had you any margin accounts with them? A. No, sir; just the bonds. My accounts were all square. * * * Q. What was the idea of giving them your bonds? * * * A. So that I might call them on the telephone to enter an order."

This customer knew that Mason & Owen had sent the Liberty bonds to Logan & Bryan, for he testified that they "charged me 30 cents as insurance and registry fees on my bonds to Logan & Bryan in New York." The transaction was not a mere bailment, but the bonds were delivered to Mason & Owen as security for future marginal purchases by the owner. Since the owner of the bonds had theretofore purchased securities through Prentice & Co. and through Mason & Owen, he doubtless was familiar with the customary manner of handling such transactions as shown by the stipulation of the parties. Mason & Owen were given the apparent right to repledge the bonds.

> "One who has allowed another to assume the apparent ownership of property for the purpose of making any transfer of it, cannot set up his own title, to defeat a pledge of the property, made by the other, to a pledgee who received the property in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value." Civ. Code, § 2991; Brittan v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 124 Cal. 282, 57 P. 84, 71 Am. St. Rep. 58; Fowles v. National Bank of California, 167 Cal. 653, 656, 140 P. 271; Grange v. Judah Boas Co., 60 Cal. App. 484, 492, 213 P. 712.

It may be conceded that the owner of the bonds could have required the exhaustion of other securities held by Logan & Bryan before resorting to such bonds to satisfy the indebtedness of Mason & Owen, or that he was entitled to a preference in the payment of his claim in the proceeding in bankruptcy, but he is not now in a position to claim reimbursement from defendants.

[2] Another customer had opened his account "by depositing with Mason & Owen $3,000 of Liberty bonds." On the credit of such bonds, certain securities were purchased by him and became a part of his account. November 6, 1920, these Liberty bonds were sold for more than the amount of his indebtedness. Thereafter his account stood credited with the excess in cash and the securities purchased for him, without any indebtedness to Mason & Owen. Since these securities had been repledged to Logan & Bryan to secure the entire indebtedness of Mason & Owen, it does not appear that, as between Logan & Bryan and the owner thereof, they were in a more favorable position than other securities for which full payment had not been made. All the other securities had been purchased by marginal customers of either Prentice & Co. or Mason & Owen. The relation between each of these marginal customers and Mason & Owen was that of pledgor and pledgee, and Mason & Owen had the implied consent of such customer lawfully to repledge the same. Blankenhorn-Hunter-Dulin Co. v. Thayer (Cal. Sup.) 247 P. 1088. The securities purchased through Prentice & Co. were, "with the consent of the purchasers, transferred to the account of Mason & Owen," and therefore no reason appears for making any distinction between them and those purchased through Mason & Owen.

[3] Each customer ordered the securities to be purchased "subject to the rules, regulations and customs of the exchange in which this order is executed." Such rules, regulations, and customs thereby become special terms of the contract. Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 461, 21 S. Ct. 845, 45 L. Ed. 1183, 1194; Goldsmith v. Sawyer, 46 Cal. 209, 212; Woltz v. E. F. Hutton & Co., 55 Cal. App. 741, 743, 204 P. 248. See, also, Miller v. Germain Seed, etc., Co., 193 Cal. 62, 77, 222 P. 817, 32 A. L. R. 1215. All the transactions in question were, on the part of Logan & Bryan, conducted in strict compliance with such rules, regulations, and customs. It does not appear, therefore, upon what grounds they can be held liable to the customers of Mason & Owen.

Appellant contends that Logan & Bryan were not bona fide pledgees, "as they knew at all times that the stocks did not belong to Mason & Owen." No authority is cited in support of this contention. Of course, Logan & Bryan knew that Mason & Owen, who were engaged in business as brokers, were not buying all the securities purchased by them for themselves, but the latter had the right "lawfully to repledge the same." Blankenhorn-Hunter-Dulin Co. v. Thayer, supra; Fowles v. National Bank of California, supra, page 662 (140 P. 271). The evidence does not support the contention that Logan & Bryan were the agents of Mason & Owen. It may be conceded that it was unlawful, as between Mason & Owen and their customers, to repledge the securities for more than the indebtedness of their customers to them. The purchases for which unlawful repledges were given, however, were made "in precisely the manner and way" as purchases for the customers of Mason & Owen. The court found that these securities of the customers were repledged to Logan & Bryan for individual purchases made by an employee and a member of the firm of Mason & Owen, but "that defendants did not know or have means of knowing until a short time prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, * * * of such practice; * * * and that, * * * as soon as such fact came to the notice of the defendants, they refused to transact or carry on any new business for said Mason & Owen," and that, until that time "defendants did not know, nor did any of them know or have means of knowing, or reason to believe or suspect, that the indebtedness of Mason & Owen to these defendants was greater than the total amount of indebtedness due to Mason & Owen from their customers."

[4] Appellant contends that "the manner in which these two firms of brokers manipulated the customers' stocks was a fraud on the customers." Plaintiff did not allege fraud, however, and the court found against the plaintiff, on sufficient evidence, upon his allegations tending to show any element of fraud on the part of defendant. Fraud cannot be based upon the fact that Logan & Bryan, in good faith, handled the transactions in accordance with the rules, regulations and customs which the customers made terms of their contracts of purchase.

Appellant quotes a part of one of the findings of the court as follows:

> "And said defendants * * * held each and all of the securities so purchased on the order of Prentice & Co. to secure the general indebtedness of Prentice & Co., and held the securities purchased on the order of Mason & Owen to secure the indebtedness of Mason & Owen, as hereinbefore found."

It is then said:

> "The above finding, drawn by the defendants themselves, excludes any contention that they ever held the Prentice stocks as security for the debts of Mason & Owen. * * * Prentice & Co. had completely discharged their indebtedness."

But the court further found, in the same paragraph, that:

> "Each of the various customers of Prentice & Co. gave to Prentice & Co. written consent to have the securities previously purchased by Prentice & Co. on the order of said customer, transferred to the account of Mason & Owen, and that Prentice & Co., from time to time, as they received the written consent of their respective customers to the transfer of the respective securities to Mason & Owen, gave orders to the defendants to transfer such securities to the account of Mason & Owen, but that none of said orders from Prentice & Co. to transfer such securities to Mason & Owen contained the names of any of the customers of Prentice & Co., and defendants did not know or have the means of knowing who were the customers of Prentice & Co., * * * that each and all of the customers of Prentice & Co. allowed and permitted all securities purchased by Prentice & Co. on their respective orders, and transferred to the account of Mason & Owen by Prentice & Co., to remain in the hands of defendants, subject to the orders of Mason & Owen, and so treated and dealt with said securities so transferred * * * as to lead defendants to believe that Mason & Owen had full power and authority to sell, pledge or otherwise dispose of said securities."

It clearly appears that all the acts of the defendants were lawful and within their rights as brokers, and it seems unnecessary to pursue the matter further. The pleadings and findings together cover more than 200 pages, and the briefs contain more than 350 pages of argument. It would require an unreasonably long opinion to discuss specifically all the contentions of appellant. They have been given careful consideration, and it is deemed sufficient, as to the points not discussed herein, to say that no merit has been discovered in any of them.

Respondents contend that, by filing their claims in the proceeding in bankruptcy, the customers elected to pursue their remedy therein and are therefore estopped to maintain this action against the defendants. It is true that, if the defendants had been required to pay the customers the moneys herein claimed, or to pay the same into the court in bankruptcy prior to the settlement of the bankrupt estate, they would have been in a position to file their own claims therefor and to share in the distribution of the assets of the bankrupts, whereas, if judgment were rendered against them in this action, since the funds which came into the hands of the receiver have been paid out in partial liquidation of other claims, they would be unable to recover any part thereof. Appellant contends that neither election nor estoppel was properly alleged in the answer. The case was tried, however, upon the theory that both were in issue. Appellant urges other reasons why the plea of estoppel or election of remedies is not available to the defendants. It is unnecessary to consider these contentions of the respective parties, because the judgment must be affirmed on the other grounds discussed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 655

PEOPLE v. EMMONS et al. (Cr. 1317.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1037(1), 1129(1)—District attorney's misconduct in questioning defendant concerning prior convictions and prison escapes held not reviewable, in absence of objection or assignment of prejudice.

In prosecution for robbery, claimed misconduct of district attorney in questioning defendant concerning former convictions and prison escapes, which were not objected to nor assigned as prejudicial, held not reviewable on appeal.

2. Criminal law 🔑407(2)—Jury may consider silence in face of accusation, when having opportunity to reply, as admission of truth of accusation.

If defendant, confronted by accusatory statement, stands mute when having opportunity to reply, jury may consider such action as admission of truth of statements or facts therein with which he has been confronted.

3. Criminal law 🔑407(1)—Statement in accused's presence, though not inadmissible to prove facts narrated therein, is admissible to show accused's acquiescence thereto.

While statement made in presence of defendant is not admissible as being itself evidence of any fact narrated in such statement, it is admissible to show that accused acquiesced in statement either by express assent or by silence, or by such conduct as to fairly imply assent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Alvin Emmons and Fred Richardson were convicted of robbery, and they appeal. Appeal as to Emmons dismissed. Affirmed as to Richardson.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Defendants were accused of the crime of robbery in the first degree. The information, in substance, alleged that on August 21, 1925, they unlawfully took and carried away from the person and possession of one George F. Neely, an agent of the Standard Oil Company, money and other personal property of the approximate value of $1,240 and that such act was accomplished though putting said Neely in fear.

Subsequent to the commission of the act, defendants were taken into custody and both made statements admitting their guilt. Upon the trial they both pleaded not guilty. They were convicted and sentenced to the state prison. They appealed from the judgment and order denying a new trial. The appeal as to Emmons has been dismissed.

[1, 2] It is urged on behalf of Richardson, as ground for reversal, that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct resulting in a miscarriage of justice. It is also claimed that the trial court erred in instructing the jury. The evidence upon which the prosecution relied for a conviction was the positive testimony of the victim of the robbery in identifying both defendants as the perpetrators of the crime, the extrajudicial confession of appellant, and the extrajudicial confession of appellant's codefendant, together with evidence showing that it was read to appellant and that in the face of such accusation he stood mute. The misconduct relied upon for a reversal consisted of questions relating to appellant's former conviction of various offenses, and his escape from certain penal institutions. The record shows, however, that the alleged misconduct was not objected to nor assigned as prejudicial. Under these circumstances it cannot be reviewed upon appeal. People v. Brittan, 118 Cal. 409, 50 P. 664. Nor is there any merit in appellant's claim that the court committed error in instructing the jury. The jury was charged with regard to the confession of appellant's codefendant as follows:

> "A statement of one defendant is not proof of facts concerning another. For instance, if the defendant whose statement was first read to you has made certain statements regarding the codefendant, that in itself is not independent or any evidence which is binding upon his codefendant. However, another principle of law invokes itself. One who is confronted by an accusatory statement, it is the well-settled law of this state, if he stands mute when so confronted, under circumstances which afford him an opportunity to reply, the fact of his standing mute may be taken by you as an admission of the truth of the statements or the facts in the statements which may have been read to him."

[3] It is appellant's contention that the portion of the instruction with reference to the action of a defendant in standing mute when accused is erroneous. We do not so consider it. It is well established that, while a statement made in the presence of the accused is not admissible as being itself evidence of any fact narrated in such statement, it is admissible primarily for the purpose of showing that the accused acquiesced in the statement, either by express assent, or by silence, or by such conduct as fairly implied assent. People v. Mallon, 103 Cal. 513, 37 P. 512; People v. Ong Foo, 182 Cal. 697, 702, 189 P. 690. This is all the instruction meant to imply.

The appeal is without merit.

The judgment and order are affirmed as to appellant Richardson.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 704

MATHEWS v. HORNBECK. (Civ. 3181.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 18, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Findings of trial court on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

Where there was clear and substantial conflict in evidence relating to issues in question on appeal, findings of trial court were conclusive.

2. Bastards 🔑33—Mother can sue in own name to compel father to contribute to support of illegitimate child (Civ. Code, § 196 [a]).

Under Civ. Code, § 196(a), mother of illegitimate child can sue father in her own name on behalf of child to compel him to support child.

3. Bastards 🔑78—In action to compel father to support illegitimate child, commenced December 18, 1923, judgment rendered July 28, 1924, requiring defendant to pay from December 18, 1923, held not erroneous.

Where action by mother to compel father to support illegitimate child was commenced December 18, 1923, judgment rendered July 28. 1924, requiring defendant to pay plaintiff $25 a month from December 18, 1923, held not erroneous, since it was father's legal duty to support child at time action was commenced.

4. Bastards 🔑33—Purpose of statute providing that mother may sue father for support of illegitimate child is to provide for child's support (Civ. Code, § 196[a]).

Purpose of Civ. Code, § 196(a), relating to support of illegitimate child and providing that mother may bring suit against father to compel him to support child, is to provide for child's support.

5. Jury 🔑25(2)—Where defendant's counsel, having notice of time of setting of case for trial, failed to demand jury trial, refusal to reset case for jury trial held not error (Code Civ. Proc. § 631).

Where defendant's counsel had notice of time at which action for support of illegitimate child would be called to be set for trial and failed to demand jury trial, and case was set for trial without jury, and defendant, upon learning facts, employed other counsel, refusal to reset case for jury trial held not error, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 631.

6. Bastards 🔑63—Producing child in court, in action to compel support of illegitimate child, to show resemblance to defendant held not error.

In action against father to compel support of illegitimate child, producing child in court to show resemblance to defendant held not error.

7. Bastards 🔑3—Where evidence showed that plaintiff was not cohabiting with her husband, statutory presumption that child was legitimate was not applicable (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 5).

Where undisputed testimony of plaintiff, in action to compel father to support illegitimate child, showed that she had not been cohabiting with her husband for over two years before child was born, presumption provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 5, that issue of wife cohabiting with husband, who is not impotent, is indisputably presumed to be legitimate was not applicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Action by Almeda Mathews against William Hornbeck, to compel support of illegitimate minor child. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robert A. Morton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to compel the defendant to support her illegitimate minor child. The court found that the defendant is the father of the child and rendered judgment requiring him to pay the plaintiff $25 a month, commencing with the day the complaint was filed, for the maintenance and support of the child. The defendant has appealed from the judgment.

[1] Both parties testified that they indulged in frequent acts of sexual intercourse during a period of several months. The defendant testified that such acts ceased June 13, 1922. The plaintiff testified that they continued until in September, 1922, and that she had not had sexual intercourse with any one but the defendant at any time after August, 1920, when she separated from her husband. The child was born May 31, 1923. The testimony of both parties was corroborated to some extent, and each introduced evidence tending to discredit the testimony of the other. There is a clear and substantial conflict in the evidence relating to the issues in question on this appeal, and therefore the findings of the trial court are conclusive.

[2] Appellant contends that the plaintiff is not authorized to maintain the action in her own name in behalf of her child. The courts of this state have held contrary to such contention. Fernandez v. Aburrea, 42 Cal. App. 131, 183 P. 366; McLain v. Meadows, 44 Cal. App. 402, 186 P. 411.

[3, 4] The action was commenced December 18, 1923, and judgment was rendered July 28, 1924. The judgment requires the defendant to pay the plaintiff $25 a month, "dating from the 18th day of December, 1923," for the support of the child. Appellant contends that the judgment is erroneous in the requirement that he pay for the child's support from the time the complaint was filed, citing Demartini v. Marini, 45 Cal. App. 418, 187 P. 985. That case merely holds that if the mother provides the child with support, no cause of action for reimbursement accrues against the father. The alleged expenditures were made before the action was commenced. In Fernandez v. Aburrea, supra, the judgment required payment of $115 "for the support of the child from the date of the filing of the action until the entry of judgment, and for the further sum of $15 per month thereafter." While the point here made was not discussed by the court in that case, the judgments in both cases are based upon what appears to be a reasonable interpretation of the provisions of section 196(a) of the Civil Code, making the father as well as the mother of an illegitimate child liable for its support and education.

As a general rule, a judgment must be based upon the respective rights of the parties as they exist at the commencement of an action to enforce them. At the time this action was commenced, it was the legal duty of the defendant to support the child. Under such circumstances, a defendant ought not to be relieved from the discharge of a part of such duty by the delays incident to litigation. The mother's credit in the purchase of necessaries for the support of the child is greater by reason of the fact that the father may be compelled to contribute to the child's maintenance. The purpose of the statute is to provide for the child's support. In many cases this purpose would be defeated during the time when most needed, if it were held that the father can permanently escape his obligation during the months or years between the commencement of an action against him and the entry of final judgment therein. If appellant's' contention be upheld, then this case, which has been pending for more than three years, must be retried. If the appellant could keep the case in court long enough, final judgment would not be entered until the child had reached its majority, in which case appellant, if his contention be sound, would escape his obligation entirely.

[5] The defendant's counsel had due notice of the time at which the case would be called to be set for trial. At the time noticed, he failed to demand a jury trial and the case was set for trial by the court without a jury. Some time thereafter defendant employed other counsel, who presented to the court the affidavit of the defendant to the effect that, "without the knowledge of defendant and against his wish and desire," the attorney who represented him at the time the case was called to be set, "through inadvertence or neglect," failed to request a jury trial; that as soon as defendant learned that fact he discharged the attorney and employed other counsel. Affiant does not state that he informed his former attorney of his desire for a jury trial. Based on this affidavit, counsel so employed moved the court to reset the case for trial in a jury department. The court denied the motion. Section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a trial by jury is waived "by failing to announce that a jury is required, at the time the cause is first set upon the trial calendar if it be set upon notice." It was not error to deny the request for a jury trial under the circumstances stated. Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 680, 239 P. 317; City of Los Angeles v. Zeller, 176 Cal. 194, 196, 167 P. 849; Bennett v. Hillman, 37 Cal. App. 586, 589, 174 P. 362. The congestion in the court calendars of the populous counties of this state has become a matter of state-wide notice and concern, and to permit a litigant, after having waived a jury trial, to require a jury by a subsequent demand would tend, in the language of the trial court, to "disrupt proceedings and would not be to the best interests of the trial court." Conceding that, as appellant contends, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, it was within the discretion of the trial court to grant the defendant's motion for a jury trial, no abuse of discretion is shown.

[6, 7] The child was produced in court for the purpose of showing its resemblance to defendant. This was not error. People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 561, 120 P. 20; In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 418, 21 P. 976, 22 P. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594; Wigmore on Evidence, §§ 166 and 1154.

Appellant relies upon subdivision 5 of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

> "The issue of a wife cohabiting with her husband, who is not impotent, is indisputably presumed to be legitimate."

The plaintiff was married to Ray McClure, in the state of Indiana, August 18, 1920. The marriage was annulled by a decree of the superior court of Los Angeles county, entered March 13, 1923. The plaintiff testified:

> "I last lived with Ray McClure along in October, about the middle of October, I think it was, in the year 1920—no; I don't think I lived with him that long; I don't think we lived together over ten days or so. * * * We didn't live together over just about ten days or so. * * * Having my recollection refreshed by having the complaint shown me, I will state that the date of the separation there, the 28th day of August, 1920, is correct, as the date when I last lived with him as man and wife."

In addition to this testimony, the defendant himself introduced in evidence the complaint in the annulment proceeding in which it is alleged that:

> "On * * * the 28th day of August, 1920, * * * defendant willfully and without cause deserted, and abandoned said plaintiff and ever since has and still continues to so willfully and without cause desert and abandon said plaintiff and to live separate and apart from her."

No evidence was introduced in this action which tends in any manner to contradict the foregoing testimony of the plaintiff. It is sufficient to show that the plaintiff was not cohabiting with her husband at any time material to the issues in this case, and therefore the presumption upon which appellant relies is not applicable.

The remainder of appellant's argument is devoted to the weight of the evidence, a question with which this court has nothing to do.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 660

LINDGREN et al. v. WEAVER et al.
(Civ. 3113.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 14, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error ⚷876—Court cannot consider sufficiency of evidence to sustain affirmance of consolidation and annexation of school districts on collateral attack (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Where time allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, for appealing from judgment affirming consolidation and annexation of school districts and from order denying motion to vacate had elapsed, and appeal is from subsequent order refusing to vacate judgment, court cannot consider sufficiency of evidence, since sufficiency of evidence is not impeachable collaterally.

2. Appeal and error ⚷113(2)—Failure to exercise right to appeal from judgment within statutory time precludes appeal from order denying subsequent motion to set aside judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Failure to exercise right to appeal from judgment affirming consolidation and annexation of school districts, or from order refusing to vacate judgment within time allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, where court had jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter, precludes appeal from order denying subsequent motion to set aside judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Petition for writ of review by Magnus E. Lindgren and others to review, set aside, and annul the action of C. S. Weaver, as County Superintendent of Schools of the County of Merced and others, separating and consolidating school districts. Judgment affirming defendants' acts, order denying motions to vacate judgment and for new trial, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Griffin, Boone & Boone and Edward T. Taylor, all of Modesto, for appellants.

H. K. Landram and C. H. McCray, both of Merced, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. On the 4th day of December, 1924, the plaintiffs filed their petition in the superior court of the county of Merced praying judgment of said court reviewing, setting aside, and annulling the actions of C. S. Weaver as county superintendent of schools of the county of Merced, the trustees of Livingston school district, the trustees of Raisin school district, and the board of supervisors of the county of Merced, which acts purported to lead to the union or merger of Livingston and Raisin school districts, thereafter to be known as Livingston school district, the subsequent exclusion of said Livingston school district also comprising the territory formerly included in the Raisin school district from the Hilmar colony union high school district and the annexation of said territory to the Merced union high school district.

The grounds upon which the merging, excluding, and uniting of said district are sought to be annulled consisted in allegations that proper notices were not given of the election, as required by the Political Code, of the proposed union or merger of the Livingston and Raisin school districts, thereafter to be known as the Livingston school district; that proper notices were not given of the election for the proposed exclusion of the Livingston school district from the Hilmar colony union high school district and the annexation of the Livingston school district to the Merced union high school district, and, further, that the exclusion of the Livingston school district, after having merged with it the territory formerly included in the Raisin school district from the Hilmar colony union high school district, left said Hilmar union high school district with an assessed valuation of property less than $5,000,000.

[1] Upon the filing of this petition, a writ of review was issued, directed to the defendants, requiring them to certify to the superior court, all and singular, the actions and proceedings relating to the matters involved, as just herein stated. Pursuant to this order, the defendants made full and complete returns of all and singular the proceedings taken and had, and notices given in the matter of the merging or uniting of said two school districts and the exclusion of the territory comprising what was thereafter known as the Livingston school district from the Hilmar union high school district and its union with the Merced high school district. Trial was had of the issues thus made up and on July 15, 1925, findings, conclusions of law, and judgment were filed by the trial court, and in which judgment it was further adjudged and decreed that the proceedings of each and all of the defendants referred to were valid, and the same were thereby affirmed.

On the 17th day of July, 1925, the plaintiffs served and filed a notice of intention to move for an order setting aside and vacating the judgment and decree herein referred to, and to enter another and different judgment —a judgment annulling and declaring void the proceedings herein referred to, and at the same time filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial and an order vacating and setting aside the decision and judgment theretofore entered in this cause. These motions were by stipulation submitted for decision on August 3, 1925. Both motions were denied by the trial court, and no appeal was ever taken by plaintiffs from the judgment, nor from the order denying the plaintiffs' motion to vacate the judgment, correct the findings, and enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs.

Under the provisions of section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, the time for appealing from the order and judgment expired on the 2d day of November, 1925. On the 27th day of January, 1926, the plaintiffs in this action served and filed upon the defendants a notice of motion to set aside the judgment entered herein upon the following ground, to wit: "That the judgment entered in the above-entitled action be vacated and set aside on the ground that it is void on its face." This motion was denied, and on the 16th day of February, 1926, an appeal was taken therefrom to this court.

From the recitals herein set forth, it is apparent that upon this appeal no inquiry can be made as to the sufficiency of the proof to show either the regularity or the legality of the acts of the inferior bodies involved in and leading up to the final annexation of the Livingston school district with the Merced union high school district. The record before us shows the filing of a petition in a court having jurisdiction to hear and determine all the questions involved. The order was regularly made directing the certifying to the superior court of all the proceedings necessary to be reviewed in order to reach a final determination. Proofs were introduced, findings were made, conclusions of law drawn, and judgment entered. The findings, conclusions of law, and judgment all appear to be included in one instrument. The argument presented by appellants is all directed to the allegations that the actions of the inferior bodies were taken without sufficient and adequate notices thereof being first given and had. All these were matters of proof to be presented to the trial court, and cannot be inquired into upon this appeal. As said in 15 California Jurisprudence, p. 83:

> "The fact that the findings are defective or insufficient to support the judgment, or are incorporated in the judgment itself, rather than in a separate instrument, does not make it impeachable collaterally. * * * It is obvious that a merely erroneous judgment cannot be collaterally impeached on that ground, even though the error is apparent on the face of the record. Where it is within the jurisdiction of the court to make an order, the order is not impeachable collaterally, however erroneously the court may have acted."

These propositions of law are abundantly supported by the authorities there cited.

[2] There is another principle involved in this proceeding, however, which precludes the prevailing of the plaintiffs upon this appeal. The appellants were all parties to the action in the trial court; they had their right of appeal from the order and judgment hereinbefore referred to. The question of the right to an appeal from an order refusing to vacate a judgment on the ground that it is void appears to have been squarely decided against the appellants in the Matter of the Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578,

150 P. 989, where a motion to dismiss an appeal was being considered. The court said, in considering the question as to whether an appeal would lie:

> "Cases to this effect are cited, which need not here even be mentioned, for such indeed is the general rule. Otherwise, the losing litigant would have the right to one appeal which the law expressly gives, and the time of which it limits, which appeal must be a direct appeal from the order or judgment, and likewise another appeal from an order of the court, made at some indefinite future time refusing a motion to vacate the judgment. And, as upon such second appeal the appellant has the right to have the judgment reviewed not only for excess of jurisdiction, but also for error (Elliott v. Supreme Court, 144 Cal. 501 [77 P. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102]), the manifest result of the sanction of such a general practice would be to declare that every unsuccessful litigant has two appeals, the time of one being fixed by law, the time of the other being fixed by his own convenience, after denial of his motion to vacate the judgment complained of. Hence the general rule and the reasons for it."

See, also, In re Yoder (Cal. Sup.) 251 P. 205.

Following this statement of the law, the exceptions to the rule are stated, which do not apply to this case. The exceptions there set forth relate to parties not having the right of appeal, and who have not allowed their right to appeal to lapse by inaction. As said in 2 California Jurisprudence, 164:

> "Where there is a right of appeal from a judgment or order, a party cannot ordinarily take an appeal from a subsequent order denying a motion to vacate the judgment or order complained of, under such circumstances that the motion merely calls upon the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts. If the grounds upon which the party sought to have a judgment vacated existed before the entry of the judgment and would have been available on an appeal from the judgment, an appeal will not lie from an order refusing the motion. The party aggrieved by a judgment or order must take his appeal from such judgment or order itself, if an appeal therefrom is authorized by statute, and not from a subsequent order refusing to set it aside. The reason for denying an appeal in the latter case is not because the order on the motion to vacate is not within the terms of section 963 of the Code allowing appeals, for it may be, and indeed, an order refusing to vacate a final judgment is in its very nature a special order made after judgment, but because it would be virtually allowing two appeals from the same ruling, and would, in some cases, have the effect of extending the time for appealing contrary to the intent of the statute. A further reason is that the order on the motion is merely negative action of the court declining to disturb its first decision. The first decision being reviewable, the refusal to alter it any number of times will not make it less so."

The law, as stated in the above quotation, is amply supported by authorities cited on the pages from which the quotation is taken. In Bell v. Solomons, 162 Cal. 105, 121 P. 377, it is said:

> "An order refusing to vacate a prior order or judgment from which an appeal may be taken is not appealable unless there is a record which presents matters for consideration that could not be presented upon the appeal from the original order or judgment."

Without referring to the authorities which we have cited holding that an appeal will not lie, the appellants cite the case of People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607, 24 P. 311, and a number of authorities holding, in effect, that a judgment absolutely void may be attacked anywhere, directly or collaterally, whenever it presents itself, either by parties or strangers. With these authorities we have no quarrel. The question before us is, not the manner in which a void judgment may be attacked, but simply whether a party to an action having a right to appeal and present all the questions that may in any wise affect either the correctness or legality of the judgment can sit idly by until the time for an appeal has expired, and then file and serve a notice of and make a motion to vacate the judgment, and then appeal therefrom, after having lost the right of appeal from the judgment. If this can be done, as in this case 86 days after the right to an appeal has been permitted to lapse, we see no reason why it cannot likewise be done 6 months, or any number of years thereafter. We think the authorities which we have cited clearly show that the right of appeal and the time therefor fixed in the codes cannot be extended in any such manner.

Under any view which we take of this case, the appellants cannot prevail, for it appears that the trial court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, and its judgment, even though glaringly erroneous, would not render it void, nor would its interpretation of the requirements of the law relative to giving notices by the inferior bodies, whose actions it was reviewing, render the judgment void; and, secondly, the plaintiffs, being parties to the action with the right of appeal, where full relief could be awarded by the court, if their contentions are correct, cannot extend their right of appeal by motions to vacate.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 687

LACKEY v. OLDS & STOLLER INTEREXCHANGE. (Civ. 4351.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 18, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1927.)

Insurance ⟹435—Insurer held liable, where minor driver's application for license was signed by insured, notwithstanding driver's errand was personal at time of collision. (Motor Vehicle Act, § 24[a], amended by St. 1919, p. 223, § 14).

Insurer held liable on policy covering loss by reason of liability for injury caused by operation or use of automobile, where injury was sustained while car was driven on personal errand by insured's minor nephew, whose application for chauffeur's license had been signed by insured, since under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1917, p. 407) § 24(a), amended by St. 1919, p. 223, § 14, he was jointly and severally liable with nephew.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action on insurance policy to cover liability for injury by automobile by Mrs. Louise Lackey, administratrix of the estate of August E. Buelke, deceased, against the Olds & Stoller Interexchange. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone and Perry F. Backus, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. An automobile owned by Morris Levenstadt was being operated by Nat Levenstadt, his chauffeur, who happened to be his nephew, when, by the negligence of Nat Levenstadt in operating said automobile, August E. Buelke was killed. Nat Levenstadt, at the time of the accident, was alone in the automobile and on the way to purchase clothing for himself.

The defendant had issued a policy of insurance to Morris Levenstadt, and an action was brought against said Morris Levenstadt and Nat Levenstadt for damages for the death of Buelke, because of the negligence of Nat Levenstadt, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff against both defendants, for $5,166.97, and costs, and said judgment was not paid, and this action was against appellant upon the insurance policy for the amount of such judgment, alleging insolvency of defendants therein and nonpayment. The question before the court in the present action was, and the real question raised in this appeal is, as to whether by the terms of the insurance policy appellant is liable herein for the amount of such judgment. Appellant contends that a breach of the terms of the policy was made by policy holder by signing the application for a chauffeur's license for Nat Levenstadt. By the terms of the policy, Morris Levenstadt was insured by appellant "against actual loss by reason of the liability imposed by law, * * * on account of bodily injuries (including death resulting therefrom) accidently suffered * * * by reason of the operation or use of" the automobile described in the policy.

The Motor Vehicle Act, § 24 (a), being St. 1917, p. 407, amended by St. 1919, p. 223, § 14, which was construed in the case of Buelke v. Levenstadt, 190 Cal. 684, 214 P. 42, makes the person who signed the application jointly and severally liable with the minor. The signer of the application was therefore made liable as a matter of law for the negligent act of the minor in operating the car, whether he was on the business of the signer of the application or not. The Motor Vehicle Act, § 24 (a), expressly makes the negligence of the minor imputable to the person who signs his application; hence the liability is one expressly created and imposed by the statutory law. At the time of the accident Nat Levenstadt was operating the Ford automobile truck particularly described in the insurance policy. The judgment against Morris Levenstadt and Nat Levenstadt was one created by law "by reason of the operation and use of the automobile." It follows that, whether the accident resulting in the death of Buelke occurred when Nat Levenstadt was on his way to purchase a pair of pants for himself, or for Morris Levenstadt, in either event the appellant, under the Motor Vehicle Act, was liable under the terms of the policy. Inasmuch as Morris Levenstadt did not assume any liability after the issuance of the policy, or otherwise violate the terms of the policy, there was no breach of the conditions of the policy on his part. The evidence shows that both Morris Levenstadt and Nat Levenstadt were insolvent, and therefore the insurer became liable under the terms of clause H of the policy, wherein it provides that, if policy holder is insolvent, then the claimant shall be entitled to maintain an action against the insurer for the recovery of indemnity in all cases where the insured would have been otherwise liable.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

200 Cal. 235

OCEAN INDUSTRIES, Inc., v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR SANTA CRUZ COUNTY, et al. (S. F. 12290.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1927.)

1. Evidence 🔑11—Superior court may take judicial notice of political history of world in determining whether ship in Bay of Monterey is within state boundaries (Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 8).

In determining whether ship anchored in Bay of Monterey, more than 3½ miles from nearest low watermark of land, is within boundaries of state Supreme Court may, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 8, take judicial notice of political history of world.

2. States 🔑12(2)—Bay of Monterey, having headlands 18 miles apart and depth of 9 miles, held "bay."

Bay of Monterey, having headlands approximately 18 miles apart, with receding shores, giving total width of 22 miles inside headlands, and total depth of 9 miles, is a "bay," defined as body of water around which land forms curve or recess or inlet between capes or headlands.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bay.]

3. Constitutional law 🔑48—Statute defining county boundaries must be reconciled with Constitution determining state boundaries; ambiguities being resolved in harmony with Constitution (St. 1850, p. 58; Const. 1849, art. 12).

St. 1850, p. 58, intending to set off land and water area of state into political subdivisions, must be reconciled with Const. 1849, art. 12, including all islands and bays within boundaries of state, since it cannot be presumed that Legislature intended to exclude from jurisdiction of state any land or water embraced therein by Constitution, and ambiguities in act are to be resolved in harmony with organic law.

4. States 🔑12(2)—Entire Bay of Monterey within headlands and 3 nautical miles into ocean is within jurisdiction of state (Const. 1849, art. 12; St. 1850, p. 58, Pol. Code, §§ 3952, 3935).

Under Const. 1849, art. 12, including all bays within boundaries of state, and Stats. 1850, p. 58, Pol. Code, §§ 3952, 3935, entire Bay of Monterey within its headlands, and thence into ocean for 3 nautical miles, is within boundaries and jurisdiction of state and respective counties, and ship anchored in bay, though 3½ miles from low watermark of land, is within jurisdiction of superior court of county.

5. International law 🔑5—Jurisdiction over bays with headlands over 6 miles apart rests in undisputed jurisdiction of power possessing inclosing shoreline.

Territorial jurisdiction over bays, the headlands of which are more than 6 miles apart, rests in undisputed assertion of jurisdiction by power possessing inclosing shoreline of bay, there being no definite rule of international law governing matter.

In Bank.

Application for writ of prohibition by the Ocean Industries, Inc., to prevent the Superior Court of the State, in and for the county of Santa Cruz, and the Hon. H. C. Lucas, Judge thereof, from proceeding with the trial of an action. Writ denied.

Loucks & Phister, of San Pedro, and Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

B. D. Marx Greene, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein applied for the issuance of a writ of prohibition whereby it sought to have the respondent superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Santa Cruz, and the judge thereof, commanded to desist and refrain from any and all further proceedings in a certain action pending in said court entitled "People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. Ocean Industries, Inc., a Corporation, et al., Defendants," and particularly from making or entering any preliminary or other injunction affecting said defendant in said action. In support of its said application the petitioner alleged that it was a corporation duly organized as such under the laws of the state of Nevada for the purpose of carrying on the business of catching, and cleaning fish and extracting the oil therefrom in the waters of the Pacific Ocean at divers places along the coast line of North America between the parallels of 25 degrees and 40 degrees north latitude; and that, in order to carry on its said business, the petitioner had during the month of September, 1926, purchased and registered a certain vessel named "Peralta," and had fitted out and equipped said vessel with the necessary machinery and equipment for the production of fish meal, and the extraction of oil from fish, and had thereafter, and during the month of October, 1926, moved the said vessel to, and anchored the same at, a point designated as 121 degrees 55 minutes 12 seconds west longitude, and 36 degrees 53 minutes 12 seconds north latitude, which said point of anchorage was and is more than 3½ miles distant from the nearest low watermark on the shores of the Pacific Ocean and of the mainland or of any island or islands adjacent thereto; and that said petitioner is engaged in, and proposes to carry on, its aforesaid business and operations thereat, using in the course thereof fish caught in the waters of the Pacific Ocean more than 3½ miles distant from the said coast line. The petitioner further alleges that on the 18th day of October, 1926, the people of the state of California, through its Attorney General and certain other of its officials, caused to be filed in the superior court in and for the said county of Santa Cruz a complaint for an injunction, a copy of which is attached to its said application, wherein the said plaintiff sought to have the petitioner herein enjoined from conducting or continuing its said operations upon said vessel at its said place of anchorage; that thereupon and on said last-named date the said court and the judge thereof made and entered its order directing the said defendant in said action, its officers and employees, to show cause at a designated time before said court why a preliminary injunction should not issue in said action as prayed for therein, and also in the meantime caused to be issued a temporary restraining order of like tenor and effect, both of which said orders are also attached as exhibits to petitioner's said application; that copies of said orders, together with a copy of the complaint and summons in said action, were served upon the defendant therein as provided by law; that said defendant, the petitioner herein, appeared in said court in response to said orders and process, and thereupon presented and filed a certain affidavit in denial of certain of the averments of said complaint, a copy of which affidavit is also attached as an exhibit to the petitioner's application herein, and from which it appears that the substantial allegations of the petition are set forth in said affidavit; that a hearing was thereafter and on the 26th day of October, 1926, had before said court upon the matters referred to in said complaint and orders and the defendants' return thereto, at the conclusion of which hearing the said superior court made and entered its order determining that the plaintiff in said action was entitled to a preliminary injunction restraining the defendant therein from further carrying on any operation or operations for the reduction of fish, or from using any fish of the variety known as "sardines" in the reduction plant upon said ship while situate at its said place of anchorage, and said court announced as a result of its said determination that it would make and enter a preliminary injunction accordingly, and that said court threatens, and will, unless prohibited therefrom by this court herein, make and enter and enforce such injunction. The petitioner further alleges that the issuance and enforcement of said preliminary injunction as proposed and threatened by said court is in excess of and beyond the jurisdiction of said court, for the reason that the said place of anchorage of said vessel and the place where the said plant of the petitioner herein is being and is proposed to be operated is outside of the state of California, and is outside of and beyond the jurisdiction of said court. Finally, the petitioner alleges that the effect of the operation and enforcement of said preliminary injunction would work irreparable injury to the petitioner herein in ways which are set forth with much of detail in its said application; wherefore it prays the issuance of the peremptory writ sought herein.

[1] To the foregoing petition the respondents have made their reply by way of both demurrer and answer, by the first of which pleadings they put in issue the main considerations presented to this court for its determination herein, and to these we will first direct our attention. The preliminary questions thus presented for our solution are, first, as to whether the ship Peralta, upon which the petitioner herein is engaged in conducting its aforesaid operations, and upon which it intends to continue the same, unless prevented from so doing by the preliminary injunction proposed to be issued by the respondents herein, is at its admitted place of anchorage, within or without the boundaries of the state of California; second, whether the aforesaid operations of said petitioner upon said vessel and at said point, if within the boundaries of the state of California, are in violation of its laws. The precise point in issue under the first of these propositions has been made very definite by the presentation on behalf of both of the parties hereto in their pleadings and upon the hearing hereon of certain maps and plats delineating the boundaries and dimensions of the Bay of Monterey, as well as the exact location of the ship Peralta within the headlands of said body of water, but more than three nautical miles from low-water mark along the shore line thereof. If it shall be found as a matter of law that the entire area of the Bay of Monterey, so-called, extends oceanward to a line drawn between the headlands thereof; and if it shall further be found that said entire area of said Bay of Monterey is to be held included within the territorial boundaries of the state of California, it would follow irresistibly that the ship Peralta at its designated place of anchorage is within said state, and is subject to its laws.

[2] Upon the solution of the problem thus presented, this court is entitled to bring to bear, in so far as it may be aided thereby, its judicial notice of the political history of the world (Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 8), when in the early years of the sixteenth century of our era Spain, through her voyagers, had discovered, and through her conquistadores established her dominion over, that region in the southwestern portion of North America which became known as "New Spain," she began through her viceroys to send forth navigators to the northward along the western coast of the continent, with the twofold object of adding further territory to her domain and of discovering the fabled northwest passage. The first of these navigators to thus extend his voyages beyond what is now known as Lower California was Juan Cabrillo. This bold navigator, after a stormy voyage up an unknown coast, sighted the wooded headland to which he gave the name of Point Pinos, and sailed into the body of water behind it, to which, as recorded in his log, he also gave the name "Bahia de Los Pinos," the Bay of Pines. He was followed in 1602 by another navigator, Sebastian Vizcaino, who also found and entered the same incurved body of water upon the inner shores of which he landed, taking formal possession of its coasts in the name of his sovereign, and rechristening it "Bahia de Monterey" in honor of his patron the Count de Monterey, then viceroy of New Spain, which name it has ever since borne in the official records of Spain, of Mexico, the United States, and state of California. The Bay of Monterey, thus designated from its first discovery as a "bay," is a body of water having headlands approximately 18 miles apart, with receding shores, giving a total width of 22 miles inside the headlands, with a total depth of approximately 9 miles. It thus satisfies the definition of a "bay" given by the lexicographers as a body of water around which the land forms a curve; or a recess or inlet between capes or headlands. Webster, Title "Bay." It is needless to detail the history of the increasingly troubled effort of Spain and later of Mexico to assert and maintain the sovereignty of each in turn over the indefinite region known as California and its adjacent islands, inlets, and seas; but the interesting fact may be noted as having its bearing upon whatever question of international law is involved herein that the dispute between Spain and England in the year 1790 growing out of the northwest coast fur trade was for the time being settled by the so-called Nootka Convention, wherein as between these two powers, which were then the greatest maritime powers of the known world, it was agreed that the exclusive sovereignty of Spain should be recognized and respected over all parts of the northwest coast already occupied by subjects of Spain, and for a distance of 10 leagues into the ocean. The agreements of this convention were ratified by the contracting powers and the claims of Spain to exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction over the coasts of what is now California and Oregon as far north as the mouth of the Columbia river on land and to a distance of 10 leagues into the ocean were conceded and confirmed. This jurisdiction over these coasts and seas and adjacent islands Spain and her successor Mexico thereafter asserted and insisted upon through rigid maritime regulations over the increasing coastal traffic during the half century or so following the date of said treaty, and down to the time of the occurrence of the war between the United States and Mexico and consequent seizure of California by the former, manifested by the raising of the American flag at Monterey on July 7, 1846, and by the subsequent events which marked the passing of the old dominion. By the terms of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which was finally ratified at the city of Queretaro on May 30, 1848, Mexico ceded to the United States all territory lying to the northward of a line drawn from the mouth of the Rio Grande westerly to the Pacific Ocean. By virtue of this treaty the United States assumed that jurisdiction over the region thus ceded, both territorial and maritime, which Mexico had theretofore asserted, and which embraced all of the ports, harbors, bays, and inlets along the coast of California, and for a considerable, though perhaps indefinite, distance into the ocean, including dominion over the numerous islands lying therein adjacent to said coast. When in the course of events the duly constituted framers of the Constitution of California assembled at Monterey in the autumn of 1849, and proceeded to frame the first Constitution of California, they inserted in article 12 thereof a description of the boundaries of the state, which, in so far as the southerly and westerly lines thereof were concerned, read as follows:

> "Thence running west and along said boundary-line [the Mexican boundary] to the Pacific Ocean, and extending therein three English miles; thence running in a northwesterly direction, and following the direction of the Pacific coast, to the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence on the line of said forty-second degree of north latitude to the place of beginning. Also all the islands, harbors, and bays along and adjacent to the Pacific Coast."

This language in our first Constitution, particularly in view of the past political history of the region, would seem to be too clear to admit of any doubt as to its meaning, or that it was intended to embrace within the boundaries and jurisdiction of the state of California the entire area of all of those several bays and harbors which indent its coast. The petitioner, however, argues that the first Legislature of California placed a more limited interpretation upon the language of the Constitution in its act (St. 1850, p. 58), creating and defining the boundaries of the several counties of the newly formed state. We are referred to the description of the boundaries of the county of Santa Cruz (then named Branciforte) in said act, which reads as follows:

> "Beginning in the ocean three English miles from land, at a point due west of the head of San Francisquito Creek, and running due east to the summit of the Santa Cruz Mountains; thence in a southeasterly direction along the summit of said mountains to the Pajaro River; thence down the middle of said river to the Bay of Monterey, and three English miles into the ocean; thence in a northwesterly direction parallel with the coast to the point of beginning." Section 7.

[3, 4] In interpreting this act, intended to set off the land and water area of California into appropriate political subdivisions, we are to do so in such a way as to reconcile its terms, if reasonably possible, with the language of the Constitution, since it would not be presumed to be the intent of the Legislature to do that which it would have no power to do, viz. to exclude from the jurisdiction of the state of California or its political subdivisions any of its land or water areas which had been embraced therein by the express terms of its Constitution. This being so, if there are any ambiguities in the act in question, they are to be resolved in harmony with the text of the organic law. Thus it is that, when we find in the above-quoted description the following course and distance: "Thence down the middle of said river to the Bay of Monterey and three English miles into the ocean," we are to assume that the framers of the act did not mean by the above-emphasized phrase "into the bay," since so to construe it would be not only to do violence to its words, but to exclude the larger portion of Monterey bay from the boundaries and jurisdiction of the state of California, despite the very plain inclusion therein of the entire bay according to the Constitution. The petitioner, however, lays especial emphasis upon the description reading: "Thence in a northwesterly direction parallel to the coast to the point of beginning." When, however, we read the act in its entirety, we find that the phrase "parallel to the coast" is repeatedly applied with reference to the general coast lines of every coast county described therein, regardless of the bays and inlets along said respective coast lines. Reasonably interpreted, this phrase may bear a meaning entirely consistent with the phrasing of the Constitution, which includes within the state boundaries "all islands, harbors and bays along and adjacent to the coast." When we come to consider the description of the county of Monterey as contained in the said act of 1850 the ambiguities of the act become still more apparent. Said description begins, "At the mouth of the Pajaro river, on the Bay of Monterey," and ends, "Thence parallel with the coast to the place of beginning." It is thus plain that the northern boundary of Monterey county as thus given does not close with the southern boundary of Branciforte or Santa Cruz county, even according to the petitioner's interpretation of the act. The state Legislature apparently had discovered this hiatus when it came to adopt the provisions of the Political Code in 1872, since, while it left the boundary of the county of Santa Cruz substantially unchanged on its oceanward side (Pol. Code, § 3952), it changed the boundary description of the county of Monterey so as to make it read: "Beginning in the Pacific Ocean at the southwest corner of Santa Cruz," etc., to the place of beginning. Pol. Code, § 3935. The entire Bay of Monterey within its headlands and thence into the ocean for a distance of 3 nautical miles was thus, we think, definitely placed within the sovereignty of the state of California, and within the boundaries and jurisdiction respectively of the counties of Santa Cruz and Monterey.

[5] The petitioner, however, insists that by the rules of international law the territorial jurisdiction of a maritime state does not extend beyond 3 miles from the shore line, and follows the indentations of the coast into all bays or gulfs, the headlands of which are more than 6 miles apart, and cites certain text-writers upon international law in support of that contention. These text-writers give as the reason for this rule the somewhat fantastic one that, while our modern international law was in the process of forming, the range of coast planted cannon did not exceed 3 miles. These text-writers, however, while suggesting such a rule based upon such a long-lost reason, admit that as to the stronger maritime powers of modern Europe the rule was more honored in the breach than in the observance. Britain, which has depended more upon its "Wooden Walls" than upon its coast ordnance, has always asserted its sovereignty, not only over the entire area of the bays, ports, harbors, friths, and other inlets along its much indented coast line, but also over the bays, gulfs, and inlets of its dependencies; such, for example, as the Bay of Conception in Newfoundland, which has a breadth of 15 miles. These text-writers also point out that France has always asserted sovereignty over the Bay of Cancale, which is 17 miles wide at its headlands, and that the United States asserts and has maintained its jurisdiction over the Bays of Delaware and Chesapeake, although the former has a headland width of 15, and the latter of 12 miles. In Moore's Digest of International Law, the basis of our assertion of jurisdiction over the entire area of Chesapeake bay is set forth in its reference to the decision of the commissioners of Alabama claims, wherein the extent of that jurisdiction was directly involved. The decision of the commission is illuminating in its bearing upon the instant proceeding. It reads:

> "Considering, therefore, the importance of the question, the configuration of Chesapeake Bay, the fact that its headlands are well marked, and but twelve miles apart, that it and its tributaries are wholly within our own territory, that the boundary lines of adjacent states encompass it; that from the earliest history of the county it has been claimed to be territorial waters, and that the claim has never been questioned; that it cannot become the pathway from one nation to another; and remembering the doctrines of the recognized authorities upon international law, as well as the holdings of the English Courts as to the Bristol Channel and Conception Bay, and bearing in mind the matter of the brig Grange and the position taken by the government as to Delaware Bay, we are forced to the conclusion that Chesapeake Bay must be held to be wholly within the territorial jurisdiction and authority of the government of the United States."

While it is true that by treaties and conventions between the powers chiefly in arbitration cases the fixation of a 6-mile distance between headlands of certain bays and inlets have at times been agreed upon in the settlement of international disputes, it cannot be said that there is any rule of international law upon the subject; the whole matter resting in the undisputed assertion of jurisdiction by the power possessing the inclosing shore line of the bay or inlet in question. This being so, we arrived at the conclusion that the Bay of Monterey between its headlands and the ocean adjacent to a line drawn between these headlands for a distance of 3 nautical miles is within the boundaries of the state of California and of the counties respectively of Santa Cruz and Monterey. The particular location of the ship Peralta as given in the petitioner's application herein places it within the county of Santa Cruz, and hence within the jurisdiction of the superior court in and for said county of Santa Cruz. It is not seriously contended by the petitioner that the acts which it proposes to do upon and by the use of said vessel and its equipment at said point would not, if permitted, constitute a violation of the laws of the state of California regulating the taking and reduction of that species of marine fish known as "sardines." It follows that the superior court in and for the county of Santa Cruz has jurisdiction over offenses against these laws; and hence that the alternative writ issued herein should be discharged and the application of the petitioner for a permanent writ of prohibition denied.

It is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

200 Cal. 274

FOSTER v. FERNANDES et al. (Sac. 4015.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1927.)

Appeal and error ⚷479(1)—Supersedeas may issue to prevent execution on judgment after refusal to permit sureties on appeal to justify because mistakenly appearing too late.

Where defendants after judgment for plaintiff in good faith gave notice of appeal and filed undertaking, supersedeas may issue to prevent execution on judgment after trial judge had refused to permit sureties to justify an appeal bond because of mistakenly appearing therefor one day too late.

In Bank.

Action by M. Elma Foster against J. V. Fernandes and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On application for supersedeas. Writ granted.

G. W. Zartman and Russell & Heid, all of Tulare, for appellants.

Feemster & Cleary, of Visalia, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon submission of the cause in open court, the Chief Justice announced the decision of the court as follows:

In this action to recover certain cattle, or the value thereof, together with damages for their wrongful detention, judgment was entered for plaintiff. After motion for new trial made and denied, defendants gave notice of appeal, and, in due time, filed an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $15,000, properly conditioned to stay execution. Thereafter, the respondent having excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties, appellants served notice that the sureties would justify before the court on the 3d day of December, 1926, on which day they appeared in court with the sureties. After due examination, the trial court found the sureties were qualified to act as such, but refused to permit them to justify on the ground that they appeared one day too late, the delay being explained by the fact that the appellants erroneously believed they had until December 3, 1926, within which to have said sureties justify. Execution was thereupon issued on behalf of the plaintiff upon the judgment entered in the cause, and the appellants have applied to this court for writ of supersedeas.

Under the rule stated in Nonpareil Manufacturing Co. v. McCartney, 143 Cal. 1, 76 P. 653, and Segarini v. Bargagliotti, 193 Cal. 538, 226 P. 2, good faith having been shown by appellants, we deem it proper, in the exercise of sound discretion, to grant them the writ prayed for, upon such terms as will be just and will adequately protect the rights of the respondent, in order to preserve the status quo until the final determination of the action.

It is ordered that, upon the filing by petitioners with the clerk of this court, within 15 days, of a good and sufficient undertaking on appeal in the sum of $15,000 conditioned as required by law, and which shall have been first approved by a judge of the superior court in and for the county of Tulare, at a hearing upon 5 days' notice to respondent, a writ shall issue as prayed for herein.

It is further ordered that in the meantime, during said period of 15 days, the execution of the judgment referred to in the petition be stayed.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

200 Cal. 261

MUCHENBERGER et al. v. CITY OF SANTA MONICA et al. (L. A. 9258.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error ⚿655(1)—Entire transcript held not subject to motion to strike out merely for absence of reporter, when supplemental portion was admitted in evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 953[a]).

Entire transcript held not subject to motion to strike out, made on ground that no transcript could be settled, under alternative method provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 953(a), because supplemental portion had been received in evidence when no official reporter was present, absence of such reporter having been with knowledge and consent of all parties concerned and court having certified that portion objected to was true and correct.

2. Appeal and error ⚿655(1)—Portion of transcript objected to because containing evidence admitted in reporter's absence held severable, leaving valid transcript sufficient for decision on merits.

On motion to strike out entire transcript because containing supplemental portion received in evidence during absence of reporter, such portion, objected to, held severable from remainder of transcript, remainder of transcript, properly certified, being sufficient to enable decision on merits.

3. Appeal and error ⚿655(1)—Transcript containing report received in absence of reporter held not subject to motion to strike out in absence of injury.

Where respondents moved to strike out transcript because it contained engineer's report received in evidence during absence of official reporter, reviewing court would assume that such report beneficially affected them, because of moving parties' insistence on correctness of judgment, so, in absence of showing that they had been injuriously affected by trial court's certification of portion of transcript objected to, motion to strike out would not be granted, moving parties having tacitly consented to presentation and admission in evidence of report objected to.

4. Appeal and error ⚿655(1) — Reviewing court will presume that report in transcript, moved stricken, favored moving parties because of their insistence on correctness of judgment.

Where respondents moved to strike out transcript because it contained engineer's report received in evidence during absence of official reporter, reviewing court would presume that such report beneficially affected moving parties because of their insistence on correctness of judgment based thereon.

In Bank.

Action by Leo J. Muchenberger and another against the City of Santa Monica and others and the Santa Monica Land Company to compel defendant last named, as trustee, to perform terms of trust imposed by act of the Legislature with reference to tidelands. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal and defendants first named cross-appeal. On defendant's motion to strike out reporter's transcript. Motion denied.

Black, Hammack & Black and James Westervelt, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Chester L. Coffin, of Santa Monica, for respondents City of Santa Monica et al.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for respondent Santa Monica Land Co.

RICHARDS, J. The respondent herein, the Santa Monica Land Company, has presented a motion to strike out the reporter's transcript on both appeals herein, upon the ground that as to a certain portion of said transcript the official reporter was not present during the presentation to the trial court of the matters embraced in that particular portion thereof. The record herein discloses that the action in which these appeals were taken was one wherein the plaintiffs sought to compel the city of Santa Monica, as trustee, to perform the terms of a trust contained in that certain act of the Legislature of the state of California, known as "An act granting certain tidelands and submerged lands of the state of California to the city of Santa Monica upon certain trusts and conditions," approved April 10, 1917, and for such other and appropriate orders and decrees as should be meet in the premises; that upon the issues joined therein the cause came on for trial in the early part of the year 1925, before the court sitting without a jury, and that the trial of said cause lasted several days, during which oral and documentary evidence was received, and also during which main trial of the cause the official reporter of said court was present and reported the same; that on the 4th day of March, 1925, the cause was submitted to the court for decision upon the evidence theretofore taken; that on the 12th day of May, 1925, the judge of said court filed an opinion wherein he indicated what his decision in said cause would be, and that, in the course of said opinion, he indicated that there was a certain incidental matter relating to the details of certain work which the court suggested should be agreed upon by the parties and with reference to which the court indicated that, in the event of the failure of the parties to so agree, it would appoint two engineers, one to be named by the plaintiffs and one by defendants, who, with the city engineer of the city of Santa Monica, should prepare and present to the court their recommendation as to the details of such work. The parties not having agreed, the court appointed said engineers, and also, and in order to receive their report, and evidently for that purpose alone, set aside the submission of the cause and continued the further hearing thereon for that particular purpose until such time as such report could be prepared and presented. The matter came on for hearing thereon on September 21, 1925, whereupon the report of said engineers, after being identified and verified by them, was presented and received in evidence by the court.

[1] At the time of the presentation thereof at said hearing the official reporter was not present, and the report of said engineers was received and filed without his presence, but with the knowledge of all parties concerned that he was not present at said time, and without either suggestion or objection on the part of any of them. Thereafter and on the 1st day of December, 1925, the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in said cause and also caused to be made and entered its judgment therein. The plaintiffs appealed from the whole of said judgment, while the city of Santa Monica also filed its appeal from certain designated portions thereof. Both of these appellants united in the request to the official reporter for the preparation of the reporter's transcript on both appeals, and such transcript was accordingly prepared and certified by such reporter in so far as the same related to the main trial of said cause down to the date of the first submission thereof. The said transcript, as presented to the judge of the trial court for his approval and certification, also was made to contain the order of the court for the reopening of the cause for the special purpose of receiving the report of said engineers and the proceedings at the time of the reception in evidence of said report. When the matter of the settlement of said reporter's transcript came on for hearing before the trial court, the respondent Santa Monica Land Company objected to the settlement of the same, basing its objection upon the ground that, since no official reporter had been present when the written report of said engineers was identified and received in evidence, no transcript could be prepared or settled upon said appeal, under the alternative method provided in section 953(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial judge took the matter of the settlement of said transcript and the aforesaid objection thereto under advisement and thereafter, and on April 12, 1926, appended thereto the following certificate:

> "I hereby certify that the foregoing transcript, from pages 1 to 466, both inclusive, consisting of one volume, in the above proceedings, is true and correct; except that the case was reopened on the 21st day of September, 1925, for the sole purpose of receiving the reports of the engineers appointed under the order for reopening, and taking their evidence as to the correctness of the same. At said hearing on September 21, 1925, no evidence was taken from any witness save from said engineers, and that only as to the correctness of their reports. The order reopening the cause and the proceedings had thereon are incorporated in the foregoing transcript, at pages 467 to 481, inclusive."

The respondents herein renew their said objections to the reporter's transcript and the settlement thereof and to the use thereof upon these appeals by their said motion to strike said transcript and the whole thereof from the files. We are of the opinion that this motion should be denied. It is addressed to the reporter's transcript herein, as a whole. A reference to the foregoing certificate of the trial judge will show that he has duly certified to the correctness of said reporter's transcript as to the whole of that portion thereof which embraces the main trial of the cause and the proceedings had thereon, and that, as to the remainder of the certificate of said judge, it refers to and identifies the proceedings had upon the supplemental hearing ordered by said court for the limited purpose of receiving the report of its appointed engineers upon a merely incidental phase of said case arising after the trial and submission of the main cause. While it is probably true that the official reporter should have been present and have reported this supplemental proceeding, we are of the opinion that his absence therefrom, with the apparent knowledge and consent of all parties concerned, ought not to so far avail as to justify the granting of the respondents' motion to strike out the entire transcript herein, in view of the fact that that portion thereof which fully embraces the main proceedings during the trial of the cause was properly certified by the trial judge as being true and correct.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that, as to the supplemental portion of said transcript which forms the basis of the respondents' assault upon the whole thereof, that portion thereof is so far severable from the remainder of said transcript as to be disregarded in determining whether there is a sufficiently certified transcript of the cause on file as to enable the court to decide these appeals upon their merits. In presenting this motion, the respondents have proffered no objection impugning the correctness of that portion of said transcript which embodies the proceedings had at the time of the receipt of the report of said engineers.

[4] Since the respondents herein are insisting upon the correctness of the judgment of said court in its entirety, it must be assumed that they have been beneficially affected by whatever portion of said judgment relates to or is based upon the report of said engineers, and this being so, and said respondents having tacitly consented to the presentation and admission in evidence of said engineers' report in the absence of the official reporter, we are of the opinion that they are not now in a position to press said motion without some showing that they have been injuriously affected by the action of the trial judge in making his foregoing certification of said transcript.

It is therefore ordered that the said motion be and the same is hereby denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

80 Cal. App. 658

PEOPLE v. TAYLOR. (Cr. 945.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 14, 1927.)

Criminal law 🔑934—Grant of new trial, where court's advice to acquit for insufficiency of evidence was not followed, held not abuse of discretion.

In prosecution for driving automobile while habitual user of narcotic drugs, grant of new trial held not abuse of discretion, where court had advised jury to acquit because of insufficiency of evidence, but jury had not followed such advice, but had returned verdict of conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Jesse E. Taylor was convicted of driving an automobile while habitual user of narcotic drugs. From an order granting a new trial, the People appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 250 P. 105.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Mark L. Burns and L. M. Shelley, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This appeal is from the order of the trial court granting defendant's motion for a new trial after the jury had found him guilty of the offense of driving an automobile upon a public highway while he was "an habitual user of narcotic drugs."

The information charges that the offense was committed March 27, 1926. Dixie Cunningham, an habitual user of narcotic drugs, employed by an inspector of the state board of pharmacy as an informer, testified that in the forenoon of the day mentioned in the information she and the defendant "both took a shot" of morphine; that she returned to the defendant's place of business in the afternoon, and that the defendant then took her in his automobile to various places, at one of which he procured four bindles of morphine; that they then returned to the defendant's place of business, where they used one of the bindles to give each of them a second "shot"; and that the defendant gave the witness two of the remaining bindles and kept the third. The inspector referred to testified that he arrested the defendant after the informer had left, and that he found various instruments of the kind used by narcotic addicts in the defendant's place of business, and that they showed evidence of having been used; that the defendant stated that he had been using narcotics this time "only three or four months, and that, if we would give him a week or ten days he would be entirely off, and would never use it any more"; that the defendant was "under the influence of narcotics" in both the forenoon and the afternoon of the day of his arrest; that the witness had seen the defendant three or four times prior to March 27, 1926, and that on each occasion the defendant was under the influence of narcotics. The witness was not asked, and did not state, how long prior to March 27, 1926, it was that he had seen the defendant. While there is some corroboration of parts of the foregoing testimony, no additional facts were proved by other witnesses.

Mr. Babcock, deputy district attorney, asked for a continuance, after the testimony referred to had been introduced, to enable him to procure the attendance of a witness who he stated was then ill. The request was denied, and Babcock thereupon moved the court to dismiss the case on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The trial judge stated that the court was without authority to dismiss the case, but was authorized to advise the jury to acquit. Counsel for defendant then said:

> "We will not offer any proof, and we are willing to submit this case without argument, as Mr. Babcock has stated * * * that the evidence is not sufficient to convict."

The court advised the jury to acquit. The jury did not follow such advice, but returned a verdict of conviction. The court granted a new trial, on motion of defendant, on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, and the district attorney gave notice of appeal.

Appellant relies upon the cases of People v. Amer, 151 Cal. 303, 90 P. 698, and People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 303, 47 P. 128. In the former case the trial court had granted a new trial on a ground not authorized by section 1181 of the Penal Code. In the latter the jury had returned a verdict of manslaughter and the court granted a new trial on the ground that the evidence showed conclusively that the defendant was guilty of murder. Neither case, therefore, has any bearing upon the question presented here. In People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 455, 44 P. 166, it is said:

> "It has been so repeatedly held here as to become axiomatic that where a new trial is granted upon this ground [insufficiency of the evidence], or where it is one of various grounds upon which the trial court may have based the order, its action will not be disturbed, except in a case showing a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion. * * * Nor does it affect the question that the evidence in the case may have a legal tendency to prove all the material facts. Guilt is to be established beyond a reasonable doubt, and, while there may be some evidence to support each fact, this does not signify that it is necessarily such as to satisfy the conscience of the judge that a case is made which warrants conviction."

In People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 312, 159 P. 1046, 1048, it is said:

> "We can hardly manufacture in fancy a hypothetical situation in which a reviewing court would be justified in questioning the discretion of a trial court who should grant a new trial in a case involving a criminal charge."

It certainly does not manifestly appear, under all the circumstances of this case, that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; GEORGE F. BUCK, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 647

Ex parte O'CONNOR. (Cr. 1415.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 13, 1927.)

1. Fraud 🔑69—Count alleging accused knowingly disseminated circular asserting untrue fact concerning real property, with intent to mislead, held to charge offense (Pen. Code, § 654b).

Count alleging that circular was made and disseminated, asserting fact concerning ownership, title, or other characteristic of real property which was untrue, and known to publisher to be so, and that it was made and disseminated with intention of misleading, held sufficient to charge offense of false advertising concerning real property under Pen. Code, § 654b.

2. Criminal law 🔑200(1)—Conviction of false advertising concerning real property does not preclude conviction of larceny by trick and device, based on same transaction (Pen. Code, § 654b; Const. art. 1, § 13).

Offense of issuing circular containing untrue statement concerning real property with intention of misleading, set out in Pen. Code, § 654b, is not same offense as larceny by trick and device, which involves element of taking, so that conviction of former under one count of complaint and conviction of latter on subsequent count does not violate Const. art. 1, § 13, though based on same transaction.

3. Fraud 🔑68—Offense is complete when deceptive advertising concerning real property is circulated with criminal intent (Pen. Code, § 654b).

Offense of issuing circular containing untrue statement concerning real property, with intention of misleading, defined in Pen. Code, § 654b, is complete when deceptive advertising matter is circulated with criminal intent.

4. Criminal law 🔑196—Where single act constitutes two crimes, but each requires proof additional to that required by the other, prosecution for either does not put defendant in jeopardy for the other.

While single act may be offense against two statutes, and thus constitute two crimes, if each statute requires proof of facts additional to those involved in the other, acquittal or conviction of either does not result in defendant having been in jeopardy for the other.

5. Habeas corpus 🔑113(5½)—In habeas corpus proceeding, objection that testimony is not properly before appellate court cannot be made for first time in brief.

Objection that record of testimony in trial court is not properly before appellate court in habeas corpus proceeding cannot be made for first time in brief, where return did not deny allegation of petition that it contained all testimony.

6. Habeas corpus 🔑83—Habeas corpus petition is treated as traverse to return.

On filing of return to writ of habeas corpus, petition is treated as traverse thereto.

7. Habeas corpus 🔑83—In habeas corpus proceeding, facts alleged in petition and not denied in return must be taken as true.

In habeas corpus proceeding, where matters included in petition are not denied in return, they are considered as admitted and must be taken as true.

8. Criminal law 🔑200(3)—One transaction cannot be basis for conviction for both larceny by trick and device and obtaining money by false pretenses.

Defendant cannot be convicted of larceny by trick and device and of obtaining money by false pretenses, where only one transaction occurred between parties.

9. Habeas corpus 🔑31—Habeas corpus is proper remedy where convicted defendant claims former jeopardy.

Habeas corpus is proper remedy where it is claimed that prisoner has been placed in jeopardy for identical offense of which he was convicted, since such matter goes to continuance of jurisdiction of trial court for any purpose.

10. Criminal law 🔑564(5)—Evidence of street number of city held to show offenses within jurisdiction of municipal court.

Evidence held to show that offenses were committed within jurisdiction of municipal court, where there was testimony that transactions took place at certain street and number.

11. Criminal law 🔑737(2)—Venue is fact question.

Question of venue is one of fact.

12. Habeas corpus 🔑85(1)—Petitioner in habeas corpus proceeding held not to have sustained burden to show that verdict was void for uncertainty.

Petitioner in habeas corpus proceeding held not to have sustained burden to show that verdict was void for uncertainty, where petition did not show language thereof, in view of statement in commitment and presumption that official duty has been performed.

13. Habeas corpus 🔑85(1)—In habeas corpus proceeding, petitioner must prove claimed uncertainty of verdict.

In habeas corpus proceeding, petitioner has burden to show that verdict was void for uncertainty.

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

14. Habeas corpus ⚷113(9)—In habeas corpus proceeding, judgment cannot be held not to support commitment, in absence of exhibit purporting to show correct judgment.

In habeas corpus proceeding, judgment of conviction cannot be said to be in such language as not to support commitment, on contention that commitment did not recite correct judgment, where exhibit purporting to show correct judgment was not appended to petition.

Application of Cyril J. O'Connor for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles to secure the release of petitioner from custody after conviction in municipal court for false advertising concerning real property. Writ discharged; petitioner remanded.

William J. Clark, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, and A. T. Folsom and Vernon S. Gray, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. Previously to application being made to this court for a writ of habeas corpus, a petition for the same relief had been made to the superior court of Los Angeles county, which was refused.

The petitioner was convicted in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles on three counts of a complaint, and was sentenced upon each. The sentence for the offense charged in the first count was a fine of $1, which was paid. The claim upon which petitioner's release is now sought is based upon several contentions. We shall first consider the points urged as they especially concern the third count. This is predicated upon section 654b of the Penal Code. The attack made upon the sentence imposed following the conviction upon this count is divided into two parts. It is first said that no public offense is charged therein, and, secondly, it is charged that if an offense is charged it is the same as that set forth in count 1, and that the defendant having been tried, convicted, and sentenced under the last-named count, a further punishment under count 3 would be a violation of article 1, § 13, of our state Constitution.

[1] We are of the opinion that count 3 states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. It attempts to charge the offense commonly known as false advertising concerning real property. Section 654b of the Penal Code reads, in part, as follows:

> "Any person, * * * who in a newspaper, circular, circular or form letter or other publication published or circulated in any language in this state, makes or disseminates any statement or assertion of fact, concerning the extent, location, ownership, title or other characteristic, quality or attribute of any real estate located in this state or elsewhere, which is known to him to be untrue and which is made or disseminated with the intention of misleading, is guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

The count in question charges that on the 11th day of January, 1926, the defendant O'Connor did "make, publish, designate and circulate and cause to be made, published, disseminated and circulated, and did then and there cause to be placed before the public in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, a certain handbill, circular, notice and folder, such folder being an advertising medium, an advertisement regarding such real property and the title thereto, * * * which said advertisement did then and there contain statements, representations and assertions of facts concerning such real property, * * * which said statements, representations and assertions were then and there false and untrue and which were then and there deceptive and misleading and which were then and there known by said Cyril J. O'Connor * * * to be false and untrue, deceptive and misleading, the said circular * * * containing in words and figures the following"—following which allegations the complaint contains a copy of a portion of the alleged circular. Among other things, the complaint further alleges that this publication was made by the defendant "for the purpose of misleading and deceiving the public generally, and to fraudulently induce the public to enter into obligations relating to said property and to purchase certain interests in said mining claim."

The essential facts required and alleged, in so far as they pertain to such a case as that before us, were that the circular was made and disseminated, asserting a fact concerning the ownership, title, or other characteristic of real property which was untrue, and known to the publisher of such circular to be untrue, and which was made and disseminated with the intention of misleading. The pleading is therefore sufficient.

[2] Nor can we agree with the second argument advanced concerning count 3. It is true that this count relates to a phase of the same transaction as does count No. 1, but the offense charged in count 3 is of a different nature, and is not necessarily embraced within the other.

It is urged that the defendant having been tried, convicted and sentenced under count 1, there can be no prosecution upon count 3, because the facts constituting the bases of both charges are identical. We have here an entirely different situation than exists in the comparison of the prosecution under counts 1 and 4, which will be discussed later. The offense alleged by count 3 to have been committed is not necessarily included within that set forth in count 1. In a case where one is convicted of an offense necessarily included within another, and later is prosecuted for the greater, a plea of once in jeopardy will be sustained, for such conviction might have been had under the latter. The converse would also be true if the prosecution had begun with the greater offense, and there had been an acquittal, and subsequent prosecution attempted under the lesser charge. In such cases, and of course where the offenses charged are identical, there can be but one conviction and but one sentence. But where, as here, entirely separate and distinct offenses are charged in two counts, and one is not necessarily included within the other, a prosecution for one is no bar to a prosecution for the other, even though the same testimony may be applicable to both.

[3, 4] In brief, count 3 charges the offense known as false advertising of real property. This offense became complete when the deceptive advertising matter was circulated with criminal intent. It is obvious that this false advertising is a distinct offense from larceny by trick and device as charged in count 1. The mere fact that the false literature was used as a part of the device through which the larceny was accomplished does not argue against the fact that the offenses are nevertheless separate and distinct. The latter involves as an essential element the taking of personal property of another. As to the former, the taking of property is not involved. The outstanding element of the offense of falsely advertising real estate is the publication and circulation of deceptive matter. It is complete without regard to whether or not any one is deceived or damaged. The statute is intended to protect the public from a certain prevalent and pernicious form of trickery, but publication is not essential to larceny by trick and device. Other distinctions might be pointed out; but these are sufficient to indicate that the offenses are separate and distinct and that one is not necessarily included within the other. While a single act may be an offense against two statutes, and thus constitute two crimes, if each statute requires proof of a fact additional to those involved in the other, an acquittal or conviction of either does not result in the defendant having been in jeopardy for the other. Morey v. Comm., 108 Mass. 433.

[5-7] Objection is made that the record of the testimony in the trial court is not properly before this court. We think the respondent is precluded from urging this point for the first time in a brief. The petition alleges that the testimony included therein was given at the trial; that it was all of the testimony bearing upon the commission of any offense by the defendant. The return contains no denial of this assertion, and in no way challenges it. Upon the filing of the return to a writ of habeas corpus the petition is treated as a traverse thereto. If none of the matters included in the petition are denied, the facts set forth therein are considered as admitted, and must be taken as true. In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180. Hence, in this case, it is admitted that the only testimony adduced to show the defendant guilty of any offense was that of the witnesses Alice Ross and Anton Klein, and that their testimony was as alleged in the petition.

[8, 9] From this testimony it clearly appears that if the defendant was guilty, as the jury found him to be, of larceny by trick and device as charged in the first count, he cannot also be punished under the fourth count. But one transaction occurred between the parties in connection with the subject-matter which forms the basis of the prosecution upon these two counts. They not only relate to one and the same transaction, but the facts which constitute the larceny charge pleaded and established by the evidence are identical with those constituting the charge of obtaining money by false pretenses. Under such circumstances, the jurisdiction of the court was exhausted when it pronounced sentence upon the verdict returned on the first count, and habeas corpus is a proper remedy where it is claimed that the prisoner has been placed in jeopardy for the identical offense, because if such assertion be true it is not merely a matter of defense which if not properly sustained in the trial court would furnish ground for appeal, but goes to the continuance of jurisdiction of the trial court for any purpose. In re Harron, 191 Cal. 457, 217 P. 728, and cases therein cited.

[10, 11] The contention that there was no evidence introduced at the trial to show that the offenses were committed within the jurisdiction of the court cannot be sustained. There was testimony that the transactions in question took place at 1010 South Concord street, at which address the complaining witness said she resided. This, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, was sufficient. The question of venue is one of fact. As the cause in which the petitioner was convicted was tried in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, and as the jury was necessarily drawn from that vicinage, its members must have understood the complaining witness to refer to 1010 South Concord street in that city, and, therefore, in the county of Los Angeles. Considering all of the evidence, there could hardly be any reasonable doubt that the offenses were committed within the jurisdiction of the trial court, and this was sufficient. People v. McGregar, 88 Cal. 140, 26 P. 97; People v. Manning, 48 Cal. 335.

[12, 13] It is asserted that the verdict is deficient in that it is uncertain as to the offense of which the petitioner was found to be guilty. We are unable to determine from the statements contained in the petition of what language the verdict consisted. In the body of the petition it is asserted that the verdict was as follows:

> "State of California v. Cyril J. O'Connor, Defendant. We, the jury in the above-entitled matter find the defendant—On count No. 1 find the defendant guilty; count No. 2, the jury, find the defendant not guilty; count No. 3, we, the jury find the defendant guilty, and in count No. 4, we, the jury find the defendant guilty of the offense charged."

But in the commitment alleged to be held by the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles and set forth in hæc verba it is recited that:

> "Cyril J. O'Connor, was on the 26th day of March, 1926, convicted in the municipal court in and for the city of Los Angeles, state of California, in case No. 1209 on the criminal docket of said court of three public offenses, as charged in the complaint filed, in said cause, to wit: Under count No. 1 of the crime of petty larceny, by trick and device, a misdemeanor, and upon count No. 3 of the crime of false advertising, a misdemeanor, and upon count No. 4 of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, a misdemeanor, committed in said Los Angeles city on or about the 11th day of January, 1926."

This commitment is questioned only in that the recitation therein contained of the judgment is said to be incorrect. Such commitment apparently executed in due course of official routine thus produced by the petitioner supplies evidence that the verdict was other than as alleged elsewhere in the petition. In this state of uncertainty and giving proper weight to the presumption that official duty has been duly performed (which presumption was applied under quite similar circumstances in Re Williams, 183 Cal. 11, 190 P. 163), we cannot conclude that the petitioner has established his contention that the verdict was in such form as to be void for uncertainty. Of course, this burden is his in this habeas corpus proceeding.

[14] With respect to the judgment a similar situation exists. As we have said, after setting forth a purported copy of the commitment and vouching for its correctness as such copy, the petition alleges that the same is untrue in that the portion of it which purports to recite the judgment is said to be incorrect and it is asserted that the language contained in said recitation was not used by the court in pronouncing judgment. In that behalf the petition reads:

> "Nor does said judgment contain any of the said language, but that said judgment is in the words and figures as set forth in Exhibit 3 attached to this petition. * * *"

A careful perusal of the record discloses that no exhibit marked "Exhibit 3" is appended to the petition. Therefore, regardless of what the fact may be, we are unable to say that the judgment pronounced was not in such language as to support the commitment.

It is said in the brief of petitioner that the judgment was not entered as required by law in the judgment book. As to that matter the petition makes no showing. Certain other points are argued for the first time in the petitioner's reply brief. It is not necessary to consider them here, and we expressly refrain from doing so.

It appearing that at the time of the issuance of this writ the prisoner was in regular confinement serving the sentence upon conviction under the third count, it is ordered that the writ be discharged and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 609

YULE v. MILLER et al. (Civ. 5298.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1927.)

1. Customs and usages 🔑15(1)—Vendor and purchaser 🔑46 — Unambiguous agreement for sale of realty does not require evidence of usage or implication of law for interpretation.

Unambiguous agreement for sale of realty does not require either evidence of usage nor implication of law to interpret it or carry it into effect.

2. Vendor and purchaser 🔑77—Payments on realty contract of "$35 or more per month, including interest," held to cover both principal and interest.

Contract for purchase of realty, requiring payment of balance of purchase price in installments "of $35 or more per month, including interest," buyer to "make monthly payments within first year of $500," held unambiguous, and $35 monthly payments covered both principal and interest and not principal alone.

3. Vendor and purchaser 🔑77—In suit to cancel agreement to sell realty, acts of parties held to indicate that monthly payment covered both principal and interest, not merely principal.

In vendor's suit for cancellation of agreement to sell, conduct of parties in making payment indicated that monthly payments required by contract covered both principal and interest and not merely principal.

4. Cancellation of instruments 🔑47—In vendor's suit to cancel agreement to sell realty, evidence held sufficient to show rescission of agreement by plaintiff.

In vendor's suit to cancel agreement for sale of realty, evidence held sufficient to show that vendor, by seizing property, rescinded contract.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1) — Judgment should not be disturbed if evidence supports trial court's finding.

When there is evidence to support finding of trial court, judgment should not be disturbed.

6. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)—All intendments and conflicting rational inferences must be resolved in favor of trial court's judgment.

On appeal all intendments and conflicting rational inferences must be resolved in favor of judgment of trial court.

7. Trial 🔑105(1)—Incompetent evidence, not objected to, is sufficient to establish fact.

Incompetent evidence, admitted without objection, is to be regarded as sufficient to establish fact.

8. Appeal and error 🔑989—In reviewing sufficiency of evidence, technically incompetent evidence must be given as much weight as if competent.

Evidence technically incompetent, admitted without objection, must be given as much weight in reviewing court in passing on sufficiency of evidence as if it were competent.

9. Vendor and purchaser 🔑341(5)—Award of interest from time purchasers made payments under agreement instead of from time of vendor's rescission thereof held not error.

In vendor's suit to cancel agreement for sale of realty, awarding of interest on sum paid in under agreement from time of making payments under agreement, instead of from time when plaintiff rescinded such agreement, held not error.

10. Interest 🔑45—Interest is allowable from time sum involved in suit is due, if such sum may be ascertained with certainty.

Interest is allowable from time sum in suit becomes due, if such sum is certain or can be made certain by mere calculation.

11. Vendor and purchaser 🔑338—Action to recover purchase money paid on contract for sale of realty, after termination by vendor's fault, is one for money had and received.

Action to recover purchase money paid on contract for sale of real property, after termination of contract by fault of vendor, is in nature of one for money had and received, vendee having received no consideration because having been prevented from acquiring property under contract.

12. Pleading 🔑253(1) — In suit to cancel agreement to sell realty, entry of judgment in amount slightly in excess of that in cross-complaint held not error (Code Civ. Proc. § 470).

In suit to cancel agreement to sell realty, entry of judgment for amount in excess of sum set out in cross-complaint held not error, plaintiff's counsel having practically agreed to such correction in open court, and trial court being permitted, under Code of Civ. Proc. § 470, to make finding in accordance with evidence received not materially varying pleading, or to direct amendment of pleading to conform thereto.

13. Appeal and error 🔑1026—Error not injuring appellant should not cause reversal of judgment or order.

No error should cause reversal of judgment or order if it appears that appellant has not been and could not be injured thereby.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by W. A. C. Yule against Katie C. Miller and another for cancellation of an agreement to convey, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and for defendants on their cross-complaint. From a judgment on the cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 252 P. 737.

Clifford C. Pease, of San Diego, for appellant.

Jos. H. Egermayer and N. S. Hammack, both of San Diego, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from that portion of the judgment only which awards to respondents judgment on their cross-complaint in the amount of $976.23, together with interest and costs, and not from the judgment entered in favor of appellant quieting title to certain lands and canceling certain instruments of conveyance.

On the 15th day of June, 1921, respondent Katie C. Miller entered into a written contract with appellant, W. A. C. Yule, for the purchase and sale of lots 2 and 11 in block 121 of Middletown, being 50 by 200 feet, No. 3153 India street, San Diego, Cal. Respondent took possession of the property, furnished it, and up to the time of the acts of rescission set forth in the counterclaim and cross-complaint filed herein retained possession thereof. Until about June 24, 1922, the premises were occupied by a tenant of respondent. On June 24, 1922, the house upon the lots was nailed up by a carpenter employed by appellant, who refused to stop nailing it up when requested to do so by Richard L. Miller, husband of respondent. There was a sign posted on the property at the time upon which was printed: "Keep out. Trespassers will be prosecuted. Owner W. A. C. Yule." Thereafter, respondents' furniture was moved from the premises. On July 10, 1922, appellant wrote to respondents, notifying them that their furniture was placed in a storehouse for safe-keeping until claimed by them, and that appellant's letter would be an order to the transfer company to let respondents have their furniture.

The purchase price agreed upon in the agreement of sale for the property in question was $2,950. On June 15, 1921, the date of the agreement, $375 was paid, and within one year, or by May 27, 1922, further payments in the sum of $520 were made. The agreement executed by W. A. C. Yule and Josephine K. Yule, his wife, as parties of the first part, and Katie C. Miller, as party of the second part, provides that the first parties agree to sell and the second party agrees to buy the property in question for $2,950—$375 cash, receipt whereof is acknowledged, and the balance in monthly installments as follows: $35 or more per month, including interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on deferred balances, interest to be deducted from each payment to date and balance applied on principal beginning July 15, 1921. The agreement further provides that the buyer shall make monthly payments within the first year of $500 and in each year thereafter until the balance due is reduced to $1,500, which shall be made into first mortgage for three years, with interest at 7 per cent., and deed shall then be delivered to the buyer.

Appellant, who was the plaintiff in the action, on June 26, 1922, brought suit praying judgment that by reason of the default of respondents in making payments in accordance with the terms of the agreement, the same be declared canceled and ordered delivered up. The answer denies the alleged default in payments, and by way of cross-complaint demands judgment for $1,192.33 as damages for sums alleged to have been paid out for improvements, taxes, street bond assessments, etc. The trial court, after allowing $300 as the rental value of the property, entered judgment in favor of respondents upon the cross-complaint for payments, taxes, assessments, repairs, interest, and costs in the sum of $976.23, canceled the agreement, and entered a decree in favor of appellant quieting his title to the premises against respondents, subject only to a lien against such property in favor of respondents for the amount of the judgment.

Appellant in the bill of exceptions urges five specifications wherein the trial court erred:

> Exception No. 1: "Error of the court in construing the contract of sale in question as to when payments required to be made, and in failing to find that the defendants were in default in the performance of said contract prior to the time of any question of retaking possession."
>
> Exception No. 2: "Error of the court in finding that said defendants were not in default upon said contract and that said defendants had thereby first rescinded said contract."
>
> Exception No. 3: "Error of the court in finding that the plaintiff had rescinded said contract by seizing possession of said premises, there being no sufficiently competent evidence on which to base said finding."
>
> Exception No. 4: "Error of the court in finding and allowing interest from the time of the making of payments by said defendants instead of from the time when, by the cross-complaint, plaintiff is alleged to have rescinded said contract."
>
> Exception No. 5: "Error of the court in finding and allowing the sum of $895 as having been paid by defendants to plaintiff, whereas defendants' cross-complaint alleges and claims such sum to be in the amount of $885."

Respondents paid on the agreement $375 on June 15, 1921, when it was executed, and thereafter made the following payments: July 9, 1921, $15.03 interest and $19.97 on principal; July 13, 1921, $200 on principal; August 20, 1921, $50 on principal; September 6, 1921, $27.18 interest and $7.82 on principal; October 4, 1921, $13.41 interest and $21.59 on principal; November 16, 1921, $13.20 interest and $21.80 on principal; January 5, 1922, $13 interest and $57 on principal; May 6, 1922, $40 on principal; May 27, 1922, $12.82 interest and $7.18 on principal—making a total of $520 paid on the agreement before the expiration of the first year in addition to the $375 paid on the date of its execution, during which period $35 or more was required to be paid monthly, including interest, and which total payments for such period should aggregate $500.

While it is true that respondents made no payment during the month of December, 1921, nor during February, March, or April, 1922, in none of these months were respondents in arrears in the amounts due nor in default, unless under the contract $35 or more was required to be paid each month, even though advance payments had been made covering the amounts due monthly. Appellant, however, contends that the clause in the contract, "$35 or more per month, including interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable on deferred balances, interest to be deducted from each payment to date and balance applied on principal, * * * the buyer shall make monthly payments within the first year of $500," really ment to provide, as shown by the manner of the first several payments that there should be during the year enough more than $35 per month paid to amount to $500 on principal; that they omitted to use the words "on principal," but that the words "on principal" are necessarily implied. The interpretation of this clause of the contract presents the main question on appeal and is determinative of the objections raised in "Exception No. 1" and "Exception No. 2."

The trial court found:

> "That the sum of $375, the first payment under the terms of the contract, and the sum of $520, making a total sum of $895, was paid during the first year, and during the life of said contract, in compliance with, and in accordance with, the terms of said contract and agreement of sale, which amount was credited on said contract; that there was no default in the payment of the sum and sums so due and payable as provided and stipulated in the said contract at any time during the first year and when said contract was in full force and effect; that there was no default in any manner or form under the terms of the contract at the time of the commencement of the action."

[1] In other words, the court held—and we think correctly so—that the contract is not ambiguous nor uncertain. The contract as concluded is a complete, workable, and unambiguous instrument and therefore does not require the addition of any terms to enable it to be carried out according to the express declaration of the parties, and therefore does not require either evidence of usage or implication of law to interpret it or carry it into effect (Gero v. Richey, 38 Cal. App. 27, 175 P. 91).

[2, 3] It would require a strained construction and a violation of the express terms of the contract to hold that more than $35 per month was required to be paid to cover both the principal and interest, and that when advance payments had been made sufficient to cover the payments due on subsequent months that payments were required to be paid during these months covered by such advance payments. A simple addition of the amounts paid shows that respondents were not in default on the date the suit was brought. If, however, it could be said that there exists any ambiguity as to whether or not the monthly payments of not less than $35 per month provided in the contract were intended to be a payment on the principal, and that an additional payment should be made to cover the interest, or that the $35 payment should be applied in payment of both principal and interest, the construction placed upon this clause of the contract by the parties themselves removes any question of doubt. Payments made and credited on the contract range from $20 to $200. In the months of July, September, October, and November, 1921, but $35 was paid during each of these months, and these payments were accepted and credited first on the interest and the balance remaining on the principal. It is therefore clear that the parties to the contract understood and intended exactly what they stated in the contract—"thirty-five ($35.00) dollars or more per month, including interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable on deferred balances, interest to be deducted from each payment to date and balance applied on principal." As was said by this court in Retsloff, Trustee, v. Smith, 249 P. 889: "If the meaning of the language of an instrument can be considered doubtful, the court will call in the aid of the acts done under it as a clue to the intention of the parties [citing cases]." When this rule is applied in the instant case it is obvious that the parties to the agreement understood the clause under consideration to mean that an amount equal to $35 a month on both principal and interest should be paid and as much more as the purchaser desired or felt she was about to pay.

[4-6] As to appellant's exception No. 3, that there is no sufficient competent evidence on which to base a finding that the plaintiff by seizing the property rescinded the contract, it may be said that there is evidence to support the finding of the trial court, and that when there is evidence to support such finding the judgment should not be disturbed. Leal v. Martin, 59 Cal. App. 760, 211 P. 853. All intendments and conflicting rational inferences must be resolved in favor of the judgment of the trial court. Resetar v. Leonnardi, 61 Cal. App. 768, 216 P. 71.

[7, 8] The witness Richard L. Miller, the husband of Katie C. Miller, and also a defendant in the action, testified relative to the facts occurring at the time the house was nailed up. He said he went there and had to pull a board off to get in; that he wanted to see how their furniture was and what had happened to it; that there was a sign on the property at the time which said, "Trespassers keep out would be prosecuted by W. A. C. Yule;" that he tried to stop the carpenter from nailing it up. The carpenter refused to stop and said he had orders from the man next door; that while there he took a photograph of the premises. The photograph was taken on June 24, 1922. On the day the furniture was moved from 3153 India street he got there just after they had the furniture loaded. It was moved by the Pioneer Transfer Company. The witness further testified that he asked the man whose authority he had to move the furniture; that the driver had a small card with W. A. C. Yule written on it. This testimony, admitted without objection, coupled with the fact that appellant wrote a letter to respondents notifying them that their furniture had been delivered by the Pacific Transfer Van & Truck Company to their warehouse for safe-keeping and that the letter, which was signed by appellant, would be an order for the furniture, together with the fact that on June 26, 1922, two days after the house was nailed up by the carpenter, who said he had his orders from the man next door, appellant filed his suit praying for a cancellation of the contract, and that the letter with respect to the furniture was written from 3167 India street—Mr. Yule's home adjoining 3153 India street—is ample evidence to support the finding complained of. While some evidence was received that might have been subject to an objection, no objection was made, and it is well settled that incompetent evidence admitted without objection is to be regarded as sufficient to establish the fact. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co., 176 Cal. 466, 168 P. 1037. Evidence technically incompetent admitted without objection must be given as much weight in the reviewing court in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence as if it were competent. Parsons v. Easton, 184 Cal. 769, 195 P. 419; Janson v. Brooks, 29 Cal. 223; Curiac v. Packard, 29 Cal. 197; McCloud v. O'Neall, 16 Cal. 397; Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 102, 77 P. 762.

[9-11] Appellant's exception to the court's finding that respondents are entitled to interest from the time of making payments instead of from the time when appellant is alleged to have rescinded the contract is not well taken. The general rule is that interest is allowable from the time the sum in suit becomes due, if the same is certain or can be made certain by mere calculation. Gray v. Bekins, 186 Cal. 399, 199 P. 767; Hind v. Uchida Trading Co., 55 Cal. App. 263, 203 P. 1028. In an action to recover the purchase money paid upon a contract for sale of real property, when the contract is terminated by the fault of the vendor and by reason of such fault the vendee is prevented from acquiring the property under the contract, the action for the money paid is in the nature of one for money had and received, namely, money paid to the vendor for which, in view of the termination of the contract, the vendee has received no consideration. Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 1, 183 P. 150.

[12] Appellant contends in his exception No. 5 that the court erred in entering judgment in favor of respondents for $895, when in the cross-complaint they only allege and claim $885. During the progress of the trial Mr. Pease, attorney for appellant, called the attention of Mr. Egermayer, attorney for respondents, to a discrepancy between the allegations and the proof as follows:

> "Mr. Pease: There is a discrepancy in the amount alleged in the cross-complaint of defendants and the amount as shown to have been paid and indorsed on the contract.
>
> "Mr. Egermayer: That was an error in computation. The amount shown by the cross-complaint is that $885 had been paid, while the contract, which is a part of the cross-complaint, shows that there was paid and indorsed thereon $895.
>
> "Mr. Pease: Yes; that is evidently an error."

[13] The statement of counsel, "Yes; that is evidently an error," is practically a correction agreed to in open court, but, if not, it falls within the rule laid down in Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 193, 53 P. 562, in which the court says:

> "The defendants have the right to present by their answer any matter which would constitute a defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint, and the court was authorized to permit them to plead such matter by amending their answer, even after the trial had commenced. If, without such amendment, evidence was received at the trial which did not constitute a material variance, the court could either find the fact in accordance with the evidence, or it could direct the pleadings to be amended to conform thereto. Code Civ. Proc. § 470. When this evidence was offered the plaintiff did not claim that he was misled by its introduction, or in any way prevented from maintaining his cause of action upon its merits. * * * The evidence thus introduced and the findings made thereon are therefore to be regarded as if the defendants had amended their answer so as to present these issues prior to entering upon the trial, or even prior to the introduction of any testimony."
>
> "No error should suffice to reverse a judgment or order, if it appears that the appellant has not been and could not be injured thereby." Peters v. Peters, 156 Cal. 37, 103 P. 221, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699.

This disposes of the errors assigned by appellant in his bill of exceptions; and from what has been said it follows that there is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 618

MILLER et al. v. YULE et al. (Civ. 5349.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑544(2) — Review on judgment roll alone is confined to facts presented by findings and admitted by pleadings.

Where appeal is before court for review on judgment roll alone, review is confined to facts presented by findings and admitted by pleadings, only questions for consideration being whether complaint states cause of action, whether findings are within issues and support judgment, and whether reversible error concerning matter of law appears upon face of record.

2. Appeal and error 🔑544(2)—On review on judgment roll alone, no question as to sufficiency of evidence to sustain averments and findings arises.

Where appeal is before court for review on judgment roll alone, no question arises as to sufficiency of evidence to sustain averments and findings.

3. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—Absent bill of exceptions, evidence will be presumed competent to establish facts alleged, sufficient to sustain fact findings, and to have been received without objection.

In absence of bill of exceptions, it must be assumed that evidence presented in support of findings was competent to establish facts alleged, was received without objection, and was sufficient to sustain each of facts found.

4. Vendor and purchaser 🔑334(4)—In action to recover money paid under purchase contract, vendor held to have rescinded contract notwithstanding deed to another.

In purchasers' action for money had and received on contract to purchase realty, contention that vendor could not rescind contract because of having deeded property to another defendant held without merit, court having found that both vendor and such other defendant had rescinded contract.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑338—Action to recover money paid under contract to purchase held available to purchaser on rescission, though tort action was also available.

Plaintiff, occupying property under contract to purchase, on boarding up of doors and windows by one of vendors, could sue for money had and received on vendor's implied contract, to repay payments on contract if vendor was unable to transfer title, or if through vendor's wrongful acts purchaser was prevented from acquiring property, though tort action for trespass was also available.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Action by Richard Miller and another against W. A. C. Yule, Josephine K. Yule, and another. From the judgment for plaintiffs, defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 252 P. 733.

C. C. Pease, of San Diego, for appellants. Jos. H. Egermayer and Notley S. Hammack, both of San Diego, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from the judgment made and entered in favor of plaintiffs and against defendants W. A. C. Yule and Josephine K. Yule. The defendant M. M. Cory did not appeal. The judgment roll only is before the court.

On February 28, 1921, respondents entered into a contract with appellants for the purchase and sale of lots 3 and 10 in block 121 of Middletown, situated at No. 3141 India street, in San Diego, Cal.; the purchase price being $2,950. The respondents, who were the purchasers under the contract, made an initial payment when they executed the contract of $500 in the form of a promissory note. The contract provides that the balance of $2,450 be paid at the rate of $35 or more per month, including interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable on deferred balances, and that the buyer shall make monthly payments within the first year of $500 and each year thereafter until the balance due is reduced to $1,500, which shall be made into a mortgage, etc. Respondents made payments on the contract of more than the $500 required to be paid during the first year, but made no payments in the month of May, 1921, nor in the months of February or March, 1922, but made payments in April, 1922, and had made payments in months prior to the months in which no payments were made in amounts sufficient to cover the amounts due during those months at the rate of $35 per month, including interest.

The trial court found that on April 6, 1922, W. A. C. Yule and Josephine K. Yule sold and assigned the contract in question to defendant M. M. Cory and also made and delivered to defendant Cory a deed of conveyance conveying to him the property described in the contract of purchase and sale, and at the same time executed and delivered to M. M. Cory a deed of trust for and to lots 1 and 12 in block 121, guaranteeing or securing the payments on the contract of purchase and sale entered into by appellants and respondents.

Appellants urge two points in support of their appeal: That the court erred in finding that respondents were not in default in their payments on the contract, and that defendant Yule had no power to rescind the contract. Appellants contend that, as the contract calls for monthly payments, payments must be made monthly even though payments have been made in prior months sufficient to cover payments due in subsequent months, and that as defendant Cory was the owner of the property at the time of the rescission of the contract, the acts of appellants were those of trespassers and could not operate to rescind the contract.

The contract in this case contains the same provisions as does a contract made between the same parties in W. A. C. Yule v. Katie C. Miller and Richard L. Miller, No. 5298 (Cal. App.) 252 P. 733, this day decided, in which case the contract affected adjoining property. The same points are made in the briefs and the same authorities cited as to the interpretation of the contract, and on the authority of that case the judgment as against the objection that the court erred in finding that the respondents were not in default in their payments must be affirmed.

As to the other objection urged that appellant Yule had no power to rescind the contract, the finding of the court as to the acts constituting the rescission is that, while plaintiffs were not in default in their payments under the agreement of sale or in any of their undertakings under the agreement of sale, the defendants, and each and every one of them, rescinded the written agreement of sale by retaking possession of the premises during the temporary absence of the plaintiffs therefrom without the consent and contrary to the desire and wish of the plaintiffs; that they posted notices upon the dwelling house situate on the premises warning all persons and particularly these plaintiffs to "Keep out—Trespassers will be prosecuted," and upon which notice the name, "M. M. Cory, Owner," was printed, and boarded up the doors and windows; that Brooks, the person in charge, and who performed the acts, did such acts under the direct instruction of W. A. C. Yule; that Yule had previously discussed the matter of taking possession of the property with M. M. Cory, and that he had notified Cory that he had taken possession of the property and had boarded up the doors and windows thereof and had placed a sign with the name of defendant Cory on the property warning all persons to keep out; that said M. M. Cory, the assignee of the vendor under said agreement of sale, grantee in said grant deed and beneficiary under said deed of trust, with full and prior actual knowledge of the contemplated acts of re-entry and taking forcible possession and ousting plaintiffs from possession and rescinding of said agreement of sale, acquiesced in and permitted the said forcible re-entry and taking possession of said dwelling and premises, and concludes therefrom that the defendants, W. A. C. Yule, Josephine K. Yule, and M. M. Cory, wrongfully, willfully and without authority of law or fact took forcible possession of the land and premises and the dwelling thereon and rescinded the agreement of sale.

[1-3] Where an appeal is before the court for review upon the judgment roll alone, the review is confined to facts presented by the findings and admitted by the pleadings. MacFarland v. Walker, 40 Cal. App. 511, 181 P. 248. The only questions for consideration are whether the complaint states a cause of action, whether the findings are within the issues and support the judgment, and whether reversible error concerning a matter of law appears on the face of the record (Norton v. Newerf, 45 Cal. App. 13, 187 P. 57), and no question arises as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the averments and findings (Ensele v. Jolley, 188 Cal. 297, 204 P. 1085; Pence v. Martin, 43 Cal. App. 626, 185 P. 503). In the absence of any bill of exceptions it must be assumed that the evidence presented in support of the findings was competent to establish the facts alleged, was received without objection, and was sufficient to sustain each of the facts found. LaFetra v. Richardson, 44 Cal. App. 302, 186 P. 396; Cutting Packing Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 692, 75 P. 564; Damon v. Quinn, 143 Cal. 75, 76 P. 818.

[4, 5] As to appellant Yule having deeded the property to defendant Cory and therefore no longer able to rescind the contract, it is sufficient to say that the court found the fact to be that each and all of the defendants, W. A. C. Yule, Josephine K. Yule, and M. M. Cory, rescinded the contract. While it is true that respondents might have construed the acts of appellant Yule in boarding up the doors and windows of the house on the premises as a trespass and sought damages in tort, yet they were also privileged to bring suit for money had and received on the implied contract of the vendor in the agreement of sale to repay the payments made on the contract, if the vendor was unable to transfer title or if through the wrongful acts of the vendor the vendee was prevented from acquiring the property. Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 1, 183 P. 150; Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 141, 46 P. 899. It would be a queer rule that would permit a vendor, as in this case, who had received $1,169.90 on a contract of purchase, to be relieved from liability on a suit for money had and received because he had deeded the property and payments of $48.90 had been made to his grantee. If this were the rule a person could contract to sell property which he did not own, or for some reason could not convey a good and sufficient title to, and just prior to the time the last payment became due deed the property to some irresponsible person and thus prevent the recovery of the purchase price payments made by the vendee.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 590

NICHOLS et ux. v. NELSON. (Civ. 5200.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 10, 1927.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑706(5)—Automobilist's negligent failure to observe pedestrian in time held shown.

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile, evidence held to show defendant's negligence in not observing plaintiff in time to avoid striking her by stopping or altering course.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑706(5)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian crossing street when struck by automobile held not shown.

Evidence held not to show contributory negligence of pedestrian struck by automobile in crossing street in slightly diagonal direction after observing car approaching over 200 feet away.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑705(1)—Automobile driver should see persons on road.

It is the duty of an automobile driver, whose view is unobstructed, to see persons on the road in front of the machine.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑705(2)—Pedestrians and automobile drivers have equal rights, and must both exercise care demanded.

Pedestrians and automobile drivers have equal rights in public highway, and must both exercise that degree of care and prudence which the case demands.

5. Trial 🔑108½—Questions as to juror's membership in club insuring automobilist sued for injuries, and counsel's statement that case looked more like club's than defendant's, held not prejudicial error warranting dismissal.

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile, questions to prospective jurors as to their membership in automobile club in which defendant was insured, and statement of plaintiff's counsel in opening address to jury that case looked like it was more the automobile club's than defendant's, held not prejudicial error warranting dismissal and continuance despite instruction to disregard statements.

6. Trial 🔑108½—Questions asked solely to get before jury fact that defendant is insured are improper, but not questions as to prospective juror's membership in club carrying insurance.

While evidence that defendant in action for damages is insured against loss is inadmissible, and it is improper for counsel to try to get such fact before the jury by questions designed solely for that purpose, question asked prospective juror as to whether he is a member of a club insuring defendant is proper.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1060(1)—Counsel's statement that case looked more like insurer's than defendant's held not prejudicial, in view of evidence.

Where evidence showed that automobilist, sued for injuries to pedestrian, admitted that he was insured in certain club, and that latter paid expenses of certain witnesses, and was much concerned with outcome of litigation, statement of plaintiff's counsel to jury that case looked like it was more that of such club than defendant's was not prejudicial, being a mere reference to proven fact.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑706(8)—Instruction that automobilist is bound to anticipate meeting persons, and must keep proper lookout, held not too broad.

Instruction that automobilist is bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point on the street, and must keep a proper lookout for them to avoid charge of negligence, held not erroneous, as requiring more than ordinary or reasonable care.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑705(1)—Automobilist must exercise care of prudent man under circumstances.

Automobilist must exercise that degree of care for safety of persons on street which a prudent man should use under like circumstances.

10. Municipal corporations 🔑706(8)—Instruction that proper care depends on circumstances held not erroneous, as requiring more than ordinary care by driver of automobile striking pedestrian.

Instruction that whether automobile driver has taken proper care to avoid a collision depends on all the circumstances of the case held not erroneous, in action for injuries to pedestrian, as requiring more than ordinary care.

11. Trial 🔑296(3)—Charge to find for pedestrian or vehicle driver, if proper care was not exercised, after properly instructing jury as to relative rights and duties of each, is not prejudicial error.

Where court has properly instructed jury as to relative rights and duties of pedestrians and vehicle drivers on public highway, subsequent charge to find for one or the other, if proper care was not exercised, is not prejudicial error.

12. Trial 🔑296(12)—Instruction using words or phrases in customary, conventional sense is not objectionable, especially where other instructions fully advise jury of meaning.

Instruction using words or phrases in their customary or conventional sense cannot be complained of, especially where other instructions fully advise jury as to just what is meant; the jury being presumed to possess ordinary intelligence and to understand the meaning and use of words in their common and ordinary application.

13. Trial 🔑228(3)—Court should use well-established words in instructions.

Generally, trial courts should adhere strictly to use of well-established words in instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by David G. Nichols and wife against K. B. Nelson. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Culver & Nourse and Paul Nourse, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Albert Nelson, of San Luis Obispo, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiffs through the alleged negligence of defendant in the operation of an automobile. Defendant denied any negligence on his part and as a separate defense pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff Mary E. Nichols. Trial was had by jury. Plaintiffs recovered judgment for the sum of $8,000, together with costs amounting to the further sum of $343.45.

[1, 2] Various grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment. It is first claimed that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, in that it fails to show negligence on the part of the defendant, but, on the contrary, shows without conflict that plaintiff Mary E. Nichols was guilty of negligence approximately contributing to the injuries complained of. The accident occurred upon the state highway within the limits of the city of San Luis Obispo on what is known as Monterey road as it runs north from the said city at a point between Toro street at the south end of the block and Essex street at the north end thereof. There is evidence to show that plaintiff Mary E. Nichols resided with her husband on the east side of Monterey road in the upper floor of a building located about in the middle of the block. On the day of the accident she visited a neighbor who lived on the opposite side of the road to the north at the corner of Essex street. She left her neighbor's residence to return to her home, walking southerly along the sidewalk on the westerly side of Monterey road. The highway at this point is approximately 70 feet in width, and in the center there is a paved strip some 18 feet wide; the rest of the road consisting of a dirt pavement. Along the westerly side of the road and next to the curb line there is a drainage ditch which at the point about opposite plaintiff's residence is crossed by a private bridge erected by one Gist to enable him to drive his automobile onto his property from the highway. Sidewalks were maintained on the west side of Monterey road and most of the people in the neighborhood for this reason used this side of the street in traveling along the road, and when they had occasion to visit the premises occupied by plaintiff and others on the east side they usually made use of the Gist bridge to pass over the drainage ditch. As the plaintiff approached this bridge she proceeded to cross it to reach her home. At this time there was parked at the end of the bridge a Ford sedan headed in a southerly direction. She stepped around the machine into the dirt portion of the highway and looked up and down the road in both directions. She observed an automobile approaching from the north and she also observed defendant's automobile approaching from the south at the intersection of Toro and Monterey road, a distance of over 200 feet. She waited for the automobile approaching from the north to pass, and, again looking up and down the road and still observing defendant's car at about the point named, she proceeded to cross the paved portion of the highway in a slightly diagonal direction so as to reach the entrance leading into her apartment. When she reached a point at almost the easterly edge of the pavement, she was struck by the right front side of the defendant's car and thrown to the pavement, receiving serious and permanent injuries. She was removed to her home and subsequently to a hospital, where she remained some eight weeks. Her injuries consisted of a fracture of the left hip, contusions on her right shoulder and right ankle, and other bruises. The injuries resulted in the shortening of one of her limbs about four inches, and there is medical testimony to show that in all probability she will never be able to walk again without crutches. In addition thereto it appears that plaintiff has suffered and continues to suffer great pain. At the time of the accident defendant was accompanied by his sister-in-law. It was raining and she from time to time operated a windshield wiper attached to the machine in order that plaintiff's vision of the road might not be obscured. At about the time plaintiff was struck down, defendant admitted to her son that he had not seen his mother and that he was to blame for the accident. This fact was not disputed at the trial. He agreed to take care of all the expenses and volunteered the information that he was insured in the Automobile Club of Southern California and would make a report to the insurance carrier immediately. The speed of the automobile that defendant was driving was variously estimated at from 12 to 25 miles an hour at about the time of the accident; defendant testifying that he was traveling 12 miles an hour.

[3, 4] It is clearly apparent from the facts as above recited that there is no merit in defendant's contention that the evidence fails to show negligence on the part of defendant or that it shows plaintiff Mary E. Nichols to have been guilty of contributory negligence. On the contrary, it clearly shows that plaintiff was in no manner negligent and that defendant could have avoided the accident had he been exercising that degree of care required of him in operating his automobile. Conceding defendant to have been traveling at the rate he testified to, he had ample time to avoid striking plaintiff. He could have stopped or altered his course. Aside from the testimony of the plaintiff as to the distance of defendant's machine from the point of the accident when she proceeded to cross the pavement, one of defendant's own witnesses testified that his machine was 50 or 60 feet down the road at the time plaintiff stepped on the concrete portion of the highway. There is evidence to show that at this time defendant's view was in no manner obstructed. Whether his failure to observe plaintiff was due to the moisture on his windshield, or from other causes, is a matter of no consequence so far as plaintiff is concerned. It is the duty of a driver of an automobile, where the view is unobstructed, to see persons on the road in front of the machine. Warner v. Bertholf, 40 Cal. App. 776, 181 P. 808. Plaintiff was where she had a right to be and there is evidence to show that she was exercising all the care required of her in watching for the approach of vehicles while she was crossing the highway. Foot passengers and those driving vehicles have equal rights in the public highway and both are required to exercise that degree of care and prudence which the case demands. The duty cast upon both pedestrian and driver of a vehicle is reciprocal and equal, and neither of them has a right superior to the other. Mayer v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 740, 173 P. 174.

[5, 6] We conclude, therefore, upon this question that there is ample evidence in the record to show negligence on the part of the defendant. Appellant next complains of the action of counsel for plaintiff in interrogating certain prospective jurors concerning their membership in the Automobile Club of Southern California. In his opening address to the jury counsel for plaintiff again referred to the matter by making the statement that—

> "This case looks like it is more the case of the Automobile Club of Southern California than it is the defendant's."

These acts were assigned as error and counsel for appellant in both instances asked that the jury be dismissed and the case continued until a new jury could be drawn. The court denied the motion and instructed the jury to disregard the statements. It is here claimed that there is a close question as to the negligence of the defendant, for which reason the conduct of plaintiffs' counsel resulted prejudicially to the defendant. Aside from the fact that we do not think the case presents any close question with reference to defendant's negligence, we are of the opinion that the claimed error did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant. While it is true that evidence that a defendant in an action for damages is insured against loss is inadmissible and it is improper for counsel to endeavor to get such a fact before the jury by questions designed solely for that purpose, under the facts as here presented it cannot be said to constitute error. The question asked the juror was for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not he was a member of the automobile club which was the insurance carrier. Such questions have been held to be proper. Williamson v. Hardy, 47 Cal. App. 377, 190 P. 646; Baldarachi v. Leach, 44 Cal. App. 603, 186 P. 1060; Arnold v. Cal. Portland C. Co., 41 Cal. App. 420, 183 P. 171.

[7] Even conceding it to have been improper, it was not prejudicial where, as here, the court instructed the jurors to disregard it. Then, too, the fact of defendant's insurance was a matter properly before the jury. It appeared in evidence that defendant had made the admission on the occasion when he acknowledged his responsibility for the accident. It also appeared that the club paid the expenses of certain witnesses and that it caused tests to be made concerning defendant's ability to stop his machine within certain distances. Numerous other acts on its part were in evidence, showing conclusively that the club was very much concerned with the outcome of the litigation. Under such circumstances the statement made by counsel cannot be said to have been prejudicial. Conceding it to have been ill-advised, it was a mere reference to a proven fact in the case. There is no merit in the objection.

[8-10] Appellant further complains of the giving of certain instructions relating to the relative rights and duties of the drivers of vehicles and of pedestrians upon the public highway. At the request of plaintiff the court instructed the jury as follows:

> "I charge you that, even though the rate of speed at which an automobile is being operated does not exceed the limit of speed fixed by law, such rate of speed may, nevertheless, be held, under some circumstances, to be negligent; that is to say, the operator of an automobile is not necessarily exempt from liability for injury to other persons occurring in a public street by showing simply at the time of the accident he was running at a rate of speed allowed by law. He still remains bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point of the street, and he must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, keep a proper lookout for them and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid collision with other persons using proper care and caution, and, if the situation requires it, he must slow up and stop."

The jury was further instructed that—

> "One using a public street is charged with the duty of observing approaching vehicles. This rule is qualified and explained, however, by the equally general rule that, except in the cases where the law fixes a standard of care, negligence is always relative and to be determined in view of all the circumstances of the particular case. The driver of a vehicle should proceed carefully and be on the alert lest he collide with others. It is the duty of the driver of a vehicle who is suddenly confronted with danger, though arising from the fault of another, to seek to avoid a collision. Whether he has taken the proper care depends upon all the circumstances of the case. Every person using the public streets and highways for the purpose for which they are established and maintained has the right to assume that other persons using such streets and highways for the same purpose will, when so using them, obey the law regulating their use by pedestrians and drivers of vehicles of any kind."

It is contended under the first instruction quoted above the court placed a higher duty on the defendant than that of using ordinary care; that under the instruction given the jury was in effect told that in addition to the use of ordinary care the defendant was "bound to anticipate" that he might meet other persons on the highway, and, further, that he must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, not only use reasonable care in keeping a lookout, but must keep a proper lookout, which implies no error, irrespective of whether a pedestrian was seen or not; that under the second instruction the use of the phrase, "Whether he has taken the proper course depends upon all the circumstances of the case," is misleading, as it implies that the driver of a motor vehicle when suddenly confronted with danger, is bound to use a course free from error or the jury is at liberty to find against him. We do not think there is any merit in these objections. With reference to the first instruction, the employment of the word "proper" to indicate the care required of defendant means only the exercise of that degree of care which a prudent man should use under like circumstances, which is the degree of care which the law imposes. Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 138 N. C. 38, 50 S. E. 448; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Flood, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 197, 79 S. W. 1106. Nor did the use of the phrase, "bound to anticipate," have the effect, as claimed, of enlarging the degree of care required of defendant. The same may be said of the phrase, "Whether he has taken the proper course depends upon all the circumstances of the case."

[11] The court fully and fairly in numerous instructions advised the jury concerning the relative rights and duties of pedestrians and the drivers of vehicles upon the public highway. The jury were instructed that one walking or driving in a public street is bound to use reasonable care to look and listen as she or he goes, so as to be able to avoid collision with others exercising the common privilege of using the street; that this duty rests alike upon every person upon the street, and each person in crossing a street must use reasonable care for his or her own protection, as well as for the protection of others upon the highway; that the reasonable care which is required must be measured by all the surrounding circumstances and conditions; and that the rights and obligations of all persons using a public street are reciprocal, and each may rightfully expect that the other will, at the proper time, discharge his proper duty toward others, but that he cannot rely wholly on the care of others, nor on that account neglect to use the precaution which the particular situation demands of him or her. Where a court has thus properly charged a jury a subsequent charge to find for one or the other if proper care had not been exercised is not prejudicially erroneous. St. Louis S. W. R. v. Parks, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 480, 90 S. W. 343.

[12, 13] Where a court has used words or phrases in their customary and conventional sense, no complaint can be made, and especially where other instructions fully advise the jury just what is meant. The jury are presumed to possess ordinary intelligence and to understand the meaning and use of words in their common and ordinary application. Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093. In general, however, it is well for trial courts to adhere strictly to the use of well-established words. Departure from the beaten path always leads to doubt and uncertainty and imposes useless work upon appellate courts. We do not deem further discussion of the instructions or the case necessary. The evidence fully supports the verdict, and no claim is made that the judgment is excessive, and there has been no miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 733

JACKSON v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF EL CENTRO. (Civ. 4558.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 20, 1927.)

1. Banks and banking ⚷171(1)—Ordinarily, bank may take security for debt owing it by person against whom it holds claim for collection.

In the ordinary course of business, without special agreement to the contrary, a bank may take security for a debt owing it by one against whom it also holds a claim for collection, though it may work an injury or damage to one intrusting it with collections.

2. Banks and banking ⚷171(1)—Bank, agreeing to collect rents without compensation, held not liable to lessor for loss from taking crop mortgage from tenants to protect its own claim.

Bank, agreeing to collect rents without compensation, held not liable to lessor for loss caused by its taking a crop mortgage from tenants as security for their prior indebtedness to it on ground that it took advantage of its position as agent and used lessor's property for its own benefit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by Alie Jackson, as executrix of the last will and testament of Chris Jackson, deceased, against the First National Bank of El Centro. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. L. Childers, of El Centro, for appellant.

Hickcox, Crenshaw & Trude, of El Centro, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant, rendered by a jury in accordance with the instructions of the trial judge. As is stated in appellant's brief, the action—

"was brought by the plaintiff to recover from the bank, defendant, the sum of $1,500 on the theory that the bank, as agent of the plaintiff, took advantage of its position as agent and used the plaintiff's property for its own benefit, and the plaintiff was thereby damaged in that amount."

It appears that plaintiff was the owner of some land which she had leased to some Japanese for a cash rental. Thereafter plaintiff desired to leave the state of California to be gone for several months, and during such absence she wished to have her rents collected by the defendant. With reference to her negotiations and conversation with one of the officers of the defendant bank, she testified, in part:

"I told him I was going back East; that I had come out to renew some of my leases and to look after my business interests out here; that I had renewed this lease with these two particular Japanese, and how much I was renting the land for per acre, when the payments were due, and that I took the Japanese into the bank; also that any payments were to be paid there to the bank while I was away. My leases I was leaving in the bank and I was also going to make a memorandum of my rents, when they were due, each month, and they were to be paid to the bank, and I wanted the bank to notify me directly—I gave them my address—when these rents were paid, and also give the tenants a deposit slip so that they could mail me this duplicate as to when the rents were paid, and in case the rents were not paid I was leaving this memorandum to put on file along with my leases to notify the tenants that their rent was due and at the same time notify me when the rents weren't paid."

On cross-examination plaintiff stated that her tenants were present when she had the conversation with the officer of the defendant bank. She further testified:

"Q. And did you take them to Mr. Holt and tell Mr. Holt these men were to come in to pay the money? A. Yes, sir; I told him I had renewed the lease for these boys and I considered them good. I said I had been dealing with them six or seven years and I had been renting land to them and I was renewing my lease and what the rents amounted to and when the rents were due and tried to make it plain because I was going away, and just how we stood.

"Q. At the time you considered the tenants were good and you would have no trouble about them paying the rents to the bank? A. I did."

It is further disclosed by the evidence that the rent on plaintiff's property became due on October 10th; that some time in the month of August the tenants asked plaintiff for an extension of time within which to make the October payment, and that shortly thereafter plaintiff wrote a letter to defendant (to quote her language) and "told them that I had received a letter asking for time and I said, 'I understand that they are not living at my place, but on Mr. McGrew's place; make an investigation and find out, and let me know how they stand, how they are getting along, what kind of a crop they have,'" etc.; also that the payment of $1,500 was due on October 10th.

It further appears by the evidence that, antedating by several months the arrangement between the parties, the defendant bank had taken a chattel mortgage on certain personal property belonging to the tenants of plaintiff as security for an indebtedness then owing by such tenants to the bank; that on September 20th, which was several days after the date of plaintiff's letter to the defendant, the bank took a new mortgage from the tenants and included therein the crop grown by them on plaintiff's property as further security for the indebtedness then owing to the bank, as well as for future advances to be made by it to the tenants in harvesting the crop, etc.

On or about November 20th plaintiff returned to California, and, on learning that the rent of her land had not been paid, and after having discovered that the defendant had taken a new mortgage from the tenants, which included the crop grown on plaintiff's land, she secured from her tenants a second or junior mortgage on the said crops, etc., as security for the payment of the rent then owing to her.

Payment not having been made, the defendant bank foreclosed its mortgage, but was unable to fully satisfy its claim from the entire security held by it; and the rent not having been paid, plaintiff brought this action against the defendant on the theory, as hereinbefore set forth, that—

"The bank, as agent of the plaintiff, took advantage of its position as agent and used plaintiff's property for its own benefit."

[1] No authority has been cited by appellant which would indicate a rule that would prevent a bank situated as to facts as was the defendant herein from taking security for a debt owing to it from a person against whom the bank also holds a claim for collection. It may readily be understood how the enforcement of a principle such as that for which appellant contends might work disastrous results to the collection branch of the banking industry, although this would not necessarily be a defense to an action of this character. Its effect would be that no bank could safely undertake the collection of any bills, or notes, or negotiable instruments of any description against any person who was indebted to the bank, if at the same time, or at any time before making such collection, the officers of the bank contemplated the necessity of requiring either original or additional security from such debtor. On the other hand, authorities are not lacking which attest the rule that in the ordinary course of business and without special agreement to the contrary, where a bank receives obligations for collection, it is not forbidden or prevented from taking such action as may be desirable or advisable to protect its own interests as against the persons from whom such collections are proposed to be made, even though by so doing it may work an injury or damage to the person intrusting the bank with such collections.

In the case of Freeman v. Citizens' National Bank, 78 Iowa, 150, 42 N. W. 632, 4 L. R. A. 422, it appears that some drafts were drawn by the plaintiff on a man by the name of Price and that such drafts were deposited with the defendant bank for collection—following which the defendant brought an action against Price on a prior indebtedness owed by him to the bank and in such action attached property belonging to Price. In a subsequent action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant bank practically the same point was urged as is here presented by appellant. The Supreme Court of Iowa said:

"It is argued that defendant had no right to enforce its claim against Price, so as to gain priority over plaintiffs; and that, inasmuch as plaintiffs, had they known defendant held a claim against Price, would not have sent to it the drafts, it in effect practiced a fraud upon plaintiffs; and it should not be permitted to take advantage of its priority thus gained. But defendant undertook no other duty than the collection of the drafts, and to obey instructions pertaining thereto. It was not the guarantor for Price. It did not undertake to report as to his responsibility or solvency. In short, its duty was that of a bank receiving paper for collection. It cannot be admitted, as is contended by counsel, that the indebtedness of Price to defendant forbade it to enforce its claim, so as to gain priority over plaintiffs. Surely a bank may discount paper, and retain the right to hold collections against the maker of the paper without surrendering its rights of priority gained by diligence. As a matter of fact many of the business men of the country, against whom collections are sent to banks, are customers of such banks, depositing money and discounting their own paper as the necessities of their business demand. It has never been supposed that banks must concede priority to paper sent them for collection as to their own claims against the maker of such paper under such a state of facts as we have in this case."

In the case of United States National Bank of Omaha v. Westervelt, 55 Neb. 424, 75 N. W. 857, where the same principle was involved, the court directed attention to an earlier case (Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560, 74 N. W. 844), decided by it, in which it was said:

> " 'We by no means intend to hold that a bank holding paper for collection merely may not, as a general rule, obtain a preference for a debt owing to itself.' "

And, among other things, the court added the following:

> "It would prevent a bank's undertaking collections. So long as the collecting agent assumes no other duty than the due presentment of paper, and so long as it discharges that duty, and is guilty of no misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment, it is not forbidden to in good faith obtain security for a claim it holds in its own behalf against the debtor"—citing Freeman v. Bank, 78 Iowa, 150, 42 N. W. 632, 4 L. R. A. 422; Bank v. Naill, 52 Kan. 211, 34 P. 797.

In a third case in which a bank was charged with bad faith in the matter of an alleged agency which in many respects was similar to the facts in the instant case, a conclusion in principle like that indicated in the last preceding authority was reached by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Carpenter v. National Bank of Shawmut, 187 F. 1.

[2] From the evidence in the instant case it is apparent that there was no express duty resting on the defendant to make the collections. The arrangement between the plaintiff and defendant was purely one of convenience and accommodation to the plaintiff, without any compensation to be paid to the bank therefor. With reference to the collections, the bank had no duty to perform other than to receive the money from the tenants in the event that they wished to pay it. If the rents were paid, the bank was to notify plaintiff of such fact; if not paid, the bank was "to notify the tenants that their rent was due, and at the same time notify me (plaintiff) when the rents weren't paid." The action herein does not count on defendant's negligence, if any, in failing either in its duty to notify the tenants that the rent was due, or to notify plaintiff that the rents were unpaid, or, in fact, to take any other positive or affirmative action in plaintiff's behalf. The action as brought rests entirely upon a violation of an alleged duty of an agent to protect the rights of his principal at all hazards, going even to the extent of not only requiring the agent to jeopardize his own interests, but, in case of necessity, to incur their total loss.

From the authorities cited herein it would seem clear that, in the circumstances of the instant case, the verdict in favor of the defendant was in accordance with well-established principles of law. The judgment rendered in consequence of such verdict cannot be disturbed.

It is ordered that the judgment be and it is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 672

In re PEAIRS. (Application 503.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 17, 1927.)

1. Attorney and client 🔑53(1)—Application for revocation of respondent judge's license to practice would be denied; certificate from highest court of another state being presented.

Where, upon application for order revoking respondent judge's license to practice as attorney, made upon ground that attorney had fraudulently secured admission through claiming to have been admitted by highest court of another state, certificate of Supreme Court of another state was presented showing respondent's admission two years before application for admission sought to be revoked, application to revoke would be denied.

2. Attorney and client 🔑32—Attorneys seeking revocation of judge's admission to bar violated duty by failing to dismiss after having information indicating respondent's right to practice (Code Civ. Proc. § 282).

Attorneys applying for revocation of respondent judge's license to practice as attorney, claimed obtained through fraud, held to have violated "duty of maintaining respect due court and judicial officers" required by Code Civ. Proc. § 282, application not having been dismissed though applicants had information more than three weeks before hearing of order to show cause why application should not be granted, which, if followed up, would have satisfied them that respondent possessed requisite certificate of admission.

Application for order revoking order admitting Howard A. Peairs to the bar. Application denied.

Samuel Sanborn, of Los Angeles, and T. F. Allen, of Bakersfield, for petitioners.

Rowen Irwin, Alfred Siemon, F. E. Borton, C. V. Anderson, J. K. Lilly and Glen Aldrich, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. [1] Respondent, Howard A. Peairs, is a judge of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Kern. He has held that position since 1913, first under appointment by the Governor and afterward by successive elections by the people of the county. Judge Peairs, by appropriate order of a competent court was, in 1908, licensed to practice law in all the courts of the state. The order was made upon a written statement of two members of the bar to the effect that respondent had been admitted by the highest court of Kansas to practice law in all the courts of that state. Petitioners allege that respondent never was admitted to the bar by the highest court of Kansas, that he procured the statement to that effect to be made, knowing it to be false, with the fraudulent intent to deceive and mislead the tribunal to which was made his application for admission to the bar of California, and that the court was thereby misled into making the order admitting him. Petitioners allege that they "now are and for a period of more than 20 years last past have been attorneys and counsellors at law, * * * duly admitted to practice in all the courts of this state, and make this petition as such attorneys."

The matter came on for hearing upon the petition and upon the answer of respondent thereto. Counsel for respondent stated that they had with them a certificate of the Supreme Court of Kansas, the highest court of the state showing that respondent had been admitted to the bar there, whereupon petitioners stated that they had no evidence to offer in support of the petition. Upon the invitation of the court the certificate showing respondent's admission to the bar of Kansas was then offered for our inspection. The document was under the seal of the court, was in due form, and certified respondent's admission to the bar of Kansas in 1906—two years before his application was made for admission to the bar of California.

[2] As part of a discussion which occurred in open court during the hearing, petitioners admitted that, four days before we issued our order requiring respondent to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, and more than three weeks before the hearing pursuant to the order to show cause, they had in their possession certain information which, if it did not actually show the fact, must have satisfied them, if followed up, that respondent was possessed of the certificate of admission issued to him by the Kansas court. This information was not pursued by petitioners, nor did they take steps to dismiss their petition or to halt proceedings under it.

The conduct of petitioners in these matters is inexplicable and reprehensible. They knew more than three weeks before the hearing of their petition, or had the means of ascertaining, that their charge of fraud against respondent was utterly baseless, yet they permitted the charge to stand. Such a course of conduct, under a charge of fraud against any man and regarding any subject-matter, would deserve the severest censure. Under the circumstances which here exist such conduct deserves a particular notice. The petition involves more than a mere attack upon respondent. He occupies a high judicial office and has been a trusted servant of the people for many years. The charge of fraud was not only unjust as to him, but it tended to impair the confidence of the public in one of the three great branches of government. Under the law and under the oaths of petitioners as attorneys, they are charged with the duty of maintaining "the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers." Code Civ. Proc. § 282. This duty they have violated.

Under the control which we may justly exercise over the conduct of attorneys, and which we ought to exercise whenever proper occasion for it arises, we are bound to condemn in no measured terms the conduct of petitioners. As an evidence of such condemnation we now administer to petitioners the stern reprimand of this court.

The petition is denied.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

80 Cal. App. 629

Ex parte RUPPE et al. (Cr. 1334.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 12, 1927.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚷611—Ordinance prohibiting undertaking establishments outside zone held valid, where facts did not negative possible reasonable tendency to promote public health or convenience.

Ordinance of the city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series), limiting undertaking establishments to particular district, held not invalid in proceeding for habeas corpus by persons operating undertaking establishment outside district, though population of city had materially increased since enactment of ordinance, and though district in which mortuaries were allowed was largely in congested portion of city, where automobile parking was limited, such ordinance not being void as discriminatory, oppressive, or against public policy, as facts did not warrant court in holding ordinance had no reasonable tendency to promote public health or convenience.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷611—Mortuaries are proper subjects for exercise of police power.

Mortuaries are among lawful and useful businesses which are proper subjects of regulation and control within exercise of state's police power.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

3. Municipal corporations 🔑611—Power to regulate mortuaries includes right to confine them within territorial limits.

Police power of state to regulate and control mortuaries includes right to confine such businesses within certain territorial limits.

4. Constitutional law 🔑48—Legislation, under police power, will not be set aside as unnecessary, unjust, or unreasonable, except on clear showing.

Though acts of Legislature under police power are not conclusive, and are subject to review as to question of whether they are within scope of police power, such regulations will not be set aside as unnecessary, unjust, or unreasonable, unless clearly shown to be invalid.

5. Constitutional law 🔑48—Where opinions may differ on propriety of legislation under police power, legislative discretion will be upheld.

Where circumstances with regard to legislation in exercise of police power are such as to give rise to difference of opinion, legislative discretion and decision will be upheld.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑626—Ordinance is not unreasonable and discriminatory because property where mortuaries are allowed is similarly situated to property outside zone.

Fact that property situated similarly to that where mortuaries are forbidden is permitted to be used for operation of undertaking establishments does not justify court in holding zoning ordinance unreasonable and discriminatory.

7. Constitutional law 🔑42—Question of constitutionality of law is decided on basis of application to complaining individuals.

Where constitutionality of law is attacked by individuals, application of law is considered as to complaining individuals, and not as to public in general.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑611—Ordinance limiting mortuaries to particular zone held not unconstitutional as applied to outside establishment, where inadequacy of present conditions was not shown.

In proceedings for habeas corpus by undertakers arrested for operating establishment outside permitted zone, in violation of ordinance of city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series), ordinance held not void in application to petitioners despite increase in population since passage of ordinance and congested conditions and parking limitations in district where mortuaries were allowed, in absence of showing approximate number and length of funeral services in district would render district inadequate.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑626—Ordinance limiting mortuaries to particular district held not discriminatory as against outside residents, in absence of showing needs were not supplied.

Ordinance of city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series), prohibiting undertaking establishments outside particular district, held not discriminatory as against people of neighborhood, one and one-half miles from nearest legalized mortuary, where needs of district were not shown, nor proof offered that needs were not supplied.

10. Municipal corporations 🔑601—Constitutionality of zoning ordinance depends on reasonable tendency to promote health or convenience.

In attacking zoning ordinance as void, question of constitutionality depends on whether ordinance has any reasonable tendency to promote public health or convenience.

11. Municipal corporations 🔑611—Undertakers operating mortuary in prohibited zone could not attack ordinance as confiscatory, where notified of illegality before erecting building.

Undertakers who built mortuary in prohibited zone could not attack zoning ordinance of city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series), which limited mortuaries to particular district, as confiscating their property, where, though city gave permit for building, notice signed by property owners was given, informing builders undertaking establishment could not be lawfully conducted in proposed building.

12. Municipal corporations 🔑621—Building department by allowing erection had no authority to sanction use of structure as mortuary, contrary to ordinance.

Building department which authorized erection of building had no authority to sanction use as undertaking establishment in zone prohibited by ordinance of city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series).

13. Municipal corporations 🔑116—Ordinance establishing zone for mortuaries held not to repeal ordinance creating district for undertaking establishments.

General zoning ordinance of city of Los Angeles No. 42666 (new series), establishing zone in which undertaking establishments were permitted, did not repeal Ordinance No. 31746 (new series), creating zone for undertaking establishments, in view of expressed intent of ordinance last passed in section 10 not to repeal former ordinances.

14. Municipal corporations 🔑611—Increase of city's population did not necessarily render ordinance zoning mortuaries inadequate.

Fact that population of city of Los Angeles had increased almost half a million since passage of Ordinance No. 31746 (new series), limiting mortuaries to specified district, did not necessarily render ordinance inadequate, as city council may have intended ordinance to apply to changing conditions.

15. Municipal corporations 🔑611—"Necessities of city" as provided for in ordinance include prohibition of mortuaries from specified portions of city.

"Necessities of city," as referred to in ordinance zoning undertaking establishments in city of Los Angeles, No. 31746 (new series), include, not merely consideration of area required for regulated business, but also exclusion of such businesses from localities where their presence would be obnoxious to public health and convenience.

16. Municipal corporations ⚷611—Ordinance regulating mortuaries held not invalid because of risk involved in carrying bodies of persons dying from contagious diseases through streets.

Fact that, under ordinance of city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series), a certain risk was involved in transporting dead bodies of persons who had died of contagious diseases through streets of city, held insufficient to justify court in holding ordinance, which restricted mortuaries to particular district, invalid, where extent of risk was not shown, and risk could be decreased by sanitary methods of handling; such considerations being within scope of Legislature.

17. Municipal corporations ⚷626—Mortuaries may be classified separately from hospitals and sanitariums.

Conditions necessarily existing in and about mortuaries held sufficiently different from those of hospitals and sanitariums to permit of separate classification.

18. Municipal corporations ⚷626—Ordinances held not discriminatory because permitting hospitals and sanitariums in district forbidden to mortuaries.

Fact that ordinances of city of Los Angeles No. 31746 (new series) and No. 44666 (new series) permit hospitals and sanitariums where undertaking establishments are not permitted does not render prohibitions of first-named ordinance unconstitutional on ground of discrimination between hospitals and mortuaries; classification being separate.

Application by Louis E. Ruppe and another for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles, to secure a release of petitioners from custody under a commitment for maintaining undertaking parlors outside of the legalized district in the City of Los Angeles. Writ discharged, and petitioners remanded.

W. T. Kendrick and W. T. Kendrick, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, of Los Angeles (Ray E. Nimmo and E. E. Leighton, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The petitioners, by this proceeding in habeas corpus, seek their discharge from the custody of the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles, by whom they are alleged to have been detained under a commitment issued out of the police court of said city upon conviction of having violated Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) of said municipality, and particularly that provision thereof regulating districts within which undertaking establishments may be maintained. A referee was appointed by this court to take testimony and make findings upon certain issues of fact.

It is contended that the ordinance under which the petitioners were prosecuted and convicted is class legislation, discriminatory, oppressive, and against public policy; that it is ancient and insufficient in its territorial limitation to meet the present reasonable necessities of a growing metropolis, and for these reasons we are asked to declare it unconstitutional and void.

It is conceded that the petitioners established, conducted, and maintained a chapel and undertaking establishment outside of any district created by the municipal legislative body of the city. The essence of the petitioners' complaint is that no new undertaking district has been created, or existing district so extended, as to include the area occupied by their chapel and establishment, and that the city council arbitrarily refuses to enact remedial legislation, notwithstanding the demands of constantly increasing commercial and residential growth in that vicinity.

[1] At the time Brown v. City of Los Angeles, 183 Cal. 783, 192 P. 716, was decided in October, 1920, the ordinance here in question was upheld against attack upon the same general constitutional grounds as are relied upon by the petitioners here. Under the authority of that decision this petition must be denied unless conditions within the city of Los Angeles are shown to have been vitally altered since it was rendered, or unless these petitioners' undertaking establishment is so differently situated from that involved in the Brown Case as to render the ordinance in question arbitrary, unreasonable, and discriminatory as to the establishment of these petitioners' business, although it was not so as to that of Brown.

Comparing the facts as they are found to be in our referee's report with those described in that decision, it may fairly be said that the conditions then and now differ materially only in the following particulars: The population of Los Angeles is nearly 100 per cent. greater now than in 1920, and hence it may be assumed that the need for mortuaries has been about doubled since then. There is in effect another ordinance of the city which prohibits the parking of automobiles for more than 45 minutes upon streets in the business district, of which about 40 per cent. of district No. 1 is a portion. The petitioners' establishment is in an outlying section one and one-half miles from any district where mortuaries are permitted, whereas the Brown undertaking parlors were only about 150 feet from the southern boundary line of district No. 1.

[2, 3] Certain legal principles well established and applicable to the issues here presented are: That mortuaries are among those lawful and useful businesses which are proper subjects of regulation and control within the exercise of the police power of the state, and this includes the right to confine such businesses within certain territorial limits. Brown v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

[4] While acts of the Legislature regulating useful businesses and occupations through the exercise of the police power are not conclusive, and the courts may always review them and inquire as to whether or not such enactments have any reasonable tendency to promote the proper objects for which the police power may be lawfully used, still, such regulations, made by a competent legislative authority, will not be set aside as unnecessary, unjust, or unreasonable, unless they be clearly so. In re Miller, 162 Cal. 687, 124 P. 427; Stockton v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 147; Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 589, 27 P. 933; In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 396, 86 P. 896, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105; In re King, 157 Cal. 161, 106 P. 578; Jardine v. City of Pasadena (Cal. Sup.) 248 P. 225.

[5] In such case, where the circumstances are such that there may have been a reasonable difference of opinion, the legislative discretion and decision will be upheld. Ex parte Hadacheck, 165 Cal. 416, 132 P. 584, L. R. A. 1916B, 1248; Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, 234 P. 381, 38 A. L. R. 1479.

[6, 7] The fact that other property situated similarly to that where mortuaries are prohibited is permitted to be used for their maintenance will not justify the court in holding a zoning ordinance unreasonable and discriminatory. Brown v. City of Los Angeles, supra. By the same decision it is also declared that the fact that "spot zones" are illegally established by the ordinance in question furnishes no ground for attack upon the prohibitory provisions of the ordinance establishing a district of considerable area and limiting funeral establishments thereto, if the ordinance is not otherwise unreasonable and discriminatory. Also that the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of a law upon the grounds on which petitioners predicate their claim for release is decidedly a question of its application, not to the public in general, but to them, circumstanced as they are, and related as they have caused themselves to be to society and its fair public regulations.

The referee found that, by Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) of the city of Los Angeles, the maintenance of any "undertaking chapel, morgue or undertaking establishment" is prohibited outside of undertaking districts designated in said ordinance; that the principal district therein designated permitting such establishments is named district No. 1, and the total amount of street frontage in that district is 250,000 feet; that there are thirty-five undertaking establishments within district No. 1, whose combined frontage is 2,625 feet; that this district is centrally located with respect to the main cemeteries in and around the city of Los Angeles; that said undertaking district comprises about two-fifths of one per cent. of the total area of the city; also that more than forty-five minutes is required to properly conduct a funeral service; and that by ordinance No. 50515 (new series) the parking of vehicles is limited to forty-five minutes within certain districts, which last-named ordinance is applicable to about 100,000 feet of the frontage in district No. 1. We are not informed as to the availability of spaces other than such as are occupied by the public streets for parking purposes, nor as to even an approximation of the number of funeral services that are required to be conducted within the city of Los Angeles daily, nor the time that is needed for such services, except that more than forty-five minutes is required for each.

[8] Under these circumstances we are unable to say that the use of the public streets is demanded, as a matter of public convenience, for the parking of vehicles while funeral services are being conducted. We cannot hold that either upon the property of the undertaking establishments or lots established as public automobile parks, or both, there is not ample space for such vehicles to stand. However plausible may be petitioners' argument that two-fifths of one per cent. of the area of the city is insufficient for the maintenance of undertaking establishments, if this be a fact, it is not so manifest and indisputable that without the information above mentioned as being absent from the record we can rule that reasonable minds might not differ and entertain an opposite view to that maintained by the petitioners. Therefore, we are not authorized to declare the ordinance void as applied to them as they conduct their undertaking business. It may be added that it seems apparent that the showing upon the point just mentioned would of necessity need to be extreme and the conditions established unusual to warrant a judicial declaration that the business of the undertaker is of such a nature as to entitle it to the exclusive use of the public streets for a considerable portion of the day, or that the area here allotted to such businesses, being approximately 2 square miles, and 150,000 feet of street frontage (as to which the forty-five minute parking limit does not apply), is not adequate for the funeral needs of a city of the present population of the city of Los Angeles.

[9, 10] What has been said applies equally in principle to petitioners' claim that, since the section of the city in which their establishment is located is one and a half miles from the nearest legalized mortuary in a spot zone, and a greater distance from district No. 1, a public need exists for the petitioners' undertaking parlors, and that to prevent its maintenance is an unjust discrimination against the people of that neighborhood. Neither the need of this district nor the truth of the assertion that such need as exists is not supplied is clearly apparent from the facts found by the referee, or otherwise known or established. As was said in Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, we are required to determine whether the zoning ordinance here in question has "any reasonable tendency" to promote public health, etc. While we may doubt that the provision made for the maintenance of such businesses as that of the petitioners is the most desirable that could be devised, or that the same may not be subject to possible criticism as to its complete efficacy in accomplishing its apparent and asserted purposes, still we are unable to say that it has no "reasonable tendency" to promote those objects, which are within the undoubted realm of the police power.

As pointed out, the referee found that there is no material difference between the locality in which petitioners maintain their establishment and a number of districts or "spot zones" designated by Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) as territory in which such business may lawfully be maintained; but, as we have seen, from this fact it cannot be said that the prohibition of the ordinance of which complaint is made is unconstitutional.

[11] It appears from the record, and the referee found, that petitioners made application to the building department for a permit to construct an undertaking establishment at the corner of Forty-Fifth street and Western avenue, and that such permit was granted; and, further, that they did so erect a building and fit it for undertaking. Petitioners allege, and the referee also found, that they expended a sum in excess of $35,000 in constructing and equipping said building for the business contemplated, and that such establishment constitutes the property involved in this proceeding.

It is asserted by the petitioners that, since the city authorities thus acquiesced in the creation of such business, and the expenditure of a large sum of money therefor, to now prohibit its peaceful operation is equivalent to a change of attitude resulting in the confiscation of their property. To the respondent's return herein, however, is appended as an exhibit an alleged full, true, and correct copy of a notice signed by various property owners, which the respondent avers was served upon petitioners prior to the commencement of their building operations. By such notice it appears that the prospective builders were informed that an undertaking establishment could not lawfully be conducted at the site mentioned, and that "this notice will also serve to preclude the possibility of any assertion by you hereafter that your property interests are invaded, impaired, or destroyed by the operation of the ordinance." In this notice it was further stated that previously to its service "a petition, signed by approximately 100 per cent. of the frontage affected, was delivered to the city council, asking that the council refrain from creating a zone within which such business could be maintained in the locality mentioned." None of these allegations or findings are disputed.

[12] It cannot successfully be urged that the building department had authority to do more than sanction the erection of petitioners' building. The city council were never petitioned for the extension of an existing district, or the creation of a new one, embracing the corner in controversy, whereas the owners of nearly all of the property affected protested against such action. Hence we think the petitioners are not in a position to say that the municipal legislative body acquiesced in the institution of an unlawful enterprise, or that the petitioners were lulled into the investment of their capital, and by a change of front were deprived of property without compensation.

[13] It appears that subsequently to the adoption of Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) there was enacted Ordinance No. 42666 (new series), known as the general zoning ordinance, which established a district designated as zone C, in which, among other businesses permitted, are undertaking establishments. Petitioners seriously argue that Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) has been repealed as far as it may conflict with the regulations of the provisions of the other ordinance in their relation to zone C. Because of the plain declarations contained in Ordinance No. 42666 (new series) to the contrary, we are unable to agree with this contention. From an inspection of the last-named ordinance we think it clear that it was not intended to repeal or modify other ordinances dealing with the subjects regulated by it, except in certain instances by further restricting the businesses or occupations involved. Section 10 of the general zoning ordinance provides as follows:

> "Except as hereinafter specifically provided, it is not intended by this ordinance to modify, abrogate or repeal, any ordinances, rules, regulations or permits previously adopted or issued pursuant to law, relating to the use, management or conduct of buildings, structures, improvements or premises; provided, however, that where this ordinance imposes a greater restriction upon the erection, establishment, alteration or enlargement of buildings than is imposed or required by such ordinances, rules, regulations or permits, the provisions of this ordinance shall control."

Section 15, entitled "Interpretation—Purpose," is a declaration practically in the same language as that just qouted from section 10.

[14] It does not result from the mere fact that almost a half million more people reside in the city of Los Angeles today than did when Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) was enacted that the provision made by it for undertaking establishments is now inadequate. This court cannot say, because we have no evidence before us to prove such a statement, that the city council did not foresee the city's growth and make ample provision for the additional population that has come. It may fairly be assumed that future increase in the number of people living within the municipality was anticipated by the legislators, and provision intentionally made for the same. Further, therefore, it does not follow, as argued by the petitioners, that if the spot zones attempted to be provided for undertaking establishments be subtracted from the total area in which such businesses are allowed, on the assumption that such zones are unlawful, the mortuary requirements of the city would be insufficient.

[15] It is said that the statements contained in the general zoning ordinances to the effect that at that time the city planning commission had not been able to make a comprehensive survey of all portions of the city, and that the portions covered by that ordinance and the maps thereto attached were then subject to regulation, because "the necessity therefor in these particular districts is most urgent," amount to a confession that the ordinance was even then insufficient to meet the necessities of the city. We do not so construe this language. "The necessities of the city," as the matter must be regarded by those performing the task of zoning, involves not merely consideration of the area required for each regulated business, but also the exclusion of such businesses from those localities where their presence would be obnoxious to public health, convenience, etc. It may well be that a given business might be permitted in a much larger territory than that required to accommodate the community in so far as supplying it with the advantages derived from that business is concerned. It is quite probable that the necessity to which reference is made in the ordinance which is said to be urgent is, not that the neighborhood may not be deprived of such supply, but, rather, that the portions of the city to which the businesses in question would prove detrimental should be protected therefrom.

[16] Our attention is called to a finding of the referee that "there is a certain risk involved in transporting the bodies of parties who have died of contagious diseases through the streets of the city, commensurate to the greater or less distances over which such bodies are transported. * * * But that such danger is decreased by sanitary methods of handling." It is asserted that this finding clearly shows that the ordinance is against the public welfare. It seems apparent that this court, having no more definite information than that "a certain risk" results from the transportation of bodies of deceased persons, is in no position to review the judgment of the legislators whose members are presumed to have had full opportunity for complete knowledge upon the subject. Of how great a risk is such "certain risk"? And just how much of a "certain risk" remains when it has been "decreased by sanitary methods of handling"? It seems obvious that any decision of this court in the premises would be random guesswork, based upon speculation, and nothing more. Such considerations are peculiarly within the scope of the lawmaking branch of the government.

[17, 18] Finally, we are of the opinion that the conditions necessarily existing in and about mortuaries, as well as their character, are intrinsically sufficiently different from those of hospitals and sanitariums as to permit of their separate classification. Hence the fact, if it be one, that Ordinance No. 31746 (new series) and Ordinance No. 42666 (new series), together permit the latter businesses in zone C even outside of the districts zoned, for undertaking establishments, does not render the inhibitions of the former ordinance unconstitutional on the ground of discrimination as between these businesses and funeral establishments.

The facts of the instant proceeding do not bring it within the class of cases illustrated by In re Dart, 172 Cal. 47, 155 P. 63, L. R. A. 1916D, 900, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1127, where ordinances have been held void because, while assuming to regulate businesses, they have in fact suppressed them. Nor is this situation comparable to those where enactments clearly appear to have been discriminatory in their inception and design, as was the case in Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 25 S. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169. In this proceeding a very considerable area is designated in which undertaking establishments may be conducted, and it is not even suggested that the ordinances here in question are tainted with inceptive intentional discrimination.

The writ is discharged and the petitioners remanded.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

80 Cal. App. 589

Ex parte STALEY. (Cr. 1466.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 7, 1927.)

Habeas corpus 🔑85(1)—Evidence in trial before recorder's court could not be considered to prove allegations of habeas corpus petition.

Where petitioner had been committed on convictions of misdemeanor, evidence received in trial before recorder's court could not be considered to prove allegations of habeas corpus petition to secure his release.

Application of John E. Staley, on behalf of Wallentz Craniczny, for writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, to secure release of petitioner after commitment on two convictions of misdemeanor. Writ denied.

C. A. Stice, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This application is not materially different from Criminal No. 1464, (no written opinion), wherein C. A. Stice made a similar application on behalf of Craniczny. The additional matters set forth in the petition herein could not be proved, without referring to the evidence received in the trial before the recorder's court. But such evidence may not be considered in this proceeding. In re Kaster, 52 Cal. App. 454, 198 P. 1029; In re Kaster, 185 Cal. 647, 198 P. 1031. The application for a writ is denied.

---

80 Cal. App. 415

FRY et al. v. BALTIMORE HOTEL CO. et al.★ (Civ. 3130.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 23, 1926. Rehearing Denied with Modifications Jan. 22, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1927.)

1. Corporations 🔑243(1)—Stockholder's liability for debts of corporation is determined by amount of stock owned when debt is incurred (Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322).

Liability of stockholder for such proportion of corporation's debts as par value of his shares bears to its subscribed capital stock under Const. art. 12, § 3 (Civ. Code, § 322), is determined by amount of stock owned by stockholder at time debt is incurred; such liability not being released by subsequent transfer of stock.

2. Corporations 🔑252—Liability of stockholder is primary and independent of corporation's liability (Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322).

Stockholder's liability is created by law under Const. art. 12, § 3 (Civ. Code, § 322), and is primary and independent of liability of corporation; it not being necessary for creditor to first exhaust corporation's assets before maintaining an action for stockholder's liability.

3. Corporations 🔑247—Accepting corporation's mortgage or recovering judgment against corporation does not affect creditor's right against stockholder individually (Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322).

Creditor's right to proceed against stockholder individually under Const. art. 12, § 3 (Civ. Code, § 322), is not impaired by accepting corporation's mortgage as security for debt of corporation or by recovering judgment against corporation.

4. Corporations 🔑264—Statute of limitations against stockholder's liability on corporation's debts is not extended by their renewal by corporation (Code Civ. Proc. § 359).

Where written evidence of indebtedness is given, renewal of obligation by corporation will not extend three-year statute of limitations against stockholder provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 359, as statute runs from date of original indebtedness.

5. Corporations 🔑237—Breach of lease by corporation rendering corporation liable creates stockholder's liability (Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322).

Liability of corporation for breach of covenants of lease by damaging freehold, holding over after termination, or failure to pay rent becomes stockholder's liability, under Const. art. 12, § 3 (Civ. Code, § 322).

6. Corporations 🔑264—Limitation on stockholder's liability for corporation's breach of lease runs from date of execution of lease (Code Civ. Proc. § 359).

Statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 359), on stockholder's liability for corporation's breach of lease, runs from date of execution of lease, and not from date of breach of covenant therein.

7. Corporations 🔑237—New agreement made by corporation for valuable consideration, though incorporating old contract, creates new stockholder's liability (Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322).

Though stockholder is not liable for corporation's renewal of original obligation evidenced by writing, where corporation makes new agreement based upon new and valuable consideration, new obligation is created on part of both corporation and stockholders under Const. art. 12, § 3, Civ. Code, § 322, though new agreement may contain provisions of former contract or incorporate part of old contract.

8. Corporations 🔑237—Agreement of corporation leasing hotel, executed in consideration for lessor's releasing chattel mortgage on furniture which corporation desired to sell, held new obligation creating stockholder's liability (Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322).

Where corporation having lease of hotel and desiring to sell its furniture therein entered into contract with lessor by which lessor released furniture from lien of chattel mortgage on president's and stockholder's giving undertaking to pay damages resulting from auction, contract was not mere renewal of lease, but constituted new obligation binding both corporation and stockholders, under Const. art. 12, § 3 (Civ. Code, § 322).

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

9. Corporations 🔑253—In suit for breach of contract against stockholder who signed undertaking for corporation, admitting default judgment against corporation before expiration of time for appeal thereon held error.

Admitting in evidence default judgment against corporation before expiration of time for appeal thereon held error, in suit against stockholder for damages for breach of undertaking on which stockholder was personally liable, which had been severed from action against corporation at stockholder's request.

10. Judgment 🔑652—Default judgment held inadmissible in evidence to prove facts therein recited before expiration of time of appeal thereon (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049).

Though default judgment may be used to prove former adjudication of rights between parties with same effect as evidence as if entered upon trial of an issue, such judgment is not admissible to prove facts recited therein as evidence before time for appeal therefrom has expired, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, though sole question which may be presented on appeal from default judgment is whether averments of complaint are sufficient to support judgment.

11. Appeal and error 🔑1170(7)—Judgment against stockholder for damages on undertaking in behalf of corporation held reversible, where based solely on incompetent evidence of judgment against corporation (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In action against stockholder for breach of undertaking signed by him in behalf of corporation, judgment entered solely on evidence of damages as recited in default judgment against corporation before time for appeal from latter judgment expired should be reversed, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing no judgment shall be set aside on ground of improper admission of evidence, unless justice miscarried as result, as such provision does not apply where elimination of incompetent evidence leaves no evidence supporting material issue in case.

12. Appeal and error 🔑1170(7)—Provision against reversing judgments for improper admission of evidence does not apply, where there is absence of material evidence as to necessary issue (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing no judgment shall be set aside for improper admission of evidence unless miscarriage of justice has resulted, held not to apply where there is entire absence of material evidence as to necessary issue after eliminating part improperly admitted, such statute applying only where elimination of evidence erroneously admitted still leaves substantial evidence upon which to support judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by T. Ashton Fry and another against the Baltimore Hotel Company, W. J. Colopy, and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant W. J. Colopy appeals. Reversed with directions.

Hocker & Austin and John N. Helmick, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles (Harry W. Hanson, and Timon E. Owens, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

Frank Rouse, of Los Angeles, for defendant Baltimore Hotel Co.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant Colopy from a judgment for damages based upon a stockholder's liability for the debts of a corporation for breach of contract.

Two reasons are assigned by the defendant upon which he relies for a reversal of the judgment: First, that the agreement upon which the judgment is founded was a mere renewal of a former lease, for the breach of which a stockholder's liability was barred by the limitations prescribed in section 359, Code of Civil Procedure. Second, that a former judgment against the corporation, which furnished the only evidence of the amount or character of the damages, was not a final judgment from which the time for appeal had expired, and that the judgment was therefore not competent as evidence of indebtedness of the corporation.

Plaintiffs were the owners of hotel property in Los Angeles. May 26, 1911, they executed a ten-year lease of this property to the Baltimore Hotel Company, a corporation, in consideration of $326,000, payable in equal monthly installments. Defendant was then a stockholder in the hotel corporation. This lease provided for the execution of a chattel mortgage on the hotel furniture to be held by plaintiffs to secure the payment of rent and the performance of the covenants of the lease. This mortgage was duly executed and held by plaintiffs until the modification of the lease by a subsequent agreement between the parties, dated December 14, 1921, which forms the basis for the indebtedness for which the judgment in this case was rendered. The original lease expired December 31, 1921. The Baltimore Hotel Company did not intend to renew their lease. In anticipation of the termination of this lease plaintiffs had executed a 25-year lease of the hotel property to J. E. Seamore for $40,000 per year, agreeing to deliver possession of the property to him on January 1, 1922. Defendant Colopy and the Baltimore Hotel Company were anxious to dispose of their hotel furniture before the expiration of the lease and desired to hold a public auction of the furniture in the hotel building. Before the furniture could be sold it was necessary for plaintiffs to release their chattel mortgage. For this purpose plaintiffs and the hotel company executed a written agreement, dated December 14, 1921, which did not purport to renew the original lease nor extend the term of its expiration. By the terms of this new agreement plaintiffs consented to the use of the hotel building for the purpose of conducting said public auction, providing in detail for the manner of carrying on the sale and for displaying certain signs advertising the auction; that the hotel company should remove all dirt and rubbish occasioned thereby and repair all damage resulting from the sale, and agreeing to cancel the chattel mortgage, upon condition that, in lieu of said mortgage security, this defendant Colopy and Ernest H. Hess, the president of the hotel corporation, should execute and deliver to plaintiffs a good and sufficient undertaking in the sum of $5,000 to secure plaintiffs against any damages resulting from said auction sale and assuring the payment of rent and the fulfillment of the terms of the lease. This undertaking was duly executed and delivered, and plaintiffs thereupon canceled the chattel mortgage and thereby forfeited their mortgage security. The language of this contract of December 14, 1921, in this respect was as follows:

> "First parties agree, upon the execution of this contract, and attached undertaking, to release of record the lien of a certain chattel mortgage existing in their favor as security for the performance of the covenants of the lease aforesaid, and which said chattel mortgage is a lien upon the furniture, furnishings and equipment of said hotel * * * as soon as said party shall have complied with the terms of this agreement, and the said indenture of lease, and shall have repaired or paid first parties for all damage, if any, done to the demised premises during the occupancy thereof by said second party, then and in that case this written undertaking in the amount of $5,000, shall be canceled."

The language of the accompanying undertaking was as follows:

> "In consideration of the execution of the foregoing agreement, the undersigned do hereby jointly and severally undertake and bind themselves, * * * up to but not exceeding the amount of $5,000 to save and hold first parties named in the above agreement free and harmless from any and all damages arising from the sale and removal from the said Baltimore Hotel, of the furniture, furnishings, and fixtures therein belonging to said second party in said agreement.
>
> "This undertaking shall remain in full force and virtue until all such damages shall have been repaired, or until first parties named in said agreement shall have been paid the amount of such damage, and thereupon this undertaking shall become void and of no effect.
>
> "Dated at Los Angeles, December 14th, 1921.
>
> "[Signed] Ernest H. Hess.
> "W. J. Colopy."

Pursuant to this agreement the auction sale of furniture was held. The hotel company failed to deliver possession of the property until 18 days after the expiration of the lease, to wit, January 18, 1922. Suit was thereupon brought by plaintiffs against the Baltimore Hotel Company and the stockholders for damages for breach of the covenants of the original lease and for breach of the terms of this subsequent agreement of December 14, 1921, the chief items of which claim for damages included the loss of $1,888 rent and $5,000 alleged damages for holding possession of the premises beyond the specified term of the lease.

This case came on regularly for trial on May 14, 1924. On motion of defendant Colopy the case was severed as to him and his case was set for trial in the afternoon of that same day. The cause was then ordered to proceed against the remaining defendants. The attorneys appearing in behalf of the corporation then announced that "they had no defense to offer, and that the cause might be considered as going by default against the Baltimore Hotel Company." Whereupon these attorneys abandoned the case and left the courtroom. The trial, however, proceeded, and upon evidence adduced the court rendered judgment against the corporation for damages in the sum of $7,025, which judgment was immediately entered and docketed.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day the cause came on for trial against the defendant Colopy. The judgment against the hotel company, which had been procured in the forenoon, was offered and received in evidence over the objection of defendant Colopy. This was the only evidence adduced against him to prove the actual damages sustained for breach of the lease, or for violation of the terms of the subsequent agreement of December 14, 1921. Most of the evidence at this trial was directed toward the question as to the liability of the defendant Colopy, as a stockholder, he claiming that the action upon the original obligation incurred by the execution of the lease was barred by the provisions of section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, and that he had disposed of his stock before the execution of the new contract of December 14, 1921. The court, however, found against him and held that a valid judgment for damages existed against the corporation, and that defendant Colopy was liable as a stockholder to the extent of $3,512.95, and rendered judgment accordingly. From this judgment the defendant has appealed.

[1-4] A stockholder is individually and severally liable for such proportion of the debts of the corporation during the time he is a stockholder as the par value of his shares bears to the entire subscribed capital stock. Const. Cal. art. 12, § 3 (Civ. Code, § 322). The liability of each stockholder is determined by the amount of stock owned by him at the time the debt is incurred. Finch v. Finch, 68 Cal. App. 72, 228 P. 553; Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 P. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87. And such liability is not released by any subsequent transfer of stock. Civ. Code, § 322. A stockholder's liability is created by law and is primary and independent of the liability of the corporation itself. Chambers v. Farnham, 182 Cal. 191, 187 P. 732. Since the obligation constitutes a primary liability against the stockholder it is not necessary for a creditor to first bring suit against the corporation and exhaust its assets before he can maintain an action for stockholder's liability. Fletcher's Enc. of Corp. 7245, § 4180; Eva v. Andersen, 166 Cal. 420, 137 P. 16. Neither accepting the corporation's mortgage as security for the debt, nor first recovering a judgment against the corporation, will impair the creditor's right to proceed against the stockholder individually. 6 Fletcher, supra, 7240 and 7246, § 4180; Sonoma Valley Bank v. Hill, 59 Cal. 107; Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 P. 1047. The statute of limitations runs against a stockholder's liability in three years from the time the obligation or indebtedness is incurred. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 359; Chambers v. Farnham, supra. Where notes or other written evidence of indebtedness are given, the mere renewal of such an obligation of a corporation will not extend the statute of limitations against the stockholder, but in spite of such renewal of the evidence of debt, the statute continues to run uninterruptedly from the date of the original indebtedness. 7 R. C. L. 414, § 401; London & S. F. Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 472, 58 P. 164, 73 Am. St. Rep. 64; Goodall v. Jack, 127 Cal. 258, 59 P. 575; S. R. Nat. Bank v. Barnett, 125 Cal. 407, 58 P. 85.

[5, 6] Undoubtedly an action for the breach of a lease, whether it be for damages to the freehold, for failure to pay rent, or for holding over after the termination of the tenure, founded upon the original contract, creates a stockholder's liability, commencing at the date of the execution of the lease and not from the date of the breach of covenant.

In the case of Chambers v. Farnham, supra, suit was brought against the stockholders of Belmore Land & Water Company, a corporation, for damages for breach of the covenant of a lease to construct irrigation ditches and build headgates at certain specified points along the way. The breach complained of was the failure to place the headgates at the designated places. It was there contended that the obligation did not accrue until the breach occurred, which was more than three years after the execution of the lease. Mr. Chief Justice Angellotti in that case said:

> "The narrow question remaining here is whether such a liability on the part of the corporation is incurred at the time of the execution of the contract or at the time of the breach, or possibly at the time the damage is suffered. In the light of the views announced in the leading case of Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 P. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87, and the long line of cases following and approving the doctrine there enunciated, culminating in the comparatively recent case of Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939, where the cases were reviewed and the matter exhaustively considered, we deem this question no longer open to discussion. The liability of the corporation to respond in damages for any failure to perform the covenants contained in its contract was necessarily created or incurred by the execution of the contract, notwithstanding that no right of action could accrue until a breach [occurred]."

Quoting approvingly from this same case of Hunt v. Ward, the learned Chief Justice further says:

> "Of course, there is a clear and wide distinction between the creation of a liability and the accruing of a cause of action thereon; and section 359 ex industria, emphasizes that distinction. A liability may be absolute or contingent; it may be unconditional or limited; it may be presently enforceable by action, or there may be time given for its performance; but whatever its character, it is created by the consummation of the contract, act, or omission by which the liability is incurred."

[7] However, where an entirely new, different, and distinct agreement is subsequently made, based upon a new and valuable consideration, even though some of the provisions of the former document are incorporated, or referred to and made a part of the new contract, where it is apparent that the purpose of the parties was not to renew or extend the former one, but rather to completely change and alter certain covenants therein contained, it is apparent that the execution of the latter document will create a new obligation on the part of both the corporation and the stockholders, from the date of which their liability will begin to run.

[8] In the instant case the agreement of December 14, 1921, which forms the basis of the judgment in this case, did not purport to renew or extend the covenants of the lease which was executed in 1911. The date of the termination of the lease was not changed. An entirely new and distinct contract was therefore made, by the terms of which added benefits were granted to the corporation and its stockholders, to wit, the privilege of using the hotel building as an auction house; the displaying of auction signs on the exterior of the building and the release of a chattel mortgage on the furniture, which was held by the plaintiffs to secure the performance of the covenants of the lease. By the terms of this new contract all these benefits accrued to the corporation and its stockholders in consideration of the execution of the $5,000 undertaking. There was ample consideration for this agreement, and it created a new obligation which bound both the corporation and the stockholders independently of the former liability created by the original lease. Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 P. 40; Union Oil Co. v. Purissima Hills Oil Co., 181 Cal. 479, 185 P. 381; Searles v. Gonzalez, 191 Cal. 426, 216 P. 1003, 28 A. L. R. 78.

[9] But, regardless of whether the execution of the agreement of December 14, 1921, together with the accompanying undertaking, created a personal liability, or a new stockholder's liability against the defendant Colopy, there was absolutely no evidence of the character or amount of damages which accrued by virtue of the breach of contract, except the judgment which had been procured against the corporation in the forenoon. That judgment was not final so as to constitute competent evidence to be adduced in another proceeding. The time for appeal had not expired. In contemplation of law, that proceeding was still pending. Section 1049, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

> "An action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied."

[10] It has been definitely determined by our courts that:

> "A judgment, in order to be admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving facts therein recited, must be a final judgment in the cause, and if the action in which the judgment is rendered is still pending, necessarily a judgment is not final. Chambers v. Farnham, 39 Cal. App. 17, 179 P. 423; In re Blythe, 99 Cal. 472, 34 P. 108; Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 83, 33 P. 757, 37 Am. St. Rep. 23; 7 Enc. of Evidence, 814; Cook v. Ceas, 143 Cal. 221, 77 P. 65; Story v. Story, 100 Cal. 41, 34 P. 675; Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363, 28 P. 118; Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 634; Jones on Evidence, 932, § 596.

[11] Nor is the rule different with respect to the admissibility of a judgment by default to serve as evidence in another proceeding. In 7 Encyclopedia of Evidence, 795, it is said:

> "A judgment by default has the same effect upon the rights of the parties as one rendered upon a joinder of issues between them, and therefore it may be used as a former adjudication with the same effect as evidence as if it had been entered upon trial of an issue formulated upon the pleadings."

Except that upon appeal it has been held that the sole question which may be presented is whether the averments of the complaint are sufficient to support the judgment. San Gabriel Valley Bank v. Lake View Town Co., 4 Cal. App. 630, 89 P. 360. It necessarily follows that so long as there is an appeal from a default judgment on any ground whatsoever, the action is considered as "still pending," until the time for appeal has elapsed. According to the authorities heretofore cited, a judgment is not final so long as the action is still pending, and no judgment, save a final judgment is competent evidence in another proceeding.

[12] It cannot be said that article 6, § 4½, of the Constitution, will cure the error of admitting incompetent evidence, when the elimination of that incompetent evidence leaves the record entirely devoid of any evidence to support a material issue in the case. In the case of J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Copren Bros., 32 Cal. App. 194, 162 P. 647, Mr. Justice Chipman said, with relation to the application of this section of the Constitution to a complaint which lacked material allegations, and where material proof of essential facts was also lacking:

> "We think it would be giving to section 4½ of article 6 unwarranted scope to permit its application to such a state of facts as we have here. To do so we must, in effect, say that it is not necessary to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or, having stated a cause of action, that it need not be supported by sufficient evidence. The section was not intended to abrogate or dispense with rules of procedure and evidence. It would, in our opinion, effect a miscarriage of justice to sustain the ruling of the trial court upon the record before us." People v. Schiaffino (Cal. App.) 238 P. 725.

The language of the Constitution to the effect that "no judgment shall be set aside, * * * in any case, on the ground * * * of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice," certainly cannot be construed to mean that a judgment may be affirmed when there is an entire absence of material evidence as to a necessary element of the cause of action. This construction would be converting the Constitution into an engine for the perpetration of a miscarriage of justice. We are of the opinion that the constitutional provision should be construed to mean that an error of the trial court in the introduction of evidence may be disregarded to prevent a miscarriage of justice, provided the elimination of the evidence thus erroneously admitted still leaves substantial evidence upon which to support the judgment.

The judgment is therefore reversed and the trial court is directed to try and determine the issue only as to the amount of the liability of the defendant hotel company under the contract dated December 14, 1921, and the proportion thereof for which the defendant Colopy is liable pursuant to Const. art. 12, § 3, and section 322, Civ. Code, and enter judgment accordingly.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

80 Cal. App. 729

WILSON v. COLE. (Civ. 5586.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 20, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1927.)

1. Trusts 🔑371(2)—Complaint purporting to plead constructive trust in realty and breach thereof, and alleging sufficient facts, though some were insufficiently pleaded, held sufficient.

A complaint disclosing at least an attempt to plead a constructive trust in realty and a breach thereof, and alleging sufficient facts, though some were insufficiently pleaded, held sufficient.

2. Trusts 🔑110 — Chancellor's finding for plaintiff, in action to declare trust in realty, held warranted.

Evidence held to warrant the chancellor's finding for plaintiff, in an action to declare a trust in an undivided half interest in certain realty.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1009(1) — Finding of chancellor as to existence of constructive trust will not be disturbed, in absence of abuse of discretion.

The rule that the evidence should be clear, satisfactory, and convincing to establish a constructive trust in realty is addressed primarily to the chancellor, whose finding will not be disturbed, in absence of abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Mary M. Wilson against Rosalie James Cole. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Salisbury & McNeil, Verne E. Robinson, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William L. Morrison and Adam Thompson, both of San Diego, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to obtain a judgment declaring that the defendant held the title of the plaintiff in trust as to an undivided one-half interest in certain property located in the city of San Diego. The defendant appeared and answered and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Edwin and Mary E. James were husband and wife. Down to the date of the death of Mr. James they resided at Guatemala. To them were born two daughters, Mary M., who afterwards married and is now Mrs. Mary M. Wilson, the plaintiff in this case. The other daughter, Rosalie, afterwards married, and she is the defendant Rosalie James Cole. At the time Mr. James died he had accumulated, and was the owner of, certain parcels of real estate in Guatemala, and other parcels in New Orleans. He left a will by the terms of which one-half of his estate went to his widow and one-quarter thereof to each of his daughters. At first the management of the properties rested with the widow. Her management was unsatisfactory, and family disputes arose. At this time she had already acquired the real estate located at San Diego. In the interest of harmony the title was transferred to the Southern Title Guaranty Company to hold the title for the widow and her two daughters. That arrangement existed until July 9, 1909. On that date the widow and her daughter Mary signed a document directing the Southern Title Guaranty Company to convey the entire title to the defendant. The title company did so on December 14, 1909. This action was commenced on August 23, 1922. The theory of the plaintiff's case is that the transfer made on December 14, 1909, was but one step in the transaction, and that the entire arrangement was to the effect that the mother, having remarried, and having gone to reside at Seattle, was willing to waive all of her claims in favor of her two daughters, and that it was agreed among the three, the widow and the two daughters, that the title should be taken by the defendant, and that she would hold the title for herself and her sister share and share alike; whereas it was the contention of the defendant that the transfer was made to her as settlement in full for all of her claims arising out of the estate of her father, and that her sister, the plaintiff, was to be compensated, and at that time was willing to take the chances of being compensated, out of certain moneys which the heirs expected to collect from sales of properties in Guatemala.

The hearing before the trial court ran afield in many respects. The opening brief of the appellant dwells on many propositions that were not controverted by the respondent when she filed her brief. On filing her reply brief the appellant states her contentions as follows: (1) The judgment setting aside a deed absolute will be reversed on appeal, unless supported by clear, convincing, and conclusive evidence; (2) the evidence does not justify a finding that there was an express trust; (3) the evidence does not justify a finding that there was a constructive trust; (4) the evidence is insufficient to support a judgment for the plaintiff upon any theory. However, in summarizing she claims that "the issues are therefore limited to the question whether the judgment rendered below is supported on a constructive trust theory by the pleadings and by evidence of a clear, convincing and conclusive nature." In other words, the appellant makes two points. She contends that the pleadings are insufficient to show a constructive trust, and that the evidence is insufficient.

---

★Rehearing denied.

[1] In the trial court the appellant did not contend that the complaint was insufficient. She interposed a general demurrer, but she submitted it without argument, took an order overruling it, and at the end of a week filed an answer in which she specifically denied the allegations contained in the complaint, and went to trial on issues so framed. A most cursory reading of the complaint discloses the theory of the pleader to be that it is at least an attempt to plead a constructive trust and a breach thereof. The appellant argues that it is insufficient. To support that argument she cites Robbins v. Law, 48 Cal. App. 555, 192 P. 118. The case contains nothing that even purports to sustain the claim of the appellant. It seems to us that the most that can be truly said is that the amended complaint contains facts sufficient, but some of those facts are insufficiently pleaded.

[2, 3] As recited above, two inconsistent theories were presented to the trial court. The evidence was full of conflicts. The plaintiff took the stand as a witness, and testified to facts tending to support her theory. Mrs. Jenkins, the mother, took the stand, and gave testimony similar to the testimony given by the plaintiff. Several disinterested witnesses came forward and testified to certain statements made by the defendant which tended to corroborate the case made by the plaintiff. Many pieces of documentary evidence were introduced which were exhibited to the trial court but which have not been certified up. That court saw the witnesses, had an opportunity to determine which witness so testified as to produce the strongest impression as to his veracity and as to his recollection of the facts which he testified had occurred many years before. Among other things, that evidence disclosed that the actual ownership of the San Diego property prior to July 9, 1909, rested in the mother and her two daughters; that it was at least the claim of the appellant that the mother was a person without business judgment; that the appellant, although at that time a girl in her teens, assumed to transact business for the family, and was allowed to do so; that, excepting the disputes regarding the management of the property, the relations existing between the sisters and between the mother and the daughters were at all times cordial and confidential; that, after the second marriage of the mother, the sisters lived together as partners; that, when the agreement of July 9, 1909, was drawn up, at least the mother and the respondent did not have any legal advice, nor the advice of any other business counselor, but acted solely on the statements made to them by the appellant; that there was no consideration for the conveyance, except as we have recited; and that the relation of personal confidence assumed between the appellant on the one side and her mother and sister on the other was assumed voluntarily. We are not at all inclined to disturb the finding made by the trial court under these circumstances. True it is that there are many decisions to the effect that in cases of this kind, in order to support such an attack as is made in this case, the evidence should "be clear, satisfactory, and convincing." Of course, that rule is primarily addressed to the chancellor. A reading of the record in the instant case discloses that the trial judge was cautious and painstaking in the attempt to ascertain what were the exact facts. By no means may we say that he abused his discretion.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

80 Cal. App. 675

PEOPLE v. SIMON. (Cr. 926.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 17, 1927.)

1. Criminal law ⟹1037(2)—Generally assignment of misconduct and request that court admonish jury to disregard district attorney's objectionable argument are necessary as foundation for complaint in appellate court.

General rule is that an assignment of misconduct and a request that court admonish jury to disregard objectionable argument or remarks of district attorney are necessary as foundation for complaint of misconduct in appellate court.

2. Criminal law ⟹1037(2)—Defendant need not assign misconduct of counsel and request instruction to disregard it to raise point in appellate court, where instruction could not obviate effect.

Where examination of entire record shows that misconduct of counsel is of such character as to have produced effect which it is reasonably probable could not have been obviated by instructions to jury, absence of assignment of misconduct and request that court admonish jury to disregard objectionable argument of district attorney will not preclude defendant from raising point in appellate court.

3. Criminal law ⟹723(5), 1171(1)—District attorney's reference to Jewish nationality of arson defendant held misconduct and to require reversal.

In prosecution for arson, in which defendant was a Jew, remarks of district attorney with reference to fires caused by Jews held misconduct, influencing jury in arriving at verdict of guilty, resulting in miscarriage of justice requiring reversal.

4. Criminal law ⟹723(5)—Duty of district attorney is to see that defendant has fair and impartial trial, and he must refrain from appeals to prejudice.

Duty of district attorney is to see that defendant has fair and impartial trial and that he be not convicted except upon competent and legitimate evidence, and he should not use official position to obtain verdict by appeal to race or religion.

5. Criminal law ⚷308—That one is accused of crime should not be taken as evidence of guilt, since every presumption is in favor of innocence.

Every presumption is in favor of innocence of one charged with crime, and fact that one is accused of crime should not be taken as any evidence of guilt.

6. Criminal law ⚷560—Jury must be satisfied of guilt to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt from evidence alone.

Before a defendant can be convicted of a criminal offense, jury must be satisfied to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt of his guilt from evidence alone.

7. Criminal law ⚷726—Comments of district attorney, not warranted by evidence, were not justified by fact that defendant's counsel or others had committed like impropriety.

Where comments of district attorney regarding nationality of defendant were not warranted by evidence, such comments were not justified by fact that defendant's counsel or witness or any one else had already committed like impropriety.

8. Criminal law ⚷723(5)—That defendant's counsel asked prosepective jurors, upon voir dire, whether fact that defendant was Jew would prejudice them, did not justify improper remarks by district attorney.

That prospective jurors upon their voir dire were asked by defendant's counsel, in arson prosecution, whether fact that defendant was Jewish would prejudice them against defendant did not justify remarks of district attorney regarding nationality of defendant, since it was proper for defendant to ask this question upon voir dire.

9. Criminal law ⚷1171(1)—Where it clearly appears that substantial rights of defendant have been invaded and fair trial denied him because of misconduct of trial court or district attorney, judgment will be reversed (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where it clearly appears that substantial rights of defendant have been invaded and a fair trial denied him because of misconduct of trial court or district attorney, appellate court will not hesitate to reverse judgment so obtained, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

10. Arson ⚷15—Defendant charged with burning property with intent to defraud insurers could be convicted if he conspired with others to burn property (Pen. Code, §§ 31, 548).

Where defendant was charged with burning property with intent to defraud insurers, under Pen. Code, § 548, he could be convicted if he entered into conspiracy with others to burn property with intent to defraud insurers, even though he did not do actual burning, in view of section 31.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Ernest Simon was convicted of arson, and he appeals. Reversed.

Milton Marks, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. An indictment was returned by the grand jury of the county of Stanislaus on December 17, 1925, charging the defendant, Ernest Simon, and his sister, Rose Bloom, with willfully burning, injuring, and destroying insured property with intent to defraud the insurers. The indictment was drawn under section 548 of the Penal Code of the state of California. The jury found the defendant, Ernest Simon, guilty and disagreed as to his sister, Rose Bloom.

From the judgment following the verdict of guilty and from an order denying his motion for a new trial the defendant, Ernest Simon, prosecutes this appeal. The record in this case is very voluminous; the transcript contains 1898 pages, together with scores of photographic exhibits and documents.

Defendant seeks a reversal of the judgment and order upon two grounds: First, misconduct of the district attorney, which the defendant complains of bitterly, and characterizes as being of a "highly aggravated and unprecedented character"; the second contention being that the court erred in giving certain instructions to the jury.

In the course of the opening argument of the district attorney he used this language:

> "There has, of course, grown up a suspicion in this country with reference to fires whenever a Jew has anything to do with it. You swore that you people would try these people just exactly as if they were not Jews, as if they were some other nationality, and that is your duty to do that, but that does not change the fact that there has grown up a suspicion with reference to that kind of thing, and that is the reason they were asking you that question, was because of the fact that there has been so many fires where the Jew lived in the house, in order to obtain the money."

Also, in the course of the closing argument of the district attorney, he used this language:

> "What interest have I? What interest have I in the insurance company? They say that he ought not to bring any prejudice in this case because these people are Jews. I did not make them Jews. I am not responsible for the fact that they are Jews. I did not make this fire out there that night. I am not responsible for the fact that there was a fire. I am not responsible for the fact that these people are here being tried today; it is a circumstance with which I have nothing to do."

Also, at another place in the closing argument, the district attorney used this language:

"Mr. Carlson said that there ought not to be anything said about the Jews, and yet he talked here to you about how it was no use having insurance unless you expected to have a fight with the insurance company, that they would not do this and they would not do that and would not do the other thing. * * * Then, of course, if this apartment had been burned, and Mr. Carlson said, why, these Jews, as they were, with their experience, would not have fixed a thing like that in their own house. The Jews with their experience and with the help of Fordson oil expected the thing to go up and burn up, and that there would not be anything left of it, there would not be anything but ashes to tell the story. That is what they expected to find."

[1] Complaint is also made of other remarks of the district attorney, but the foregoing extracts are enough to show the character of the remarks made. These remarks of the district attorney were not expected to or assigned as prejudicial misconduct at the time, and the court was not then, or at any time, requested to specially instruct the jury to disregard the remarks of the district attorney; in fact, the matter was not called to the attention of the trial court at all, and the objection is raised for the first time in this court. It is a well-established general rule in California that an assignment of misconduct and a request that the court admonish the jury to disregard the objectionable argument or remarks of the district attorney are necessary as a foundation for complaint of misconduct in this court (People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 89 P. 450; People v. Amer, 8 Cal. App. 143, 96 P. 401; People v. Osborn, 12 Cal. App. 148, 106 P. 891; People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 P. 1009; People v. Vickroy, 41 Cal. App. 275, 182 P. 764; People v. Adkins, 49 Cal. App. 531, 193 P. 800; People v. Ross, 60 Cal. App. 168, 212 P. 627; People v. George, 72 Cal. App. 124, 131, 236 P. 934; People v. Shem Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 381, 1 P. 347; People v. Beaver, 83 Cal. 419, 23 P. 321; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 36 P. 16; People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 151, 40 P. 107; People v. Louie Foo, 112 Cal. 17, 26, 44 P. 453; People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 647, 49 P. 842; People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 154, 65 P. 295; People v. Babcock, 160 Cal. 545, 117 P. 549; Grossetti v. Sweasey, 176 Cal. 793, 169 P. 687; People v. Miller, 177 Cal. 408, 170 P. 817; Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 184 P. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007; People v. Routh, 182 Cal. 561, 189 P. 436; People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 113, 193 P. 92); the reason for this rule being, as stated in a number of these cases, that the trial court should be given an opportunity to correct the abuse and thus, if possible, prevent by suitable instructions the harmful effect upon the minds of the jury.

[2] There is, however, a well-recognized exception to this general rule, and the exception is simply this: Where an examination of the entire record fairly shows that the acts complained of are of such a character as to have produced an effect which, as a reasonable probability, could not have been obviated by any instructions to the jury, then the absence of such assignment and request will not preclude the defendant from raising the point in this court. People v. McDonald, 167 Cal. 551, 140 P. 256; People v. Edgar, 34 Cal. App. 459, 167 P. 891; People v. George, supra; People v. Frank, 71 Cal. App. 575, 585, 236 P. 189.

[3] There can be no question but that the remarks of the district attorney were highly improper and constituted misconduct on his part. The question, however, that we are called upon to determine is whether from an examination of the entire record, including the evidence, we can say that the misconduct of the district attorney was of such a character that the harmful result therefrom could probably have been entirely obliterated from the minds of the jury if an opportunity had been given the trial judge and he had made timely and proper instructions to the jury. If this were reasonably possible, then the defendant cannot remain silent and take the chance of a favorable verdict and, losing, urge as grounds for a reversal an error which, but for his silence, might have been entirely corrected. If, however, where it fairly appears, as we think it does in the case at bar, all of the record, including the evidence, considered, that the remarks of the district attorney were a factor in influencing the jury in arriving at their verdict of guilty, such result is a miscarriage of justice, and the judgment and order should be reversed. It might be added at this point that the remarks of the district attorney were, in our opinion, of such a character that any attempted correction thereof by the trial court might well have had the effect of further imbedding in the minds of the jury prejudice against the Jewish people when they are accused of burning insured property.

[4] We see no escape from the conclusion that the remarks complained of were calculated to, and no doubt did, inflame and prejudice the minds of the jurors against the defendant because he happened to be a Jew. Such remarks should never be made in a court of justice by any one and, especially, should they not be made by a sworn officer of the law, whose duty it is to see that the defendant has a fair and impartial trial and that he be not convicted except upon competent and legitimate evidence. A district attorney should remember that it is not his sole duty to convict, and that to use his official position to obtain a verdict by appeal to race or religious prejudices, or any other unfair means, is to bring his office and the courts into distrust. If, indeed, the defendant be a Jew, it is no disgrace and should not be referred to at all. It should make absolutely no difference in a court of justice whether the defendant is a Jew, an Englishman, a Frenchman, a German, a Chinaman, a negro, or an American; neither should it make any difference whether he be a millionaire or a pauper. All are equal before the law, and the verdict of the jury should be predicated upon the testimony produced at the trial alone, free from all racial and religious prejudices.

Our attention has not been called to any case in California, and our research has discovered none, where the precise or similar remarks here under consideration were made. The closest approach to the remarks of the district attorney in the case at bar is found in the case of People v. Jeans (Cal. App.) 249 P. 1089. In that case the defendant was a negro and was accused of murdering a white man, and found guilty by the jury of the crime of manslaughter. There the district attorney, in the course of his argument to the jury, said, "It will not be safe if you permit a defendant, a negro, to come in and slaughter a white man"; and this court said with reference thereto: "The remarks, standing alone, would appear to be an appeal to race prejudice." However, almost immediately thereafter the district attorney withdrew the remarks. This statement was bordering closely upon prejudicial misconduct, but this court held in that case that it was not prejudicial misconduct for the reason that the court in each instance, when the objection was made to the remarks of the district attorney, admonished the jury to disregard the remarks, and also admonished the district attorney to refrain from further statements of the character used, and the guilt of the defendant being very clearly established, and being charged with murder and only convicted of manslaughter, it could not therefore be said that the language used there resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Many of the higher courts in other jurisdictions have had occasion to consider the effect of remarks made for the purpose of appealing to race or religious prejudices by prosecuting officers and other attorneys, and have uniformly condemned such conduct and in almost every case reversed the judgment for that reason alone.

In the case of Cluett v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193, 58 N. W. 1009, 43 Am. St. Rep. 446, the Supreme Court of Michigan said:

"One other assignment of error remains to be noticed. In the closing address to the jury, counsel for plaintiff used the following language: 'These men from Jerusalem, that have got the evidence in their possession as to the truth or falsity of this claim, their mouths are sealed, and a padlock upon each one.' Counsel for defendant interposed, saying: 'We take an exception to the statement of counsel. There is nothing in this case to show any such thing.' Plaintiff's counsel replied: 'I presume very likely that you deny your nationality. I haven't any doubt of it.' 'The Court: I don't think you should have used that language at all.' 'Plaintiff's Counsel: Men from Jerusalem?' 'The Court: I don't think you should have used it. * * * 'Plaintiff's Counsel: Take it back then. Suppose they came from Podunk instead of Jerusalem. I don't care where they came from.' Further on, plaintiff's counsel proceeded: 'I would like to have before you the conversation between the Rosenthals, Gates L. Rosenthal, Rosen Bros., and the men that drew the mortgage in this case. * * *' It is apparent that the only purpose of this line of argument was to impress the jury with the belief that the nationality of the defendants should be taken as evidence against them. This is certainly not the policy of the law. The courts are open to aliens and citizens alike; and any attempt, by arousing the prejudice of jurors, to curtail this right, is a departure from the proper privilege of counsel, and, when carried to the extent indicated by the language quoted, is sufficient to justify a reversal of the case. * * *"

In the case of Moss v. Sanger, 75 Tex. 321, 12 S. W. 619, the Supreme Court of Texas said:

"In the closing address to the jury, counsel for appellees used the following * * *: 'This entire business is a concocted scheme from beginning to end; a deliberate scheme to swindle and defraud, gotton up by a Jew, a Dutchman, and a lawyer. Who are the parties in interest? A. Moss; his wife, Rose Moss; his mother, Mary Moss; his clerk, D. Golden; and then, B. Frieberg, the old he-Jew of all, who, no doubt, planned the whole thing. All Jews, or Dutch Jews, and that is worse.' * * * It was an inflammatory appeal to a prejudice, no doubt, conceived by counsel who made it to exist, and intended to influence the jury. It was the arraignment of a race not on trial. Cases ought to be tried in a court of justice upon the facts proved; and whether a party be Jew or Gentile, white or black, is a matter of indifference. The course pursued in this case was one that no court of justice ought for a moment to tolerate; and it certainly must be true that the judge who tried this cause did not fully understand the language of counsel, or he would not have permitted it, would have rebuked it, and ought to have punished its author."

In the case of Freeman v. Dempsey, 41 Ill. App. 554, that court said:

"We are impressed that the verdict was the result of a prejudice worked up against the appellant. It is in the record that he was denounced by the attorney for appellee as 'a Jew, a Christ-killer, a murderer of our Savior.' If the appellee is a Jew, on account of his birth, or parentage, it was not his fault, neither is it a disgrace; if on account of his religion, it is not a cause of reproach. As to the other epithets applied to him, denunciatory as they are of the whole Jewish race, it is almost inconceivable that they should be either uttered or tolerated in the trial of a cause in a court of justice. No one, doubtless, would admit, on reflection, more readily than the attorney for appellee, the gross impropriety of their use, especially at such a place and on such an occasion. Judgment is reversed and the cause remanded."

In the case of Golden v. State, 214 P. 946, in ordering a reversal, the Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma said:

"The county attorney, assuming probably from the appearance of the defendant that he belonged to the Hebrew race, in his argument to the jury said: 'We all know the way of Jews' dealings in business and having their business dealings. * * * These are God's chosen people, who the Bible says shall gather into their arms all the wealth of the world.' * * * The spirit of our law is opposed to any discrimination against an accused because of his race, religion, wealth, or social station, and we think it was highly improper for the county attorney to go outside the record and misquote the Scriptures in a manner calculated to inflame and prejudice the minds of the jurors against this defendant because he was a Jew. * * *"

In the case of Garritty et al. v. Rankin et al., 55 S. W. 367, the Court of Civil Appeals of the state of Texas said:

"Counsel for defendants in his argument to the jury made statements not warranted by the evidence, and indulged in remarks as to some of the parties being Jews, etc., which were calculated to prejudice the minds of the jury against plaintiffs' cause. The court admonished him to stay in the record, and told the jury it was not proper for them to consider the race of the parties or witnesses referred to, and defendants' counsel then said he withdrew the remarks about Jews. The court instructed the jury, in considering their verdict, they would only consider the evidence as testified to by the witnesses, and not consider any remarks of counsel not supported by the testimony. The argument of counsel in the respect alluded to was very improper, and tended to prejudice the minds of the jury."

See, also, Hyman v. Kirt, 153 Mich. 113, 116 N. W. 536; State v. Bessa, 115 La. 259, 38 So. 985; Tannehill v. State, 159 Ala. 51, 48 So. 662; Harris v. State, 96 Miss. 379, 50 So. 626; Hampton v. State, 88 Miss. 257, 40 So. 545, 117 Am. St. Rep. 740; Hardaway v. State, 99 Miss. 223, 54 So. 833, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1166; State v. Lee, 130 La. 477, 58 So. 155; Simmons v. State, 14 Ala. App. 103, 71 So. 979; State v. Brown, 148 La. 357, 86 So. 912; Perdue v. State, 17 Ala. App. 500, 86 So. 158; Funches v. State, 125 Miss. 140; 87 So. 487; Bailum v. State, 17 Ala. App. 679, 88 So. 201; Tucker v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. R. 356, 257 S. W. 260; Roland v. State, 137 Tenn. 663, 194 S. W. 1097; State v. Thompson (Mo. Sup.) 238 S. W. 115; Arnold v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. R. 214, 256 S. W. 919; Thompson v. State, 27 Ga. App. 637, 109 S. E. 516.

The learned Deputy Attorney General seeks to avoid the prejudicial effect of the remarks of the district attorney upon two grounds: First, that no objection was made by the defendant, or his counsel, in the trial court. As we have already pointed out, it is not always essential that an exception and assignment of misconduct and request that the jury be instructed to disregard the improper remarks, in order to have such remarks reviewed by this court. It depends, as we have stated, upon the character of the remarks and the reasonable probability of prejudice arising therefrom in the minds of the jury. Second, it is contended by the respondent that the remarks of the district attorney were invited by certain testimony in the case, brought out by the defendant, and by the remarks of defendant's counsel. The testimony referred to by respondent was during the examination of the witness G. M. Roy, who was called as a witness for defendant, and being interrogated by defendant's counsel, testified as follows:

"Q. Do you know one L. R. or Louis Gallegos? A. I do.

"Q. State whether or not you were present at the home of L. R. Gallegos, Louis Gallegos, in the city of Modesto in the month of April, 1925, one evening, at which time you were there, Mr. Gallegos was there, Mrs. Bloom was there, and Ernest Simon was there, when Mr. L. R. Gallegos or Louis Gallegos said in referring to the smoke damage which occurred in the duplex apartments on or about April 21st, 1925, 'You are a fine bunch of Jews; why didn't you let it burn?' A. I was present when he said that, but there was also Mrs. Gallegos's brother present at the time.

"Q. I see. And he said that? A. He did."

[5-7] It seems too clear to admit of any doubt that this evidence would not justify the district attorney in arraigning the defendant before the jury as a Jew, and when a Jew is accused of burning insured property, as the defendant is in this case, this alone would give rise "to a well-grounded suspicion of his guilt," when the law expressly provides that the fact that a person is accused of a crime shall not be taken as any evidence of guilt, and such fact shall not weigh against him at all, but, on the contrary, every presumption is in favor of innocence, and before a defendant can be convicted of a criminal offense, the jury must be satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt from the evidence alone. The testimony was merely a repetition of what the witness claimed that the witness L. R. Gallegos had told the defendant and other members of his family. Gallegos was one of the important witnesses for the plaintiff and was also the owner of a half interest in the apartment house in which the fire occurred. The argument of defendant's counsel, Mr. Carlson, is not contained in the record. However, if the comments of the district attorney were not warranted by the evidence, as we have shown they were not, such comments would not be justified by the fact that the defendant's counsel, or a witness, or any one else, had already committed a like impropriety. People v. Kramer, supra.

[8] It was also contended by the learned Deputy Attorney General, in his oral argument and in his brief, that by reason of the fact that the prospective jurors, upon their voir dire, were asked by defendant's counsel whether the fact that the defendant and his sister, Mrs. Bloom, are Jewish people would prejudice them against the defendants. This would certainly be no basis for the remarks of the district attorney. It is perfectly proper upon the voir dire for the defendant to have asked this question, and the purpose of it was to obtain a jury that would not be prejudiced against the defendants by reason of the fact that they were Jews, and to prevent the very prejudice in the minds of the jury that the remarks complained of were calculated to instill.

There can be no doubt but what the fire was of an incendiary origin. The evidence against the defendant and his sister was wholly circumstantial, and while it cannot be doubted that the evidence of the prosecution points to defendant's guilt, the evidence presented by defendant and several apparently respectable and disinterested witnesses would, if believed, have established defendant's innocence, and we cannot say that the evidence presented on the trial of the case was such that the guilt of the defendant was entirely manifest. If we could say that the evidence establishes defendant's guilt beyond any doubt, then under the saving grace of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution it might be held that there had been no miscarriage of justice.

[9] In concluding, as we do, that the judgment of conviction and order denying a new trial must be reversed, we are not unmindful of the strong disinclination of our courts to set aside convictions upon the ground of misconduct of the district attorneys, and put the state and its officers to the trouble and expense of a new trial; nevertheless, when it clearly appears, as we think it does in the case at bar, that the substantial rights of a defendant have been invaded and a fair trial denied him, because of the misconduct of the trial court or the district attorney, the appellate courts will not hesitate to reverse judgment so obtained. For the protection of the innocent who may be accused of crime, the law has very properly prescribed certain rules of practice in the trial of an action, which should be strictly observed as well in the case of the guilty as of the innocent, and in carrying out this humane and wise provision of our law, it is the duty of this court not to allow the fountains of justice to be poisoned by what, in the instant case, savors so strongly of race prejudice.

[10] The other contention of the defendant is that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that they might find defendant guilty as charged in the indictment if said defendant entered into a conspiracy with Rose Bloom or other persons to burn the property with intent to defraud the insurers, etc., even though defendant did not do the actual burning, etc. It seems to be the theory of defendant that, he and his sister having been charged with burning the property with intent to defraud the insurers, he could not be convicted under this indictment with entering into a conspiracy to burn the property, etc., as it would be a different offense than that charged in the indictment. There is no merit in this contention. Section 31 of the Penal Code provides in part:

> "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed."

For the reasons already stated, we are of the opinion that the judgment and order must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

81 Cal. App. 49

PEOPLE v. LEE. (Cr. 1335.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 24, 1927.)

1. Abortion 🔑11—In prosecution for administering drug to produce miscarriage, evidence held to sufficiently corroborate prosecutrix (Pen. Code, §§ 274, 1108).

In prosecution for violating Pen. Code, § 274, by administering drug to pregnant woman to cause miscarriage, evidence held sufficient to meet requirements of section 1108, relating to corroboration.

2. Abortion 🔑11—Corroboration of victim of abortion as to some of material facts held sufficient (Pen. Code, §§ 274, 1108).

It is not essential, under Pen. Code, § 1108, that person on whom abortion was procured be corroborated in every respect and in regard to every material fact; corroboration as to some of material facts constituting necessary element of crime under section 274, causing abortion, being sufficient.

3. Abortion 🔑11—Evidence corroborating victim of abortion, if tending to connect defendant with crime, is sufficient (Pen. Code, § 1108).

Though more than mere suspicion is required by way of corroboration under Pen. Code, § 1108, evidence corroborating one upon whom abortion was procured is sufficient if, of itself, it tends to connect defendant with commission of offense, notwithstanding corroboration may be only slight and, of itself, entitled to but little consideration.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

4. Criminal law ⚷404(4)—In prosecution for administering drug to produce abortion, surgical instruments found in defendant's possession held admissible to show intent in administering drug (Pen. Code, § 274).

In prosecution for violating Pen. Code, § 274, by administering drug to pregnant woman, surgical instruments found in defendant's possession held admissible for purpose of showing intent with which drug was administered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Charles Lee was convicted of violating Penal Code, § 274, by administering a drug to a pregnant woman, causing miscarriage, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Austin W. Arnold and H. M. Anthony, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant was convicted of violating section 274 of the Penal Code, the charge being that he administered a drug to a pregnant woman with the intent to procure a miscarriage, and on this appeal presents two points, contending, first, that the testimony of the woman upon whom the crime is alleged to have been committed was not corroborated as required by section 1108 of said Code; and, secondly, that the court erred in admitting in evidence, over his objections, certain surgical instruments found in his apartment, wherein, it is claimed, the crime was consummated.

The following facts appear from the testimony of the woman upon whom the offense is alleged to have been committed: She was 22 years of age, unmarried, and on February 3, 1926, which was the date of the alleged commission of the crime, was from two to three months pregnant. On the morning of the day mentioned, having previously obtained appellant's name and address from a woman friend, she called on appellant at the address given for the purpose of having an abortion produced. Appellant, who admits that he is not a physician or surgeon, took her to a bedroom in the ten-room flat occupied by him, where she told him of her pregnant condition and asked him to give her "something." In reply appellant told her not to worry, that she was going to be all right after she had taken something; and thereupon, without the aid of instruments, he made a vaginal examination of her. She stayed in appellant's flat the remainder of the day, spending part of the time in bed, and about six o'clock that evening appellant gave her a capsule filled with white substance, which she swallowed. Remaining in the flat all night, she arose about noon the next day, and, while crying, asked appellant to allow her to go home, but he replied, "You can't go home now; you have to stay until you be all right." She then went back to bed, and appellant brought a hot-water bag which he placed on her abdomen. She again arose about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and, while sitting in a chair reading, two police officers entered the room, and, upon asking her in appellant's presence what she was doing there, she "told them everything." Thereupon she was taken to the emergency hospital, remaining there all night, and the next day was removed to another hospital, where, about midnight, her miscarriage occurred.

She further testified that at no time prior to going to appellant's flat had she taken any medicine, nor had any instrument been used upon her, either by herself or any one else, for the purpose of procuring a miscarriage.

In corroboration of the foregoing testimony, the prosecution produced as a witness a woman who, after stating that with her husband and children she occupied two of the ten rooms in appellant's flat, testified as follows: That she rented the rooms in the flat for appellant, turning the rent over to him, and that some of the rooms were occupied by men; that she responded to the doorbell when the prosecuting witness arrived at the flat, and took her to appellant's apartments; that later, during the day, appellant told her that the prosecuting witness "was in a fix about three months," and that he "was going to help her get rid of it"; that the prosecuting witness stayed in the flat that night, but did not rent a room, nor was any rental collected from her.

Joseph M. Bruders, one of the police officers mentioned, gave testimony in further corroboration of the prosecutrix, stating that, with Corporal Shannon of the police department, he called at appellant's flat about 4:30 o'clock on the afternoon of February 4, 1926, and, after being admitted by a woman, went upstairs, where they saw appellant. They asked him if he was "Dr. Lee," and he replied that he was; that they then observed the prosecutrix sitting in the room, and in the presence of appellant, held a conversation with her. They first asked her why she was there, and she replied that she was pregnant and had come there to be treated. The officers then inquired if the doctor had "done anything," and she stated that he had given her "a couple of pills." Thereupon she told them about having suffered pains, about crying, and that appellant had given her the hot-water bag to quiet her; furthermore, that appellant told her that "everything would be all right, that she was to stay there, it would be a short time until he would be through with her."

The record does not disclose that appellant made any denial or reply to the statements thus made in his presence by the prosecutrix, nor does it appear that he was asked about any of them except that, when the prosecutrix stated that he "took up her clothes and examined her," the officers asked him why he had done so, and he replied, "to see if she was clean." The prosecutrix further stated during that conversation that appellant had not used any instruments.

The witness was thereupon allowed to identify certain surgical instruments found in appellant's apartments, and, subject to appellant's objections, they were received in evidence. Three of them, the evidence shows, were instruments used in making vaginal examinations, and another was made expressly to grasp the cervix of the uterus to bring it down into better view for examination.

In addition to the foregoing evidence, testimony was given by the hospital attendants to the effect that the age of the fœtus passed by the prosecutrix as the result of the miscarriage was about three months, and that one capsule full of croton oil administered to a pregnant woman would cause an abortion.

[1-3] We are of the opinion that the evidence above narrated, taken as a whole, is legally sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute relating to corroboration. Pen. Code, § 1108. Under the decisions it is not essential that the person on whom the abortion is procured be corroborated in respect to every fact and detail nor as to every material fact, but only as to some of the material facts which constitute a necessary element of the crime. People v. Watson, 21 Cal. App. 692, 132 P. 836. For illustration, an essential element in the crime here alleged is a criminal intent on the part of the accused to procure an abortion, and, therefore, any testimony in addition to that of the prosecutrix, tending to show intent, would be a sufficient corroboration of her testimony to bring the case within the statute, even though she be not corroborated as to the particular method employed to produce the abortion. People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393. Furthermore, although more is required by way of corroboration than to raise a mere suspicion, yet the corroborating evidence is sufficient if it, of itself, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, notwithstanding the corroboration be slight and of itself entitled to but little consideration. People v. Watson, supra; People v. Thompson, 16 Cal. App. 748, 117 P. 1033.

The corroborating evidence here shows that beyond question the prosecutrix was pregnant; that on the day she entered appellant's apartments he stated to the woman in charge of his flat that the prosecutrix was "in a fix about three months," and that he was going "to help her get rid of it." The next day, while still in appellant's apartments, and in his presence, the prosecutrix stated, in substance, that the appellant had given her "a couple of pills" for the purpose of procuring an abortion, which had caused her to suffer pains; and, within 48 hours after having made these accusatory statements—which, so far as the record shows, the appellant did not deny—the prosecutrix suffered a miscarriage. In view of the legal rules hereinabove set forth we think the corroboration ample.

[4] The surgical instruments were admissible in evidence as bearing upon the question of the intent with which the medicine was administered. Moore v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 552, 40 S. W. 287; State v. Barnes, 75 N. J. Law, 426, 68 A. 145. Said instruments were found in appellant's possession at the place where the crime is alleged to have been consummated; and, despite the admitted fact that the miscarriage of the prosecutrix was sought to be accomplished by administering medicine, it may be fairly inferred, from the testimony showing the nature of the instruments and the use to which they are put, that their use would have been probable in the subsequent treatment of the prosecutrix if she had continued to remain under appellant's care.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 739

ROSE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5426.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 21, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1927.)

1. Prohibition 🔑10(2)—Prohibition lies where accusation does not state facts constituting cause for removal of officer or confer jurisdiction to proceed therewith (Pen. Code, § 772).

The writ of prohibition is the proper remedy, where the accusation does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause for removal of an officer or confer jurisdiction on the Superior Court under Pen. Code, § 772, to proceed with the accusation.

2. Prohibition 🔑1—Writ of prohibition is preventive, not corrective.

The function of the writ of prohibition is preventive and not corrective.

3. Prohibition 🔑30—Relief appropriate to writ of review cannot be granted in prohibition to review intermediate or interlocutory order of court at instance of individual respondent.

Relief appropriate to the writ of review cannot be granted in proceedings for a writ of prohibition, where it is asked for by an individual respondent, not the court, and the order sought to be reviewed is intermediate or interlocutory.

★Rehearing denied.

4. Officers 🔑74—Order striking parts of accusation in proceedings to remove officer is not appealable (Pen. Code, § 772).

An appeal does not lie from an order striking portions of the accusation in proceedings under Pen. Code, § 772, to remove a public officer; such order being intermediate and reviewable, if beyond the court's jurisdiction, by a writ of review at the appropriate time.

5. Officers 🔑74—Issues may be raised in proceedings to remove officer by demurrer or motion to strike parts of accusation (Pen. Code, § 772).

It is proper, under Pen. Code, § 772, to raise the issues of law, in proceedings for removal of public officers, by a demurrer to or motion to strike parts of the accusation.

6. Officers 🔑66—Overcharges collected from political subdivision by officer thereof is ground for removal (Pen. Code, § 772).

"Charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered, or be rendered, in his office," stated in Pen. Code, § 772, as ground for removal of public officer, refers to overcharges collected from the political subdivision of which he is an official, as well as to collection of fees from third parties.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑227—Whether irrigation district director's salary is in lieu of mileage held immaterial (Irrigation District Act, § 57).

Whether the salary of directors of certain irrigation districts under Irrigation District Act, § 57 (St. 1897, p. 254), is in lieu of mileage, as well as per diems, need not be determined in proceedings to prohibit the trial of such an officer, under Pen. Code, § 772, for collecting money on false representations that it was for mileage and for collecting compensation in excess of such salary.

8. Officers 🔑98—"Fees," as used in statute prohibiting improper charges by public officials, are not limited to those collected for services to public (Pen. Code, § 772).

Pen. Code, § 772, being intended to protect the public from improper charges by their officials, the word "fees," as used therein, is not limited to those which may be collected by a public official for services rendered by him to the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fees.]

9. Statutes 🔑184—Wrong sought to be curbed is important in construing statute.

The wrong sought to be curbed is an important element entering into the proper construction of a statute.

10. Waters and water courses 🔑227—Charges by irrigation district director for mileage held illegal fees for official services (Pen. Code, § 772).

Improper charges by an irrigation district director for mileage, expenses of lobbying for the passage of a statute, political propaganda, etc., and compensation in addition to salary, held charges and collections of illegal fees for services rendered in his office, within Pen. Code, § 772.

11. Waters and water courses 🔑227—Illegal overcharges by irrigation district director give superior court jurisdiction to remove him, though collected through taxing channels; "charging and collecting" (Pen. Code, § 772).

Any illegal overcharges by an irrigation district director constitute charging and collecting of illegal fees for services rendered, within Pen. Code, § 772, so as to give the superior court jurisdiction to remove him from office, though collected from the public through taxing channels.

12. Waters and water courses 🔑227—Irrigation "district" officers are public officers, subject to removal by superior court (Pen. Code, §§ 772, 889; Const. art. 4, § 18).

Irrigation district officers are public officers within Const. art. 4, § 18, and hence may be removed by the superior court, under Pen. Code, § 772, as against objection that they are state officers and that such districts are not strictly political subdivisions; "district," as used in section 889, which must be construed with section 772, describing a geographical part of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, District.]

13. Statutes 🔑225—Statutory provisions on same subject must be so construed as to maintain integrity of both, if possible.

Two statutory provisions relating to the same subject-matter must be construed so as to maintain the integrity of both, if possible.

14. Waters and water courses 🔑227—Statute authorizing removal of irrigation district officers willfully violating duty does not preclude removal for other causes (Irrigation District Act, § 73; Pen. Code, §§ 758, 772).

Irrigation District Act, § 73 (St. 1897, p. 254), subjecting officers of irrigation districts to removal for "willful violation of any express duty," does not preclude removal for misconduct or misfeasance and nonfeasance, under Pen. Code, §§ 758, 772; the remedies being cumulative and separate.

Craig, J., dissenting.

Application by Mark Rose for a writ of prohibition to the Superior Court of Imperial County, E. J. Marks, Judge, and another. Peremptory writ denied.

Chas. L. Childers, of El Centro, A. C. Finney, of Brawley, and D. B. Roberts, of El Centro, for petitioner.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, and Kendall B. Perkins, of Long Beach, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This proceeding is brought for the purpose of prohibiting the superior court from proceeding with the trial of an accusation against Mark Rose as one of the directors of the Imperial Irrigation district, and for his removal from office as such director. The accusation in effect alleges that George Herrick Davis is a resident, qualified elector, and voter and taxpayer within the district; that Mark Rose was elected a director of the district in February, 1921; that Mark Rose has not nor has any person been elected as his successor, and that though an election was purported to have been held in February, 1925, that by a judicial determination the purported election was held void; that therefore Rose continues to hold by reason of the election of 1921; that since the election in 1921 Rose has "knowingly, willfully, corruptly, wrongfully, and intentionally" violated the express duty of his office in the following particulars:

First: That Mark Rose as such director approved and caused the expenditure, by warrants, of large sums of money for illegal and improper purposes (all of which are set out in detail), and failed to prevent the payment thereof, having at the time ability so to do.

Second: That Mark Rose as such director incurred indebtedness on behalf of the district, illegally and unlawfully and for purposes in excess of the provisions of the California Irrigation District Act and for purposes for which the district could not expend its funds, and that he failed to prevent the incurring of the indebtedness, he having at the time the ability to prevent. The alleged improper expenditures are also set out in detail.

Third: That Rose as such director did willfully, unlawfully, corruptly, and intentionally pay and cause to be paid to himself $4,967.74, which he claimed was to cover traveling and other expenses, laid out by him in lobbying for the passage of an act known as the "Swing-Johnson Bill"; but that in truth and in fact a large portion thereof was not incurred or paid out by Rose, but was appropriated to his own use and benefit, and that Rose also had paid to himself $1,500 as and for traveling expenses to be later accounted for, for which he has at all times refused to account, and that all of said payments are in addition to and in excess of the salary allowed by the act.

Fourth: That Rose as such director has charged and collected mileage at the rate of 15 cents per mile for attending meetings of the board of directors.

Fifth: That Rose as such director also caused to be paid to himself in varying amounts the sum of $2,809.56 for mileage and other expenses, which mileage charges were false and fraudulent, and Rose converted the sums so collected to his own personal use and benefit.

Sixth: That on December 7, 1923, Rose demanded and caused to be paid to himself the sum of $1,260 as and for extra compensation and in addition to the salary allowed by law.

Seventh: That, although formal demand was made in and since March, 1925, for an accounting and that the board recover the expenditures alleged to have been improperly paid out, no account has been rendered and no action taken to recover the expenditures.

Eighth: That subsequent to a permanent injunction issued by the superior court restraining Rose and his codirectors from expending any sums in behalf of any legislation pending in the Congress of the United States, Rose, for the sole purpose of evading the injunction, caused the salaries and compensation of certain employees to be raised, collected from the employees the difference, and continued to spend the same for the prohibited purposes, and employed others ostensibly to work for the district, but in fact to work for and on behalf of the legislation.

It is unnecessary to attempt to enumerate the various items expended further than to say that other than those paid to the petitioner and defendant, they are all alleged to have been in one way or another incurred or expended in behalf of pending legislation, either for publicity or in some way connected with political propaganda.

The defendant demurred, generally and specifically, to the accusation, and moved to strike certain portions thereof. The demurrer was overruled, but the motion was granted in part. The court struck out practically all of the items of expenditures for propaganda work as recited above.

Petitioner takes the position that the accusation does not allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause for removal under section 772 of the Penal Code or section 73 of an act known as the "California Irrigation District Act" (Stats. 1897, p. 254); Deering General Laws, 1923, p. 1425, and, especially, that section 772 of the Penal Code does not confer on the court jurisdiction to remove a director of an irrigation district.

The respondent George Herrick Davis complains of the action of the respondent court in striking out portions of the accusation, and in an affirmative answer asks that this court advise the trial court of the law applicable to the trial of said action. He especially urges that under section 772, neither a demurrer nor a motion to strike is contemplated, and that the order striking portions of the complaint should be declared ineffective and the trial be permitted to proceed under the original allegations and such denials as may be interposed.

[1-3] It being conceded and established by a long line of decisions that the writ of prohibition is the proper remedy where the accusation does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause for removal or confer upon the superior court the jurisdiction to proceed with the accusation, the first question necessary for us to consider is whether or not in this proceeding we should review the action of the respondent court in striking out portions of the accusation. It must be borne in mind that the function of the writ of prohibition is preventive and not corrective.

Traffic Truck Sales Company v. Justice Court, 192 Cal. 377, 220 P. 306; Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 P. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192. And while it is true in the cases cited by respondent that upon application for the prohibitive writ the court granted relief in keeping with the record and law of the case as therein developed, but appropriate to the writ of review, yet that relief was granted at the instance of the petitioner when the particular thing complained of could not be reached by prohibition. Examples of this rule are found in Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903; Traffic Truck Sales Co. v. Justice Court, 192 Cal. 377, 220 P. 306; and Finn v. Butler, 195 Cal. 759, 235 P. 992.

[4, 5] In this case we find two fatal differences: First, that the individual respondent, and not the respondent court, asks for the relief; and second, the order sought to be reviewed is an intermediate or interlocutory order which is not final in its nature. An appeal from the order does not lie on account of the fact that it is intermediate in its nature and not made an appealable order (Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299, 18 P. 394, and Cleland v. Walbridge, 78 Cal. 358, 20 P. 730), and which, even though an appeal does not lie from the final judgment, might be reviewed, if in excess of the court's jurisdiction, by a writ of review at the appropriate time. Dabney v. Wilhelm, 190 Cal. 340, 212 P. 203. We do not believe that it is in keeping with the rule announced by respondent to adopt such an innovation, particularly where, as here, the court was apparently acting within its jurisdiction. It has been the practice to raise the issues of law by a demurrer or motion to strike, and we see nothing improper in this method of confining and defining the issues. See Crossman v. Kenniston, 97 Cal. 379, 32 P. 448, Crossman v. Lesher, 97 Cal. 383, 32 P. 449, and In re Curtis, 108 Cal. 662, 41 P. 793. For the purposes of this hearing, therefore, we dispose of the charges herein designated as first, second, eighth, and a part of the seventh, leaving for consideration the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth and that part of the seventh wherein it is alleged that no account has been rendered.

[6-9] Petitioner's contention that "charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered, or to be rendered, in his office" refers not to overcharges collected from the political subdivision of which he is an official, but only to the collection of fees from third parties, cannot be sustained. Nor is it necessary in our opinion to determine whether or not the salary provided for by section 57 of the California Irrigation District Act in an irrigation district containing 500,000 acres or more, which it is alleged the Imperial irrigation district does contain, is in lieu of mileage as well as the per diems, for the reason that the accusation herein charges the collection of moneys on the representation that it was for mileage and that it was not in fact for mileage. It also charges the collection of compensation over and above the salary therein allowed, and to which petitioner was not entitled. The allegations, therefore, do not relate solely to mileage, but they do charge that Rose collected from the district moneys to which he was not in any way entitled and that the said moneys were by him appropriated to his own use. Petitioner argues seriously and refers to many sections of the Code wherein the word "fees" is used to describe fees which may be collected by a public official for services rendered by that official to the public, but we do not think that it was intended that the word "fees" as used in section 772 of the Penal Code should be limited by any such definition. At least one of the purposes of the section is to assure the public that their officials shall not be permitted to mulct them by improper or illegal charges. And as was pointed out in People v. Lips, 59 Cal. App. 381, 211 P. 22, the wrong sought to be curbed is an important element entering into the proper construction of a statute.

[10] Petitioner has cited two cases from Idaho, Hudson v. Bertsch, 38 Idaho, 52, 220 P. 109, and Daniels v, Wrighton, 38 Idaho, 55, 220 P. 110, apparently growing out of one situation, which seem to hold that items of actual expense should not be classified as fees. It should be noted, however, that the items in the first case were included by mistake without suggestion of a willful attempt to overcharge, and in the other case $12 was collected as the actual expense of a trip to take possession of a gambling machine, and that for some reason not clearly shown the prosecution was dropped. In neither of these cases is there suggested a willful attempt to overcharge or burden the public. They are therefore to be distinguished from the allegations here made. There are direct allegations in the petition that the moneys claimed and collected by Rose were not to cover any proper expenses laid out by him, but that they were so named only for the purpose of giving them the appearance of regularity. It cannot be argued from the allegations that the claims were for reimbursement. We think the correct rule is enunciated in Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 394, 39 P. 1111, State v. Richardson, 16 N. D. 1, 109 N. W. 1026, and State v. Borstad, 27 N. D. 533, 147 N. W. 380, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 1014, which were all cases involving the collection of per diems and mileage from the political subdivisions of which the accused was an officer. In State v. Borstad, supra, the argument in this particular was dismissed with this language:

> "We find no merit in the contention that the charge for the attendance at the association of county commissioners at Fargo, which is conceded was illegal, was not 'a charge and collection of illegal fees for services in his office,' for which the defendant could be removed. It is sufficient to say that it was presented and allowed as a fee of the office."

[11] It cannot be persuasively argued that the Legislature intended to make the collection of fees from the public an offense for which the official might be removed and at the same time say that moneys collected illegally from the public, by passing through the channels of the taxing power, should not. It is the wrong of burdening the public with charges with which they should not be burdened that constitutes the offense. An examination of the civil action, County of Los Angeles v. Cline, 37 Cal. App. 607, 174 P. 73, indicates further that the rule should be that any illegal overcharges should be held to be the "charging and collecting" of illegal fees for services rendered, within the contemplation of section 772 of the Penal Code. It is therefore within the jurisdiction of the court in so far as this question is concerned for it to proceed to hear the charges herein designated as third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and that part of the seventh not stricken out.

[12] Petitioner's next contention is that a director of an irrigation district is a state officer and not a district officer, and, being such, the superior court has no jurisdiction to entertain the accusation under section 772 of the Penal Code, which provision reads as follows, to wit:

> "When an accusation in writing, verified by the oath of any person, is presented to a superior court, alleging that any officer within the jurisdiction of the court has been guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered, or to be rendered, in his office, or has refused or neglected to perform the official duties pertaining to his office the court must cite the party charged to appear before the court at a time not more than ten nor less than five days from the time the accusation was presented, and on that day, or some other subsequent day not more than twenty days from that on which the accusation was presented, must proceed to hear, in a summary manner, the accusation, and evidence offered in support of the same, and the answer and evidence offered by the party accused; and if, on such hearing, it appears that the charge is sustained, the court must enter a decree that the party accused be deprived of his office, and must enter a judgment for five hundred dollars in favor of the informer, and such costs as are allowed in civil cases."

He relies upon Kilburn v. Law, 111 Cal. 237, 43 P. 615, wherein it was held that the superior court had no jurisdiction to entertain an accusation against the bank commissioners, and authorities holding that irrigation districts are not strictly political subdivisions nor strictly public corporations, but government mandatories or agencies vested with limited powers to accomplish limited and specific work. It is apparent, we think, that an analogy cannot be drawn between bank commissioners whose activities and powers are state-wide and directors of an irrigation district confined to a particular district. Nor do we think it is significant that they are not strictly political subdivisions. The directors are elected by the qualified electors and voters of the irrigation district, and are responsible to, and answerable to, the voters of that district for a proper discharge of their official duties. It would be a strained and wholly unjustified construction to say that such officials should not be answerable to the voters of the district the same as officers of a municipality or other political subdivision. The clear legislative intent was to protect the public against derelict officials performing their duties within the county in which the superior court sits.

Petitioner attaches much importance to the statement found in the opinion in Re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 28 P. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106, that, "The district officers thus become public officers of the state," and argues that this is the equivalent of saying that they are state-wide officers. He overlooks the words "district officers" and also the principles therein enunciated as reasons for holding the act to be constitutional, to wit: That the state, operating through the Legislature, has a right to delegate part of its authority to a district to attain the general welfare, but which may in fact, so far as legislative matters go, only affect a particular district. That as the holders of this delegated authority these officers of a district do represent the legislative authority of the state. We think this is made clear by a further quotation from that case as follows:

> "With greater propriety has it been left to the Legislature to provide the mode of organization and the powers to be exercised by different species of municipal corporations. Such corporations are but the agents or representatives of the state in the particular locality in which they exist. They are organized for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of the Legislature in its desire to provide for the general welfare of the state, and in the accomplishment of which legislative convenience or constitutional requirements have made them essential. Although in this state the Legislature is required to provide such agencies under general laws, it is authorized, under its general power of legislation, to invest such corporations, when created, with the same powers which, without such restriction, it could itself have exercised; and in providing for such organizations it need confer upon them only such powers, as in its judgment are proper to be exercised by them in the discharge of the particular functions of government which may be conferred upon them. Being the representatives of the Legislature in the various localities of the state, the requirements for organization, as well as the powers to be exercised, vary with the character of the purpose for which they may be created. Hence the general laws with the Legislature may enact for the organization of public corporations may be as numerous as the objects for which such corporations may be created. For each of these objects the law is the same, but there would be a manifest impropriety in requiring that the organization of a levee district or an irrigation district should be conducted in the same manner as the organization of a corporation for the management of a public park or the control of the school department. Whether the districts to which such general laws are applicable, or in which the people thereof may avail themselves of the privilege conferred, be many or few, is immaterial. Even if there be but a single district to which the law is applicable at the time of its enactment, the Legislature would be justified, under its legislative power, to pass general laws in making such provision for that district. Whenever a special district of the state requires special legislation therefor, it is competent for the Legislature, by general law, to authorize the organization of such district into a public corporation, with such powers of government as it may choose to confer upon it. It is not necessary that such public corporation should be vested with all governmental powers, but the Legislature may clothe it with such as, in its judgment, are proper to be exercised within and for the benefit of such district."

Therefore, in using the words "public officers of the state," the court intended to convey the meaning that they were public officials, and in that sense every public official, whether of a municipality, county, district or state, be his duties of great or minor importance, is a "public officer of the state." This is but another way of expressing what was also said by the court in that case:

> "Its" (the district) "officers are public officers, chosen by the electors of the district, and invested with public duties."

Section 889 of the Penal Code must be construed with section 772 of the Penal Code, but when the word "district" is used in section 889 of the Penal Code it is descriptive of a geographical part of the state, and it may be a school district, an irrigation district, or any other district to which has been intrusted the discharge of certain public duties for that particular district.

In re Madera Irrigation District, supra, is authority, however, for the proposition that officers of the irrigation district are public officers or officials. And as such we are constrained to hold to be within the contemplation of section 18, art. 4, of the Constitution, designating the Legislature as the body to provide ways and means for the removal of those officers not liable to impeachment as that word is ordinarily understood. They are charged with the discharge of public duties for the general welfare of a particular district. Or, as stated in Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 183, 201 P. 120, agents for a particular political unit exercising some governmental function.

[13, 14] Petitioner also questions the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that section 73 of the California Irrigation District Act provides the only offenses for which the directors of an irrigation district may be removed, and, being exclusive in its nature, section 772 of the Penal Code cannot apply. The material portion of section 73 of the California Irrigation District Act reads:

> "For any willful violation of any express duty herein provided for, on the part of any officer herein named, he shall be liable upon his official bond, and be subject to removal from office, by proceedings brought in the superior court of the county wherein the office of the board of directors of the district is located, by any assessment payer of the district."

It will be noted that section 73 uses the words, "willful violation of any express duty herein provided for." We see nothing herein to indicate that the "willful violation of any express duty" provided for in the act itself is to be the only offense for which the official should be removed. It is a familiar rule of statutory construction that where there are two provisions relating to the same subject-matter they must, if possible, be construed so as to maintain the integrity of both. Bateman v. Colgan, 111 Cal. 580, 44 P. 238; People v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. App. 770, 222 P. 864. The only construction which does not do violence to this rule is that both remedies were intended to be authorized and were authorized for the protection of the public, and that it was intended that they should be cumulative and separate; section 73 of the California Irrigation District Act providing for willful violation of any express duty, set forth in the act, and sections 772 and 758 of the Penal Code providing the general remedies for misconduct or misfeasance and nonfeasance in office.

The peremptory writ is denied.

WORKS, P. J. I concur.

CRAIG, J. I dissent, mainly because, in my opinion, officers of an irrigation district are not subject to a proceeding of this nature.

---

80 Cal. App. 724

DICKEY v. DUNN. (Civ. 5209.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 20, 1927.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⚷37(1)—Right of action of purchaser, relying on false representations, is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him.

Where a purchaser is justified in relying, and in fact does rely, on false representations, his right of action is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⚷37(4)—Statement of value, made as positive affirmation of fact, may be fraudulent representation warranting rescission.

Statement as to value when made as positive affirmation of fact, and not as mere expression of opinion, may be a fraudulent representation warranting rescission.

3. Contracts 🔑100—Trial court must determine whether statement of value was made as expression of opinion, or statement of fact.

Where there is a doubt as to whether statement as to value is made as positive affirmation of fact, or is mere expression of opinion, the question is one for determination by trial court.

4. Evidence 🔑258(2)—Principal and agent 🔑123(1)—Evidence held to show real estate agent was acting for vendor, making his representations admissible in action for rescission.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that real estate agent was acting for vendor, hence representations of agent were admissible in action for rescission.

5. Evidence 🔑471(3)—Testimony as to observations made on property held admissible in action to rescind.

Testimony of witnesses who were not shown to be experts, as to their observations made on property, held admissible in action to rescind.

6. Evidence 🔑501(7)—Testimony of owner of land in immediate vicinity, as to price paid therefor, held inadmissible in action for rescission.

In action to rescind sale of real estate, testimony of owner of land in vicinity, relative to price paid for property, held inadmissible.

7. Cancellation of instruments 🔑47—Evidence held to show purchaser acted with reasonable promptness in bringing action for rescission.

Evidence, in action to rescind purchase of real estate, held to show that purchaser acted with reasonable promptness, so that relief was not barred by laches.

8. Contracts 🔑352(6)—Question of whether party defrauded has rescinded promptly is primarily for trial court.

Whether or not party defrauded has rescinded promptly will depend on all circumstances of particular case, and is question primarily for trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by John Henry Zimmerman against Burt A. Dunn. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals, Elizabeth W. Z. Dickey, as administratrix, being substituted for plaintiff after his death. Judgment affirmed.

Kaufman & Martel, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Webster & Lyon, of Paso Robles, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment rescinding an assignment of a contract for the sale of real property executed by appellant, Dunn, and a conveyance of like property by plaintiff, Zimmerman. Subsequent to the taking of the appeal, Zimmerman died and Elizabeth W. Z. Dickey, as administratrix of his estate, was substituted as respondent therein. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll with a bill of exceptions, specifying as grounds for reversal an insufficiency of evidence to sustain the findings and rulings by the court in admitting and rejecting certain testimony.

It appears without conflict that on March 7, 1921, appellant was the owner of a contract for the purchase of a 5-acre tract of land in San Luis Obispo county, the purchase price being the sum of $2,000, of which the sum of $500 had been paid. Appellant had improved the property by the erection thereon of a dwelling house and certain outbuildings. A well had been sunk thereon in which was installed a pump and a motor engine, and the land planted with prune trees. The plaintiff, who was the owner of a lot in the city of Los Angeles upon which was erected his dwelling house, wished to purchase country property, and to that end communicated with a real estate agent named Schutte, who resided in San Luis Obispo county. Shortly thereafter appellant, who also resided in the latter county, stated to the agent his wish to sell his interest in the 5-acre tract in question, and, being apprised by the latter of the communication from the plaintiff, went to Los Angeles and commenced negotiations, which led to an exchange of the properties.

It was alleged and found that, as the inducement to the purchase of appellant's interest, the latter represented the property to be of the value of $5,000, the land to be productive, free from hardpan, adapted to the raising of fruits and vegetables, and that the well thereon furnished an abundance of water fit for human consumption. It was further found that the property did not exceed in value $2,000, and that the representations alleged were, and were known to the appellant to be, untrue; that plaintiff, due to his lack of experience in the buying of farm and orchard property, knew nothing of the character and worth of the property, and relied wholly upon the representations made, all of which was known to appellant, and that the purchase was induced thereby.

Plaintiff, as the consideration for the transfer of his property, received the assignment mentioned and the sum of $300. After taking possession he expended the sum of $412.85 in an attempt to increase the water supply and in replacing fruit trees which, as may fairly be inferred from the evidence, died as the result of the presence of hardpan beneath the surface of the soil. These sums, less the amount received as above, were allowed as part of the judgment.

[1-3] The evidence shows that the plaintiff, who was by trade a watchmaker, had no knowledge of soil conditions and was without sufficient experience to determine the truth of the representations. Where a purchaser is justified in relying, and in fact does rely, upon false representations his right of action is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him (Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 154 P. 851) and while it appears that the plaintiff visited the property before the transfer was made, the evidence sufficiently supports the finding that he relied upon the representations both as to its value and character. The statements as to the character of the soil and as to the water supply were clearly misrepresentations of fact. French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 217 P. 515; Stone v. McCarty, 64 Cal. App. 158, 220 P. 690. A statement as to value is not always made as a mere expression of opinion. It may be a positive affirmation of a fact, intended as such by the party making it, and reasonably regarded as such by the party to whom it is made; and when it is such it is like any other representation of fact, and may be a fraudulent representation warranting rescission. Crandall v. Parks, 152 Cal. 772, 93 P. 1018. Where there is a doubt as to whether or not such representation was intended and understood as the expression of an opinion or a statement of fact, the question is one for determination by the trial court. French v. Freeman, supra; Stockton v. Hind, 51 Cal. App. 131, 196 P. 122.

[4] Evidence of certain representations made by Schutte, the real estate agent, was admitted over appellant's objection that the evidence was insufficient to show that the former was acting as agent for appellant in the transaction. While it appears that no written authority to act was given by appellant, it was shown that the latter alone paid for the service rendered; that he was accompanied by the agent to Los Angeles, where both met the plaintiff; and that when the latter inspected the land in question, appellant being then absent, the agent was present. The evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that the latter was acting for appellant and to negate the contention that he was merely a middleman.

[5] Certain witnesses, who were not shown to be experts, testified over appellant's objection to their observations made on the property as to the existence of hardpan, and one as to the number of replanted trees thereon as compared with those on neighboring land. This testimony was relevant, related to observed facts, and was properly admitted.

[6] A witness called by appellant, who testified that she was the owner of a lot in the tract wherein the property in question was situated, but was not familiar with the prices of land in the immediate vicinity, was asked, on direct examination, to state the price paid for her property. An objection to the question was properly sustained. Central Pac. R. R. Co. v. Pearson et al., 35 Cal. 247; Spring Valley W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 532, 28 P. 681; Freitas v. Suisun City, 170 Cal. 263, 267, 149 P. 553; Estate of Ross, 171 Cal. 64, 66, 151 P. 1138; Reclamation Dist. v. Inglin, 31 Cal. App. 495, 500, 160 P. 1098.

[7, 8] Appellant further contends that the right to relief is barred by laches. The evidence shows that plaintiff took possession during the month of March, 1921. The notice of rescission was given and the action filed April, 1923. The plaintiff testified that during the spring and summer of 1922 approximately 150 of the trees died; that in the course of their removal and after consulting neighboring farmers as to the cause of the condition, he became apprised of the extent to which the soil was underlaid by hardpan. The exact date when he became fully aware of the fact does not clearly appear, but the evidence supports the inference that this was not earlier than the fall of that year. We think that, in view of the circumstances shown by the evidence, it cannot be said that the plaintiff failed to act with reasonable promptness. As was said in French v. Freeman, supra:

> "Whether or not the defrauded party has rescinded 'promptly' will depend upon all the circumstances of the particular case, and is, of course, a question primarily for the trial court."

The implied finding in this connection was adverse to appellant; and this, together with the other findings, being fairly sustained by the evidence, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

80 Cal. App. 667

OFFERDAHL v. MOTOR TRANSIT CO. et al. (Civ. 5322.)★

(District Court of Appeal. First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 15, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 14, 1927.)

1. Negligence 🔑72 — One placed in danger through another's fault may not be negligent in putting himself in more dangerous position in attempting to escape.

Where person without fault on his part, and through negligence of another, is put in such apparent peril as to cause loss of self-possession, putting himself in more dangerous position in attempting to escape may not constitute negligence.

2. Highways 🔑184(3)—Question of negligence causing collision on highway is generally for jury.

Where two vehicles collide on public highway, and damage results therefrom, question of whose negligence caused injury is generally for jury.

3. Trial 🔑260(1)—Refusal of particular instruction held not error, where court fully instructed jury on issues.

Refusal of specific instruction requested in action for injuries held not error, where court fully and fairly instructed jury as to all law applicable to facts of case.

4. Carriers 🔑321(21) — Instruction on burden of proof as to avoidance of negligence of motorbus driver colliding with car while on wrong side of road, injuring bus passenger, held not misleading.

Where plaintiff, while passenger in defendant's bus, was injured in collision with another car, operators of both cars claiming the other was on wrong side of road, instruction that bus driver was negligent as matter of law from mere fact that he drove on left-hand side, and that, on proof thereof, it was necessary for defendant to show that driver's act was without his fault, and that, in absence of such proof, plaintiff could recover, held not erroneous as misleading.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by Ingvald Offerdahl against the Motor Transit Company and Otto Pauls. The defendant last named defaulted, and judgment was rendered against him in plaintiff's favor. On trial of the action against the defendant first named, there was a judgment for the defendant Motor Transit Company, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
W. I. Gilbert and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff while riding as a passenger for hire in one of the auto stages of respondent Motor Transit Company.

The complaint alleged the company and defendant Otto Pauls to be joint tort-feasors, and it charged that they so negligently operated their respective machines so as to collide one with the other, causing the plaintiff the injuries complained of. Defendant Otto Pauls defaulted, and a judgment in the sum of $2,000 was rendered against him. Defendant Motor Company denied specifically the allegations of the complaint, and, further answering, alleged that the accident was caused solely through the negligence of its codefendant Pauls. Trial was had by jury as to defendant Motor Company, which resulted in a verdict in its favor, and, upon judgment being rendered thereon, this appeal was taken.

The sole question here presented relates to the giving and refusal to give certain instructions as to the duty of the driver of an automobile when suddenly confronted with a dangerous situation. So much of the evidence as is necessary for an understanding and discussion of the case shows that on June 18, 1922, plaintiff was being carried as a passenger for hire by defendant Motor Transit Company in one of its autobusses, and, while en route therein at a point on the public highway about half way between the town of Montebello and the city of Los Angeles, the bus collided with a car owned by defendant Pauls, resulting in the alleged injuries. At the time of the accident the autobus of defendant was traveling westerly upon the highway towards Los Angeles, and the automobile of the defendant Pauls was being operated and driven thereon by one Cooper, as the agent of Pauls, in an easterly direction toward Montebello. The accident occurred in the nighttime, and each of the defendants claimed that the machine of the other was on the wrong side of the road. Upon this subject there was a sharp conflict in the evidence. Each set of witnesses agreed that both vehicles were operated upon their right side of the highway until within a point variously estimated at from 10 to 100 feet of each other. One set of witnesses testified that the Chevrolet car belonging to defendant Pauls then left its right side, and confronted the driver of the auto stage in which plaintiff was riding; the other set testifying that the stage left its proper position and crossed the road directly in front of the Chevrolet car. When confronted with the situation, the driver of defendant company testified that he had turned to the left to escape the impending danger.

[1-3] The rule is well established that, where one without his own fault is through the negligence of another put in such apparent peril as to cause loss of self-possession, and as a natural result thereof, in attempting to escape, he puts himself in a more dangerous position, he may not be guilty of negligence in so doing. This rule is held to apply only where such person is placed in danger through the negligence of another, and without fault on his part. When two vehicles collide on the public highway, and damage results therefrom, the question of whose negligence caused the injury is generally one for the jury. Newman v. Overholtzer, 182 Cal. 778, 190 P. 175; Simonsen v. Christopher, 186 Cal. 786, 200 P. 615. It may be conceded that the evidence to the effect that the driver of the Chevrolet car in turning to the left, if believed by the jury, was an act reasonably calculated to cause the driver of defendant's machine to apprehend danger, and justified him in altering his course, even though it resulted in the collision which caused the injury. The questions presented under the evidence were, as claimed by appellant: (1) Whether the driver of the auto stage was suddenly confronted with danger; (2) whether or not his own driving produced such danger; (3) what he did thereafter; and (4) what he had a right in law to do. No question is here raised concerning the conflict in the evidence, the sole claim being that the verdict reached was undoubtedly the result of erroneous instructions upon the subject indicated. At the request of defendant, the trial court gave an instruction relating to the duty of the driver of a vehicle when suddenly confronted with a dangerous situation which did not include within its terms the element that the danger must have been caused through the negligence of another. Because of the omission of this element, it is claimed it had a tendency of misleading the jury as to the measure of duty required of defendant. The court also refused an instruction presented by plaintiff which included the element, giving as a reason for such refusal that the point was fully covered by other instructions. We see no merit in appellant's contention. The court fully and fairly instructed the jury as to the law applicable to the facts, and the instructions were amply sufficient to properly advise the jury upon all the issues presented. No single instruction can contain all the law upon a subject.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

[4] The jury was instructed in substance, that in determining whether it should find a verdict against defendant Motor Company it should consider the time and place of the accident; that defendant owed to plaintiff the duty of exercising the highest degree of care; the speed of the motorbus; the side of the highway upon which the accident happened, and all other facts and circumstances proven; and if, after considering the same, it was of the opinion that the company was guilty of any negligence that contributed in any degree or in any manner to the happening of the accident, it should find in favor of plaintiff and against defendant. The court also correctly instructed the jury as to the presumption of negligence by reason of the mere happening of the accident. As to the degree of care that defendant was bound to exercise when confronted with danger, the court charged the jury that men, when suddenly confronted with danger, are not to be held to the strict degree of accountability for their acts that they would be under ordinary circumstances, and, in judging whether or not the driver of the motorbus exercised the high degree of care required of him, his actions were to be measured by the facts and circumstances as they would have appeared to a reasonably prudent man in the exercise of the highest degree of care; and the fact that he might have taken some other course, and thus avoided the accident, when viewed from circumstances discovered later, would not be negligence on his part, simply because he chose the wrong course to avoid a danger then open and apparent to him. Immediately following the court further instructed the jury that, if it found that the bus in which the plaintiff was riding as a passenger at any time during the accident was operated or driven to the left of the center of the highway, in the direction in which it was being driven, this fact alone constituted negligence as a matter of law, and the burden was then upon defendant to show that it became necessary without fault on its driver's part to so operate the bus, and, unless it was so shown, defendant was guilty of negligence as a matter of law. Upon the same subject the jury was further instructed, in substance, that the driver of the bus had the right to operate his vehicle along the right-hand side of the boulevard, and had the right to assume at all times that other persons operating their automobiles along the same boulevard would do so in accordance with the law, and that the drivers thereof would use the right-hand side of the road at the time they attempted to drive past a point at which they would meet, if it found that the owner of the Chevrolet automobile suddenly and without warning swerved to the left and in front of the motorbus, and thereafter the driver of the bus did all in his power to avoid the accident he was not guilty of negligence. It seems manifest to us that these instructions in an orderly manner fully and fairly stated the law upon the subject with relation to the facts, and that they are not inconsistent or prejudicial to appellant. They fully advised the jury that the driver of the bus was guilty of negligence as a matter of law from the mere fact that he drove upon the left-hand side of the road, and that upon proof of this fact it became necessary for defendant, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, to show that the driver's act was without any fault of his, and that, in the absence of such proof, plaintiff was entitled to recover. We do not consider that there is any merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 713

NEW YORK INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5572.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 19, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1927.)

1. Master and servant 🔑367—Control as to means and method of work determines whether person is employee or independent contractor.

Whether person, sought to be charged under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended), is employee or independent contractor, depends on power of control as to result of work, and also as to means and method by which result is accomplished.

2. Master and servant 🔑367—Workman paid by piece rate comes within provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act.

Workman who is paid wages by piece or quantity comes within Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended) along with workman who is paid by day, as wages may be measured by time, piece, or any other standard.

3. Master and servant 🔑367—Whether person is "independent contractor" depends, not on fact of actual interference with control of work, but right so to interfere.

Whether person sought to be charged for injury is employee or "independent contractor" depends, not on fact of actual interference with control of workman, but right to interfere, as distinguished from act itself or failure to act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Independent Contractor.]

4. Master and servant 🔑367—Right to discharge involves control, on which relation of employer and employee rests.

Right to immediately discharge employee involves right to control, on which is determined question as to whether person sought to be charged is employee or independent contractor.

5. Master and servant 🔑405(2)—Evidence held to sustain finding that principal contractor was employee, notwithstanding he received wages, and took orders, from another contractor.

Where person against whom award was made as employer retained right to control workmen hired on job or to fire them at any time, finding of Industrial Accident Commission that person who paid workman and gave him instructions was employee, and not independent contractor, held sustained by evidence.

6. Master and servant 🔑367—One from whom workman received instructions and wages was not necessarily independent contractor.

Person from whom workman collected wages and took instructions was not necessarily independent contractor, though he collected his wages only on job's completion.

Application by the New York Indemnity Company, employer's insurance carrier, for writ of certiorari to be directed to the Industrial Accident Commission, Richard B. Lennon, employee, and J. P. Jessel, to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation to employee as employee of O. W. Dorman. Petition for writ denied.

George L. Greer and S. L. Carpenter, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Petitioner, the insurance carrier for one O. W. Dorman, has applied for a writ of certiorari to review a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation to Richard B. Lennon for injuries received arising out of and in the course of his employment as painter on a building being constructed by Dorman as contractor. Petitioner claims that J. P. Jessel was an independent subcontractor, operating under contract with Dorman, and that Lennon was an employee of Jessel and not of Dorman. The sole question is whether or not Lennon while employed as painter on the house in question was an employee of Dorman or was an employee of Jessel and of Jessel only.

The evidence relied upon by petitioner is set forth in his petition. Petitioner maintains that the evidence does not justify the finding that Lennon was in the employ of Dorman, and further contends that the evidence does show without substantial conflict that he was not in the employ of Dorman at the time he sustained the injuries, but was then an employee of Jessel, whose relation to Dorman then was that of an independent contractor; and that in awarding compensation to Lennon against petitioner, the Commission acted without and in excess of its powers.

[1-4] "In determining in any given case whether a person was an employee or an independent contractor there are usually present various circumstances which are persuasive to one conclusion, and other circumstances persuasive to the opposite conclusion. But an analysis of the cases makes it plain that the determinative factor is usually found in the solution of the question: Who has the power of control, not as to the result of the work only, but as to the means and method by which such result is accomplished?" Fidelity & C. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 404, 407, 216 P. 578, 579 (43 A. L. R. 1304). "A workman who is paid wages by the piece or quantity comes within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act the same as one who is paid by the day. Wages may be measured by time, by the piece, or by any other standard. McKinstry v. Guy Coal Co., 116 Kan. 192, 225 P. 743, and note in 38 A. L. R. 839. One of the best tests to determine whether the relation is that of an independent contractor or that of employer and employee is the right of control. It is not the fact of actual interference with the control, but the right to interfere, that makes the difference between an independent contractor and servant or agent. Tuttle v. Emburg Martin Lumber Co., 192 Mich. 385, 399, 158 N. W. 875, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 664. It is not a question of interference, or noninterference, not a question of whether there have been suggestions, or even orders, as to the conduct of the work, but a question of the right to act, as distinguished from the act itself or the failure to act. Carleton v. Foundry, etc., Co., 199 Mich. 148, 152, 165 N. W. 816, 19 A. L. R. 1141. * * * Coincident with the right of control is the right of either the employer or the employee to terminate the relation without liability. This is but another way of stating the rule, for the right to immediately discharge involves the right of control. Industrial Comm. v. Bonfils, 78 Colo. 306, 241 P. 735. The decision of the District Court of Appeal in Helmuth v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 59 Cal. App. 160, 210 P. 428, correctly applies the rule in this state." Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 570, 571.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

[5, 6] An examination of the evidence as contained in the petition demonstrates that there is evidence sufficient to have warranted the commission in finding that Jessel was merely the foreman of Dorman; that both Jessel and Lennon received their compensation as wages; that the wages of Lennon, although received by him from the hands of Jessel, were merely advanced by Jessel, and, in fact, came from Dorman; and that Dorman retained the right to discharge Lennon at any time, and therefore retained the right of control of the manner in which the work should be done. The facts that Lennon usually received his instructions and his wages from Jessel, and that Jessel did not ordinarily collect from Dorman on any job until its completion, are not circumstances conclusively proving that Jessel was an independent contractor. Dorman made his contracts with the owners under what is commonly known as the cost-plus basis; that is, his contract price was the cost of construction plus a percentage. Jessel was allowed wages for his own work, and, in addition, was allowed $1 per day for each man employed under Jessel on the job. This allowance on each man, "was for brushes and for profits." As Dorman said, "The deal with Jessel was that he should get $1 per day on each man and his own wages." As to control of the employees, Dorman further said:

"Mr. Jessel did not ordinarily consult me about laying off painters and taking them on. If I saw a man on the job, and didn't like him I would tell him to lay him off same as I would with any subcontractor. I have asked him to put a man on. I am boss of Mr. Jessel when he works for me, and everybody else. I am not boss of everybody under him, they take orders from him. If I saw a man doing something objectionable, I would enter protest with Mr. Jessel. My understanding with Mr. Jessel was that he ran my painting. He furnished my material, and charged me up for the material and labor and he was allowed one dollar a day per man extra. Of course he got his own wages all the time because he was running different jobs. At the end of the job he turned in so much for material, so much for labor, no items. * * * I never checked up on his books. I know he was perfectly honest. I could have discontinued relations with Mr. Jessel in the middle of a job if I felt dissatisfied. I can fire anybody off the job at any time."

Under the foregoing evidence, we are satisfied that the commission was authorized to find that Dorman was the employer of Lennon.

The petition for writ is denied.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

RIVERSIDE COUNTY v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. (Civ. 5569.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 18, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 18, 1927.)

1. Agriculture ⚷15—County may foreclose lien for eradicating noxious weeds, though complaint alleged work commenced before expiration of time in which owner could act.

County may foreclose statutory lien for eradication of noxious weeds, though complaint alleged that work commenced before expiration of time in which owner was entitled to act under notice, where no expenditures claimed by county were for labor done before expiration of such period.

2. Agriculture ⚷15—Lien for eradicating weeds held not invalid because of allegation work commenced before expiration of time in which owner could act.

County's lien for eradication of noxious weeds held not invalid because of allegation that work was commenced before expiration of time in which owner was entitled to act, on contention that statutory procedure was not followed where court found that work began seven days after date alleged.

3. Agriculture ⚷15—Lien for eradicating noxious weeds may be imposed on entire premises without finding as to particular lots; "different premises" (Pol. Code, §§ 3628, 3650).

In county's action to foreclose statutory lien for eradication of noxious weeds, court is not required to find which particular lots were infested with thistle, but may impose lien on entire premises, in view of Pol. Code, §§ 3628, 3650, but parcels separated by fence are different "premises."

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 259 P. 759.

4. Agriculture 🔑15—Premature claim for exterminating ground squirrels may be deducted from judgment to enforce lien for eradicating noxious weeds.

Where county's claim for exterminating ground squirrels was premature, such claim, being entirely separable from claim for eradication of noxious weeds, may be deducted from judgment in county's action to foreclose statutory lien without injury to landowner.

5. Agriculture 🔑11—One notice cannot subject land on opposite sides of road to lien for eradicating noxious weeds.

Land on opposite sides of road cannot be subjected to county's lien for eradication of noxious weeds by putting up one notice.

6. Agriculture 🔑15—Findings contrary to notice as to when horticultural commissioner entered to eradicate noxious weeds, held not variance invalidating lien.

In county's action to foreclose statutory lien for eradication of noxious weeds, statements in notice of lien that horticultural commissioner entered premises on certain date is not binding on plaintiff, and findings of trial court to contrary do not therefore create fatal variance invalidating lien.

7. Agriculture 🔑11—Statute creating mechanic's lien should not be considered in construing statute giving lien for eradicating noxious weeds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183; Pol. Code, § 2322a).

Each statute creating lien is entity unto itself, unless it contains cross-reference so that Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, and following, regarding mechanics' liens, is not to be considered by analogy in construing Pol. Code, § 2322a (St. 1917, p. 631), relative to lien for eradicating noxious weeds.

8. Agriculture 🔑11—Notice to eradicate noxious weeds held properly served by horticultural inspector by direction of commissioner.

Notice to abate nuisance by eradicating noxious weeds held properly served by horticultural inspector, who was directed by horticultural commissioner to serve it, since person serving notice is not required to have title of deputy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by Riverside County against the Title Insurance & Trust Company, to enforce a statutory lien for the eradication of noxious weeds and extermination of ground squirrels. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Woodruff & Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Albert H. Ford, Dist. Atty., of Riverside, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to foreclose a statutory lien. The defendant answered, and the trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and caused a decree to be entered in accordance therewith. The defendant has appealed from the judgment, and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

The defendant is the owner of certain lands, including, among others, lands described in the plaintiff's complaint. So far as the record discloses the entire holding of the defendant is known as Fairhaven Farms, which was heretofore mapped and platted and a map thereof was filed of record. In the bill of exceptions there is evidence to the effect that Limonite street runs east and west and that some of the lands owned by the defendant are on the north side and some are on the south side of that street. It further appears that running along the north side of Limonite street is a fence. No other fences are mentioned in the record.

According to the uncontradicted evidence, on the 8th day of July, 1919, Russian thistle was growing in more or less abundance on the lands owned by the defendant. At the same time there were many ground squirrels on the same lands. The horticultural commissioner made an inspection, and, on finding the presence of the thistles and squirrels, proceeded to take steps to abate the nuisance. It is not disputed but what he attempted to follow the provisions of section 2322a of the Policital Code (chapter 508 of the Statutes of 1917).

On July 8, 1919, he caused Frank Babel, an inspector theretofore appointed by him, to serve a notice on the defendant to abate the nuisance. Said notice required the defendant to abate the nuisance "within ten days after the service" of the notice on the defendant. As the defendant did not reside in Riverside county, the notice was served by posting it and by mailing a copy to the owner. Those acts were done on July 8, 1919. Babel posted the notice on lot 8, which is bounded by Limonite street on the south, and which is about one-half way from the east toward the west in crossing over Limonite street. Thereafter, no steps having been taken by the defendant to abate the nuisance, the horticultural commissioner sent men and teams to do the work. The work consisted of scattering poisoned wheat to kill the ground squirrels and of plowing and raking the ground and thereafter of burning the débris for the purpose of destroying the thistles. The expense incurred in scattering poisoned wheat, etc., was $15, which sum was included by the trial court in estimating the amount of the plaintiff's lien. The men and teams entered on the lands owned by the defendant and commenced the work on July 18, 1919. As found by the trial court, they did not enter the lands described in the complaint until July 24, 1919. The judgment appealed from does not include any moneys expended for labor done prior to July 24th. Other expenditures were eliminated.

[1] The appellant contends that its demurrer should have been sustained. In this behalf it claims that, as it was served with the notice at Los Angeles, 60 miles away, therefore it was entitled to commence work at any time within the 10-day notice, plus two additional days. However, it points out that in the complaint it is alleged the work commenced July 18; that is, three days before the defendant's time had expired. The vice in the contention is that plaintiff's complaint contains several allegations as to when labor was done and performed, and it does not appear therefrom that any of the expenditures now claimed by the plaintiff were incurred for labor done or performed prior to the 22d day of July, 1919. The labor was not therefore prematurely rendered.

[2, 3] The appellant relies on the same facts to support its contention that the statutory procedure was not followed, and no valid lien ever attached to the premises, or any part thereof. In making this contention it relies on an allegation in the plaintiff's complaint that some work was done on the 18th day of July, and a recital in the notice of lien to the same effect, but turning to the findings, it will be seen that the trial court found the fact to be "that said commissioner entered upon the premises described in the claim of lien and in the complaint on the 25th day of July, 1919." In doing so he was following the statutory procedure and the plaintiff's lien was not rendered invalid for that reason. The appellant complains because the trial court did not find which particular lots were infested with thistle and impose a lien separately on those lots only which were infested. The first answer is that the statute contains no requirement supporting the contention of the appellant. The statute authorized the plaintiff's officers to inspect "any premises," or "any other place," and to proceed accordingly. The statute did not impose the duty on the county official to proceed against the lands "by sections or fractions of sections." Pol. Code, §§ 3628 and 3650. In other words, there is much in the statute to indicate that the Legislature intended that each holding could be proceeded against whether the entire holding was infested with the particular pest or only a portion was so infested. In this same connection the appellant points out that some of the work was done on the property south of Limonite street. That is true, but no part of the expenses for work done south of Limonite street is involved in this litigation. As a fence separates the parcels, the portion in the south was a different "premises."

[4] The appellant contends that the claim for exterminating ground squirrels was premature and cites County of San Benito v. Wapple, 188 Cal. 423, 205 P. 673. We see no answer to the point. However, the claim included $15, and no more, and is entirely separable from the rest of the plaintiff's claim; therefore it can be deducted without injury to the appellant.

[5] The appellant argues that, if the several lots north of the road may be covered by putting up one notice, the same reasoning will include the lots south of the road, and that it follows that the entity is all of the defendant's lands comprised, within the expression Fairhaven Farms. With this contention we do not agree. In the first place, a fence and a road divided the two properties; in the next place, if the statute must be construed as using the word premises or place as synonymous with Fairhaven Farms, it is equally to be contended that the statute would likewise be construed to include an entire township as being synonymous with those words. But there is nothing in the statute leading to such extremes.

[6, 7] As recited above, one of the statements contained in the notice of lien was that the horticultural commissioner entered upon the premises on July 18, 1919. The appellant asserts that such a statement is binding upon the plaintiff and that the findings of the trial court to the contrary create a fatal variance. That there is a variance it is quite clear, but there is no reason for saying that the variance is fatal. The statute does not attempt to state what shall be contained in the claim of lien. The appellant's argument rests on the analogy which it would draw from the decisions which construed statutes regarding mechanics' liens. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 et seq. However, in California we have many statutes creating liens. There is no more reason why we should couple Political Code, § 2322a, and Code of Civil Procedure, § 1183 et seq., than that we should couple it with any other statute on the subject. Each of those statutes is an entity unto itself unless it contains a cross-reference. Keener v. Eagle Lake L. & I. Co., 110 Cal. 627, 631, 43 P. 14.

[8] The appellant calls attention to the decision of the Supreme Court entitled County of San Bernardino v. Stewart, 173 Cal. 236, 159 P. 717, and thereupon it contends that the notice to abate the nuisance, although it was signed by the horticultural commissioner in person, it was not properly served, because it was served by Mr. Babel, who was not a deputy horticultural commissioner, but was a horticultural inspector, who was directed by the commissioner to serve the notice. The statute provides that "any person deputed by the said commissioner" may serve the notice. The statute, by the expression used, does not mean that the person serving the notice shall have the title of deputy, but it does mean that the person serving the notice must either be the principal or a person selected and authorized by the principal to perform the act. Cent. Dict. "depute."

We find no error in the record except the charge for exterminating ground squirrels. The judgment will be modified by deducting $15 from the principal amount contained in the judgment and as so modified the judgment will stand affirmed. It is further ordered that respondent recover its costs.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 709

PEOPLE v. ALLAN. (Cr. 1296.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 19, 1927.)

1. Indictment and information ⚷171—Variance is not material if instrument pleaded informs defendant of criminal act so that he is not misled.

In determining whether variance is material, question is whether instrument pleaded informs defendant of criminal act, of which he is charged so fully and correctly that, considering proof introduced against him, he is not misled in making defense or placed in danger of being twice put in jeopardy for same offense.

2. Forgery ⚷34(2) — Fictitious travelers' check, introduced in trial, held material variance from that set out in information (Pen. Code, § 476).

Fictitious travelers' check, introduced at trial in prosecution for violating Pen. Code, § 476, held material variance from that set out in information, in view of differences relating to parties and provisions forming material parts of contract.

3. Criminal law ⚷170—That fictitious travelers' check produced at trial was material variance from that set out in information will not bar prosecution for offense shown by proof (Pen. Code, § 476).

That fictitious travelers' check, introduced in prosecution for violating Pen. Code, § 476, constituted material variance from that set out in information, will not bar prosecution of defendant for offense shown by proof, since he cannot be put in jeopardy by indictment under which he could not be convicted.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Harry Allan was convicted of violating Penal Code, § 476, by uttering and passing a fictitious check, and he appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 241 P. 897.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CASHIN, J. Defendant was charged by an information with the violation of section 476 of the Penal Code. He appeals from the judgment entered on the verdict of guilty and from an order denying a new trial.

The information alleged that on July 21, 1925, the defendant made a fictitious check for the payment of money, purporting to be signed by Robert Dean when in fact there was no such person; that, knowing the check to be fictitious, and with intent to defraud Livingston Bros., Inc., a corporation, he uttered and passed the check to the corporation as true and genuine. The check alleged to be fictitious is set out in the information in the words and figures following:

"100. American Bankers' Association. 100.
"Travelers' Cheque No. A1846905.
"Bankers' Trust Company, New York City.
July 21, 1925 19—
"Robert Dean.
"Pay to the order of Livingston Bros., Inc., $100.00 or its equivalent as below. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Compton, Lynwood Branch. Compton, Cal. Countersignature: Robert Dean, by R. H. Giles, Treasurer, by A. R. Titus, Cashier."

At the trial, the prosecution offered in support of the charge a travelers' check of which the following is a copy:

"100. American Bankers' Association. 100
"Travelers' Cheque.
"Bankers' Trust Company, New York City.
"No. A1846905.
"When countersigned below with this signature at any time within two years from date, to wit, Robt. Dean:
"July 21, 1925.
"Pay to the order of Livingston Bros. $100.00, or its equivalent as below. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Compton, Lynwood Branch, Compton, Cal., by A. R. Titus, Cashier. Countersigned (in the presence of person cashing): Robt. Dean.
"We hereby accept and certify the foregoing order and will pay the same, when properly negotiated, through any of our correspondents named on the back hereof. Bankers' Trust Company, by R. H. Giles, Treasurer."

The check was admitted in evidence over the objection of defendant who contends, as grounds for reversal, that the variance between the check described in the information and the proof offered as above was material, that the court erred in overruling the objection to its admission, and that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict.

It appears that the words and figures contained in the check last mentioned, including the acceptance by the trust company, were printed, with the exception of the date, the name of the payee, the name of the purchaser, whose signature for purposes of identification is placed thereon and whose countersignature is required in order that the instrument may be negotiated or paid, and that of the officer of the bank issuing the same, which were written.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] As was said in People v. Terrill, 132 Cal. 497, 64 P. 894:

> "In determining whether a variance is material, the question to be decided is, Does the indictment so far correctly and fully inform the defendant of the criminal act with which he is charged that, taking into consideration the proof which is introduced against him, he is not misled in making his defense, or placed in danger of being twice put in jeopardy for the same offense?"

The requirement that the instrument offered in evidence must conform to that laid in the information has reference to its identity and the manner in which it is described, and the presence or absence of unimportant words which do not affect the sense of the instrument or change its identity in any material respect will not constitute a material variance. People v. Crane, 4 Cal. App. 142, 87 P. 239.

[2, 3] While the instruments in certain respects are the same, differences relating to the parties, and provisions forming material parts of the contracts, appear, which affect the sense and change the identity of the instrument alleged to an extent which under the rule stated constitutes a material variance; and, no other evidence sufficient to support the charge as laid in the information having been adduced, it will be necessary to reverse the judgment. But it does not follow therefrom, as contended by appellant, that the proceedings had will bar his prosecution for the offense shown by the proofs. As was said in People v. McNealy, 17 Cal. 333:

> "It would be a contradiction in terms to say that a person was put in jeopardy by an indictment under which he could not be convicted, and it is obviously immaterial whether the inability to convict arise from a variance between the proof and the indictment, or from some defect in the indictment itself."

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

80 Cal. App. 689

GIBSON v. HERCULES MFG. & SALES CO., Inc., et al. (Civ. 3190.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 18, 1927.)

1. Damages 🔑147 — Complaint for loss of profits, resulting to unestablished business on breach of contract, held not to state cause of action.

Complaint, alleging damages for breach of contract resulting in loss of anticipated profits, based on unrealized hopes of unestablished business, held not to state cause of action.

2. Damages 🔑40(2)—Anticipated profits of unestablished business are too remote, uncertain, and speculative to be recovered for contract breach.

Plaintiff could not recover, in action for breach of contract, for alleged loss of anticipated profits, based on unrealized hopes of an unestablished business, since such anticipated profits were too remote, uncertain, and speculative.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by J. Bruce Gibson against the Hercules Manufacturing & Sales Company, Inc., and others, for loss of profits due to breach of contract. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Humphrey, Grant, Zimdars & Warren, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Corbet & Selby and Wm. T. Eckhoff, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff began this action against the defendant corporation and its stockholders to recover damages in the sum of $100,000, consisting principally of loss of profits alleged to have been suffered by him for and on account of the failure of the defendant corporation to keep and perform on its part the terms and conditions of a certain contract annexed as an exhibit and made a part of plaintiff's complaint. The defendants interposed demurrers, both general and special, setting forth in detail 89 general and special reasons why the plaintiff's complaint is insufficient. Five complaints in all were filed. After the defendants' demurrers were sustained to the plaintiff's fourth amended complaint, plaintiff declined to amend, judgment was entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

Passing the allegations in the complaint as to the corporate existence of the Hercules Manufacturing & Sales Company, Inc., the names of the stockholders and the respective number of shares owned and held by each in the defendant corporation, the complaint alleges that on or about the 8th day of December, 1920, one of the defendants, Norman Lombard, a large stockholder in the Hercules Manufacturing & Sales Company, made a proposition to the plaintiff that said two persons should unite their efforts, and, either as a company composed of themselves, or in their personal capacity, or through the agency of a corporation to be formed, effect an arrangement with the Hercules Manufacturing & Sales Company for the acquisition and sale of a certain automobile lock, known as the Hercules lock, invented by one S. H. Waterman, and then owned by the defendant corporation; that a certain paper was drawn up embodying the terms and arrangements of the proposition, which was in the form of a letter dictated and signed by the said Norman Lombard and addressed to the plaintiff, J. Bruce Gibson. This writing is in the following words and figures, to wit:

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

"Exhibit A.

"Norman Lombard & Co., First National Bank Building, San Francisco.

"December 8, 1920.

"J. Bruce Gibson, Esq., San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Sir: In order to reduce to writing our several conversations covering your connection and association with myself and the Hercules Manufacturing & Sales Company, Inc., I am writing you this letter covering the arrangement understood between us to this date. Kindly indicate your approval of the same in the place indicated below, returning one copy for my files, and oblige.

"I proposed to organize a sales company or to revive an existing corporation and give it a proper and suitable name; this company to handle the sale of the Hercules lock or locks under substantially the following conditions:

"The Hercules Company is to give an exclusive contract to the Sales Company to distribute and sell in all parts of the world all of the Hercules locks to be manufactured, including all improvements thereon, and all lock devices which the Hercules Company may control or acquire, so long as the Sales Company shall continue to sell the bona fide purchasers not less than 120,000 locks per annum, beginning July 1, 1922, provided not less than 60,000 locks to be sold by them prior to July 1, 1922. It is understood that all locks sold in excess of 120,000 per annum is to be credited to succeeding years.

"For the failure to make such sales in any year the sales contract may be terminated at the option of the Hercules Company.

"The Sales Company shall agree to handle no other locks than those owned or controlled by the Hercules Company, except by mutual consent, during the life of this agreement.

"The Hercules Company is to pay all rewards offered for arrest and conviction of persons stealing cars locked with Hercules locks and to protect the Sales Company against all claims for damages on account of infringement of patents.

"The Hercules Company is to sell and deliver to the Sales Company all locks ordered at times stated and in quantity ordered, reasonable notice being given by the Sales Company of requirements, subject to delays and contingencies beyond the control of the Hercules Company.

"The Hercules Company is to furnish necessary financial assistance to enable the Sales Company to properly introduce the Hercules lock; the extent of such financial assistance to be mutually agreed upon.

"The Sales Company shall pay interest to the Hercules Company upon all moneys advanced for its account at a rate to be agreed upon, not to exceed 2 per cent. more than the maximum rate of rediscount announced by the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco from time to time. Interest payable monthly or to be compounded.

"Each company shall be conducted independently and shall pay all of its own expenses, subject, however, to any future arrangements which may be made between them for services rendered by one to the other, or for work jointly undertaken.

"The Sales Company agrees to purchase annually from the Hercules Company the number of locks hereinbefore specified at the following prices: No. 1 size at $3.75 each; No. 2 size at $4.25 each; No. 3 size at $4.75 each.

"Said prices being based upon estimated cost of manufacture for the No. 1 size of $3.03 each; No. 2 size of $3.24½ each; No. 3 size of $3.62½ each.

"All locks to be of first-class quality and workmanship.

"It is agreed and understood that, if any saving in the first cost of manufacture shall be effected, one-half of the said saving shall accrue to the benefit of the Sales Company and one-half retained by the Hercules Company, and, on the other hand, if the first cost of manufacture shall prove greater than that estimated, one-half of such difference shall be borne by the Sales Company to the Hercules Company and the other half by the Hercules Company.

"No charge shall be made, except first cost of manufacture for locks given away by the Sales Company for advertising purposes.

"It is agreed that you will devote substantially all of your time and energy to this business, engaging in no other going occupation and that you will receive as compensation, first, a salary of $300 per month, and usual and necessary traveling and other expenses incurred while engaged in the business of either or both corporations; same to be paid by the Hercules Company until such time as your activities shall be more largely given over to the selling of the product, after which the salary shall be prorated between the two companies.

"In addition such salary, and in consideration of your acceptance of such nominal salary for your services, I agree that you shall participate in the net profits of the Sales Company to the extent of 25 per cent., as represented by 25 per cent. of the capital stock of the said company, which said stock I agree to place in escrow, to be turned over to you at such time prior to July 1, 1922, as you have caused the Sales Company to earn in net profits the sum of $12,000 as shown by the books of the company. Should the profits fail to equal this amount by July 1, 1922, then and in that case the majority holder or holders of the stock shall have the right to declare the 25 per cent. equity in the stock issue forfeited, but all earnings to that date shall thereupon be paid to you to the extent of 25 per cent., less any amounts standing charged to your account; and in such case the agreement for compensation shall thereupon terminate ipso facto and the stock shall return to the treasury of the Sales Company.

"It is agreed that you shall be vice president and general manager of the Sales Company, with authority to conduct its general business subject to the control and direction of the board of directors.

"When the Sales Company shall be organized, it is agreed and understood that a new contract or contracts shall be entered into by and between the interested parties, embracing the terms hereof, and including such additional provisions as shall be found necessary or desirable, in order to carry out the terms of this agreement and at the same time to arrange the details to the satisfaction of all concerned. Thereafter I shall be relieved of personal responsibility hereunder for those agreements herein which are to be performed by the Sales Company.

"Prices above are to be f. o. b. cars point of production; also provided the sales price shall not be less than 25 per cent. more than the cost of manufacture. Following is an estimate of expenditures for the Sales Company up to and including May, 1921, showing income as of that date equaling expenditures. * * *"

This letter was signed, as stated, by the said Norman Lombard and accepted by the plaintiff, and also one H. S. Waterman, a stockholder in the defendant corporation.

The complaint further alleges that this contract, or agreement, or memorandum of agreement, was, at a subsequent date, not given, ratified and approved by the directors of the defendant corporation; that, in pursuance of the terms of said memorandum, the plaintiff and the said Lombard, in their individual capacities, left San Francisco and went to certain eastern cities and negotiated and arranged for the manufacture of said locks upon prices and terms very much better than said defendant Hercules Manufacturing & Sales Company had tentatively arranged therefor, effecting a savings of many thousands of dollars in the cost of the manufacturing of said locks. The complaint further alleges that the defendant corporation advanced and paid to the plaintiff all expenses and outlays attendant and necessarily incurred on said eastern trip, and also paid the plaintiff the sum of $300 per month on account of salary from the month of December, 1920, down to and including the month of August, 1921, and that the plaintiff gave all his time and attention exclusively to the performance of his duties under said contract from the 8th day of December, 1920, down to the month of August, 1921, and that plaintiff, in all respects, performed all the terms and conditions of the said contract on his part to be performed, and was willing, able, and ready to perform all the terms and conditions of said contract on his part to be performed; that on or about the month of December, 1920, it was agreed by and between the plaintiff and the Hercules Company that the obligations to be performed by plaintiff, under the terms of said agreement, could be carried out and performed as well in the interest of both the plaintiff and Hercules Company by and through a sales company, composed of the plaintiff and the said Lombard, as individuals, as by a corporation organized for that purpose, and that the said Lombard and the said plaintiff should constitute the sales company; that on or about the 8th day of March, 1921, the Hercules Company, by its board of directors, agreed to said contract, as so modified; that the said plaintiff and said Lombard might comply with the obligations on their part to be performed, etc., as a sales agency. The said complaint then sets forth the following:

"V. That the said defendant Hercules Company was unable to, and did not, provide money or credit or means to enable it to manufacture or have manufactured the said locks, or any kind of locks, and no locks were manufactured, and the said Hercules Company failed to have manufactured or delivered to this plaintiff and to the said Lombard as such sales company, or to either of them, any locks whatever as provided in said contract or otherwise, or at all, and no locks were manufactured by the said Hercules Company as provided in the said contract or otherwise, or at all, or were delivered by it to this plaintiff and to said Lombard, or to either of them, and the failure of the said Hercules Company to comply with the said contract and deliver locks as aforesaid was caused by and is attributed to no other cause than the inability of the said Hercules Company to manufacture or have manufactured the said locks as contemplated by them under the terms of the said contract. And in this connection, plaintiff alleges that many times after the said 8th day of March, 1921, he demanded of the said Hercules Company, on behalf of himself and the said Lombard, that the said Hercules Company provide and deliver said locks as aforesaid, and the said Hercules Company has many times promised so to do, but failed to keep its promise in this regard, and no locks of any kind whatever were ever supplied, as provided by the said contracts, or otherwise, or at all.

"VII. That by reason of the failure of the said Hercules Company to supply or furnish or deliver to this plaintiff and the said Lombard, or either of them, as such Sales Company, or otherwise, any locks whatever in accordance with the terms of the said contract on its part to be performed as aforesaid, the said plaintiff and the said Lombard have been damaged in the sums of money as hereinafter stated: and this plaintiff, because of being entitled to 25 per cent. of the profits accruing jointly to this plaintiff and the said Lombard as hereinbefore set forth, and arising or growing out of the said contract, has been damaged to the extent of 25 per cent. of the said sum; and in this connection plaintiff alleges that the damages so sustained by him as aforesaid, and arising and growing out of the failure of the defendant Hercules Company to comply with the terms of the said agreement on its part to be performed, are as follows:

"First. That under the terms of the said contract this plaintiff and the said Lombard agreed to purchase, and the said defendant corporation agreed to sell not, less than 120,000 locks per annum, beginning July 1, 1922, at the prices set forth in said contract, to wit: No. 1 size, $3.75 each; No. 2 size, $4.25 each; No. 3 size, $4.75 each; and the said prices were based upon an estimated cost of manufacture of $3.03 for No. 1 size, $3.24½ for No. 2 size, and $3.62½ for No. 3 size.

"Said contract contained the provision that, if any saving in the first cost of manufacture should be effected, one-half of said saving should accrue to the benefit of the said plaintiff and the said Lombard, and to that extent reduce the price to be paid by the said plaintiff and the said Lombard for the said locks as hereinbefore set forth, and that the other one-half should be retained by the Hercules Company, and, on the other hand, that, if the first cost of manufacture should prove greater than the estimated cost set out in the said contract, one-half of the increased cost, over and above the estimate, should be borne by Sales Company composed of the plaintiff and the said Lombard, and the other one-half by the Hercules Company.

"That this plaintiff, acting for himself and the said Lombard, composing the said Sales Company, was able to and did secure a contract by responsible parties providing for the manufacture of the said locks, and of the kind, quality, and workmanship required by said contract, at a figure or cost for the 120,000 locks of the sum of $66,150, and for 360,000 of said locks, at a proportionate reduction, or the sum of $198,450, less than the estimated cost of the manufacture of said locks as set forth in the said contract.

"That it was agreed by and between the parties to said contract that the same should continue in force and effect for a reasonable time, and it was agreed that the said contract should continue in force and effect for not less than three years, and during each of said three years the said plaintiff and the said Lombard should buy, and the said defendant Hercules Company should sell, not less than 120,000 locks per annum as hereinbefore stated. That, assuming the said contract did not continue in force or effect for a period longer than three years, a saving in the cost of manufacturing over the estimated cost would be three times the said $66,150, or the sum of $198,450.

"That the saving and lessened cost of manufacture of said 360,000 locks above the estimated cost as hereinbefore set forth, so effected and brought about by this plaintiff as hereinbefore set forth, amounted to the said sum of $198,450, and of which saving or lessened cost the said Sales Company, composed of this plaintiff and the said Lombard, would be entitled to 50 per cent. or the sum of $99,225; and this plaintiff is entitled to 25 per cent. of the 50 per cent., or the sum of $24,806.25.

"Second. That the other element constituting the damage sustained by plaintiff in the loss of profits that would have followed from the sales of said locks, had the said Hercules Company performed its contract to supply and furnish said locks, is as follows:

"That this plaintiff, acting on behalf of himself and the said Lombard, as the Sales Company, gave great publicity to the said lock, and to the merits thereof, and, by the aid of agents and persons specially qualified for such purposes, canvassed and solicited orders for the purchase of said locks, and learned that the plaintiff and said Lombard, as such Sales Company, could sell and dispose of more than the minimum quantity of locks so contracted to be purchased by them and supplied by the said Hercules Company and for a period of not less than three years; and this plaintiff alleges on information and belief that, if the said Hercules Company had kept its contract to supply said locks as hereinbefore stated, this plaintiff on behalf of himself and the said Lombard, as such Sales Company, could and would have sold not less than 120,000 locks per annum for three years from and after the date of said contract, and at a price or figure which, after deducting the price to be paid to the Hercules Company for the said locks, and expenses of every kind pertaining to the matter of the sales, overhead, and otherwise, would have left remaining to this plaintiff and the said Lombard, as such Sales Company, a profit of 90½ cents per lock, over and above the price to be paid for said lock at the figures expressed in the contract; that is to say—without taking into consideration the deduction to be made by reason of the saving in the cost of manufacture as hereinbefore expressed—this plaintiff and the said Lombard could have sold 120,000 locks per annum for not less than a period of three years at a price that would net above all expenses entailed upon the selling and the payment of the purchase price the sum of 90½ cents per lock, or a profit of $108,600 per annum, of which sum this plaintiff would be entitled to 25 per cent., or $27,130 and for a period of three years the profit to the said plaintiff and the said Lombard would be the sum of $325,800 and plaintiff's share, or 25 per cent., would be the sum of $81,450.

"Plaintiff alleges that, in the publicity given by him to the said lock and to the merits thereof, and in the work done by himself and by the agents and persons employed to canvass and solicit orders for the purchase of said locks as aforesaid, he, the plaintiff, acting on behalf of himself and the said Lombard, expended a great deal of time and also expended, in the employment of the said agents and persons who canvassed and solicited orders as aforesaid, large sums of money, and the reasonable value of which time, together with the money so expended by him exceeded the sum of $2,500, and no part of which has been repaid.

"Plaintiff alleges that he and the said Lombard have been damaged as hereinbefore stated in the said sums of money, representing, as before stated, the profit that would have been made by them over and above the payment of all expenses of every kind in connection with the sales of said locks and over and above the sums of money required to be paid by the Sales Company, composed of the said plaintiff and the said Lombard, to the said Hercules Company, as provided in the said agreement for the said locks, and without any deduction or credits to the said plaintiff and said Lombard, as such Sales Company, on account of the saving and lessened cost of the manufacture of the said locks so brought about and effected by plaintiff as hereinbefore set out in this complaint."

[1] The complaint states the reasons why Lombard is made a defendant instead of joining herewith as a plaintiff and then asks for the recovery of $100,000 damages, alleged to have been suffered in the manner herein set forth. As stated, the defendants interposed demurrers, specifying 89 grounds wherein the complaint is insufficient, 3 or 4 of which only are necessary to be considered in the disposition of this cause, to wit: That the complaint is insufficient to state a cause of action; that the alleged damages consist of uncertain, contingent, and speculative profits so remote and indefinite of ascertainment as not to furnish a cause of action; that it cannot be ascertained from the complaint what publicity of the merits of said lock was given by the said plaintiff, what persons were employed by him as agents, how much time he expended, what his services were worth, or how much money, if any, he expended that had not been repaid by the said corporation. We have not followed the wording of the demurrer, but we have stated the substance in concrete form in order that time may be saved and the length of this opinion curtailed.

Paragraph 5 of plaintiff's complaint alleges the failure on the part of defendant corporation to have manufactured and delivered to the plaintiff, or the said Lombard, any of the locks referred to in the memorandum of agreement and attempts to charge the defendant corporation with responsibility in the following language:

> "And in this connection, plaintiff alleges that many times after the said 8th day of March, 1921, he demanded of the Hercules Company, on behalf of himself and the said Lombard, that the said Hercules Company provide and deliver said locks as aforesaid."

Turning to the memorandum of agreement, we find the following paragraph relative to the selling and delivery by the defendant corporation of Hercules locks to the plaintiff, to wit:

> "The Hercules Company is to sell and deliver to the Sales Company all locks ordered at times stated and in quantity ordered, reasonable notice being given by the Sales Company of requirements, subject to delays and contingencies beyond the control of the Hercules Company."

Nowhere in the complaint is there any allegation of the time when the plaintiff ordered said locks to be delivered, nowhere in the complaint is there any statement of the quantity ordered, nor is there anything in the complaint indicating that a reasonable notice, or any notice, being given by the Sales Company of its requirement of locks to be delivered to it by the defendant corporation. So far as the complaint is concerned, it may be that the demands made by the plaintiff for the delivery of the locks were made long after the contract had been abandoned by all the parties thereto. The complaint itself, as we have said, indicates that the plaintiff ceased giving his attention thereto at about the beginning of August, 1921. Again, the memorandum of agreement contains a provision that not less than 60,000 locks shall be sold prior to July 1, 1922, before the defendant becomes obligated to deliver 120,000 locks per annum. There is no allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff ever sold said 60,000 locks, or ever demanded of or sought to obtain from the defendant said 60,000 locks or any of them. The agreement calls for three sizes of locks. There is nothing in the complaint that locks of any particular size were ever ordered or called for by the plaintiff from the defendant corporation. Again, the memorandum of agreement relating to the plaintiff's right to have and receive 25 per cent. of the capital stock, etc., as a part of his profits is made dependent upon the Sales Company showing a profit of $12,000 prior to July 1, 1922. There is not a line in the complaint indicating that $1 of profit was ever made or furnished by anybody in connection either with the manufacturing or selling of said locks.

As shown by the excerpt which we have quoted from the complaint, there is nothing set out indicating what publicity the plaintiff has given to the lock in question, no statement of what agents were employed, or what work they have done, what compensation they have earned, if any, or the value of their labor. No statement of the time expended by the plaintiff other than the allegation of its being a "great deal," no statement of the time expended by the agents or persons canvassing as solicitors, or of how much money has been paid therefor, if any, or how much is owing therefor, if any, no statement of how much money the plaintiff has expended, but only the blanket statement that all these matters exceed in value the sum of $2,500.

Turning to the agreement, we find the following clause relating to the matters just treated:

> "The Hercules Company is to furnish necessary financial assistance to enable the Sales Company to properly introduce the Hercules lock; the extent of such financial assistance to be mutually agreed upon."

There is not a word in the complaint showing what financial assistance was agreed upon, or whether the defendant ever assumed to pay any sum whatever for and on account of the alleged expenditures, work, etc., alleged to exceed in value the sum of $2,500. This analysis, we think, clearly establishes that the complaint was subject to the special demurrers interposed by the defendants.

[2] There is, however, another matter which goes to the very vitals of this action and precludes the possibility of plaintiff's recovery, which is best stated in section 118, p. 797, 17 C. J.:

> "Where a new business or enterprise is floated and damages by way of profit are claimed for its interruption or prevention, they will be denied for the reason that such business is an adventure, as distinguished from an established business, and its profits are speculative and remote, existing only in anticipation."

The paragraphs of the complaint which we have copied show that no business has ever been transacted; that no locks have ever been manufactured; and no locks have ever been sold. The alleged loss of profits relates not to the interruption of the business of a going concern, but is remote, contingent, speculative, existing only in anticipation, without any tangible basis upon which to predicate any loss whatever. The allegation that the plaintiff could have done this and could have done that, if the defendant had done something else, furnishes no facts upon which to predicate a judgment. The past profits of a going concern, if any, may be ascertained when its business is interrupted, but the fact of profits to be realized from a business about to be launched can exist only on paper, and, while profits may be possible, losses in the enterprise are just as possible, and in either case they are nothing more than contingent probabilities. In Cal. Press Mfg. Co. v. Stafford Pack. Co., 192 Cal. 479, 221 P. 345, 32 A. L. R. 114, the Supreme Court of this state says:

> "As a proposition of law, it is well established that loss of profits growing out of a breach of contract, and resulting to an unestablished business, is of too uncertain a character to constitute a basis for the computation of damages for the breach. Kettering v. Sheppard, 19 N. M. 330 [142 P. 1128]. Where a new business or enterprise is engaged in, and damages by way of profits are sought for its interruption or prevention, the rule is that they will be denied, for the reason that such business is an adventure as distinguished from an established business, and its profits are speculative and remote, existing only in anticipation. 17 Cor. Jur. p. 797, § 118; Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 244 [48 P. 62]. The rule is one of necessity. Damages must be certain of ascertainment. If one engages in a new industry, there are no provable data of past business from which the fact can be legally deduced that anticipated profits would have been realized. Central Coal Co. v. Hartman, 111 F. 96, 99 [49 C. C. A. 244]."

In Central Coal Co. v. Hartman, supra, we find the following:

> "He who is prevented from embarking in a new business can recover no profits, because there are no provable data of past business from which the fact that anticipated profits would have been realized can be legally deduced"—citing a number of authorities.

In 8 Cal. Jur., p. 777, the distinction is clearly drawn by the text-writer as to when loss of profits may be allowed. If the business is established and is interrupted, past profits furnish the basis for calculating the damage. If the business is unestablished, such anticipated profits are held to be remote, uncertain, and speculative, on the ground that no satisfactory statement of the loss can be made. To state it in different language: No one can say that any profits would ever have been realized. The rules which we are here stating relative to loss of future profits are also clearly set forth in Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. at pages 244, 245, 48 P. 62. The substance of the holding there is that when the business prevented or interrupted is an established one, a basis for allowing damages is found in the past profits of the concern, but, if no business has ever been done, no profits earned, the possibility of proving profits does not exist, and no court can determine whether there would be profits, or whether the prospective business would not rather result in losses. To the same effect is the case of McConnell v. Water Co., 149 Cal. 65, 66, 85 P. 929, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171. Since the briefs were written in this case, the leading case, California Press Mfg. Co. v. Stafford Pack. Co., above referred to, reported in 192 Cal. 479, 221 P. 345, has been rereported in 32 A. L. R. 114, to which has been appended annotations covering 36 pages. On page 126 of the same volume, under the subtitle setting forth the rule of law that no recovery can be had for losses of profits, which are uncertain, speculative, contingent, and conjectural, is collated authorities from nearly every state in the Union, showing an unbroken line of decisions confirming the principle set forth in the case of California Press Mfg. Co. v. Stafford Pack. Co., supra, and on page 153 of the same volume under the subtitle dealing with the rule relating to anticipated profits of an unestablished business, is also collected a long list of decisions showing the unanimity of courts in upholding such doctrine.

The cases collected and appended in the notes to the principal case, reported in 32 A. L. R. 120, are so extensive and so numerous that it is unnecessary to do more than cite the volume and page of said work to show that plaintiff has no cause of action on account of his alleged loss of anticipated profits, based upon unrealized hopes of an unestablished business. Whatever damage he may have suffered, by reason of the acts of the defendants, must be based upon something tangible and not upon future prospects, and there being nothing of that character in the complaint, and nothing in the complaint other than what we have referred to, it follows that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

80 Cal. App. 717

LEWIS et ux. v. FOWLER et ux.

(Civ. 3134, 3151.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 19, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑681—Appeal from order, copy of which is not in record, cannot be considered.

Appeal from order denying motion to strike amendment to complaint from files and to vacate order to file amendment cannot be considered, where record does not contain copy of such order.

2. Pleading 🔑238(2)—Affidavit that motion would be made to vacate order, filed 10 days before request for transcript, constituted waiver of formal notice thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Affidavit of attorney stating that motion to vacate order granting leave to amend complaint would be made, filed more than 10 days before request for transcript of evidence was filed, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, constituted a waiver of formal notice of such order.

3. Appeal and error 🔑607(1)—Transcript of evidence cannot be considered on appeal, where notice to clerk requesting it was not filed within time (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Where notice to clerk for transcript of evidence was not filed within 10 days after notice of entry of judgment, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, transcript cannot be considered on appeal.

4. Appeal and error 🔑607(1)—Time within which to request transcript is not extended by motion to vacate order permitting amendment to complaint after judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Time allowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, for requesting transcript from clerk, is not extended by motion to vacate order permitting amendment of complaint made after judgment.

5. Pleading 🔑126—Denial of plaintiff's ability, readiness, or willingness at all times to perform held negative pregnant.

Denial "that plaintiffs have at all times been ready, or able, or willing, to comply with all, or any of the conditions and covenants or conditions or covenants, of said lease, and/or to pay to defendants the consideration therein named," is a negative pregnant, and admits allegation attempted to be denied.

6. Trial 🔑388(4)—Findings need not include facts admitted by pleadings.

Facts admitted by pleadings need not be found by the court.

7. Appeal and error 🔑544(1)—Objection that finding is outside issues will not be considered on appeal on judgment roll alone.

Where appeal is on judgment roll alone, objection that finding is outside the issues will not be considered, but it will be presumed that case was tried without objection, on theory that fact so found was in issue.

8. Landlord and tenant 🔑185—Landlord's repudiation of lease excused lessees from making formal tender of first month's rent.

Landlord's repudiation of contract of lease by declaring it terminated and rights of lessees forfeited excused lessees from making formal tender of first month's rent in accordance with contract.

9. Specific performance 🔑92(1)—Finding that lessees' offer to pay first month's rent on February 13th, in compliance with lessors' demand of February 2d, after lessor's prior waiver, was within reasonable time, held warranted.

Where lessor was unable to give possession at date of lease, and thereafter demanded payment of first month's rent on February 2d, finding that offer of payment by lessee on February 13th was within reasonable time held warranted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by Albert J. Lewis and wife against William Fowler and wife. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying defendants' motion to vacate an order, made after judgment permitting amendment to third amended complaint, and to strike such purported amendment from files, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Milton M. Cohen, James S. Roche, and C. O. Bacon, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants have appealed, on a record prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, from the judgment entered herein in favor of the plaintiffs. They have also appealed, on a bill of exceptions, from the order of the trial court denying their motion to vacate an order, made after entry of judgment, "permitting the plaintiffs to amend their third amended complaint and to strike from the files plaintiffs' purported amendment to third amended complaint." The two appeals have been consolidated, and they were argued and submitted together.

June 23, 1922, the parties executed a written lease, by the terms of which the defendants leased to the plaintiffs the Fowler Apartments in the city of Los Angeles for a term of three years, commencing November 15, 1922, at a monthly rental of $200, payable monthly in advance. The lease provided for the payment of $200 at the time of its execution, which sum was so paid, and "$200 September 1, 1922, being two last months rent, and $200 when taking possession of said premises."

The third amended complaint alleges the foregoing admitted facts, and, further, that at numerous times after the execution of the lease the plaintiffs tendered to the defendants payment of the sum of $200 due September 1, 1922, and demanded possession of the premises, but that the defendants refused to accept such payment or to admit plaintiffs into possession; that "plaintiffs have at all times been and now are ready, able, and willing to comply with all of the conditions and covenants of said lease, and pay to defendants the consideration therein named, and are ready to occupy said premises, but that defendants have refused to carry out said lease according to the terms and conditions therein provided, and refuse to let into possession the plaintiffs herein." Among other things, the prayer is for judgment "that this lease be specifically performed, and that plaintiffs be let into possession of said premises upon the payment by plaintiffs of the consideration as in said contract of lease provided."

The answer admits the execution of the lease and the payment of $200 at the time of such execution. The remainder of the answer is as follows:

> "Defendants deny that at numerous, or at any time, or times, between the execution of said contract of lease and the commencement of this action, the plaintiffs tendered, or have tendered, defendants a further sum of $200, as in said contract provided, or otherwise, and defendants further deny that upon the alleged tendering of the aforesaid amount to defendants plaintiffs, or either of them, demanded that they be let into possession of the said premises on the 15th day of November, 1922, or at any time, or at all: defendants deny that plaintiffs have at all times been ready, or able, or willing, to comply with all or any of the conditions and covenants, or conditions or covenants, of said lease, and/or to pay to defendants the consideration therein named, and these defendants further deny that they have refused to carry out said lease according to the terms and conditions, or terms or conditions, therein provided."

The court found that at the time of the execution of the lease the leased property was in the possession of one Elsie Coltrin under a lease, the term of which ended November 14, 1922; that at the expiration of her term she refused to surrender possession; that on November 23, 1922, defendants commenced an action against her for the possession of the premises, and recovered judgment therein February 2, 1923; "that prior to the 2d day of February, 1923, the defendants were unable to deliver possession of the said premises to the plaintiffs"; that the plaintiffs did not make payment of the sum of $200 provided by the lease to be paid September 1, 1922, but that such payment at that time "was waived by the defendants, and that the payment thereof was deferred by the defendants until such time as they should be able to deliver possession of the premises unto the plaintiffs, and that up to the 7th day of February, 1923, the defendants respected the plaintiffs' rights to the property and were willing to go on with the lease made with the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs had likewise waived the delivery of possession unto them, * * * as provided for in the lease, and had deferred the delivery and possession until such time as the defendants should be able to do so"; that "on February 2, 1923, the defendants made a verbal demand upon the plaintiffs for the payment of the said sum of $200 and stated to the plaintiffs that they may make the said payment at any time between the said date and * * * the 5th of February, 1923; that on the 7th day of February, 1923, the said sum of $200 was still unpaid; that the defendants on said date tendered to plaintiffs the said sum of $200 which the said plaintiffs had paid to defendants on the 3d day of June, 1922, and declared the lease terminated and the rights of the plaintiffs thereunder forfeited; that the plaintiffs have refused to accept a return of the $200; that on the 13th day of February, 1923, the plaintiff offered to pay to the defendants the said sum of $200, the sum provided for in the lease to be paid on the 1st day of September, 1922, and offered to go on with the lease"; that the defendants refused to let plaintiffs into possession of the premises; that "the period of time within which to make the payment of the said $200 by the plaintiffs specified in the aforesaid demand on the 2d day of February, 1923, was too short, arbitrary, and unreasonable; that the subsequent offer of payment by the plaintiffs on the 13th day of February, 1923, was made within a reasonable time after the demand for such payment was made by the defendants upon the plaintiffs." The judgment, among other things, requires the defendants to deliver possession of the premises to the plaintiffs upon payment by the latter of the rental then due, including the first month's rent of $200.

[1] After the entry of judgment, and after the denial of defendants' motion for a new trial, the court granted the plaintiffs permission to file an amendment to the third amended complaint, alleging the aforesaid facts found by the court relative to the inability of the defendants to deliver possession of the premises at the time required by the lease, their waiver of the time of payment of the installment of rent falling due September 1, 1922, and the subsequent demands, offers, and acts of the respective parties. The order granting such permission recites that, during the trial, on the 20th day of March, 1924, the plaintiffs moved the court for leave to amend the complaint, and, at the conclusion of the trial, moved the court "that the said pleadings be deemed amended to conform to the proof in the said cause," and that both motions were duly granted. The order granted leave to file such amendment "as of the 20th day of March, 1924," and directed the clerk to file the amendment and include the same in the judgment roll. The amendment was thereupon filed. Thereafter the defendants moved the court to strike the amendment from the files and to vacate the order granting plaintiffs leave to file the amendment. The motion was denied, and the defendants gave notice of appeal from the order denying their motion. The record does not contain a copy of the order from which the appeal was taken, and therefore the appeal cannot be considered. Code Civ. Proc. § 951; Kimple v. Conway, 69 Cal. 71, 72, 10 P. 189; Timmons v. Coonley, 39 Cal. App. 35, 36, 179 P. 429.

[2-4] Judgment was entered May 23, 1924. July 14, 1924, the defendants' motion for a new trial was denied. The order granting plaintiffs leave to amend the third amended complaint was made July 16, 1924. Thereafter the defendants served and filed their notice, together with the affidavit of C. A. Bacon, one of the attorneys for defendants, that they would move the court on the 31st day of July, 1924, to vacate the order granting leave to amend the complaint. The affidavit was sworn to on the 25th of July, 1924, and it is stated therein that the defendants' motion for a new trial was heard on the 14th of July, 1924, and that the court "denied the motion for a new trial, and that thereafter the attorney for the plaintiffs obtained from said court a purported order, granting leave to file an amendment to plaintiffs' third amended complaint." Appellants did not file with the clerk a request for a transcript until August 14, 1924. Section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that such a notice "must be filed within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment, order or decree, or if a proceeding on motion for new trial be pending, within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion, or of other termination thereof." It does not appear that any notice of the order denying a new trial was served upon defendants, but the aforesaid affidavit, stating that the motion for a new trial had been denied, was filed more than ten days before the request for a transcript of the evidence was filed. This constituted a waiver of formal notice of the order. "A written admission by a party entitled to notice, of knowledge that the judgment had been entered would supersede the necessity of giving such notice." Smith v. Questa, 58 Cal. App. 1, 6, 207 P. 1036. See, also, Hughes v. De Mund, 195 Cal. 242, 233 P. 94, and Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 356, 61 P. 1123. The notice to the clerk having been filed too late, the transcript of the evidence cannot be considered. Spear v. Monore, 181 Cal. 728, 186 P. 149; Des Granges v. Des Granges, 165 P. 13, 175 Cal. 67. Appellants contend that their time to request a transcript was extended by their motion to vacate the order permitting amendment of the third amended complaint, which motion was not decided until after they had made such request. In support of such contention, they rely upon the provision of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure hereinbefore quoted. It is clear that the word "thereof" in such provision relates to the "proceeding on motion for a new trial," and not to other proceedings in the action.

[5-9] The judgment may be affirmed without giving any effect to the amendment to the third amended complaint. Appellants contend that there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the findings, in that the complaint alleges performance, or offer to perform the covenants of the lease, while the court finds that performance at the time required by the terms of the lease was waived by defendants. Where the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, the objection that a finding is outside the issues will not be considered, but it will be presumed that the case was tried, without objection, upon the theory that the fact so found was in issue. Peck v. Noee, 154 Cal. 354, 97 P. 865; Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 643, 10 P. 186; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 325, 147 P. 90; Schroeder v. Mauzy, 16 Cal. App. 443, 447, 118 P. 459. There is no denial of the allegation that "plaintiffs have at all times been and now are ready, able, and willing to comply with all the conditions and covenants of said lease and pay to defendants the consideration therein named, and are ready to occupy said premises"; the attempted denial thereof being a negative pregnant. It is not necessary to find a fact admitted by the pleadings. It is neither alleged nor found that the plaintiffs tendered payment of the first month's rental of $200 upon demanding possession, but the court found that the defendants, prior to such demand, had repudiated the contract of lease by declaring it "terminated and the rights of the plaintiffs thereunder forfeited." Such repudiation excused the plaintiffs from making a formal tender of the first month's rent. Buckmaster v. Bertram, 186 Cal. 673, 678, 200 P. 610. It may be observed further that the defendants denied in their answer that they had "refused to carry out said lease according to the terms and conditions, or terms or conditions, therein provided." It may be inferred from the findings that at the trial the defendants attempted to prove, without having alleged, a rescission of the contract or a forfeiture of the plaintiffs' rights thereunder, and that the plaintiffs met such attempt by proof of a waiver by defendants. It cannot be held that the court was not justified in finding that "the offer of payment by the plaintiffs on the 13th day of February, 1923, in compliance with the demand of the defendants made on the 2d day of February, 1923, * * * was made within a reasonable time." Noyes v. Schlegel, 9 Cal. App. 516, 521, 99 P. 726.

The appeal from the order is dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

200 Cal. 276

GLOBE COTTON OIL MILLS v. ZELLERBACH et al., State Fish and Game Commission. (S. F. 12323.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1927.)

Constitutional law ⚷80(2)—Fish ⚷9—Granting to fish and game commission power to determine facts incidental to regulation is valid as administrative (Const. art. 6, § 1).

Granting of power to fish and game commission to hold hearings and determine facts incidental to regulation of fish and game and to granting of permits to take and use fish is valid as administrative or regulatory power, and does not transgress on exclusive functions of judicial department, contrary to Const. art. 6, § 1.

In Bank.

Application by Globe Cotton Oil Mills for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to I. Zellerbach and others, members of the Fish and Game Commission of the State of California. Writ granted.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, and John L. Dyer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

B. D. Marx Greene, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Upon submission of the cause in open court, the Chief Justice announced the decision of the court as follows:

The petitioner, owning and operating a fish reduction plant at Terminal Island, San Pedro, Harbor, seeks a writ of mandate to compel the respondent fish and game commission to set for hearing and to act on the application filed with the commission by petitioner for a permit authorizing it to use in its plant the quantity of fish designated in the application, for the purposes therein specified. The commission has refused to entertain jurisdiction of the application upon the ground that it is a nonjudicial body, and that to act as requested by the petitioner would be to exercise judicial functions. In assuming this position, the respondent relies upon Van Camp Sea Food Co. v. Fish and Game Commission (Cal. App.) 243 P. 702, in which it was held that a commission like the fish and game commission, which is one having a state-wide jurisdiction, as distinguished from a local board, cannot be invested with judicial functions, for the reason that, "except for local purposes," section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution confines all judicial power to certain specified courts.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

This court is of the view, however, that, admitting that the fish and game commission cannot be granted any power which constitutionally belongs exclusively to the judicial department of the state government, the granting of power to hold hearings and determine facts incidental to the regulation of fish and game, and to the granting of permits to take and use fish, is valid as an administrative or regulatory power, and in no wise transgresses upon the exclusive functions of the judicial department.

Let the writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

---

200 Cal. 252

In re BABB'S ESTATE.

WILLIAMS v. BABB et al.

(S. F. 11937.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑151(3)—Executor, not being party aggrieved by decree of distribution determining rights of devisees, has no right of appeal.

On appeal from decree of final distribution, executor has no interest, not being party aggrieved in distribution, which determined rights of several devisees to estate of testator, so executor's appeal must be dismissed.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑314(12)—Legatee, complaining of final distribution, has right of appeal.

Legatee, claiming that property disposed of under will had been improperly distributed by final decree has right of appeal.

3. Wills 🔑481—Will speaks from date of testator's death, not from date of its execution.

Will speaks from date of death of deceased testator, not from date of its execution.

4. Wills 🔑481—Legatee of bank account held entitled to money from another estate deposited by testator before death, though testator's interest in such estate was devised to others.

Where testator, heir at law to property in another estate, provided that one person should have all money in bank at time of testator's death, and that certain others should have his interest in the other estate, legatee of bank account held entitled to moneys received from such estate before testator's death and deposited in bank, will being construed as speaking from date of testator's death, not from date of will's execution.

5. Wills 🔑767—Testator's receipt in his lifetime of assets from another's estate caused pro rata ademption of legacies of interest in such estate.

Receipt by testator in his lifetime of money and property from another's estate held to produce pro rata ademption of legacies in testator's will of such estate.

6. Wills 🔑753—Legacies of testator's interest as heir to another estate are specific (Civ. Code, § 1357).

Where testator, heir at law to portion of certain estate, bequeathed such portion to certain legatees, such legacies were specific, in view of Civ. Code, § 1357.

7. Wills 🔑768—Ademption results from extinction of thing bequeathed.

Ademption is effected by extinction of thing or fund bequeathed.

8. Executors and administrators 🔑314(12)—Erroneous final distribution held to warrant only modification, not reversal, on complaint of legatee improperly charged with expenses deductible from residuary estate.

Erroneous final distribution of stock shares, received by testator in his lifetime from estate of another, to legatees under provision willing interest as heir at law to such other estate to them instead of to residuary legatees, who were properly entitled to such interest, held to warrant, not reversal, but modification of distribution, on complaint of legatee interested only in expenses deducted from his share, which should have been deducted from residue.

9. Wills 🔑812—Specific legacies are not chargeable with debts or expenses, which are charge against general residuary legacies (Civ. Code, §§ 1357, 1359; Code Civ. Proc. § 1563).

Testator's debts, funeral expenses, and administration expenses are not deductible from specific legacies, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1357, 1359, Code Civ. Proc. § 1563, if general residuary legacies are sufficient to defray same.

10. Executors and administrators 🔑314(12)—Erroneous decree of distribution is final as to nonappealing legatees, but may be corrected as to expenses erroneously charged to appellant's share.

Erroneous final decree of distribution is conclusive against residuary legatees not appealing, but may be modified by relieving appellant from expenses properly chargeable to residuum.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Walter W. Babb, also known as W. W. Babb. From a decree directing final distribution of certain property to Frank H. Babb and others, Edward N. Williams, individually as legatee, and also as executor of the last will of Walter W. Babb, deceased, appeals. Modified and reversed, with directions.

George W. Waldorf, and Edwin A. Wilcox, both of San Jose, for appellant.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. On March 7, 1922, Walter W. Babb, a single man, executed his will, by the terms of which he gave to his uncle, Edward N. Williams, "all the money I may have in any bank at the time of my decease, and all the money I may then have loaned out." This provision was contained in paragraph II of his will. By paragraph III of said will, after reciting that he was one of the heirs at law of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, and as such was entitled to an interest in her estate, he disposed of said interest as follows:

> "I give, devise and bequeath all my right, title and interest in said Mary L. Taylor estate, and the real and personal property thereto belonging as follows, to wit."

Then follows the five names of respondents herein, each of whom was given an undivided one-fifth of the testator's interest in the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, and the property thereof. By paragraph VI of said will the respondents, Harriet B. Sargent and Lucy S. Boyd, were named as his residuary legatees. The testator died on October 26, 1925, at which time there was on deposit in the Bank of San Jose, at San Jose, Cal., to his credit, the sum of $7,652.54. At the time he executed his will the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, was in course of administration, and was still unsettled at the time of the death of said testator. During his lifetime, and subsequent to the execution of said will, said testator received from the estate of said Mary L. Taylor, deceased, the sum of $4,048.20 in money, and 70 shares of the capital stock of the Cincinnati Discount Company. The money received from the Taylor estate was deposited to the credit of testator by him in said Bank of San Jose, and was undoubtedly a part of the money the said deceased left on deposit in said bank at the time of his death. The executor of the will of said deceased received from the 70 shares of the capital stock of the Cincinnati Discount Company the sum of $4,620, $420 as dividends on said stock, and $4,200 from a subsequent sale thereof. Said executor also received the sum of $97 direct from the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, which last named sum was the only money or property received by said executor from said estate. On the final distribution the probate court distributed to respondents the sum of $8,765.20, which sum was made up of said sum of $4,048.20, received by said testator during his lifetime from the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, the further sum of $4,620 being the proceeds received from the said 70 shares of the capital stock of the Cincinnati Discount Company, and also said sum of $97 received by said executor direct from said estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased. Other property belonging to the estate of Walter W. Babb, deceased, was distributed according to the terms of his last will and testament, and there is no controversy over the correctness of the decree of distribution in respect to this last-mentioned property. From that part of the decree of distribution, however, distributing to the respondents the said sum of $8,765.20, the said Edward N. Williams has appealed, both as the executor of said will and also individually as one of the legatees under said will.

[1] This controversy is entirely between the different legatees under the last will of said deceased, in which controversy the executor of said will, as such, has no interest. He is not a party aggrieved by a decree of distribution determining the rights of several devisees to the estate of the testator. 2 Cal. Jur. 220; Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 358, 360, 182 P. 303; Estate of Marrey, 65 Cal. 287, 3 P. 896. The appeal of the executor should therefore be dismissed.

[2] The appeal of Edward N. Williams as a legatee under the will of said deceased, claiming that the property of said estate, or, at least a portion thereof, distributed to the respondents herein, should have been distributed to him under the terms of said will, is properly before us. It is the contention of appellant that said sum of $4,048.20 (received by the testator during his lifetime from the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, and which was on deposit with the Bank of San José, with other moneys of said testator at the time of the latter's death), should have been under paragraph II of said will distributed to him. On the other hand, the respondents, seeking an affirmance of the decree of distribution distributing this money to them, assert that, as this money was received by said testator from the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, it was by the terms of paragraph III of said will bequeathed and devised to them, and was therefore rightly distributed to them.

[3] A will speaks from the date of the death of the deceased, and not from the date of its execution. Estate of Rounds, 180 Cal. 386, 181 P. 638; Estate of Page, 181 Cal. 537, 185 P. 383; 1 Redfield on Wills (3d Ed.) § 30; 3 Woerner, American Law of Administration (3d Ed.) § 419; 40 Cyc. 1424. The rule is stated in the above citation from Cyc. in the following language:

> "Although for some purposes a will is considered as speaking from the date of its execution, as a general rule it speaks from the death of the testator and must be construed as operating according to the state of things then existing. * * *"

In 1 Redfield on Wills (3d Ed.) § 30, we find the rule expressed as follows:

"The very nature of the testamentary act, which is expected to take effect only at the time of the decease of the testator, presupposes, that so far as facts and circumstances are susceptible of anticipation by him, so as to enable him to place himself in the position he will then be, relatively to his property and his obligations to his family, that he will have used the language of his will, with reference more particularly to that period."

[4-7] Examining the will of the testator, Walter W. Babb, deceased, in the light of the rule enunciated by these authorities, we are forced to the conclusion that, when the testator, in paragraph II of his will, used the expression, "Unto my Uncle, Edward N. Williams, * * * I give and bequeath all the money I may have in any bank at the time of my decease," that he intended to refer, and did refer, in as clear and apt language as it was possible for him to employ, to all the money which belonged to him and which was on deposit in any bank at the time of his death, irrespective of the sources from which he had received said money. Any other construction would do violence to the plain and direct intent of the testator as expressed in this paragraph of his will. Therefore the provision of paragraph II of his will, devising and bequeathing to appellant the money on deposit in any bank at the time of his death, must control, unless there is some other direction contained in the will limiting this provision or evincing a clear intent to make a different disposition of said money or of some part thereof. Respondents contend that such a provision is to be found in paragraph III of the will whereby the testator devises and bequeaths to them all of his right, title, and interest in the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased, and the property belonging thereto. As we have already seen at the time of the execution of the will, the Taylor estate was in process of administration, and during the lifetime of the testator he received from said estate, and deposited to his credit in said bank the sum of $4,048.20. He also received the 70 shares of capital stock in the Cincinnati Discount Company. So that at the death of said testator this money and these shares of stock previously received by him from said estate were no part of the Taylor estate, but constituted a part of the estate of the testator in kind and character as they existed at the time of his death. This property had been severed from the Taylor estate, and completely extinguished as a part of said estate upon its receipt by the testator. Thereafter it had no relation to said estate, except as money and property derived therefrom. Therefore, when paragraph III of the will is read, having in mind the rule that a will speaks from the date of the death of the testator, in connection with the interest of the testator in the Taylor estate, it can only refer to the interest therein at the death of the testator, and cannot be extended or enlarged so as to include or embrace any part of the property previously received by said testator from said estate. The receipt by the testator of the money and property from the Taylor estate produced an ademption of the legacies to the respondents in so far as the money and property so received by the testator might have been included in said legacies had said money and property remained a part of the Taylor estate up to and including the date of the testator's death. Estate of Goodfellow, 166 Cal. 409, 137 P. 12. The legacies bequeathed to respondents by said will were specific legacies. Civ. Code, § 1357. "Ademption is effected by the extinction of the thing or fund bequeathed. * * *" Kramer v. Kramer (C. C. A.) 201 F. 248. Had the Taylor estate been finally distributed during the lifetime of the testator, "the thing or fund" bequeathed to the respondents would have been completely extinguished at the date of the testator's death, and the respondents would have taken nothing under paragraph III of testator's will. In so far as any part or portion of the Taylor estate had been distributed to the testator during his lifetime, to that extent had the fund or property bequeathed to respondents become extinguished, and they are entitled to receive under the provisions of said will only that portion of the fund or property remaining at the date of the testator's death. In Estate of Goodfellow, supra, the testatrix directed her executors "to proceed to obtain the sum of $5,000 from my share of Dr. Dempster's estate, and place it in the care of the Methodist Episcopal Conference * * * said Conference being pledged never to use said $5,000 except as part of an endowment fund for a school for Methodist ministers." The testatrix was a daughter of Dr. Dempster, and one of his heirs. After the execution of her will, but prior to her death, however, the estate of her father had been closed, and the property thereof finally distributed in accordance with the terms of his will. It was held that the legacy of $5,000 to the Methodist Episcopal Conference was adeemed by the final settlement of said estate and the distribution to Mrs. Goodfellow of her interest therein prior to her death. For the same reason it must be held that the bequest to respondents was adeemed to the extent of the property of the Taylor estate distributed to the testator during his lifetime, and said respondents are therefore entitled to receive under paragraph III of said will only such interest in the Taylor estate and the property thereof as existed at the date of the testator's death. We are therefore of the opinion that the probate court was in error in distributing to the respondents said sum of $4,048.20, received by said testator during his lifetime from the state of Mary L. Taylor, deceased. Appellant herein was entitled to have said amount distributed to him under the terms of said will, whereby he was given all the money of said testator on deposit in any bank at the date of the death of said testator.

[8-10] Appellant further contends that a similar error was made by said court in distributing to respondents said sum of $4,620, being the proceeds received from said 70 shares of the capital stock of the Cincinnati Discount Company. These shares of stock, as we have already seen, were received by the testator from the Taylor estate during the lifetime of the testator, and comprised a portion of his estate at the date of his death. The appellant, under the will of the deceased, was given only the money belonging to said deceased and deposited in any bank and such money as said testator had loaned out. He was therefore not entitled to any of the proceeds received from said 70 shares of stock, and, if any error was made by the court in distributing said proceeds to respondents, the appellant is not a party aggrieved thereby except to the extent hereinafter considered, which does not necessitate a reversal of said order, but at most a modification thereof. While appellant concedes that he was not entitled to any of the proceeds derived from said shares of stock, he contends that said proceeds should be distributed solely to the respondents, Harriet B. Sargent and Lucy S. Boyd, as residuary legatees under paragraph VI of testator's will, and not to all of the respondents herein under paragraph III of said will. He further contends that, had such proceeds been distributed to the said residuary legatees, it would have been the duty of said court to have deducted from said proceeds the debts of said deceased, his funeral expenses, and the expenses of administration before making any distribution of the residue thereof, and that only the residue of said proceeds should have been distributed to said residuary legatees. It appears from the record that the entire property of the estate was distributed to the several legatees and devisees named in said will, and that said distribution was made of the several parts or portions of said estate as special bequests or devises, and that said court apportioned the debts of said deceased, the funeral expenses, and the expenses of administration among the several devisees and legatees in proportion to the amount of property which each one of them received, and that the portion which appellant was required to pay under this plan was the sum of $901.21, which amount was deducted from the amount of the legacies bequeathed to appellant. It is the appellant's contention, therefore, that, had the proceeds received by the executor from said shares of stock been distributed to the residuary legatees under paragraph VI of said will, he would not have been required to deduct from the amount of the legacies bequeathed to him said sum of $901.21. With this contention of appellant we must agree. As already indicated herein, the respondents were not entitled to receive under paragraph III of said will any part of the money or property received by the testator during his lifetime from the estate of Mary L. Taylor, deceased. This property, as we have also seen, included said sum of $4,048.20 in money received directly from the Taylor estate and the $4,620 received by the executor as proceeds from said shares of stock, but by the terms of said will said sum of $4,048.20 should have been distributed to the appellant, and the distribution of the said sum of $4,620 was governed by the provisions of paragraph VI of said will, bequeathing the residue of the said estate to the respondents, Harriet B. Sargent and Lucy L. Boyd. All the bequests and devises under said will, except that to the residuary legatees, were specific, and that to the residuary legatees was general. Civ. Code, § 1357. Property bequeathed to a residuary legatee must be resorted to for the payment of the debts of the deceased, funeral expenses, and expenses of administration, prior to any resort being made to property specifically devised or bequeathed. Civ. Code, § 1359; Code Civ. Proc. § 1563. The debts of the testator, funeral expenses, and the expenses of administration in the present estate should, therefore, have been deducted in whole from the property bequeathed by said testator to the residuary legatees. It was accordingly error for the trial court to have provided in said decree of distribution for the payment by appellant of said sum of $901.21 as appellant's proportionate share of said debts, funeral expenses, and expenses of administration. The decree of distribution awarding the proceeds received by the executor from the shares of stock in the Cincinnati Discount Company to all of the respondents was not appealed from by the respondents Harriet B. Sargent and Lucy S. Boyd, the residuary legatees, the parties aggrieved by said decree. It therefore, in so far as the rights of these two respondents are concerned, is final and conclusive against them. Accordingly it should not be reversed. It should be modified, however, by striking from said decree the provision thereof deducting from the amount distributed to appellant the sum of $901.21 as appellant's proportionate share of the debts of deceased, funeral expenses, and expenses of administration.

The appeal of the executor is dismissed. That portion of said decree of distribution distributing said sum of $4,048.20 to respondents is reversed, with directions to the probate court to enter its decree distributing to appellant the said sum of $4,048.20, in addition to the other sums of money and property distributed to appellant by said decree of distribution. Said decree of distribution is also directed to be modified by striking therefrom the provision contained therein deducting from the amount of the legacies bequeathed to appellant said sum of $901.21 as appellant's proportionate share of the debts of deceased, the funeral expenses, and expenses of administration. It is directed that such decree further provide that said sum of $901.21 be deducted from said sum of $4,620, and that the amount remaining after making such deduction be distributed to respondents.

We concur: WASTE, C. J., RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

200 Cal. 277

ISLAIS CREEK RECLAMATION DIST. v. ALL PERSONS, etc., et al. (S. F. 11948.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1927.)

1. Drains 🔑1—Creation of reclamation district is exercise of police power within authority of Legislature.

Creation of a reclamation district is an exercise of police power within authority of the Legislature, which is presumed to act with knowledge of the facts and on a determination of the benefits to the lands included within the district.

2. Constitutional law 🔑48—Legislative act should not be declared unconstitutional unless clearly violative of Constitution.

An act of the Legislature should not be declared unconstitutional by the courts unless its provisions are clearly violative of some provision of Constitution.

3. Constitutional law 🔑278(2)—Drains 🔑1—Act creating Islais reclamation district in aid of navigation held within authority of Legislature, and not denial of due process (St. 1925, p. 87).

St. 1925, p. 87, creating Islais Creek reclamation district for the purpose of reclaiming marsh and tidelands in aid of commerce and navigation, held clearly within the scope of the power of the Legislature, and not a taking of property without due process in violation of state or federal Constitution.

4. Drains 🔑1—Drainage and reclamation of land, apart from commerce or navigation, is within police power of state.

Drainage and reclamation of land, apart from any question of commerce or navigation, are in themselves a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state.

5. Statutes 🔑97(3) — Legislature creating reclamation district by special act may define manner and plan and provide necessary works.

It is within the power of the Legislature, in creating a reclamation district by special act, to define the manner and plan and provide for the necessary works by which the contemplated reclamation shall be carried out.

6. Drains 🔑13—Islais reclamation district in aid of navigation held not private enterprise with only indirect public benefit, insufficient to support assessment (St. 1925, p. 87).

Islais Creek reclamation district, created by St. 1925, p. 87, in aid of navigation and commerce, held not a private industrial enterprise or venture with only an indirect benefit to the public insufficient to sustain assessment of benefits.

7. Drains 🔑2(1)—Statute creating reclamation district is not unconstitutional because public benefit is practically limited to lands within district.

It is no objection to the constitutionality of a statute, creating a reclamation district in aid of commerce and navigation, that the public benefit, which is to be subserved, is practically limited to those in the district whose lands are to be protected.

8. Statutes 🔑123(5)—Statute creating reclamation district and providing for raising lands to street grades held not violative of constitutional requirement that act embrace but one subject expressed in its title (St. 1925, p. 87, § 9; Const. art. 4, § 24).

St. 1925, p. 87, creating Islais Creek reclamation district and providing by § 9 for the filling of lands to official street grades, held not violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring every act to embrace but one subject expressed in its title, though title contains no reference to filling in of lands and streets.

9. Drains 🔑15—Reclamation district created by special act held not invalid, though all lands were not swamp or overflowed lands (St. 1925, p. 87).

Validity of Islais Creek reclamation district. created by St. 1925, p. 87, held not affected by fact, if established, that all lands within district were not swamp or overflowed lands, the legislative determination of the property benefited being final and conclusive.

In Banc.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by the Islais Creek Reclamation District against all persons whomsoever and the State of California to have determined the legality of plaintiff's existence. From a judgment that plaintiff was a legal reclamation district, Josiah A. Simpson and wife appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph T. O'Connor and Sylvester J. McAtee, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Allen G. Wright, of San Francisco (Wright & Wright & Stetson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The Islais Creek reclamation district, situate wholly within the city and county of San Francisco, was created by the Legislature by statute, without reference or notice to the inhabitants of the district.

Stats. 1925, p. 87. Under the authority of the statute creating it, the district commenced a proceeding in the superior court to determine the legality of its existence. The defaults of the state of California and of all persons other than the defendants Simpson were entered, and the cause was submitted on an agreed statement of facts. The lower court adjudged the plaintiff to be a legal reclamation district duly created and organized, and having the statutory powers and authority conferred upon it. The defendants Simpson have appealed, contending that the act creating the district, by imposing a tax on their lands, violates the provisions of the state and federal Constitutions and amounts to a taking of property without due process of law.

[1, 2] The appellants, who are owners of real property within the boundaries of the district, concede, as they must, that the creation of a reclamation district is an exercise of the police power of the state, and that the Legislature, which has the power to create, is presumed to act with knowledge of the facts and upon a determination of the benefits to the land included within the boundaries of such a district by the proposed work of reclamation. See People ex rel. Chapman v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., 155 Cal. 373, 103 P. 207. They also concede the full weight of authority to the effect that an act of the Legislature should not be declared unconstitutional by the courts unless its provisions are clearly violative of some provision of the Constitution, and recognize that the courts of this state have liberally construed acts of the Legislature creating reclamation and other improvement districts, because of the public benefit derived therefrom. In re Bonds of Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 311 et seq., 28 P. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106.

[3] After making these concessions, however, and arguing from a premise that "the original purpose of reclamation districts was the unwatering of lands and, in the beginning of such legislation, had application more especially to agricultural lands," and that "reclamation is practically synonymous with drainage," appellants contend that, in enacting the present statute, the Legislature has distorted the "original purpose for which reclamation districts were created." Assuming some other word than "reclamation" might have been used, such, for instance, as "improvement," in describing the nature of the district created, we do not seriously regard the appellants' contention. The purpose and scope of the act are clearly discernible from a reading of it. It is entitled, in part:

> "An act to aid commerce and navigation by authorizing certain improvements in and about Islais creek and as a means thereof creating a reclamation district to be called and known as the 'Islais Creek reclamation district,' * * * and authorizing a method for the reclamation of the lands of said district. * * *"

In section 1 it is declared that:

> In order "to aid commerce and navigation it is necessary to dredge Islais creek in the city and county of San Francisco, to dredge the shoals in the bay of San Francisco lying off the mouth of Islais creek, and to reclaim the old salt marsh and tidelands now lying in the district hereinafter described so that they may become a useful adjunct to commerce and navigation, * * * a reclamation district is hereby created. * * *"

These purposes clearly bring the act creating the district within the scope of the power of the Legislature.

> Whatever "tends to enlarge the resources, increase the industrial energies, and promote the productive power of any considerable number of the inhabitants of a section of the state, or which leads to the growth of towns and the creation of new sources for the employment of private capital and labor, indirectly contributes to the general welfare and to the prosperity of the whole community." In re Bonds of Madera Irr. Dist., supra, at page 314, 28 P. 275.

[4] Commerce and navigation generally, and particularly in the harbor of San Francisco, will be benefited by the improvement contemplated by this act; but the drainage and reclamation of the lands, apart from any question of commerce or navigation, are in themselves a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. Gray v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1500, 174 Cal. 622, 638, 163 P. 1024.

[5] By section 9 of the act, Islais Creek reclamation district is given the power to reclaim and protect the lands of the district by making, constructing, and maintaining such fills, drains, canals, sluices, bulkheads, water gates, levees, embankments, and pumping plants as, in the opinion of the trustees of the district, are or may be necessary to the general plans as decided upon by the trustees. It was within the power of the Legislature, in creating the district by special act, to define the manner and plan and provide for the necessary works by which the contemplated reclamation should be carried out. Reclamation Dist. v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 678, 154 P. 845.

[6] All assessments must be made for a public purpose. Appellants therefore argue that while it may be conceded to be of local benefit to create an industrial district where now is marsh land, this is purely a private industrial enterprise or venture, the indirect benefit to the public from which should not be used as a cloak for the exercise of the police power of the state to impose a burden of taxation upon the lands of a citizen. This court said, in Re Bonds of Madera Irr. Dist., supra, at page 310 (28 P. 274), that:

> "Whenever it is apparent from the scope of the act that its object is for the benefit of the public, and that the means by which the benefit is to be attained are of a public character, the act will be upheld, even though incidental advantages may accrue to individuals beyond those enjoyed by the general public."

[7] It is no objection to the constitutionality of the statute that the public benefit which is to be subserved is practically limited to those in the district whose lands are to be protected. Laguna, etc., Dist. v. Martin Co., 144 Cal. 209, 217, 77 P. 933. It may be assumed that the lands held in private ownership within the district, which, without the improvements contemplated by the creation of the district, will be marsh and overflowed lands, will be especially benefited by the contemplated improvement. But it may not be denied that the state has the power to impose upon the adjacent lands specially benefited by the work an assessment in proportion to such benefits to defray part of the costs. People, etc., v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., supra.

[8] Under the provisions of section 9 of the act, the district may fill the land therein held in private ownership and the streets lying therein, and thereby raise them to the official street grades as the same may be now or hereafter legally established. Because the title does not specifically refer to the filling in of the lands and streets, appellants contend that the act is a violation of section 24, article 4, of the Constitution, which provides that every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title. The objection is not well taken. The title is broad enough in its language to disclose that the general purpose of the act is to provide a scheme for the betterment of the lands lying within the described area. Such aspects of the reclamation and improvement of the land as are set forth in the act, if falling within and germane to the general purposes announced by the title, do not require expression in the title. People, etc., v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., supra, at page 384 (103 P. 207); People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 394, 156 P. 451; Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 519, 221 P. 628.

[9] It was a stipulated fact in the case that the lands in this district were at one time all swamp and overflowed lands, or lands subject to overflow, and the greater part thereof are still of that character. The fact that they are not all of such character at the present time does not affect the validity of the district. Appellants did not attempt, in the court below, to show that their holdings in the district were not overflowed lands. Any attempt to show that fact would have been futile, for the Legislature itself fixed the exterior boundaries of the district and included the appellant's land therein. Its determination as to the property benefited and the property to be included in the district was final and conclusive. Brookes v. City of Oakland, 160 Cal. 423, 427, 117 P. 433.

We have referred to but a few of the many cases sustaining the legality of Islais Creek reclamation district on all contentions advanced by appellants. We find nothing in the points raised by appellants which renders the statute creating the district obnoxious to either the state or the federal Constitution.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.

---

200 Cal. 265

ROBINET v. HAWK et al. (Sac. 3765.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1927.)

1. Master and servant 🔑87, 363—Liability for injuries to driver of ranch wagon is governed by Roseberry Act; Workmen's Compensation Act being inapplicable.

In action for personal injuries sustained by driver of wagon of fruit ranch, Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796), governing liability of employers for injuries to employees, held applicable, there being relationship of employer and employee involved; Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), being inapplicable.

2. Master and servant 🔑204(1)—Assumption of risk is no defense under Roseberry Act.

Assumption of risk is no defense to action for personal injuries brought by employee against employer under the Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796).

3. Negligence 🔑101—Employee contributorily negligent may recover for injuries due to employer's gross negligence (Roseberry Act).

Under Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796), governing liability of employers for injuries to employees, employee may recover if he is injured while in course of his employment through want of reasonable care of employer; slight contradictory negligence not being barred from recovery if employer's negligence was gross in comparison.

4. Master and servant 🔑278(3) — Evidence held to warrant finding of employer's negligence as to driver on ranch wagon.

In action for personal injuries received by driver on fruit farm when wagon loaded with fruit crates overturned, evidence held sufficient to warrant finding of negligence on part of ranch owners.

5. Master and servant 🔑289(18) — Injured driver of ranch wagon held not negligent as matter of law in using fruit boxes as seat.

In action for injuries to driver on fruit ranch, plaintiff held not guilty, as matter of law, of either contributory negligence or of gross negligence, in sitting on fruit crates, when no wagon seat was provided.

6. Negligence 🔑136(31)—Relative negligence of employer and driver of ranch wagon held for jury.

In action for personal injuries to driver of ranch wagon, questions of gross and contributory negligence were for jury.

7. Trial 🔑296(3) — Instruction held not erroneous as making employer insurer, in view of other instructions.

In action for injuries to driver on fruit ranch, instruction held not erroneous as making employers insurers in effect, in view of attendant instructions, such instruction not amounting to formula instruction.

8. Master and servant 🔑270(11)—Evidence as to custom of furnishing teamster something to hold onto held immaterial.

In action for injuries to driver on fruit ranch, evidence as to whether it was customary to furnish anything for the teamster to hold onto held immaterial.

9. Negligence 🔑5 — Doctrine of customary usage held inapplicable to legal duty under law of negligence.

Doctrine of customary usage does not apply to question of legal duty under law of negligence.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1058(3)—Exclusion of evidence custom of drivers held without prejudice, where same evidence was received from other witness.

In action for injuries to driver on fruit ranch, exclusion of evidence as to custom of drivers of wagons in harvesting fruit and gathering fruit boxes held not prejudicial, where another witness was permitted to testify fully as to such custom.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by D. Robinet against E. L. Hawk and another, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Hawk & Son. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Ray T. Coughlin, of Sacramento, and H. W. McGowan, of Willows, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Defendants are farmers and owners of a team and wagon driven by plaintiff on defendant's ranch. Plaintiff was employed as a teamster collecting boxes of fruit, and was injured by being thrown off the wagon he was driving, along with the load of fruit thereon, for which injuries so sustained he sought judgment against defendants from the court sitting with a jury and charging defendants with negligence in and about the matters alleged in the complaint.

Defendants denied negligence and pleaded that the injuries received by plaintiff were solely the result of his own negligence. Upon the issues thus made the jury awarded plaintiff $1,000 in damages and the trial judge gave judgment on the verdict, from which judgment defendants have appealed.

Appellants urge that the evidence is such as to preclude a finding of negligence on the part of defendants; also that the evidence shows conclusively that the plaintiff's negligence was the sole cause of the injuries received by him; also that the court misdirected the jury in that it told them that defendants were insurers of the safety of their premises and of the appliances used by plaintiff as their employee; and, lastly, that the evidence offered by defendants to the effect that the equipment and appliances furnished plaintiff by the defendants were those customarily used for such purposes was erroneously excluded by the court. We shall discuss these questions in the order named.

[1] It must be borne in mind that the relationship here between the parties is that of employer and employee, which makes what is known as the Roseberry Act (Stats. 1911, p. 796), applicable, excluding, however, from operation herein the so-called Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279).

[2, 3] Under the Roseberry Act assumption of the risk is no defense to an action of this character, and the doctrine of relative negligence modifies the old rule of contributory negligence. Hackelberry v. Sherlock, 39 Cal. App. 764, 180 P. 37, where numerous cases are cited; Elder v. Rose, 63 Cal. App. 545, 219 P. 74. Under this act plaintiff may recover if he is injured while in the course of his employment through "the want of ordinary or reasonable care of the employer," and in such cases "the fact that such employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery therein where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross in comparison."

As we have seen, the plaintiff was employed by the defendants as a teamster, his duties being to drive along between the rows of peach trees, gather up the loaded boxes, and drive them to the place desired by the employer. Plaintiff's duties were purely those of driving the team, as he had helpers in other departments of the work. On the morning of the accident he was instructed to drive a team attached to an ordinary farm wagon throughout the orchard for the purposes above stated. The wagon floor or bed was without sides other than a rim around it about four inches high, and there was no device by which the driver could hold on. Portions of the territory over which he drove the team were covered with Bermuda grass and weeds, the latter being, as certain witnesses testified, about three feet high. The ground was rough, and it was admitted that the orchard had been irrigated by means of ridges thrown up by a disc and also by ditches; that after the irrigation season was over these ridges had not been smoothed down. One witness testified that it was customary in the vicinity, before the harvesting season began, to smooth down the ground so as to permit the access of teams along the rows of trees. The evidence also showed that there may have been irrigation ditches left open, washout holes, called by some "cat-holes," and holes caused by the taking out of old trees in the orchard preparatory to the planting of new trees therein; also that in places where these grasses and weeds were, the ordinary eye could not detect the presence of washouts or holes.

The evidence showed that on the day of the accident, while driving through the orchard, and upon making a turn therein, the wagon gave a lurch, which threw the plaintiff, together with his load of fruit, violently to the ground, rendering plaintiff unconscious for a short period of time and giving him the injuries complained of. When plaintiff finally recovered his senses and investigated his condition he found the wagon with one wheel in a hole, hub-deep, with the surrounding ground rough, and with weeds which may well have obscured plaintiff's view. Also about half the orchard was in a similar condition as to grasses, weeds, and roughness.

Plaintiff testified that he was a careful driver, with 35 years' experience, and that he had never experienced any trouble before in executing his work. He admitted, however, that at the time of the accident he was sitting on top of three of the lug boxes piled one on top of the other. The height of each of these boxes is some 15 or 16 inches. There was no evidence that defendants or their employees had any actual notice that the hole existed by reason of which plaintiff was injured, but it is admitted that no effort was made to smooth down the irrigation ridges and that defendants relied upon the presence of the wagon wheels to smooth down these ridges, which they said were of a sandy material.

[4] It is too clear for controversy that the jury would have been warranted in believing all or either of the following propositions: (1) That it was negligence on the part of defendants to allow a hole deep enough to bury a wagon wheel to the hub to remain upon the premises where servants were expected to go, with the view thereof hidden by the presence of grasses and weeds; or (2) that defendants were negligent in not providing a wagon which either had a seat or a stanchion or some other device thereon with which the employee might steady himself in case of emergency; or, indeed, (3) that it was negligence on the part of defendants to have no means of holding the boxes on the wagon floor which would at least prevent the bottom layer of boxes from sliding off in case of a sudden lurch or tilting of the wagon.

There is, in our opinion, ample evidence warranting the jury in finding negligence on the part of defendants, and this by a "countrybred" jury as well as by a "townbred" jury, of which latter type defendants complain. Negligence was properly defined by the court to the jury, and therefore no reason appears for setting aside the verdict of the jury for insufficiency of evidence of negligence on the part of defendants.

[5] Appellants further contend that even if negligence might be inferred it was slight as compared with the gross negligence of plaintiff in sitting down on the seat made by three of the fruit boxes piled one upon the other, and driving the team while thus sitting, with no seat, stanchion, or other device by which he could hold on or steady himself. However, with the combined height of the three boxes being only from 45 to 50 inches, we cannot say as a matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of any contributory negligence, to say nothing of gross negligence.

It must be remembered that the boxes were filled with fruit. As we understand it the packing was done in the following manner: A row of lug boxes were filled with fruit and were stacked lengthwise along the center of the floor of the wagon, and then on either side of the center line boxes were also packed along the side at right angles to the center line rows, with the outside end of each box tilted to the height of the rim or border around the floor bed of said wagon. This method would, if anything, make the center row of boxes the steadiest part of the entire load. Whether with three of these center rows and the plaintiff leaning against them while standing would have placed him in less danger than if seated is indeed hard to say, but we are satisfied that the jury was warranted in finding that some better method should have been provided for the safety of plaintiff when driving a team with a wagon loaded with boxes of fruit stored thereon in the manner herein described, and that plaintiff was not guilty of gross negligence in being seated on the boxes at the time of the accident.

[6] We are also satisfied that such cases as Hontz v. San Pedro, 173 Cal. 750, 161 P. 971, have no application to the facts of this case. The questions of gross or contributory negligence, like the question of negligence on the part of plaintiff, were proper questions, under the evidence, for the consideration of the jury alone, and no reason exists for our interference therewith. Moore v. Pacific Coast Steel Co., 171 Cal. 489, 153 P. 912; Scherer v. Danziger, 178 Cal. 253, 173 P. 85; Lassen v. Southern Pacific Co., 173 Cal. 71, 159 P. 143.

[7] Complaint is also made of the following instruction to the jury:

"While the servant must use ordinary care and assumes the risks of his employment he is not obliged to do anything further and the employer is liable to the employee for injuries caused from defective or unsafe appliances or places of employment especially when the defects and the dangers were unknown to the employee and were not obvious to his view. If you find from the evidence in this case that such was the situation here, under the instructions as I have given them to you, your verdict should be for the plaintiff."

The criticism is that the jury in practical effect were told that the defendants were insurers of the safety of plaintiff and that the elements of reasonable care and prudence were excluded from the case. The instruction is poorly drafted and not properly balanced, and if standing alone we would say it was erroneous. It is a misstatement of the doctrine of assumption of risk, to the detriment of plaintiff, and, standing alone, it would permit also the criticism of defendants, in that it excludes application of the principle that defendants are only required to exercise reasonable care in seeing that the place and tools of employment provided for their employees must be safe. We are also aware of the rule expressed by the court as follows in the case of Starr v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 187 Cal. 270, 278, 201 P. 599, 602:

"The rule is that where an instruction directs a verdict for plaintiff if the jury finds certain facts to be true, it must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict. Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 184, 118 P. 700, citing Killelea v. California, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 602, 74 P. 157."

To the same effect is Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Paraffine Paint Co., 188 Cal. 184, 192, 204 P. 1076.

But it will be noted that said above-quoted instruction does not undertake to be a so-called "formula" instruction, for it contains within it these saving words:

"If you find from the evidence in this case that such was the situation here, under the instructions as I have given them to you. * * *"

Elsewhere in the instructions the court proceeds to say:

"A master is bound to use reasonable care to prevent injuries to his servants in the course of their employment. * * *

"The care required of an employer is that of reasonable diligence; and reasonable diligence implies as between the employer and employee such watchfulness, caution, and foresight as under all circumstances of the particular service an ordinary careful, prudent and cautious man would exercise, * * * and if you find from the evidence and under these instructions that the defendant was so negligent and the plaintiff was not guilty of any contributory negligence, your verdict should be for the plaintiff.

"You are instructed that under the law of the state of California the defendant as an employer was bound at all times to exercise ordinary care in furnishing a reasonably safe place for his employee to work in, and if, in the present instance he failed to do so and by reason thereof the plaintiff, without negligence on his part, sustained injuries, the defendant is liable.

"It is the duty of all employers to furnish reasonably safe places in which the employees may perform their work, and to use ordinary care to keep the place reasonably safe so that the employee may not be exposed to danger. * * * While he is not an insurer of the safety of the employees, he must use ordinary care in seeing that the place is safe in the first place and to employ the same degree of care to keep it such.

"The court instructs the jury that if the plaintiff's injuries were the result of a pure accident, such as could not ordinarily be anticipated, and not the result of the negligence of either the plaintiff or the defendant, then the plaintiff cannot recover. He cannot recover at all unless his injuries were caused by the negligence of the defendant."

We therefore readily conclude that when the instructions are read together they are not erroneous, especially to the injury of defendants, but that they are in reality more favorable to defendants than the law required, for, in addition to the statement that plaintiff assumed the risk of his employment, which is not the law, the instructions also keep in the case the old doctrine of contributory negligence before any modification was made in favor of the employee.

[8] Likewise there is no substance in the contention concerning the rulings of the court in the rejection of certain evidence. During the examination of A. S. Hawk, one of the defendants herein, a juror propounded questions indicating that he was interested in the question as to whether the bed of the wagon had sides thereon, to which question defendant replied that there was no sides on the wagon, for if there were a man could not lift the fruit over them. The juror also wanted to know if the driver of the team had anything to catch hold of, and the reply to this question was in the negative, whereupon counsel for this witness propounded to him this question: "Q. Is it customary to have sides on the wagon collecting fruit in an orchard? A. No; if there were, we could not get the fruit up there."

The above answer was made without objection, whereupon the following question was asked: "Is it customary to furnish anything for the teamster to hold onto on the wagon?" Objection was made that the question was "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent" and the court sustained the objection, stating that he did not think it was material; that the issue was what was done in this particular case rather than what the custom was. We are unable to see any error whatsoever in this ruling of the trial court.

[9] In the first place the doctrine of customary usage does not to our knowledge apply to the question of legal duty under the law of negligence. In Perry v. Angelus Hospital Association, 172 Cal. 311, 315, 156 P. 449, 450, we say:

> "We know of no authority for the proposition that by continuing in a careless performance of duty a party transforms its negligence into due care. Silviera v. Iverson, 125 Cal. 266, 57 P. 996."

[10] In the second place the wife of the defendant, Mrs. Rose Hawk, testified without objection at length as to the method used by the teamsters with wagons of this character. She said some teamsters sat down upon the floor of the wagon with their feet hanging off and others stood up while driving and leaned against the load of boxes; that she was not sure, but that she did not think any of them ever sat down upon the boxes while driving, although she was not sure of it. In other words, her entire testimony was in legal effect testimony as to the custom of drivers of wagons of that type in the harvesting of fruit and the gathering of fruit boxes. There was no possible injury, therefore, to defendants by sustaining this objection.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.

---

200 Cal. 299

In re JOHNSON'S ESTATE. (S. F. 11925.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1927, as Modified Feb. 24, 1927.)

1. Wills 🔑302(6)—Verdict that alleged will was not entirely in hand of decedent held sustained by conflicting evidence.

Evidence, being conflicting, held sufficient to sustain verdict that alleged will was not entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of decedent.

2. Wills 🔑384—Appellate court must assume that jury believed evidence which would sustain verdict that olographic will was not entirely in hand of testatrix.

Where certain evidence, if believed, would be sufficient to sustain verdict that alleged olographic will was not entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testatrix, appellate court must assume that the jury believed it.

3. Wills 🔑324(2)—Verdict against competency of testatrix, adjudicated insane because of senile dementia shortly after executing will, held sustained by conflicting evidence.

Evidence, being conflicting, held to sustain verdict against soundness of mind of testatrix nearing 80 years of age, who had been adjudicated incompetent and was adjudicated insane and committed to hospital because of senile dementia shortly after execution of alleged will.

4. Wills 🔑55(1), 302(6)—Testimony that will is not in hand of testatrix and to show her mental incompetency need not be corroborated (Code Civ. Proc. § 1844).

That testimony to show that alleged will is not entirely in hand of testatrix and to show that testatrix was mentally incompetent is not corroborated does not remove it from consideration of jury, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1844, providing that direct evidence of one witness entitled to full credit is sufficient proof of any fact except perjury and treason.

5. Trial 🔑296(2)—Instruction that will and exemplars of decedent's handwriting were before jury, who should determine therefrom whether will was in handwriting of decedent, held harmless, in view of other instructions.

Instruction that jury had the alleged will before it, as well as the exemplars of the handwriting of deceased, and that it was for them to determine therefrom whether the alleged will was wholly written, dated, and signed in handwriting of deceased, held not prejudicial because of the word therefrom, in view of other instructions.

6. Trial 🔑194(9)—Instruction that jury could determine whether will was in decedent's handwriting contrary to opinion of expert or without opinion of expert held not error.

Instruction that jury could determine whether alleged will was wholly written, dated, and signed in handwriting of deceased "contrary to the opinion of an expert or without the opinion of a handwriting expert" held not to usurp the functions of the jury, where no professional examiner of questioned documents was called as witness, since fair assumption is that jury understood by the instruction that testimony of such witness was unnecessary.

7. Wills 🔑302(6)—Testimony of handwriting expert is unnecessary to enable jury to determine whether will is in decedent's handwriting.

Testimony of a professional examiner of questioned documents is unnecessary to enable jury to determine whether alleged will was entirely written, dated, and signed by hand of decedent.

8. Wills 🔑302(6)—Jury may determine whether will is in decedent's handwriting from comparison with exemplars of decedent's handwriting.

Jury can determine whether alleged will was entirely written, dated, and signed by hand of decedent by comparison of exemplars of handwriting of decedent and alleged will, without aid of any oral testimony.

9. Wills 🔑55(1)—Adjudication of incompetency in guardianship proceeding is evidence of mental condition then existing, but is not prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity (Civ. Code, § 40).

Adjudication of incompetency in guardianship proceeding is evidence of mental condition on the date of adjudication, but since amendment in 1878 of Civ. Code, § 40, is not prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity on date of adjudication so as to shift the burden of proof to the proponent of the will.

10. Trial ⚷296(2) — Erroneous instruction that adjudication of incompetency in guardianship proceedings was prima facie evidence of then existing testamentary incapacity held harmless, in view of other instructions.

Instruction that adjudication of incompetency in guardianship proceedings was prima facie evidence of incompetent's want of testamentary capacity on the dates of the adjudication held harmless error, in view of other instructions.

11. Wills ⚷52(1)—Contestant has burden of showing claimed unsoundness of mind.

Where contestant claims that testatrix was of unsound mind at date of execution of will, he has burden of showing it.

12. Wills ⚷329(1, 2) — Instruction that in weighing evidence jury must treat contestant, an adopted daughter, as though born in lawful wedlock, held not error.

In will contest by adopted daughter, it was not error to instruct that jury, in weighing the evidence, must treat the contestant in all respects as though she had been born to decedent in lawful wedlock.

13. Adoption ⚷18—By statute, adopted daughter is lawful child of person adopting her, as though born in wedlock (Civ. Code, § 228).

By terms of Civ. Code, § 228, adopted daughter is the lawful child of the person adopting her, the same as though she had been born in lawful wedlock.

14. Appeal and error ⚷1056(1) — Excluding doctor's private conversation with testatrix, his patient, held not prejudicial error, where he was permitted to give opinion as to her mental condition.

In will contest, excluding doctor's testimony to conversation with testatrix, his patient, for purpose of ascertaining her mental condition on ground that conversation was privileged, held not prejudicial error, where there was no showing that any third person heard the conversation, and doctor was permitted to give his opinion as to her mental condition at time of conversation.

15. Trial ⚷260(5)—Failure to instruct at time of request to disregard question whether proponent did not intend to be bound by adverse verdict held not error, in view of later charge.

Failure to instruct at time of objection and request to instruct to disregard excluded question, which was whether proponent did not intend to be bound by jury if they found testatrix was of unsound mind, held not error, where court later instructed jury to disregard all questions to which objections had been sustained.

16. Wills ⚷405—Costs will be paid from estate, where proponents appeal from denial of probate in good faith (Code Civ. Proc. § 1720).

Where appeal by proponents of will from denial of probate is in good faith, costs will be paid from the assets of the estate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1720.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Proceeding by Aurilla Mabel Waller against Amos O. Williams, Public Administrator of Santa Clara County, and another, to contest probate of the will of Aurilla Johnson, deceased. From the judgment in favor of contestant, proponents appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 198 Cal. 469, 245 P. 1089, 252 P. 1052.

Maurice J. Rankin and L. H. Walker, both of San Jose, for appellants.

H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, and Daniel Rygel, of Oakland, for respondent.

SHENK, J. Aurilla Johnson died at the Agnews State Hospital for the Insane on January 11, 1924, at the age of 79 years. The public administrator of Santa Clara county offered for probate a document purporting to be her last will and testament, olographic in form. Emily W. Ewald, a niece of the deceased husband of the decedent, was named as the sole beneficiary. Aurilla Mabel Waller, an adopted daughter of the decedent and the respondent herein, was expressly omitted. The respondent contested the probate of the alleged will on the ground that the same was not entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the decedent and that decedent was not of sound mind on the day of its alleged execution. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict as to each issue in favor of the contestant. From the judgment on the verdict this appeal is prosecuted by the proponent and by the sole beneficiary named therein.

The grounds of appeal are that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict on either of said issues and that the court erred in giving certain instructions and in admitting and excluding certain testimony.

[1-3] On the issue of whether the alleged will was wholly written, dated, and signed by the decedent, evidence was introduced on behalf of the appellants to the effect that the said document was entirely written, dated, and signed by her. On the other hand, the contestant testified that while the signature attached to the document was genuine the remainder of the document was not in her mother's handwriting. If the latter testimony was believed by the jury to be true, and we must on appeal assume that it was, the said evidence was sufficient to support the verdict on that issue. As to the issue of testamentary incapacity the same situation is disclosed by the record, namely, a conflict in the evidence. On behalf of the contestant it appeared that on the 22d day of March, 1922, the decedent was, in proceedings instituted in the superior court of Santa Clara county, declared to be incompetent to manage her property or to care for her person, and a guardian of her person and estate was appointed. She was continuously thereafter subjected to such guardianship by judgments of said court. On the 10th day of May, 1923, she was by said court adjudged an insane person and committed to the Agnews State Hospital, where she remained until her death. The alleged will was dated April 3, 1923. No one claims to have witnessed its execution. The appellant Mrs. Ewald testified that it was delivered to her by the decedent personally a few days after its date. One of the physicians at the State Hospital testified that the decedent was suffering from senile dementia to such an extent that she could not discern the difference between day and night. The adjudication, on May 10, 1923, that the decedent was insane raised a presumption that she was wanting in testamentary capacity on that date. Estate of Baker, 176 Cal. 430, 168 P. 881. The judgments in the incompetency proceedings were evidence of the mental condition of the decedent on the days of those adjudications. Assuming, as contended by appellants, that neither the judgments in the incompetency proceedings nor the adjudication of insanity on May 10, 1923, would be sufficient to show want of testamentary capacity on April 3, 1923, the date of the alleged will, nevertheless, the appellant Mrs. Ewald testified that the mental condition of the decedent was absolutely the same from October, 1922, to December, 1923, which dates would include May 10, 1923, when she was presumed to be lacking in testamentary capacity, and April 3, 1923, the date of the alleged will. See Estate of Loveland, 162 Cal. 595, 123 P. 801.

In addition to the record evidence and the testimony of Mrs. Ewald there was other oral testimony on the issue of want of testamentary capacity, both in support of and against that issue. The contestant testified at length as to the mental condition of the decedent for several years prior to her death, including the period subsequent to October, 1922. From this testimony, coupled with the testimony of Mrs. Ewald that the mental condition of the decedent was absolutely the same from October, 1922, to December, 1923, the jury was entitled to infer that on the date of the alleged will the decedent did not possess testamentary capacity.

[4] The appellants urge that much of the testimony of the contestant was uncorroborated, but even so, the same was not for that reason removed from the consideration of the jury. Section 1844, Code Civ. Proc. The record, therefore, presents a conflict in the evidence as to both issues which, when resolved in favor of the contestant by the jury, may not otherwise be resolved on appeal.

[5-8] The appellants contend that the court committed prejudicial error in giving the following instructions:

> "The jury has the proposed will before it, as well as the exemplars of the handwriting of Aurilla Johnson, and it is for you to determine therefrom whether or not this document is wholly written, dated, and signed in the handwriting of the decedent. You may determine this issue even contrary to the opinion of an expert, or without the evidence of a handwriting expert."

It is insisted that by the use of the word "therefrom" in the foregoing instruction the court withdrew from the consideration of the jury the oral testimony relating to the genuineness of the document in question and limited its consideration of the evidence to the proposed will and the exemplars. In the absence of other instructions given the point urged might present a serious situation, but the court went on to instruct the jury that the instructions must be considered by the jury as a whole and that the proposed will might be considered together with all the evidence in the case. When considered in their entirety it may not be said that the appellants were prejudicially affected by the use of the word complained of. It is also insisted that in said instruction the court usurped the function of the jury in stating that the issue might be determined "contrary to the opinion of an expert, or without the opinion of a handwriting expert." No witness was called who assumed to be a handwriting expert in the sense of a professional examiner of questioned documents. It may fairly be assumed that the court meant, and that the jury understood, that the testimony of such an expert was not necessary to a determination of the issue. It is then a correct statement of the law. If in the first use of the word "expert" the court referred to those witnesses who were familiar with the handwriting of the decedent, it is also a correct statement of the law that the jury could determine the issue by comparison of the documents and without the aid of the oral testimony of any witness. Castor v. Bernstein, 2 Cal. App. 703, 84 P. 244.

[9-11] The court instructed the jury that the adjudications of March 22, 1922, and January 31, 1923, declaring the decedent to be an incompetent person in the guardianship proceedings, were "prima facie evidence of want of testamentary capacity" on the dates of said orders. It is urged that such was not the legal effect of such orders. We are cited to no authority in this state, and we have discovered none since the amendment of section 40 of the Civil Code in 1878, holding that an adjudication of incompetency in a guardianship proceeding raises a presumption of testamentary incapacity or is even prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity. Estate of Johnson, 57 Cal. 529, construed said section 40 prior to its amendment. Proof of incompetency in a guardianship proceeding is evidence of mental condition on the date of the adjudication, but it is not prima facie evidence of testamentary incapacity so as to shift the burden of proof to the proponent of the will. Estate of Loveland, supra; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448, 15 N. W. 545. Notwithstanding the erroneous use of the term "prima facie" in the instruction complained of, we are of the opinion that the appellants were not prejudiced thereby, in view of the fact that the court elsewhere fully instructed the jury that said adjudications of incompetency in the guardianship proceedings did not necessarily mean that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time of such adjudications, or that she was not then competent to make a valid will; also that the adjudication of insanity of May 10, 1923, did not raise a presumption of testamentary incapacity on April 3, 1923, the date of the alleged will, and that the burden of proving that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the alleged will rested at all times upon the contestant. When considered as a whole, we think the jury was made clearly to understand that, notwithstanding the several adjudications, the burden of proving unsoundness of mind on the date of the alleged will was always on the contestant.

[12, 13] Complaint is made of the instruction that "in weighing the evidence you must treat the contestant in this case in all respects as though she was born to Aurilla Johnson in lawful wedlock." It is insisted that the jury had the right to take into consideration the fact that the contestant was not a blood relative of the decedent, but a relative only by adoption, and that the giving of said instruction was in violence of our constitutional provision forbidding a judge to charge the jury with respect to matters of fact. It was conceded at the trial that the contestant was the adopted child of the decedent. As such she was the lawful child of the decedent the same as though she had been born to the decedent in lawful wedlock. Section 228, Civ. Code; 1 Cal. Jur. 449. The instruction correctly declared the law and we find no error in the declaration by the court that in considering the evidence the jury should bear in mind the legal effect of the adoption proceeding.

[14] Complaint is also made of the ruling of the court in sustaining an objection to a question propounded to Dr. Stocking, wherein the witness was requested to relate a conversation he had with the decedent at the hospital. Dr. Stocking, as a physician and medical superintendent of the Agnews State Hospital was interviewing the decedent as one of his patients in the hospital for the purpose of ascertaining particularly her mental condition. It does not appear that any third party heard the conversation and the objection was sustained on the ground that the said conversation was privileged. The witness was permitted to give his opinion as to the mental condition of the decedent at the time of the conversation and we find no prejudicial error in excluding evidence of the conversation itself.

[15] During the cross-examination of Mrs. Ewald, the contestant's counsel asked her the following question:

> "Then you do not propose to be bound by the action of this jury in the event that they find that she was of unsound mind on April 3, 1923, do you?"

This question was objected to by appellants' counsel and the court was requested to instruct the jury to disregard the same. The court sustained the objection, but did not at that time direct the jury to pay no heed to the question. The point is made that the refusal then to instruct the jury is prejudicial error. There is no merit in the contention, for the reason that in its instructions to the jury the court specifically directed the jury to banish from their minds all question propounded by counsel to which objections had been sustained. This we think was all that was required under the record here presented.

[16] The judgment is affirmed. As the appeal herein appears to have been prosecuted in good faith, it is ordered that the costs of the appellants be paid out of the assets of said estate. Section 1720, Code Civ. Proc.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

---

200 Cal. 307

In re JOHNSON'S ESTATE.

WALLER v. EWALD et al.

(S. F. 11752.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1927.)

1. Costs ⚿244—Where Supreme Court did not exercise discretion as to costs on affirming order vacating judgment for costs in will contest, clerk's insertion in remittitur of order for costs to respondent was improper (Code Civ. Proc. § 1720).

Where Supreme Court did not exercise its discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1720, as to award of costs on appeal when it affirmed order vacating judgment for costs in will contest before probate, insertion in remittitur of provision awarding costs on appeal to respondent was improper.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1222—Motion to recall remittitur and to strike out provision is proper remedy for unauthorized award of costs.

Motion to recall remittitur and to strike out unauthorized provision awarding costs to respondent is proper remedy to exclude unauthorized award from remittitur.

3. Costs 🔑223—Discretion as to award of costs cannot be exercised by Supreme Court after it loses jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1720).

After Supreme Court has lost jurisdiction of appeal, it cannot exercise any discretion as to award of costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1720.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1217—Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of appeal after remittitur goes down.

After remittitur goes down to trial court, Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of the appeal.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1207(3)—Trial court may award costs on appeal, where Supreme Court does not (Code Civ. Proc. § 1720).

Where Supreme Court fails to exercise discretion as to award of costs on appeal, trial court may make the award, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1720.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Proceeding by Aurilla Mabel Waller against Emily W. Ewald and another to contest probate of the will of Aurilla Johnson, deceased. Order vacating the portion of the judgment awarding costs to contestant against Emily W. Ewald was affirmed (198 Cal. 469, 245 P. 1089). On motion to recall remittitur and to strike out provision as to costs on appeal. Motion granted.

See, also, 252 P. 1049.

H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, and Daniel Rygel, of Oakland, for appellant.

Maurice J. Rankin and L. H. Walker, both of San Jose, for respondents.

SHENK, J. [1-5] On a contest before probate of the alleged will of the decedent the jury found for the contestant and judgment was entered accordingly, including costs to the contestant. On motion of the proponent the trial court entered an order vacating the judgment for costs. The contestant appealed from said order and the order was affirmed. Estate of Johnson, 198 Cal. 469, 245 P. 1089. On the going down of the remittitur the clerk of this court inserted therein the words, "Respondents to recover costs on appeal," in accordance with the rule governing ordinary civil actions. In due time the contestant filed a notice of motion in this court to recall the remittitur and to strike therefrom the provision for costs on appeal on the ground that the allowance of costs in a contest before probate must abide the final determination of the proceeding. Section 1720, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Johnson, supra. The proceeding is finally determined by the affirmance of the judgment on the main appeal this day decided (252 P. 1049) wherein this court has in the exercise of its discretion under said section 1720 directed that costs on the main appeal be paid out of the assets of the estate. On the former appeal the court did not exercise its discretion in awarding costs pursuant to said section 1720, and the provision for costs on said appeal was improperly incorporated in the remittitur. This motion is the proper remedy on behalf of the contestant to exclude from the remittitur the unauthorized provision. San Joaquin, etc., Irr. Co. v. Stevinson, 165 Cal. 540, 132 P. 1021. As this court has lost jurisdiction of the former appeal, we may not now exercise any discretionary power in awarding costs therein. An appropriate order may, however, be made by the trial court with reference to the costs on the former appeal in the exercise of its discretion under said section 1720.

The motion is therefore granted, and it is ordered that the remittitur issued herein by the clerk of this court on May 20, 1926, be recalled, and that a correct remittitur be issued in its place nunc pro tunc omitting the words, "Respondents to recover costs on appeal."

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 105

Ex parte BLANC et al. (Cr. 1401.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 27, 1927.)

1. Habeas corpus 🔑92(1)—Inquiry on habeas corpus is whether under proofs on which prisoners were committed lower tribunal had jurisdiction to act (Pen. Code, §§ 1474, 1480).

On habeas corpus to secure release for violation of ordinance, inquiry into extrinsic facts outside of record, under Pen. Code, §§ 1474, 1480, is not authorized, since only purpose of writ is to ascertain whether under proofs on which prisoners were committed lower tribunal had jurisdiction to act.

2. Constitutional law 🔑88—Lawful pursuit not infringing general public welfare is not subject to police regulation.

While discretion in proper administration of police power is permitted, all constituted authority, lawful pursuit, which is not infringement upon public health, morals, safety, or general welfare is not subject of police regulation, being exempt from governmental concern unless necessarily and properly taxable for revenue.

3. Constitutional law 🔑87—Ordinance regulating endless chain selling, not establishing any standard for regulation, held unconstitutional.

Ordinance governing endless chain sale of merchandise held unconstitutional, where it was not a mere regulatory enactment, but vested full power in police commissioners to destroy, without establishing any standard of business integrity up to which merchant may measure; full authority being given commissioners to grant petition of disreputable and to deny that of most creditable merchant.

4. Constitutional law 🔑88—To sustain withholding of permit to engage in lawful business, authority must be reasonably regulated, and pertaining to general public welfare, with standards definitely fixed.

Authority to withhold permit to engage in lawful business to be sustained must be regulated by reasonable provisions applying to matters of conduct in some way affecting general public welfare, standards being required to be fixed with such certainty that citizens may be apprised of their requirements.

5. Constitutional law 🔑38—Whether act is unconstitutional depends upon whether it is broad enough to authorize unconstitutional act.

Rule in determining whether act is unconstitutional is whether or not act is broad enough to authorize unconstitutional act, it being immaterial that person clothed with unconstitutional power may not use it.

Application by S. J. Blanc and another for writ of habeas corpus against the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles, to secure release from custody under warrant issued upon complaint charging violation of alleged unconstitutional ordinance. Writ granted.

Mitchell, Silberberg & Davis, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, and A. T. Folsom, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The petitioners were arrested and are detained upon a warrant issued by the municipal court pursuant to a complaint charging them with conducting, operating, and carrying on "a certain plan and scheme and system of merchandising by means of an endless chain for the sale of silk hosiery and ladies' underwear and men's furnishings, * * * without first having obtained from the board of police commissioners of the city of Los Angeles a permit so to do." It is admitted that the acts complained of were contrary to the provisions of a municipal ordinance regularly adopted and approved by the properly constituted authorities, and that it is still in force.

The ordinance in controversy, and under which the petitioners were sought to be prosecuted, is known as No. 53,315, and is entitled "An ordinance regulating the sale of merchandise or other property by means of the plan commonly known as the 'Endless Chain.'" By its terms "Endless Chain" is said to mean and include:

> "* * * Any plan or scheme wherein any person, firm, or corporation, sells, transfers, assigns or issues to any person any right, property, ticket, coupon, certificate, contract, or other token, and wherein the purchaser, transferee or assignee thereof or the person to whom the same is issued, undertakes or is required or permitted to undertake, for himself, or as the agent, representative, or attorney of such person, firm, or corporation, to sell, transfer, assign, or issue to another any right, property, ticket, coupon, certificate, contract or other token which may under certain conditions entitle the purchaser or recipient thereof to any right, property, ticket, coupon, certificate, contract, or other token from the original purchasers, transferees, or assignees thereof from the original purchasers, assignees, or transferees are also given, as a consideration for their entry into or participation in such plan or scheme and their purchase or receipt of such right, property, ticket, coupon, certificate, contract, or other token, the right, privilege or obligation of making further sales, assignments, or transfers of any right, property, ticket, coupon, certificate, contract, or other token."

Hence, any person who sells or issues to another a right or contract by the terms of which the latter undertakes or is required or permitted to undertake, either personally or by agent, to issue to a subsequent person any right, property, contract, or token "which may under certain conditions entitle the purchaser or recipient thereof to any right, property * * * contract, or other token and wherein the purchasers, * * * from the original purchasers, * * * or from subsequent purchasers, * * * are also given, as a consideration for their entry into or participation in such plan or other token, the right, privilege or obligation of making further sales * * * of any right, contract, or other token," shall, unless previously authorized in writing by permit from the board of police commissioners so to do, be guilty of a misdemeanor. Further, it is required by the ordinance that any person, firm, or corporation desiring such permit shall file with the board a verified or sworn statement, setting forth the names and addresses of all members of the firm or corporation, together with a statement of the applicant's financial condition, its assets and liabilities, giving full details of its plan of operation, together with copies of any written or printed matter proposed to be used therewith.

It is conceded that the petitioners when arrested were conducting, without having procured the permit above mentioned, a merchandising enterprise under the style of Golden States Sales Corporation, by means of contracts the contents, purpose, and effect of which were such as the terms of the ordinance sought to regulate, and this is the offense with the commission of which they have been charged.

The petitioners contend that the ordinance is unconstitutional, in that it is discriminative, vests an arbitrary power in the board, and that by requiring an application, financial statement, and literature from each agent, solicitor, and canvasser, its ultimate object and effect is prohibitive. They argue that no particular personal qualifications, financial standing, or form of contract is specified as a standard; that there is no duty of the board, or assurance to the merchant, that such information when furnished may or may not, together with, or without, "such further information as said board may require," entitle an applicant to a permit; and that it lies entirely within the arbitrary discretion of the police commissioners to grant one application and to deny another upon the same state of facts.

[1] Each of the respective parties to this proceeding has devoted much argument to assumed conditions which, if they exist, would not assist in determining as to whether or not the questioned enactment is constitutional. A sample of the contract as printed and circulated by petitioners is attached to the petition herein, and its various provisions are attempted to be construed and their virtues expounded. Conversely, the endless chain system is attacked by respondent as "mathematically, commercially, and financially unsound"; dangers of their use as gambling mediums or swindles, are attempted to be demonstrated, and it is asserted generally that the community should protect itself against the machinations of unscrupulous sharpers. But these are considerations dehors the record and foreign to the constitutional question which is alone before us for our determination.

No issue was presented nor evidence adduced in the municipal court after the issuance and execution of the warrant upon which the petitioners are held. In such cases the record consists of a petition under oath, alleging the jurisdictional facts required by section 1474 of the Penal Code, with copies of the ordinance and complaint (In re Crowley, 171 Cal. 58, 151 P. 739), and the return, accompanied by a copy of the written authority by virtue of, which the petitioners are restrained of their liberty (Pen. Code, § 1480).

Upon this record inquiry into extrinsic facts is not authorized in habeas corpus since the only purpose of the writ is to ascertain whether or not under the proofs upon which the prisoners were committed, the lower tribunal had jurisdiction to act.

[2] Therefore the only proposition here is: Is the ordinance a valid exercise of the police power, or is it in violation of the constitutional guaranties by which the petitioners are surrounded? It has been held that if a board be invested with the right not only to determine that a given vocation is unsafe, but to require other methods of conduct and thus control the livelihood of another, legislation which affords such authority is unconstitutional. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 S. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220. We are not unmindful of the fact that discretion in the proper administration of the police power is permitted all constituted authorities, but a lawful pursuit which is not an infringement upon public health, morals, or safety, or the general welfare, is not a subject of police regulation, and is exempt from governmental concern unless necessarily and properly taxable for revenue. Ex parte Quarg, 149 Cal. 79, 84 P. 766, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, 117 Am. St. Rep. 115, 9 Ann. Cas. 147; Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 585, 70 P. 674.

[3] We think that the ordinance before us is incapable of construction as merely a regulatory enactment. It vests full power in the police commissioners, not only to regulate, but to destroy. Nowhere within its four corners do we find any standard of business integrity up to which a merchant may measure, any safeguard for the protection of the public which he may supply, any guaranty of honesty and fair dealing which he may furnish, or condition of any character with which he may comply and have the right to demand and receive a permit. It is true that the ordinance requires that certain information be furnished the commissioners concerning the financial condition of the applicant, his reputation, etc., but nowhere is it provided that if in all respects as to which inquiry is made and information supplied, no shadow is cast upon his character, financial standing, or plan of merchandising, a permit will be issued. We do not assume that a board would issue permits to applicants furnishing entirely negative reports; yet it is elementary that no board may exercise arbitrary and unguided discretion, and the fact that this ordinance endows the commissioners with full authority to grant a petition of the disreputable and to deny that of the most creditable merchant, renders it obnoxious both to constitutional precepts and democratic principles. The same rule was applied in Hewitt v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750, wherein was involved a statute which forbade advertising by the publication of "grossly improbable statements." The Supreme Court there said, "the members of one board might conclude that it contained 'grossly improbable statements,' while another board might reach an entirely opposite conclusion," that "One might conclude that the statement while 'improbable' was not 'grossly'

so." Such legislation has repeatedly been condemned by the courts of this state. Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 124 Cal. 344, 57 P. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75; Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 82 P. 429, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 3 Ann. Cas. 878; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 P. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218; In re Farb, 178 Cal. 592, 174 P. 320, 3 A. L. R. 301; In re Williams (Cal. App.) 240 P. 42. Here we have an attempt to confer upon a commission the right to arbitrarily decide in any case not only whether or not a chain system is inimical to the public welfare, but even if entirely free from features having any tendency to deceive or defraud, to arbitrarily refuse to allow its operation. It seems impossible to conceive that a law which would thus place it within the power of a single commission to deny a citizen the right to contract, the privilege of earning a living, merely and solely because the commission should not see fit to allow him to do so, can be justified or defended. Respondent cites in support of the ordinance in controversy but one case which we think in any way analogous to the instant one. Hubbard v. Freiberger, 133 Mich. 139, 94 N. W. 727, was an action upon a promissory note given by the defendant to a wagon dealer on account of the purchase price specified in an endless chain contract. It was held that the contract was against public policy and void, and that the note was therefore without consideration. The court there announced, however, that "It is a scheme which, upon its face, shows that it cannot be worked out without ultimately leaving parties with these so-called coupons on their hands, possessing no value." The decision was rendered upon appeal after a trial in which, among other evidence, the contract was received, and was contained in the record before the Supreme Court of Michigan. No constitutional question was involved. Unlike that situation, we have here not a particular contract the consideration of which is questioned, but an ordinance whose validity is challenged. Assuming that some endless chain schemes may be against public policy, it cannot be said that all such systems, especially as limited by the definition contained in the ordinance before us, are void. Yet, a sales system by which in endless succession purchasers of goods might be authorized to sell to others doubtless might be devised so as to give full value to each. Under this ordinance such a plan might be denied permission to operate in a community, and the owner of another of a grossly swindling character be granted a permit. The decision in the case last mentioned is based principally upon the authority of McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454, 36 N. W. 218, 13 Am. St. Rep. 355. What we have said of the dissimilarity of the situations presented in the case at bar and in Hubbard v. Freiberger, supra, is obviously equally applicable here. In the former case it appeared that the Bohemian Oats Association, which was found to have no legal existence, sold twenty-five bushels of oats, worth little more than ordinary grain, for $125 in cash and a promissory note for $125, upon condition that the buyer should undertake to sell within fourteen months fifty bushels more at $10 per bushel, and receive a commission of ten per cent, or twenty-five per cent. according to the manner in which the sale might be consummated. It was held that such contract was a gambling venture, was against public policy, extorted an exorbitant present price for the oats, and fixed a fictitious future value.

As upholding the right of the police commission to grant or reject applications for permits without other limitation or guidance than that afforded by the ordinance under consideration, respondent refers to several decisions which we will briefly distinguish. In People v. Monterey Fish Products Co., 195 Cal. 548, 234 P. 398, 38 A. L. R. 1186, it is said, as quoted in respondent's brief, the discretion of the commission is neither unguided nor uncontrolled, but that its exercise is made dependent upon findings of fact after a hearing. In Leach v. Daugherty (Cal. App.) 238 P. 160, the rule is announced that—

> "It is well-settled principle of law in this state that by legislative act a commission or board may be empowered to ascertain the existence of facts, upon the finding of which may depend the right to continue in the practice of a profession or a regulated business."

The act there upheld specifies certain facts to be found and upon the determination of which the ruling of the commission upon application for a permit is required to be based. The same is true of the statute construed in Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 185 P. 855, 8 A. L. R. 418, and Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 200 P. 1042. Under the provisions of that statute the showing required to be made to secure a broker's license was that the applicant be "honest, truthful, and of good reputation." Here is a definite standard of eligibility. If the facts be established, the applicant might demand and secure a license. No such provision is contained in this endless chain ordinance. In both Co-operative Junk Co. of California v. Board of Police Commissioners, 38 Cal. App. 676, 177 P. 308, and Goytino v. McAleer, 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 P. 991, the nature of the business involved was such as to be peculiarly appropriate to police supervision, and in each decisions of questions of fact were held to be controlling as to the action of the commission.

[4, 5] In any case the authority to withhold a permit to engage in lawful business, to be sustained, must be regulated by provisions of the law which are reasonable and which apply to matters of conduct upon the part of the applicant in some way affecting the health, morals or safety of the community The law must fix standards with such certainty that the citizen may be apprised of their requirements, and it is not enough that the commissioners may establish their own conditions. If they have the power to act regardless of any legislative guidance and control, the authority conferred is arbitrary and unlawful. "It does not answer the charge that the act in question is unconstitutional to say that a person clothed with such power may not see fit to use the power. The rule in determining whether the act is in conflict with constitutional guaranties is whether or not the act is broad enough to authorize such unconstitutional act." People v. Pace (Cal. App.) 238 P. 1089.

Other provisions of the ordinance are attacked upon constitutional grounds, but since they are not the basis of the prosecution out of which this proceeding has resulted, a discussion of them would be inappropriate.

As a necessary result of the views herein expressed, it is ordered that the petitioners be discharged.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.,; THOMPSON, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 128

Ex parte FLESHER. (Cr. 1451.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1927.)

1. Statutes 🔑190—Appellate court cannot apply rule of construction to unambiguous statute.

Appellate court cannot apply rule of construction to statute, where its language is not fairly subject to different constructions.

2. Banks and banking 🔑232, 233—Congress may create banking corporations under constitutional provision authorizing laws to execute its powers, and states cannot regulate them to impair efficiency (Const. U. S. art. I, § 8).

Under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, authorizing Congress to make laws necessary to carry powers into execution, Congress may create such corporations as national banks, railroads, and telegraph and bridge companies in aid of revenue laws and interstate commerce, and states cannot regulate them to interfere with their efficiency.

3. Corporations 🔑1—Corporations organized under Code of Laws for District of Columbia are same as those of states (31 Stat. 1189).

Corporations organized and existing under the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia (31 Stat. 1189), are not different from those organized in one of the states.

4. Licenses 🔑8(1)—Clause in Corporate Securities Act, excepting corporations organized under acts of Congress, is open to construction (Const. U. S. art. I, § 8; 31 Stat. 1189; St. Cal. 1917, p. 673, § 2, subd. 3 [a]).

Clause in Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, § 2, subd. 3 [a]), excepting "corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress of the United States," is open to construction and interpretation, since it may mean either corporations of public character created under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, or those organized under such general laws as 31 Stat. 1189, in District of Columbia or territories.

5. Licenses 🔑18½, New vol. 12A Key-No. Series—"Other corporations" organized under acts of Congress, which are excepted from Corporate Securities Act, mean same class of corporations as national banking organizations under rule of ejusdem generis (St. 1917, p. 673, § 2, subd. 3 [a]).

In clause in Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, § 2, subd. 3 [a]), excepting "national banking associations and other corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress of the United States," general words should be construed to mean same class of corporations as national banking organizations, under rule of ejusdem generis.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Other.]

6. Constitutional law 🔑48—Court should construe statute favorable to constitutionality.

Where statute is fairly capable of two different constructions, court should give to it that construction which will favor its constitutionality.

7. Licenses 🔑7(2)—Any clause of Corporate Securities Act excepting corporations of District of Columbia would be unconstitutional as substantial discrimination (31 Stat. 1189).

Any clause in Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), which would except corporations organized in District of Columbia under 31 Stat. 1189 et seq. would be unconstitutional as substantial discrimination.

8. Licenses 🔑8(1)—Same purpose was intended in Corporate Securities Act as in Investment Companies Act 1913, notwithstanding different language.

Same purpose was intended in Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), as in Investment Companies Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 715), though language is different, since changes were merely attempt to arrange act logically and dispense with unnecessary verbiage.

9. Licenses 🔑18½, New, vol. 12A Key-No. Series—Appellate court should construe Corporate Securities Act to prevent issuance without permit of corporate securities within state by foreign corporations organized in any other state, territory, or District of Columbia.

Appellate court should give effect to intention of Legislature in enacting Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), to prevent issuance without permit of corporate securities within state by foreign corporations organized in any other state or territory or District of Columbia.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Application by H. B. Flesher for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, to secure release of petitioner from custody on a charge of violating the Corporate Securities Act. Writ denied.

Shaw & McDaniel, Victor E. Shaw and W. I. Gilbert, all of Los Angeles, D. H. Cannon, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and Frank P. Doherty, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an application for the writ of habeas corpus, and from the petition and return thereto it appears that the petitioner was charged with violating the Corporate Securities Act. The complaint shows that on the 5th day of October, 1926, petitioner knowingly, willfully, and unlawfully sold ten shares of the capital stock of the Julian Merger Mines, Incorporated, which corporation did not at the time have a permit from the commissioner of corporations of the state of California authorizing it to sell or issue any of its securities. It also shows that the Julian Merger Mines, Incorporated, is organized and existing under and by virtue of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia created by "An Act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia." Vol. 31, United States Statutes at Large, pp. 1189 et seq., approved March 3, 1901.

The petitioner bases his argument upon section 2 of the Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, p. 673), particularly upon subdivision 3(a) of that section. Section 2, subd. 3, reads as follows:

> "The word 'company' includes all domestic and foreign, private corporations, associations, joint stock companies, and partnerships, of every kind, and also trustees, as hereinafter defined; excepting therefrom:
>
> "(a) All national banking associations and other corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress of the United States."

The excepting clause just quoted replaced the following language in the Investment Companies Act (Henning Gen. Laws 1920, p. 1199):

> "This act shall not apply * * * to corporations, associations, copartnerships or companies, subject to federal regulation. * * *"

He contends that the language of the excepting clause is clear and unambiguous and that there is no room for the application of the rules of construction recognized by the courts in those cases where it can be fairly said that the language is capable of two different interpretations. He also maintains that the act is highly penal in its nature and that for that reason we must construe it in accordance with its language. He relies upon the rule that "constructive crimes—crimes built up by courts, with the aid of inference, implication, and strained interpretation—are repugnant to the spirit and letter of English and American criminal law." Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 19 P. 237, 11 Am. St. Rep. 257. Petitioner also claims that the amendment of the exception raises a presumption that the Legislature intended by its selection of different words to express a different exception from that originally excluded by the language first used. The Attorney General, on the other hand, maintains that the Corporate Securities Act should receive a liberal construction and that the exemption comprehended by section 2, subd. 3(a), extends only to those corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress of the United States which either pertain to the national government and are of public character or are national in the scope of their intended operation, and urges as one of the reasons for this interpretation the argument that if the clause is construed to include corporations organized under the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, there would result such an unwarranted classification and removal of such corporations from the operation of the act as to render the exemption clause unconstitutional.

[1, 2] This argument of the Attorney General commands our most serious attention, for if it be possible to maintain the intent of the people expressed through the legislative branch of the government and yet save the section from danger of attack on the ground of its unconstitutionality, such result is in entire consonance with all of the rules of construction. We cannot, however, apply a rule of construction where there exists no room for construction. We must first of all be convinced that the exemption is fairly subject to two different constructions before applying any rule, and in this particular it should be noted that Congress is nowhere expressly authorized to provide by law for the incorporation of corporate entities, not to create corporations except as the legislative body for the District of Columbia and "all places purchased * * * for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." Section 8, art. 1, U. S. Const. The power which it has and exercises by which corporations are otherwise created is referable to the last subdivision of article 1, § 8, of the Constitution of the United States, as follows:

> "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

Under this last clause it has been held that Congress has the right to create national banks in aid of the revenue laws, railroad corporations, telegraph companies, and bridge corporations over navigable waters in furtherance of interstate commerce. McCulloch v. State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. Ed. 579; Sanford v. Poe, 165 U. S. 194, 17 S. Ct. 316, 41 L. Ed. 683; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 738, 739, 6 L. Ed. 204; Luxton v. North River Bridge Co., 153 U. S. 525, 14 S. Ct. 891, 38 L. Ed. 808; California v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 S. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150; Union Pacific Ry. Co. v. Myers, 115 U. S. 1, 5 S. Ct. 1113, 29 L. Ed. 319, and Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10960, affirmed 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. Ed. 708. These cases just cited are also authority for the proposition that where Congress provides for the establishment of any such corporation in furtherance of some power or authority granted by Congress by the Constitution, that the states are without authority, unless permitted by congressional act, to interfere or impair by taxation, regulation or otherwise the efficiency of such corporations. As was said by Chief Justice Marshall in the case of Osborn v. Bank of the United States, supra:

> "The bank is not considered as a private corporation, whose principal object is individual trade and individual profit; but as a public corporation, created for public and national purposes. That the mere business of banking is, in its own nature, a private business, and may be carried on by individuals or companies having no political connection with the government, is admitted; but the bank is not such an individual or company. It was not created for its own sake, or for private purposes. It has never been supposed that Congress could create such a corporation. The whole opinion of the court, in the case of McCulloch v. State of Maryland, is founded on, and sustained by, the idea that the bank is an instrument which is 'necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers vested in the government of the United States.' It is not an instrument which the government found ready-made, and has supposed to be adapted to its purposes; but one which was created in the form in which it now appears, for national purposes only."

[3] When, however, we come to corporations such as the present one, organized and existing under the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, we are confronted by an entirely different situation. Corporations so organized are not different from those organized in one of the states of the Union. Layden v. Endowment Rank, Knights of Pythias of the World, 128 N. C. 546, 39 S. E. 47, points out the distinction in this language:

> "The line of demarcation between state and federal authority does not depend upon territorial limits, but entirely upon the subject-matter of legislation or judicial construction as defined by the Constitution of the United States. This doctrine applies to the federal government only in its relation to the states, as it is controlled by principles essentially different when dealing with the District of Columbia, or other territories of the United States. Congress is the supreme lawmaking power of all territories, certainly unrestrained by any local authority, and it would seem but indefinitely so even by the federal Constitution. In such cases it seems to us that Congress acts, not in its national capacity, but as a local Legislature, and its acts, unless otherwise clearly expressed, are confined in their binding operation to the jurisdictions for which they were originally intended. We therefore think that corporations, chartered primarily to do business in the District of Columbia, have no right, beyond that of comity, to operate in any of the states, unless expressly authorized by their charters. They therefore stand on the same footing as corporations of other states so far as the act of 1899 is concerned."

See, also, Williams v. Creswell, 51 Miss. 817.

A casual inspection of the other exemptions noted under section 2, subd. 3, of the Corporate Securities Act, and designated as (b), (c), (d), and (e), conveys to our mind the legislative intent to exclude from the definitive words of the section all corporations subject to some other supervisory power of the state and corporations whose purposes are benevolent, religious, social, humane, or the advancement and promotion of the general good without profit. There is nowhere, except possibly in the clause under consideration, the slightest indication to exclude a corporation formed for profit, the securities of which might properly be brought under the supervision of the commissioner except those where the issuance of securities was already under supervision.

[4, 5] From the investigation so far made it seems reasonably clear, regardless of what effect must eventually be given to the words, "other corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress of the United States," that the Legislature had in mind the advisability of excluding from its definition and from the operation of the act those corporations which, comparable to national banking organizations, are organized in furtherance of some power or authority vested in Congress and with the operation of which it was without power to interfere. The last statement is the equivalent of saying that it was not the legislative intent to exclude from the operation of the act those corporations over which the state has a perfect right to exercise its regulatory measures to prevent the improper or fraudulent issuance of securities. We are of the opinion that the excepting clause is open to construction and interpretation for the reason that "corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress of the United States" means two entirely distinct and different kinds of corporations: First, There are those similar to national banking organizations of a public character; and, secondly, those organized in the District of Columbia or other territories under general laws providing for the incorporation of private business undertakings. Under this situation we think the rule generally known as the rule of ejusdem generis should apply, and that the general words in question should be construed to mean the same class or general nature of corporations as national banking organizations, to wit, corporations organized in furtherance of some power conferred upon Congress. Pasadena University v. Los Angeles County, 190 Cal. 786, 214 P. 868; 25 R. C. L. 996, 997. Petitioner's contention that this rule has no application in the present instance by reason of the rule that courts favor a construction which will render every word operative rather than one which renders some words nugatory, is not well taken for the reason, as we have seen, that the intent as gathered from the act as a whole is consistent with the application of the rule of ejusdem generis.

[6, 7] The interpretation thus put upon the words is reinforced by the well-recognized rule of interpretation that where a statute is fairly capable of two different constructions the court should give to it that construction which will favor its constitutionality rather than one which might render it unconstitutional. If we should adopt the reasoning of petitioner upon this question, corporations organized in the District of Columbia or under acts of Congress in our territorial possessions, there would seem to be a discrimination in favor of such corporations not supported by any reasonable basis for such classification. It is well settled that a statute which contains exemptions amounting to substantial discrimination, without a reasonable basis therefor, is unconstitutional. Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604; In re Raleigh, 177 Cal. 746, 171 P. 950, and cases cited. On the other hand, the interpretation which we have given to the language seems to be entirely free of such objection and in keeping with the whole spirit and intent of the Corporate Securities Act.

Nor do we think that the interpretation which we feel should be given to the words in question can in any sense be said to be a strained interpretation resulting in the creation of a constructive offense as denounced in Ex parte McNulty, supra. The rule thus announced must be founded upon the thought that every person is entitled to know by a reading of the law what offense is denounced therein, and although the language here may be considered capable of two different interpretations according to rules of law, we are of the opinion that an ordinary person reading the Corporate Securities Act as a whole would come to the conclusion that the Legislature had intended to prevent the issuance of securities without permit, of all domestic and foreign corporations, whether organized in a state, territory, or the District of Columbia.

[8, 9] While the language of the exempting clause in the Corporate Securities Act is different from that of the Investment Companies Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 715), we do not believe that it is controlling or that it necessarily indicates that a different purpose was intended. Had it been only the language of the exempting clause which was changed it would have greater weight than it has here, because the Corporate Securities Act was in fact rewritten to supersede the Investment Companies Act. The rule is well stated in United States & Canada Land Co. v. Sullivan, 113 Minn. 27, 128 N. W. 1112, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 51, in this language:

> "And though a change in the phraseology of an amendatory statute raises a presumption that a departure from the old law was intended, such a change is not ordinarily or necessarily of particular significance in the case of a general revision or codification, for the new language may be attributed to a desire to condense and simplify the law."

A comparison of the two statutes compels us to the conclusion that the act was rewritten without attempting to change it in this particular, but to arrange it logically and dispense with unnecessary verbiage. Our general conclusion is that we should give effect to the intention of the Legislature to prevent the issuance, without permit, of corporate securities in this state by foreign corporations organized in any other state or territory or the District of Columbia.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner is remanded.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

80 Cal. App. 783

PEOPLE v. BEDOY. (Cr. 1348.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 22, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑829(9)—Where instructions given amply protected accused, it was harmless error to refuse instruction that, if evidence supported both guilt and innocence, jury should acquit.

It was harmless error to refuse an instruction that, if the evidence supported theories of both guilt and innocence, the jury should acquit, where every substantial right of the accused had been protected by instructions as to presumption of innocence, burden of proof, and proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

2. Criminal law 🔑829(3)—Refusal to give instructions separately stating elements of offense and necessity of proving each held not prejudicial, where included in other instructions.

In a prosecution for an alien's possession of a concealable firearm, refusal to give instructions separately stating the elements of offense and necessity of proving each was not prejudicial, where other instructions defined the elements and charged that both his possession and alien character must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

3. Criminal law 🔑823(4)—Instruction that merely possession of firearm was necessary to convict alien held not error for omitting statement, elsewhere given, of necessary degree of proof.

An instruction that mere possession, and not ownership, of a concealable firearm was necessary to convict an alien held not error for omitting to charge that the facts should be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, when charge as to necessary degree of proof had previously been given.

4. Criminal law 🔑1169(12)—Admission of extrajudicial statements of person accused of being alien possessing firearm held harmless error, where corpus delicti otherwise sufficiently established.

Where the corpus delicti was sufficiently proved by other witnesses, it was harmless error to admit evidence of extrajudicial statements of a person accused by being an alien in possession of a concealable firearm to further support his conviction.

5. Criminal law 🔑517(4)—In prosecution for alien's possessing firearm, foreign nativity of accused must be established by evidence independent of his extrajudicial statements.

In a prosecution for the possession of a concealable firearm by an alien, the foreign nativity of the accused, being an essential element of the corpus delicti, should be proved by evidence independent of his extrajudicial statements.

6. Aliens 🔑17—Alien character and possession of firearm held sufficiently proved by circumstantial evidence.

Since the corpus delicti need not be proved by direct evidence, the alien character of accused and his possession of a concealable firearm was held sufficiently proved by circumstantial evidence.

7. Witnesses 🔑380(5)—In trial of alien for possessing firearm, prosecution may not impeach its own witness, though surprised by his testifying contrary to former statements.

In the trial of an alien for possessing a concealable firearm, the prosecution may not impeach its own witness, even though surprised by his testifying contrary to his statements on prior occasions.

8. Criminal law 🔑444—Copy of record of baptism, neither authenticated as copy of public nor verified as copy of private document, held inadmissible in prosecution of alien possessing firearm (Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 8).

Where the record of a baptism was not proved to be a public document, a copy not properly authenticated as a copy of a public document in manner required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 8, not verified by a witness as a copy of a private document, was held inadmissible in prosecution of alien for possession of concealable firearms.

9. Criminal law 🔑1169(2)—Where competent evidence supports conviction of alien possessing firearm, admission of incompetent document and evidence held harmless.

Where competent evidence sufficiently supported a conviction for being an alien in possession of a concealable firearm, the erroneous admission of a copy of the record of a baptism, purporting to show the foreign nativity of accused and of evidence by the prosecution impeaching its own witness, held not so prejudicial as to require reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Monico Bedoy was convicted of being an alien in possession of a concealable firearm, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Peckinpah & Carter and Rae B. Carter, all of Fresno, and Barcroft & Barcroft and Joseph Barcroft, all of Madera, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CASHIN, J. Appellant was charged by an indictment with a felony, to wit, that being foreign-born and unnaturalized he had in his possession a firearm capable of being concealed on the person. The appeal is from the judgment, entered on a verdict of guilty, and an order denying a new trial.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in giving and refusing certain instructions to the jury and in its rulings on the admissibility of the evidence.

[1] An offered instruction stated in substance that if there should exist in the minds of the jury two different theories, one being consistent with innocence and the other with guilt, and each finding support from the evidence, the former should be adopted, and the defendant acquitted. This was refused.

While it has been held that such an instruction is proper where the evidence is merely circumstantial, and that in such case an instruction declaring the rule should, if requested, be given (People v. Dick, 32 Cal. 213), where, as here, instructions as to the presumption of innocence, the burden of proof, and defining reasonable doubt, were given, and the jury was further instructed that to warrant conviction it is insufficient that the allegations of the indictment be supported by probabilities merely or by a preponderance of the evidence, but that the elements of the offense, which were stated, must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, every substantial right of appellant was protected. People v. Raber, 168 Cal. 316, 143 P. 317.

[2] The court also refused requested instructions separately stating the elements of the offense and charging the jury that a reasonable doubt as to either made an acquittal necessary. Such refusal was not prejudicial, as the instruction in substance was included in others which defined the elements of the offense and instructed the jury in effect that if they found beyond a reasonable doubt the fact of possession they must further be convinced by the same degree of proof that appellant was an unnaturalized foreign-born person.

[3] It is further contended that an instruction that it was unnecessary for the prosecution to prove ownership of the firearm in question, proof of possession or control being sufficient, was prejudicially erroneous in omitting to state that the facts must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. The jury had been elsewhere instructed as to the degree of proof necessary to convict, and its omission here was not error; nor, as urged by appellant, did the court err in refusing to instruct that the prosecution was bound by certain evidence adduced in support of the charge in the indictment.

[4-6] Evidence of certain extrajudicial statements made by appellant was admitted over his objection that the corpus delicti had not been proved. As held in People v. Juarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363, the foreign nativity of the defendant, being an essential element of the corpus delicti, should be established by evidence independent of his extrajudicial statements. According to evidence introduced by the prosecution independent of such statements, the firearm in question was found under the mattress of the bed in a room occupied by appellant and his wife. Two witnesses, both natives of Mexico, one being appellant's younger brother, testified that appellant when a child resided in a certain town in Mexico, and that about the year 1917 he left that country and came to the United States. Though neither was able to testify to the fact of his foreign birth, they agreed in their testimony as to the name of his father and the town in Mexico in which the latter and appellant lived; one of the witnesses, named Viscara, testifying that he knew appellant when the latter was aged about five years and that he then resided in the town mentioned. It not being necessary that the corpus delicti be proved by direct evidence (People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 230; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 530, 111 P. 612), the testimony mentioned was reasonably sufficient to support the allegations of foreign birth and the possession of the firearm.

[7] As stated, the brother of the appellant was called as a witness for the prosecution. In the course of his examination this witness by a nod of the head responded in the affirmative to a question as to whether he saw on a certain occasion a pistol in the room occupied by appellant, but subsequently answered the question in the negative. Over appellant's objection, but with the permission of the court, the foundation was laid for impeaching his negative testimony by that of a witness who testified that on a previous occasion the same question had been answered in the affirmative. While it was clear that the prosecution was surprised by the second answer, the rule appears to be well settled that the impeaching testimony was not admissible. People v. Dewitt, 68 Cal. 584, 10 P. 212; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 P. 101; People v. De Martini, 213 N. Y. 203, 107 N. E. 501, L. R. A. 1915F, 601; People v. Purtell, 243 N. Y. 273, 153 N. E. 72; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 S. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

[8] We find no merit in any of the remaining objections made to the rulings of the trial court except the following: There was admitted over appellant's objection a document translated from the Spanish language into English, which purported to be a copy of the record of a baptism at Zallattan, Mexico, on September 22, 1895, of one Monico "Vedoy" by Gregorio Castillio; the latter being described therein as the priest "substituted curate of this parish." The document was certified as a "copy faithfully taken from the original" by Joaquin Briseno Robles, "the prelate in charge," below which appears a certificate by Manuel Alvarado, described as the vicar-general of the arch-diocese of Guadalajara; that the signature and seal which appear on the copy are the ones which the curate "used on official documents." Whether the original document referred to was a public document or record does not appear; nor was it shown that either of the persons whose signatures are in evidence was the legal keeper thereof.

Assuming the competency of the original document as evidence of the matters stated therein, if a public writing, it was essential in order to prove its contents by the copy alone that the latter be authenticated in the manner provided by subdivision 8 of section 1918, Code of Civil Procedure; or, if a private writing merely, that it be established by a witness qualified to say that the copy represented the contents of the original. We are of the opinion that the objection to its admission should have been sustained.

[9] Appellant contends that the errors were sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a reversal of the judgment. It appears, however, from the uncontradicted testimony of two officers, that the firearm was found in the place stated above; and, in addition to the inference supporting the fact of possession reasonably to be drawn therefrom, an inference of his ownership might fairly be sustained by the statements of appellant made subsequent to its discovery by the officers. There also appears the testimony of those who knew him in Mexico which, with his name and the fact that the extrajudicial statements mentioned were made in the Spanish language, reasonably support the conclusion that he was a native of that country. No evidence of naturalization was adduced by appellant (People v. Juarez, supra), and the competent evidence before the jury was sufficient to support the verdict.

We are of the opinion, after an examination of the entire record, that the errors mentioned were not prejudicial to a degree which can reasonably be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 113

PEOPLE v. NORTH. (Cr. 1399.)

(District Court of Appeals, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 27, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1159(5)—Conviction of robbery on conflicting evidence of identification and alibi will not be disturbed.

In prosecution for robbery of drug store, evidence being conflicting on question of identification and, consequently, that of alibi relied on, reviewing court held not authorized to disturb conviction.

2. Criminal law 🔑1175—Accused is not prejudiced by conviction of second degree robbery, where evidence authorized conviction in first degree only (Pen. Code, §§ 211, 211a).

Conviction for robbery in second degree will not be reversed because, under Pen. Code, § 211a, conviction should have been for robbery in first degree, section 211 defining robbery, and permitting conviction for offense less than that charged, and necessarily included in charged offense.

3. Robbery 🔑27(1)—In prosecution for robbery of drug store, defendant held not entitled to instruction directing acquittal of robbery and conviction, if at all, for grand or petit larceny.

In prosecution for robbery of drug store, defendant held not entitled to instruction directing jury that they must acquit on charge of robbery and find him guilty, if at all, only of grand larceny or petit larceny.

4. Criminal law 🔑829(1) — Refusal of instruction covered by given instruction held not error.

In prosecution for robbery of drug store, refusal of instruction, covered by given instructions, though given instructions were not couched in language embraced in one refused, held not error.

5. Criminal law 🔑655(5), 1186(4)—Unwarranted criticism and reprimand to defense counsel held error, but not reversible, where record disclosed no miscarriage of justice (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In prosecution for robbery of drug store, reprimands, language, and attitude of trial judge toward defendant's counsel held error, but not prejudicial, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that case should not be reversed, if, in spite of errors, whole record discloses that there has been no miscarriage of justice.

6. Criminal law 🔑699—Attorney's interest in client does not justify ignoring of court's rulings.

Interest of attorney in client should at no time be recognized as justification for ignoring or disregarding rulings of court.

7. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—Provision, requiring affirmance, unless whole record discloses miscarriage of justice, is mandatory upon appellate tribunals (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Const. art. 6, § 4½, requiring affirmance, unless, from whole record, it appears that there has been such miscarriage of justice as to work conviction of innocent person, is mandatory upon appellate tribunals.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Earl North was convicted of robbery in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was convicted of robbery, alleged by information of the district attorney of Los Angeles county to have been committed on or about the 22d day of February, 1926. A motion for new trial was presented, which was denied, and he appeals from the judgment and from the ruling upon said motion.

A witness for the people, named Arthur Niemi, testified that he and the defendant were on the date last mentioned employed by the Liggett Drug Company at Hollywood; that on the night of Washington's Birthday the witness and one Oliver Peterson were closing the front door of the store, as the defendant entered from the rear, wearing a suit of coveralls, and a black cloth over his head, in which cloth two holes had been cut for vision; that North pointed a revolver at Niemi, and said, "Give me the money," to which the latter replied, "There it is, help yourself;" that the defendant then indicated a closet, and said, "Get in there," which Niemi and his companion did. The latter further testified that he heard North open the safe and remove cash boxes, heard money jingle; that, as soon as he ceased to hear any sound, the witness came out, directed Peterson to call the police, and ran to the rear door, but, failing to see North, he returned, replaced the cash boxes in the safe, and locked it.

Peterson was unable to identify the defendant, but corroborated Niemi's testimony as to occurrences, and remembered the greasy condition of the coveralls as described by other witnesses. The manager of the building testified that a strange automobile, which he described as a brougham with a sloping rear top, stood at the back of the store on the night in question, at about 10:40 o'clock. The night manager of a Hollywood automobile service testified that on the night of the 22d the defendant rented a Moon sedan car with curved or rounded top; that he returned at about 11:20 p, m., leaving the machine, walked to the curb, and ran across the street, this witness swore that the car had not been driven more than 12 or 14 miles by North; that only one-half gallon of gasoline had been used from the tank. The engineer of the building in which the drug store was located identified the coveralls as his own property, and testified that he hung them on a rail when he left at about 6 p. m., but that on the following morning he found them on the floor of the cellar. Three officers searched the defendant's home on Sunset boulevard, and testified that they there found a suitcase containing the black mask described by Niemi; that, when arrested, North stated that he had been for a walk, but later said that he rented a car and drove about the city, between Los Angeles and Beverly Hills. The manager of the drug store testified that $2,189.64 was taken from the safe on the night of February 22d; that $195 remained, and that vouchers and money not taken were scattered on the floor.

The defendant testified, denying in toto the evidence introduced by the people, and on the stand abandoned his former statement to the officers, heretofore mentioned, averring that he accidentally met a lady by the name of Joy Warford at a drug store located at Sixth and Hill streets, in the city of Los Angeles, whom he carried to her home in the south part of the city. Miss Warford was sworn, and testified that she "taught ball room" evenings, and cut film at moving picture studios during the daytime, but that on February 22d she had not worked; that previously to meeting the defendant she had been to a small picture show on Hill street near Sixth street; that North drove her home and that he left her at about 11:05 p. m. This latter witness further testified that she had known the defendant about eight months; that she did not remember at what time she went to town, the picture that she saw, or what it was about. She testified, however, that, upon entering her residence to obtain a match for the defendant, she observed that there was a difference of exactly two minutes between her watch and the clock. She was positive that she observed both, and testified, "My watch was 11:07 and the clock was 11:03." The defendant averred that he ate dinner at home on the night in question; that he went out soon afterwards; and that his wife went to the residence of her aunt. This Mrs. North corroborated, but denied any knowledge as to the time of his return.

The defense advanced in this case consists of an asserted alibi. It is denied that North was at the scene of the robbery, or had any knowledge of the crime. It is insisted that from the brief and abrupt commands given Niemi at the drug store it would have been impossible for the latter to identify a person's voice. Niemi swore, however, that he had worked in the same establishment with North for more than a month; that he conversed with him, and heard him talk daily during that time; that he was familiar with his voice, and that he immediately recognized the defendant's voice and general build, and knew that North committed the robbery.

[1] The question of identification, and consequently that of alibi, therefore was but one of fact to be deduced from the conflicting evidence. The testimony was direct, positive, and amply sufficient to warrant the jury in finding a verdict of guilty, and upon such state of the record a reversal of the judgment is not authorized.

[2] The information charged the crime of robbery, but did not specify the degree. The jury returned a verdict of "guilty of robbery, a felony, in the second degree, as charged in the information." It is contended on behalf of the appellant that under such an allegation he could only be convicted of robbery in the first degree, and section 211a of the Penal Code is cited as authority for this proposition. Said section reads as follows:

> "All robbery which is perpetrated * * * by a person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree. All other kinds of robbery are of the second degree."

Section 211 provides that—

> "Robbery is the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear."

In People v. De Verre, 68 Cal. App. 742, 230 P. 197, under facts almost identical with those here presented in so far as they would bear upon the distinction between robbery in the first degree and robbery in the second degree, it was held that a verdict of guilty of robbery in the second degree would not be disturbed; and in Ex parte Colford, 68 Cal. App. 308, 229 P. 63, the petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus contended that under a similar allegation to that before us he should have been convicted, if at all, of robbery in the second degree. It was there held that—

> "The information follows the language of section 211 of the Penal Code, which defines robbery, and is sufficient to support a conviction of either degree of the crime, as defined by section 211a."

Also People v. Church, 116 Cal. 300, 48 P. 125, cited by appellant, clearly upholds the proposition that a verdict of guilty of an offense less than that charged in the information, but necessarily included in it, is proper. In view of the decisions above cited, the verdict and judgment will not be disturbed merely upon the ground that the defendant received punishment less severe than the evidence may have warranted.

[3] Appellant complains of the refusal of the trial court to give a requested instruction defining robbery, grand larceny, and petit larceny, and charging that, if the jury should find that the personal property taken was over $200, they must find the defendant guilty of grand larceny, and, if less than that amount, they must find him guilty of petit larceny, for the reason that larceny is an element of robbery. It is too obvious for argument that the defendant was not entitled to an instruction in effect directing the jury that they must acquit on the charge of robbery and find him guilty, if at all, only of grand larceny or petit larceny.

[4] It is further insisted that the identification of the defendant was so doubtful, and the evidence upon that question so weak, that the trial court erred in refusing to give a requested instruction which is quoted in the briefs. The jury were fully instructed upon the questions of identity, alibi, reasonable doubt, and the credibility of witnesses. The instructions given were not couched in the language embraced in the one which was refused, but we think the issues were covered, and that the action of the court in this respect was not error.

[5] Reprimands by the trial judge, and his language and attitude toward the defendant's counsel during the trial, are assigned as misconduct prejudicial to the rights of the accused. During the cross-examination of the people's witness Niemi the following colloquy occurred:

> "Q. By Mr. Groene: Do you know the direction that the alleged holdup went when he left there?
>
> "The Court: Just a moment. This witness hasn't talked anything about any alleged holdup. Who do you mean, the defendant?
>
> "Mr. Groene: No; the holdup man. I don't know about the defendant. We hold the defendant was not there, your honor.
>
> "The Court: That is the only person he testified it was.
>
> "Mr. Groene: We know it was not the defendant, and I am asking him the question—
>
> "The Court: Just a moment, Mr. Groene. The witness need not answer the question. It is not cross-examination. He has not testified about any person under the name of the alleged holdup man. He has testified to the defendant, and no one else. Consequently this is not proper cross-examination.
>
> "Mr. Groene: Well, may it please the court, we hold that this defendant was not there. We know he was not there.
>
> "The Court: Will you take your seat, please?
>
> "Mr. Groene: And we know—
>
> "The Court: Will you take your seat, Mr. Groene?
>
> "Mr. Groene: Yes; but I—
>
> "The Court: Now, just a moment. I don't want to have to punish you for contempt of court.
>
> "Mr. Groene: No, I don't wish to be.
>
> "The Court: But you are going to jail as sure as you are a foot high if you don't—
>
> "Mr. Groene: But I wish to bring out the evidence.
>
> "The Court: Now, will you please keep quiet? I don't like to have to take extreme measures, Mr. Groene, but I will have to do it if you don't abide by the rulings with the proper attitude and decorum. You will find this is one department where you have got to do that. You will proceed in an orderly way here."

Later, during the same examination, the record contains the following:

> "Q. By Mr. Greone: Now, isn't it a fact that there was another person of the same size, same build?
>
> "Mr. Fricke: Asked and answered. Objected to.
>
> "The Court: Sustained.
>
> "Mr. Groene: No, he has not answered that, your honor.
>
> "The Court: Did you hear the ruling of the court?
>
> "Mr. Groene: I am asking now—
>
> "The Court: Did you hear the ruling of the court?
>
> "Mr. Groene: Yes.
>
> "The Court: I am going to have to deal with you very seriously in a very, very few moments if you don't stop this. The court has ruled, and you know when the court has ruled there is nothing further to be said. Two or three times after I have ruled you have proceeded to make some sort of statement. I don't want that thing to occur again during the trial.
>
> "Mr. Groene: I am asking the question, your honor—
>
> "The Court: Will you please ask another question?
>
> "Mr. Groene: And he has not answered the question yet, and I would like to get an answer. I have asked him this question—
>
> "The Court: Mr. Groene, the court now finds you guilty of contempt of court for your conduct and attitude in the case and for proceeding to argue matters after the court has already ruled. Have you any reason to offer why the court should not now punish you for contempt?

"Mr. Groene: I think you should not, your honor, for I am within my rights as an attorney defending my client, to the best of my ability, but I would like at this particular time to let the stenographer refer back to his notes and see if he has answered the question I asked.

"The Court: Do you consider it the proper and courteous thing to do to persist in attempting to argue after the court has ruled? If that is your idea, you have something to learn. I won't impose any punishment at this time, because I take it your attitude is very largely due to ignorance of the proper procedure, but I insist it do not occur again, for, if it does, I shall not be lenient another time."

Immediately preceding these last questions, answers, and rulings, the record discloses the following:

"Q. (By Mr. Groene): Isn't it a fact that there was another employee in that same department, the same size, same build? A. But not the same voice.

"Q. I am not asking you about voices. I know you don't know about the voice, but I am asking about the general appearance.

"Mr. Fricke: Just a moment. We take exception to counsel's remark.

"The Court: Yes; that remark is as improper as it possibly could be. If counsel knew anything in the trial of a case about proper courtesy in court he would have known better than to make it."

[6] That the record reveals a clear departure from that courteous decorum emphasized by the trial court, we think cannot be doubted. Besides, a careful examination of the record discloses that the question quoted above, "Isn't it a fact that there was another employee in that same department, the same size, same build?" to which the objection was sustained on the ground that it had been asked and answered, had not in fact been directly answered, and counsel was entirely within his rights in insisting that a direct answer be given by the witness. Attorneys representing defendants in criminal cases are frequently inspired with the justness of their causes to a degreee which prompts undue enthusiasm and persistence. Their interest in a client should at no time be recognized as a justification for ignoring or disregarding the rulings of the court, but experienced jurists, also realizing the propensities of overzealous attorneys in such cases, are often confronted with situations requiring patience, tact, and firm but courteous demeanor, lest those whose life or liberty is in the balance shall suffer through unpleasant controversies over which they have no control. We think the remarks of the court in this instance constituted error, but we are not authorized or impelled to reverse the judgment upon that ground alone, nor do the authorities cited by appellant require or justify such action. In People v. Grider, 13 Cal. App. 703, 110 P. 586, it was held that it is incumbent upon the complaining party to show how his substantial rights have been materially affected by irregularities or misconduct. And in People v. Costa, 24 Cal. App. 739, 142 P. 508, it was said that—

"Such fact, if true, standing alone in the absence of prejudicial error, would not justify a reversal of the case, but merely accentuate the effect of other errors disclosed by the record."

The error here complained of is said to have been humiliating to defendant's counsel, and prejudicial to the defendant in the eyes of the jury. We concur in both assertions, but upon the whole record we do not think, in the absence of other substantial error, that, in view of section 4½, article 6, of the Constitution, we would be justified in reversing the judgment.

[7] Finally, it is asserted that an examination of the entire record requires a reversal under the provisions of the Constitution last mentioned. Said section is mandatory upon appellate tribunals, and, by denying a reversal under the circumstances therein specified, it requires an affirmance, unless from the whole record it appears that there has been such a miscarriage of justice as to work the conviction of an innocent person. People v. Wong Hing, 28 Cal. App. 230, 151 P. 1159; People v. Kizer, 22 Cal. App. 10, 133 P. 516, 521, 134 P. 346. We think the verdict and judgment in this case are abundantly supported by the record, and that no different result would ensue from another trial.

The judgment and order denying the motion for new trial are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

81 Cal. App. 122

PEOPLE v. GHYSELS. (Cr. 1419.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1927.)

1. Witnesses 🔑269(1) — Refusal to permit cross-examination outside scope of direct examination held proper.

Objection to cross-examination of witness concerning matters outside scope of direct examination held properly sustained.

2. Witnesses 🔑363(2)—Refusal to permit defendant to show connection between one of his own witnesses and district attorney's office held not error.

In prosecution for possessing liquor, refusal to allow defendant to bring out an alleged connection between one of his own witnesses and district attorney's office, or to show some element or promise of immunity, held not error; there being nothing to show that witness was reluctant, or defendant surprised by his testimony.

3. Criminal law 🔑1172(6)—In prosecution for possession of liquor, instruction referring to statute relating also to manufacture, sale, and transportation, if technically erroneous, held not reversible (National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½aa]).

In prosecution for possession only of liquor, instructions referring to National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 3 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½aa), relating also to manufacture, sale, and transportation of liquor, if technically erroneous, held not reversible error.

4. Intoxicating liquors 🔑239(2)—In prosecution for possession, refusal of court to instruct, in words of National Prohibition Act, that act was to be liberally construed, held not error (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138¼ et seq.).

In prosecution for possessing liquor, refusal of court to instruct, in the words of the National Prohibition Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138¼ et seq.), that all provisions of the act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented, held not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; E. J. Marks, Judge.

C. Ghysels was convicted of unlawfully possessing intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. D. Swanner and Roland Thompson, both of Santa Ana, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

YORK, J. The defendant was convicted of the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, and in the information was also charged with two prior convictions of possession of intoxicating liquor. As to the prior convictions, the defendant, on the day of trial, stated that he had been convicted as charged, but pleaded not guilty as to possession of intoxicating liquor. The defendant's claim was that the liquor was discovered by him near a drainage ditch on his property when he was cutting hay. He admits that he took possession of a gallon jar of the same, but claims that he brought it to his house merely to exhibit to the witness Butler, who had asked him for something to drink as he was "going fishing." There is no direct evidence that defendant offered the liquor for sale. He stated that he brought it to the house intending to turn it over to the officers of the law at a later date. However, he was intercepted by an officer before any delivery was made to witness Butler.

[1, 2] The principal points presented by appellant relate to rulings of the court excluding questions asked by appellant on cross-examination of witnesses, and on direct examination of defendant's witness Butler. The objections to cross-examination of witnesses, that were sustained, were properly sustained, because the questions related to matters which were outside of the scope of the direct examination of those witnesses. The court's refusal to allow appellant's counsel to bring out an alleged connection of Butler with the district attorney's office, or some supposed arrangement whereby he might have received promise of immunity from some of the public officials connected with the prosecution on account of some prosecution in which the witness was apparently involved, was not erroneous. Butler was defendant's witness, and there is nothing to show that he was reluctant, or that appellant was surprised by his testimony.

The defendant took the stand and testified quite fully, but did not directly deny that witness Butler had stated that he was going fishing and that he wanted something to drink, and defendant did not deny that he went out and got the liquor. He does deny that he said he had buried it himself or said that it was good liquor, as was testified to by witnesses Butler and McClellan.

[3, 4] As to the errors that appellant claims were made in instructions given, and the errors that he claims exist by reason of certain instructions refused, on a casual examination these objections would appear to be worthy of discussion because the first portion of the first instruction objected to by the appellant refers to a portion of the National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 3 thereof (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½aa), which makes reference necessarily to the manufacture, sale, transporting, etc., of intoxicating liquor. But it clearly appears from the instructions given that they refer only to the charge that defendant was guilty of the crime of possession of intoxicating liquor. It was unnecessary and inappropriate for the trial court to instruct the jury, in the words of the National Prohibition Act, that—

"All of the provisions of the Prohibition Act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented."

This language merely involves a statement of statutory construction applied to prohibition acts. As was said in People v. Pagni, 69 Cal. App. 94, 230 P. 1001:

> "Juries are not concerned with rules of statutory construction. These are for the guidance of the courts in construing or applying the provisions of statutory enactments, while the sole function of the jury is to consider the facts and formulate a judgment with respect thereto under the guidance of appropriate statements of the law by the court."

It was held in said case that it was not proper to instruct the jury that all of the provisions of the Prohibition Act should be liberally construed. But as was said in the same case at page 104 (230 P. 1005):

> "We are not to be understood as holding that the errors committed in the instructions above considered are of themselves of sufficient gravity to compel a reversal of the case. This question, if passed on, would have to be considered and determined by the light of the record as a whole."

In the case at bar, all of the other instructions are definite as to the fact that the defendant was on trial only for the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, and the evidence as to possession was positive and direct, and there was no evidence introduced claiming to show a sale. As we find no errors in the record other than the mere technical error arising from the giving of the single instruction complained of, we cannot say that the error complained of worked any miscarriage of justice. The case was fairly tried, and the evidence clearly shows that defendant was guilty as charged.

The judgment and order herein appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 789

PEOPLE v. McCONNELL. (Cr. 1313.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 24, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑570(3)—In prosecution for burglary, admitting evidence as to defendant's sanity to rebut evidence of judgment committing him as insane held not error.

In prosecution for burglary, where, to support plea of insanity, defendant had offered evidence of judgment and order of commitment as insane, which was received, admitting medical testimony to effect that defendant was not insane held not error; judgment not being conclusive as to defendant's exemption from liability for crime charged.

2. Insane persons 🔑26—Judgment committing person to state hospital for insane does not conclusively determine status as insane person.

As commission established in each county to determine mental condition of person alleged to be insane does not fix status of such persons, but merely determines whether mental condition is such as to warrant detention in asylum for treatment, judgment roll in proceedings for commitment is not conclusive as to insanity.

3. Criminal law 🔑48—Partial or limited insanity does not preclude liability for crimes.

Person, though partially insane with respect to certain subjects, may, nevertheless, have sufficient mental capacity to make him liable for crimes.

4. Criminal law 🔑570(3)—Irresponsibility for crimes is not proved by commitment to hospital for insane.

Commitment of person to hospital for insane does not prove insanity to extent that such person would be exempt from responsibility for his criminal acts.

5. Indictment and information 🔑190 — Jury may find defendant guilty of attempt to commit burglary, though information and evidence had to do only with completed crime.

Defendant informed against for burglary could be convicted of attempt to commit burglary in second degree, where evidence tended to sustain verdict of burglary in first degree; commission of burglary implying attempt to commit it.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Joseph McConnell was convicted of an attempt to commit burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, of San Francisco, for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Defendant and one James Kelly were jointly accused by information of the crime of burglary. The alleged offense was charged with having been committed by them on March 27, 1925. Upon arraignment they pleaded not guilty. On the day set for the trial defendant, McConnell, upon the suggestion of his counsel, was ordered placed in the detention hospital for observation as to his sanity, and the trial was continued to October 16, 1925. It appearing upon said day that McConnell was an inmate of Stockton State Hospital for the Insane, the court ordered a severance, and continued the trial of McConnell to a future date. Subsequently, on motion, the case was set for, and trial was had on, December 18th. Briefly stated, the evidence shows that on the morning of March 4, 1925, a police officer observed defendant and another in the doorway of the premises at 330 Eddy street, San Francisco. The officer saw defendant's companion lift him up so as to enable him to climb over the transom After defendant had gained an entrance into the premises, he and his companion were arrested and taken into custody After trial, defendant was convicted of an attempt to commit burglary in the second degree. Motion for a new trial was made and denied, and he was sentenced to the state prison This is an appeal from the order and judgment.

[1, 2] Upon the trial the defenses relied upon were a denial of any burglary or attempt to commit the same, and insanity. In support of his defense of insanity, there was admitted in evidence a judgment and order of commitment of defendant as an insane person to Stockton State Hospital. There was also admitted in evidence under the objection of defendant a certificate of the medical superintendent of said hospital that defendant was not insane, and was discharged on November 3, 1925. Certain medical evidence was also introduced to show that defendant was not insane. Appellant here claims that the trial court erred in the admission of this evidence as to defendant's sanity, as it tended to impeach the judgment of the superior court, which declared the defendant to be insane, such judgment being in full force and effect. There is no merit in this objection. It has been held in this state that, in proceedings for the commitment of a person to a state hospital, there is no judgment roll in the sense that it determines conclusively anything; that the commission established in each county to ascertain the mental condition of one alleged to be insane is purely a creature of the statute, the sole duty of which is to inquire and determine whether the mental condition of the person examined is such as to warrant his detention in the asylum for treatment. It is not intended as a tribunal in which the status of the alleged insane person is fixed. People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 P. 124.

[3-5] In the very recent case of People v. Gilberg, 197 Cal. 306, 240 P. 1000, it is said that the court has no disposition to depart from this rule. Conceding the commitment to have been properly received as evidence of defendant's insanity, it was not, therefore, conclusive upon the subject. In criminal cases a partial insanity, or an insanity with respect to certain subjects, is not incompatible with the possession of mental capacity sufficient to make the party liable to punishment for his acts. It does not follow, therefore, because one was so committed in the manner indicated, that the commitment is proof that such person was insane to the extent that the law would exempt him from responsibility for his criminal acts. As was said in People v. Willard, supra, there are many kinds and degrees of insanity, and it is not every kind or degree which will relieve a person from criminal responsibility, and the degree of mental impairment which would authorize his confinement in an asylum for the insane may be entirely different from the degree of mental derangement which will relieve him from responsibility for his criminal acts. One may be insane upon one or several subjects, and for that reason a proper person for confinement in a state asylum to be cared for and treated for his mental disorder, and yet at the same time such person may be perfectly sane upon all other subjects, and entirely responsible under the law for a criminal act committed by him. This subject has recently received consideration in the case of People v. Sloper (Cal. Sup.) 244 P. 362, where what is known as the "right" and "wrong" test is extensively discussed. The testimony of Dr. Catton was therefore properly admitted to show that, while defendant was addicted to the use of narcotics, he fully appreciated the difference between right and wrong, and was not insane in a legal sense. Appellant next complains that the court erroneously instructed the jury that it might find the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit burglary. It is claimed that, since the information contained no charge of any element of an attempt to commit the offense, and the evidence was directed solely to a completed entry, the instruction was erroneous, and the conviction without warrant. A defendant informed against for the crime of burglary may be convicted of an attempt to commit burglary in the second degree, where the evidence tends to sustain a verdict of burglary in the first degree. People v. Lowen, 109 Cal. 381, 42 P. 32.

The commission of burglary implies an attempt to commit it.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

81 Cal. App. 137

COOMBS v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.★
(Civ. 5411.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1927.)

1. Master and servant ⟹417(4¼) Reviewing court cannot consider affidavits contradicting record as to stipulation at hearing of workman's compensation case before referee.

Affidavits contradicting record as to stipulation made at hearing of workmen's compensation case before referee cannot be considered on appeal, as record cannot be changed.

2. Master and servant ⟹416—Industrial Accident Commission may reserve award for surgical and hospital treatment.

Industrial Accident Commission has power to reserve award for surgical and hospital treatment, although final judgment if possible should be made covering all matters involved.

---

★Rehearing denied 253 P. 976. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Master and servant 🔑416—Supplemental award for medical treatment cannot be disturbed after original decision becomes final.

Supplemental award by Industrial Accident Commission for surgical and hospital treatment, in accordance with original decision, cannot be disturbed after such decision becomes final.

4. Master and servant 🔑416—After award leaving open only reasonableness of charge for medical treatment becomes final, employer cannot complain of lack of notice of injury.

Supplemental award for medical treatment cannot be attacked on ground that employer did not receive notice of injury, where original decision leaving open only reasonableness of charge for medical treatment has become final.

Certiorari to Review Order of Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act by Oliver J. Musland, claimant, against S. H. Coombs, employer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission making a supplemental award for surgical operation and hospital bills, the employer brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

John A. Rush, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This proceeding for the writ of review seeks the annulment of a supplemental award for a surgical operation and hospital bills amounting to the sum of $94. The original and one supplemental award were heretofore considered by the other division of this court and not disturbed. Coombs v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. App.) 245 P. 445. Finding No. 2 of the original findings and award is as follows:

> "The employer is liable for the reasonable cost of the medical, surgical, and hospital treatment as was reasonably required to cure and relieve the employee from the effects of said injury, such cost to be fixed by the commission subsequently and supplemental award entered therefor upon filing of itemized bills therefor, and at the request of any person in interest."

The answer to the application for adjustment of claim sets up only two reasons for disallowance of the claim: First, that the injury was sustained not in the course of employment, but while the applicant was playing baseball; and, second, that the injury was contributed to by a chronic condition inflamed by reason of an injury occurring while playing baseball. There is recited in the return under the heading, "Report of Hearing," as of February 26, 1925, several stipulations, three of which are as follows: (4) That no medical treatment was furnished by the employer; (5) that in the event the employer is found chargeable with the medical expense incurred by or on behalf of the employee the reasonable cost of such treatment may be determined by the filing of itemized bills for such treatment, and the submission of same to the medical department of the commission; (6) that the employer had notice and knowledge of the assertion of a claim of injury as defined by section 15 of said act. The return also discloses that on July 2, 1925, and subsequent to the first supplemental award considered in the opinion mentioned, the petitioner filed an affidavit repudiating the stipulation and averring that he never so stipulated.

With this record and pursuant to the finding which we have quoted and to a request from the employee, the commission on March 9, 1926, made the supplemental award now in question. This the petitioner asserts was in excess of its jurisdiction: First, because there was no evidence of the reasonableness of the charges; and, second, because there was no evidence of notice to the employer of injury sustained in the course of his work prior to the employment of the physician by the employee.

[1-3] We think that petitioner is precluded from raising these objections at this time. It will be noted that they were not originally raised by answer and were in fact raised for the first time in the petition for rehearing after the supplemental award now under attack. In view of section 18 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 831), it is extremely doubtful whether objections raised for the first time in a petition for a rehearing can be considered. The import of that section would seem to be that the applicant is entitled earlier to be notified by the employer or insurance carrier of all matters upon which he intends to rely as a defense. Without passing, however, upon that question, we must accept the stipulation as found in the return and disregard the affidavit. As was said in the opinion in Coombs v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra: "We cannot, of course, consider the affidavits in re the stipulation made at the hearing before the referee, as the record of this matter before us cannot be so made up or so changed." Furthermore, the opinion just referred to says: "There are sufficient facts in evidence, or shown by the stipulation, to sustain each and every one of the findings of the commission." So far, then, as petitioner's first contention is involved, we are confronted by a stipulation that the reasonableness of the charges should be determined by the submission to the medical department of the commission of the itemized bills. Such was the procedure adopted in Myers v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 673, 218 P. 11. We are also faced with a finding, which is a part of the decision involved in the opinion from which we have quoted, that petitioner here is liable for the medical expense, the amount and reasonableness to be determined in accordance with the stipulation. The supplemental return shows that this procedure was followed. While it is true that wherever possible a single final judgment should be made covering all of the matters involved, nevertheless the commission did have the power to reserve, as it did here, the award for surgical and hospital treatment. This was done in the case of McBride v. Industrial Accident Commission, 182 Cal. 407, 187 P. 1050. The supplemental award cannot be attacked on the ground that there was no evidence of the reasonableness of the charge without disturbing the stipulation and the original decision of the case, which cannot be done, because that decision has become final.

[4] And so with the second ground upon which petitioner relies. The finding which we have quoted is that: "The employer" (petitioner here) "is liable for the reasonable cost of the medical, surgical, and hospital treatment." If we were to hold here that no notice had been given, in effect it would be to insert the word "not" before the word "liable." The only thing which was left open by this finding was the reasonableness of the charge to be fixed, in the manner we have already pointed out.

Our conclusion is that, the decision of the commission having become final, the petitioner cannot now be heard to complain of any part of that decision nor to repudiate the stipulation therein contained.

The supplemental award is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 752

MARSH v. MARSH. (Civ. 5587.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 22, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑757(3)—Where appeal is based on sufficiency of evidence, appellant has not met requirements of statute by printing evidence favorable to him alone (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953c).

Where appeal is taken under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, and is based upon question of sufficiency of evidence, appellant has not met terms of section 953c, providing that appellant should print portions of record which he desires to call to attention of court by printing evidence favorable to him alone.

2. Appeal and error 🔑907(2)—Appellate court must assume that finding adverse to appellant is based upon competent evidence, where contrary is not shown.

Where contrary is not shown, appellate court must assume that finding adverse to appellant is based upon competent evidence, on appeal based on question of sufficiency of evidence.

3. Appeal and error 🔑761—Appellate court will not consider point, where no argument or citation of authority is made in support of it.

Where no argument or citation of authority was made in support of point whether no affirmative judgment could be awarded to defendant who filed cross-complaint for divorce in plaintiff's suit for separate maintenance, in view of Civ. Code, § 122, appellate court was not required to consider it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Suit by Frances Marsh against Thomas Marsh for separate maintenance, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce. Plaintiff was denied relief on her complaint, and an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered on defendant's cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Porter C. Blackburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward E. Leighton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for separate maintenance, charging cruelty. The defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint for divorce on the ground of cruelty. The plaintiff was denied relief on her complaint for maintenance, and an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered on the cross-complaint by the terms of which the plaintiff was awarded the custody of the minor child of the parties, an equal share of the community property, and $30 a month for the support of herself and the child. From this decree the plaintiff has appealed under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

In her brief the appellant has made a brief statement of the facts of the case and has printed excerpts from the testimony of witnesses favorable to her to show that sufficient evidence was offered to warrant a judgment in her favor on her original complaint. The appellant then states as her points on appeal: (1) That the evidence was insufficient to justify a divorce on respondent's cross-complaint; (2) that, in view of her "prima facie" case for separate maintenance, the divorce to respondent was error; and (3) that because of section 122 of the Civil Code the only relief to which respondent was entitled was a denial of relief to appellant on her complaint.

[1, 2] Where an appeal is taken under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, it is incumbent upon the appellant to print in the brief or in a supplement thereto such portions of the record as the attention of the court is called to. Section 953c, Code Civ. Proc. Manifestly, when the appeal is based upon a question of the sufficiency of the evidence, the appellant has not met the terms of the statute when he has merely printed the evidence favorable to him alone, because we must assume that when the finding is adverse to him it is based upon competent evidence until the contrary is shown. Thus we are unable to say on an appeal taken in this method whether the evidence is sufficient to support a particular finding unless the briefs disclose what evidence was offered in support of the finding.

[3] As to the second point advanced by appellant, we must assume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that, though the "prima facie" case made out by the appellant was sufficient to justify a finding favorable to her, competent evidence was offered and received sufficient to support the findings and decree adverse to her.

Upon the third point the appellant merely states that because section 122 of the Civil Code provides that recrimination is a showing in bar of plaintiff's cause of action, no affirmative judgment could be awarded to the respondent. No argument or citation of authority is made in support of the point, and we are therefore not called upon to give it further consideration.

We have carefully examined the entire record, notwithstanding appellant's failure to print the essential portions thereof in her brief, and we are satisfied that the action was fully and fairly tried and that no prejudicial error occurred.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 776

HAYNES v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION. (Civ. 3183.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 21, 1927.)

1. Courts ⚿116(1)—Courts of record have inherent power to correct their records so that they conform to facts and speak truth.

Courts of record have inherent power to correct records so that they conform to facts and speak truth, and likewise correct errors occurring in record through acts of omission or commission of clerk in entering of record the judgments or orders of court, either on own motion, or on motion of interested party.

2. Courts ⚿116(3)—Court cannot, under form of amendment of records, correct judicial error, or make of record an order or judgment not given.

Court, in exercise of its inherent power to correct its records, cannot do more than make its records conform to actual facts, and cannot, under form of an amendment of its records, correct judicial error or make of record an order or judgment that was never in fact given.

3. Courts ⚿116(1)—Trial judge, by certifying bill of exceptions as being correct, was not foreclosed from thereafter causing acts and orders to be correctly recorded.

Trial judge, by certifying bill of exceptions as being correct, was not foreclosed from thereafter entering nunc pro tunc order correcting order granting motion for new trial, where clerk had failed to enter order as instructed.

4. Appeal and error ⚿933(1)—Where record is silent, appellate court will presume that nunc pro tunc order correcting order granting new trial is valid.

Where record was silent as to whether court had directed clerk to specify grounds in order granting new trial, appellate court had to presume that nunc pro tunc order correcting order was valid, since every intendment is in favor of validity and regularity of such order.

5. Appeal and error ⚿440—Appeal from order granting new trial held not to preclude trial court from entering nunc pro tunc order correcting clerical error.

Where appeal was taken from original order granting new trial, trial court did not lose jurisdiction over order and had power to enter nunc pro tunc order correcting clerical error in original order, where substantial rights were not affected.

6. Courts ⚿116(4)—Clerical error in order granting motion for new trial did not have to be corrected within six months (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Clerical error or omission, in order granting motion for new trial did not have to be corrected within six months, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, since courts may correct clerical errors or omissions in records at any time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by Kathryne Haynes against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation for damages for personal injuries. Judgment for defendant, and, from an order entered nunc pro tunc correcting order granting motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles (I. C. Powers, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Randall, Bartlett & White, Thos. P. White, and Vincent C. Hickson, all of Los Angeles (A. P. G. Steffes, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice, pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant, Los Angeles Railway Corporation, from a nunc pro tunc order made by the superior court of Los Angeles county on August 23, 1924, in the above-entitled case.

The record is brought to this court upon a bill of exceptions, and the facts necessary to a correct understanding of the issue involved are these: The plaintiff, Kathryne Haynes, brought the above-entitled action in the superior court of Los Angeles county to recover damages from the defendant, Los Angeles Railway Corporation, for personal injuries. A trial was had before Hon. Frank R. Willis, judge, sitting with a jury, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant, upon which judgment was duly entered. Thereafter, and on the 26th day of June, 1923, the plaintiff, Kathryne Haynes, gave notice of her intention to move for a new trial upon all of the statutory grounds mentioned in section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, including "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." This motion was brought on regularly for hearing on July 21, 1923, and the court, after hearing the arguments of counsel on both sides granted the motion for a new trial, and the bill of exceptions here recites the following:

---

★Rehearing denied.. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

> "Made and entered the following order, and none other: 'The plaintiff having moved the court for a new trial upon the grounds stated in her notice of intention now on file, and the court having considered the same, it is ordered that the plaintiff's said motion for a new trial be and the same is hereby granted.' "

From this order the defendant regularly appealed to the Supreme Court and prepared and served its bill of exceptions, which was stipulated as correct by the plaintiff and certified by the judge who tried the case to be correct. Thereafter the record, including the judgment roll and bill of exceptions, was printed and stipulated by counsel for plaintiff as correct and filed in the Supreme Court. Thereafter, and within the time allowed by law, and by stipulation of the parties, the defendant prepared, served and filed its opening brief in support of its appeal from said order granting plaintiff a new trial. Thereafter, and on the 12th of June, 1924, the plaintiff served and filed the following notice of motion:

> "You, and each of you, will please take notice that the above-named plaintiff will, on the 18th day of June, 1924, * * * move said court to correct the minutes of said court in the above-entitled cause to conform to the facts, to wit, amend the order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial to read as follows: 'The motion for a new trial having been heretofore submitted to the court for decision, and the court having fully considered the same, it is ordered that said motion be and the same is hereby granted upon the grounds of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and that the verdict is against law.'
>
> "Said motion will be based upon the files and records in this case, and upon the fact that at the time Hon. Frank R. Willis, judge of this court, granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he granted the same upon the grounds that the verdict is against law and of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, but that the clerk of this court omitted to recite in said minute order that the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted upon said grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict and that the verdict is against law. * * *"

This motion, having been regularly continued, was heard on the 18th day of July, 1924, before the same judge who tried the case and granted the new trial. Plaintiff submitted the motion solely upon the minutes of the court and no other evidence was offered in support thereof. Defendant placed in evidence the bill of exceptions, already settled and allowed in the case, to which was attached the stipulation of counsel and the certificate of the trial judge as to its correctness as above referred to.

In support of her motion plaintiff contended that it was within the power of the court to correct the minute order of July 21, 1923, on the recollection of the court. Defendant contended that the court had no power at all, and especially no power on the showing made, to correct or amend the said minute order of July 21, 1923. The court took the matter under advisement and on August 23, 1924, made and entered the nunc pro tunc order here appealed from, which is as follows:

> "In the above-entitled action the plaintiff filed on June 26, 1923, her notice of motion for a new trial on all the statutory grounds, and noticed the same for July 18, 1923, at which time the matter came on for hearing.
>
> "Plaintiff, having abandoned the first seven grounds of her motion by failure to file affidavits, and the tenth ground by failure to file specifications of error in law occurring at the trial, the court proceeded to hear said motion upon the two remaining grounds, viz. insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; and that the verdict is against law. The cause was duly called, argued, and submitted, and afterwards on July 21, 1923, the court, being satisfied from the minutes, evidence, and record of the cause that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict and that the verdict was against law, granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on those grounds and instructed the clerk to enter an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial. No written opinion nor order was filed, but the matter was left with the clerk to properly extend the order in the proper book of minute entries. That afterwards the clerk entered said order in the manner and form set forth in the transcript of the case now on file. That afterwards, on June 12, 1924, plaintiff filed herein her notice of motion to correct the minutes of the clerk to conform to the facts in the case, and the matter having been duly noticed, argued, and submitted, it is hereby ordered that the minutes of the court be corrected to conform to the facts of the case and that said minutes be amended to read as follows: 'The motion for a new trial having been heretofore submitted to the court for decision, and the court having fully considered the same, it is ordered that said motion be and the same is hereby granted upon the grounds of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and that the verdict is against law'—and that said order be entered nunc pro tunc as of July 21, 1923.
>
> "August 23, 1924.
>
> "Frank R. Willis, Judge."

[1] The rule is well settled in this state that every court of record has the inherent power to correct its records so that they shall conform to the facts and speak the truth, and likewise correct any error or defect occurring in a record through acts of omission or commission of the clerk in entering of record the judgments or orders of the court, and such correction may be made at any time by the court on its own motion, or on motion of an interested party. Brush v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 58 Cal. App. 501, 503, 208 P. 997; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 P. 1074, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491; Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 19, 43 P. 393, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139; Halpern v. Superior Court, 190 Cal. 387, 212 P. 916; Gulf Mail Steamship Co. v. Hammond Steamship Co., 67 Cal. App. 420, 423, 227 P. 938.

[2] It is equally well established that the court in the exercise of this power is not authorized to do more than to make its records conform to the actual facts, and cannot, under the form of amendment of its records, correct a judicial error, or make of record an order or judgment that was never in fact given. The above cited cases are ample authority for this rule, to which, however, may be added: Estate of Potter, 141 Cal. 424, 75 P. 850; Leonis v. Leffingwell, 126 Cal. 369, 58 P. 940; Goatman v. Fuller, 191 Cal. 245, 216 P. 35; Byrne v. Hoag, 116 Cal. 1, 47 P. 775; Takekawa v. Hole, 170 Cal. 323, 149 P. 593; First National Bank of Fresno v. Dusy, 110 Cal. 70, 42 P. 476.

[3] The first question presented for solution is this: Was there any error or omission made by the clerk in entering in the minutes the original order of July 21, 1923, granting the new trial? The defendant contends that the record shows that there was no error of the clerk in entering the original order granting a new trial, and the court could not therefore, by nunc pro tunc order, correct an error in the rendition of a judgment or order. The record defendant relies upon to support his contention is the original order of July 21, 1923, granting the new trial, the judge's certificate to the bill of exceptions, made following the appeal from the original order granting a new trial, to the effect that said bill of exceptions was correct, and the stipulation of counsel as to the correctness of the bill of exceptions, all of which have been heretofore referred to. With this contention we cannot agree. There is nothing in the record to show that the trial judge did not instruct the clerk to enter the order granting the new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, and also upon the ground that the verdict is against law.

The fact that the bill of exceptions above referred to is certified by the trial judge as being correct, and also stipulated as correct by the attorneys for plaintiff, is of little or no moment here, because, in so far as it purports to be a transcript of the record then existing, it was undoubtedly correct. But the trial judge would not, by signing such a certificate to the bill of exceptions, be foreclosed from thereafter causing his acts and orders to be correctly recorded. Dowd v. Superior Court, 69 Cal. App. 4, 230 P. 961.

[4] Furthermore, the court having made the nunc pro tunc order, every intendment is in favor of the validity and regularity of such order, and appellate courts will indulge every presumption, not controverted by the record, to uphold the validity of such an order, and the burden of overcoming this presumption is cast upon the defendant and appellant in this case, which burden it has not sustained. When the record is silent, as it really is in this case when the whole situation is considered, it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done but was rightly done. Brush v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., supra; Niles v. Gonzalez, 155 Cal. 359, 100 P. 1080.

It seems clear from the record before us that we must presume that the trial court did direct the clerk to specify in the original minute order that the new trial was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, and that the verdict was against law, and that the clerk failed to make the proper entry in the minutes.

[5] It is also contended by the defendant and appellant in this case that, an appeal having been taken from the original order granting a new trial, the trial court lost jurisdiction over the order and had no power to thereafter change or alter it. This contention is based upon the theory that the error was a judicial error and not a clerical error, but, as we have already determined that it was undoubtedly a clerical error, there is no merit in this contention. The rule in this regard is well stated by the Supreme Court in Fay v. Stubenrauch, 141 Cal. 573, 75 P. 174, where it is said:

> "Nor is the right of the lower court to amend suspended or impeded by an appeal, where an amendment does not affect any substantial rights of the appellant, and consists of the correction of a clerical mistake appearing upon the face of the record. It is true that the court by the appeal loses jurisdiction of the cause, for the purposes of the appeal, but it does not lose jurisdiction of its records. * * * Black on Judgments, § 162; Freeman on Judgments, § 73; People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 372 [30 P. 608]."

See, also, Halpern v. Superior Court, supra. Certainly no substantial rights of the defendant and appellant were affected by the nunc pro tunc order, but the rights of the plaintiff and respondent would be materially affected if the original minute order had not been corrected. The purpose of the correction of the minute order is manifest; for under section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless the order specifies that the new trial is granted upon the insufficiency of the evidence, on appeal from such order it will be presumed that the order was not based upon that ground.

[6] As we have already determined that the error in the original minute order was a clerical error and not a judicial error, the contention of defendant that it could not be corrected after a lapse of six months is without merit. Clerical errors or omissions can be corrected at any time and are in no way affected by the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We are of the opinion that the nunc pro tunc order made on August 23, 1924, and directed to be entered as of July 21, 1923, should be and it is hereby affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 98

MARSHALL v. FOOTE. (Civ. 5327.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1927.)

1. Master and servant 🔑351—Filing of application for compensation with Industrial Accident Commission is not prerequisite to action for damages against employer failing to secure payment (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b (St. 1919, p. 921), which provides that if any employer fails to comply with requirements of the act with respect to securing payment of compensation to injured employees, any employee "may proceed against such employer by filing an application for compensation with the commission, and, in addition thereto," he "may bring an action at law against such employer for damages, the same as if this act did not apply," filing of an application for compensation with commission is not prerequisite to commencement of action at law for damages.

2. Master and servant 🔑351—Remedies of injured employee are distinct, and he "may" file application for compensation or sue employer for damages; "must" (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b).

Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b (St. 1919, p. 921), providing employee may file application for compensation with Industrial Accident Commission, "and, in addition thereto," he may sue employer for damages, word "may" being defined in permissive sense and not in sense of "must" and hence does not require employee to prosecute two remedies to recover compensation for same injuries and employer to defend two proceedings, gives injured employee two distinct remedies, either or both of which he may pursue; latter remedy not being dependent on exercise of former.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, May; Must.]

3. Statutes 🔑181(2)—Avoidance of absurd results and adoption of legislative intent is aim in construing statutes.

A construction leading to absurd results, or to a conclusion not contemplated by the Legislature, should not be given to a statute.

4. Statutes 🔑181(2), 208—To determine legislative intent, court must consider context and result of statute.

In construing statutes, court must look at context, and result that would follow, to arrive at legislative intent.

5. Statutes 🔑181(2) — Sound, rather than absurd, construction of statute should be adopted.

If statute is fairly susceptible of two constructions, one leading inevitably to mischief or absurdity and other consistent with justice, sound sense, and wise policy, former should be rejected and latter adopted.

6. Statutes 🔑227 — Word "may" means "must" only when legislative intent clearly appears.

Word "may" can be construed in mandatory sense only when necessary to give effect to clear policy and intent of Legislature.

7. Master and servant 🔑347 — Legislature may authorize courts to fix attorney's fee, as penalty for noncompliance with Workmen's Compensation Act (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b; Const. art. 20, § 21).

Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b (St. 1919, p. 921), to effect that "judgment shall include a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court," is appropriate legislation under Const. art. 20, § 21, providing that Legislature is vested with plenary powers to create and enforce a system of workmen's compensation; investiture in judicial power of jurisdiction to impose said penalty being a valid exercise of legislative authority.

8. Constitutional law 🔑245 — Provision for penalty in nature of attorney's fee is not unconstitutional where it operates uniformly (Const. U. S. Amend. 14; Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b).

Workmen's Compensation Act, § 29b (St. 1919, p. 921), providing for fixing of attorney's fee by court, when employer has not brought himself within the act, is not violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as an arbitrary discrimination; such provision operating uniformly upon all who stand in same relation to it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Marshall against Lillian P. Foote for damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Guy Eddie, H. J. Fish and Wm. F. Adams, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The plaintiff herein was employed as a nurse in a hospital owned and operated by the defendant, and during the course of such employment was injured as a result of falling down a flight of stairs into the basement in one of the hospital buildings. At the time of the accident defendant had not complied with the requirements of the Workmen's Compensation Act with respect to securing payment of compensation to injured employees, and consequently plaintiff availing herself of the provisions of section 29 (b) of said act, brought this action for damages and recovered a judgment for $1,090, plus the sum of $250 attorney's fees, from which judgment the defendant appeals.

Said section 29 (b) provides, in part, as follows:

> "If any employer shall fail so to secure the payment of compensation, any injured employee or his dependents may proceed against such employer by filing an application for compensation with the commission, and, in addition thereto, such injured employee or his dependents may bring an action at law against such employer for damages, the same as if this act did not apply; * * *" and after granting to the employee the right of attachment and providing for the allowance of a reasonable attorney's fee, declares "that if as a result of such action for damages a judgment is obtained against such employer in excess of the compensation awarded under this act, the compensation awarded by the commission, if paid, or if security approved by the court be given for its payment, shall be credited upon said judgment. * * *" Stats. 1919, pp. 921–922. (Italics ours.)

As grounds for reversal defendant contends that, under the provisions of the section just referred to, the filing of an application for compensation with the Industrial Accident Commission is prerequisite to the commencement of an action at law for damages; that such application was not filed, and that since the six months' period fixed by section 11 of said act as the time within which the same might have been filed was allowed to elapse, the remedy of an action for damages afforded under said section is barred.

[1, 2] Defendant did not plead as a defense the failure of plaintiff to file such an application, nor does the record disclose that it was not in fact filed; the appeal herein having been taken on the judgment roll alone. But even assuming that defendant may now raise the point, upon the theory that the filing of such an application constitutes a jurisdictional fact relating to the subject-matter of the action which plaintiff should have alleged in her complaint, and that the failure to allege such fact may be taken advantage of by demurrer, as defendant did here, and also at any later stage of the proceedings (2 R. C. L. p. 88), we are of the opinion that the contention that an injured employee may not commence or maintain an action at law for damages, under said section 29 (b), without first having filed an application for compensation with said commission, cannot be sustained. Such section does not so declare in terms, as doubtless would have been the case if such prerequisite had been contemplated; nor does the language of said section fairly imply that such was the intention. On the contrary, the wording of the section, reasonably construed, means, we think, that upon failure of the employer to comply with the provisions of the act relating to securing payment of compensation for injuries to employees, an injured employee is given two distinct remedies, either or both of which he may pursue; the language used being that he "may" file an application with said commission "and in addition thereto * * * may bring an action at law * * * for damages" (italics ours), nothing contained in said section indicating that the two remedies were intended to be interdependent or that they must be exercised concurrently, in order to maintain the latter.

In the case of Ferguson's Estate v. Gentry, 206 Mo. 203, 104 S. W. 108, in giving interpretation to the term "in addition to curtesy," as used in the probate law of that state, the court held that said term "does not mean that the right therein given the surviving husband is conditioned on his having curtesy; if he have curtesy this is given him in addition, if he have not curtesy it is given him anyway." And so here, the exercise of the latter remedy afforded by section 29 (b) is not conditioned nor made dependent upon having exercised the former; if the employee, under the circumstances there stated, shall have filed his application for compensation with the commission, the remedy of an action at law is given him "in addition thereto"; or if he shall not have filed such application, the remedy of an action at law is given him anyway.

[3-5] "A construction should not be given to a statute, if it can be avoided, which will lead to absurd results, or to a conclusion plainly not contemplated by the Legislature." Merced Security Savings Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 641, 37 P. 648. The court must look at the context, and the result that would follow, in order to arrive at the legislative intent (Stockton School District v. Wright, 134 Cal. 64, 66 P. 34); and if a statute be fairly susceptible of two constructions, one leading inevitably to mischief or absurdity, and the other consistent with justice, sound sense, and wise policy, the former should be rejected and the latter adopted. In re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 384, 52 P. 799.

In order to adopt defendant's proposed construction of said section 29 (b), it would be necessary to judicially correct the word "may" as used in connection with the filing of said application to read "must"; and it would follow, to be consistent, that the word "may" as afterwards used in relation to the commencement of the action at law should also be read as "must." Evidently the effect of such construction would lead to the singular situation of compelling an injured employee, in every case where there was a failure of the employer to comply with the law, to prosecute two remedies to recover compensation for the same injuries, even though he were content with the adequacy of the relief to be afforded through one; and it would also operate to the detriment of a nonsecuring employer, because in every such case he would be compelled to defend two proceedings, and if unsuccessful therein, be obliged to pay two allowances for attorney's fees. Such construction, we think, would be a strained one, for it would impose additional burdens upon both employee and employer which apparently were never contemplated nor intended. "While the courts have never hesitated to construe 'may' as 'must' or 'shall' when the context and the policy of the law demanded that interpretation, the legislative intention must plainly appear before such judicial correction will be made." Ostrander v. City of Richmond, 155 Cal. 468, 101 P. 452.

[6] Aside from the question of the possible consequence of compelling the exercise of two remedies in every case, and considering the meaning of said section from another viewpoint, no good reason appears for compelling an injured employee to file an application for compensation with the commission, where he has elected to sue at law for damages. Nowhere does the section suggest that the result of the action at law shall be made contingent or dependent upon the result of any proceedings taken before said commission; but, on the contrary, provides that the injured employee may bring said action for damages "the same as if this act did not apply." Neither has it been shown that any beneficial result would inure to either the employer or the employee by requiring the filing of such an application as a condition to the commencement of the action at law. It is only where it is necessary to give effect to the clear policy and intent of the Legislature that the word "may" can be construed in a mandatory sense, and, where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense and policy of the provisions to require an unusual interpretation, its use is merely permissive and discretionary. Kemble v. McPhaill, 128 Cal. 444, 60 P. 1092.

The effect of construing the word "may" in the ordinary permissive sense in which it is written in the statute does not nullify the provisions therein permitting the filing of an application for compensation with said commission, for, as already pointed out, under such construction, the injured employee may, at his option, pursue the single remedy before the commission, or the single one at law for damages, or both.

[7] We find no merit in the contention of defendant that the provision contained in said section 29 (b), to the effect that "such judgment shall include a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court," is not appropriate legislation under article 20, § 21, of the state Constitution. Said constitutional provision in terms declares that "the Legislature is hereby expressly vested with plenary powers, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution, to create, and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, by appropriate legislation," which shall include "full provision for adequate insurance coverage against liability to pay or furnish compensation; * * * full provision for otherwise securing the payment of compensation; * * *" and acting under the authority thus granted, the Legislature has provided by way of penalty that upon failure of the employer to secure payment of compensation as in said act required, the employee shall be given the remedy of an action at law for damages, wherein the trial court shall include in its judgment an allowance for attorney's fees. Under such circumstances, the investiture in the judicial power of the state of jurisdiction to impose said penalty is a valid exercise of the legislative authority. E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Cal. 180, 193 P. 105, 16 A. L. R. 611.

[8] Nor do we believe, as defendant contends, that the provisions of said section 29 (b) manifest a hostile discrimination against employers as a class and are therefore violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution. Defendant relies mainly in support of this point upon the case of Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 P. 982, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193, 11 Ann. Cas. 712, the decision therein being based largely upon the decision in the case of Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 S. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666. In the case of Engebretsen v. Gay, 158 Cal. 30, 109 P. 880, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 690, however, it was held that there is nothing in either of the cases mentioned to suggest that attorney's fees may not be allowed a successful plaintiff in certain classes of cases, the court saying that—

> "The right to classify in this respect, as long as the classification is 'based upon some difference bearing a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is attempted,' was conceded by the opinion in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 S. Ct. 255 [41 L. Ed. 666] (see Atchison, etc., R. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 S. Ct. 609 [43 L. Ed. 909], and is recognized by all the authorities."

In other words, it is held that a law is not to be declared unconstitutional where it operates uniformly and in the same manner upon all who stand in the same category or in the same relation to the law (City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604; Selowsky v. Superior Court, 180 Cal. 404, 181 P. 652; In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 328, 81 P. 955); or where the distinction drawn is founded upon constitutional or natural differences (Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, supra).

The classification of cases under said section 29 (b) to which the provisions for the allowances of attorney's fees is made to apply is based entirely upon the classification of the legal relationships established by the Workmen's Compensation Act, such provision authorizing the allowance of said fees being incorporated in the act itself; and in the case of Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 P. 398, it was held that the legislative classification of such legal relationships was deemed to be founded in reason and based on rational grounds of differentiation, and did not evidence an arbitrary discrimination; that consequently such classification was not violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, but was a valid legislative exercise of the police power.

For the reasons stated in the case last cited, and those set forth in Engebretsen v. Gay, supra, in sustaining the constitutionality of the law there under consideration, we conclude that no part of said section 29 (b) is open to the constitutional objections made by defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

---

81 Cal. App. 40

HELFER v. GLAZE. (Civ. 3177.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 25, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 24, 1927.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑819(4)—Evidence held to support finding awning fell from building and injured pedestrian on street sidewalk.

Evidence held to support finding that frame of awning fell from building and struck and injured pedestrian walking along street sidewalk.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑819(1)—Evidence held to warrant finding that awning injuring pedestrian was negligently maintained.

In pedestrian's action for personal injury from being struck by falling awning, frame of which became loosened from building, evidence held to warrant finding of maintenance of awning in negligent manner.

3. Trial 🔑252(8)—In action for pedestrian's injury from falling awning, failure to instruct that premises were leased held under evidence not error.

In action by pedestrian for personal injuries from awning which fell from hotel building, in view of defendant's evidence that he owned hotel and everything therein, and that manager was employed to inspect and of his instruction as to joint maintenance of hotel, failure to instruct that premises were leased by defendant at time of injury was not error.

4. Damages 🔑132(3)—$6,000 for permanent injuries from being struck on head by falling awning held not excessive.

Where pedestrian was injured by being struck on head by falling awning, verdict of $6,000 for injuries held not excessive, in view of showing of permanency, and that $1,812 thereof was traceable to special damages for medical attendance and loss of earnings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Marie Helfer against Dr. J. M. Glaze. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Earl L. Wisdom, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Goodwin J. Knight, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This action was tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $6,000. From the judgment entered thereon the defendant appeals.

The complaint alleges that on or about the 14th day of July, 1923, the defendant owned, maintained, and controlled the Merritt-Jones Hotel in the city of Santa Monica, state of California; that the defendant, by his agents and employees, kept and maintained over a large window fronting on Marine avenue, a public street in said city, a large awning for the purpose of shading said window; that the frame of said awning was maintained in such a careless and negligent manner that it became loosened, and on or about the 14th day of July, 1923, while so negligently and carelessly maintained, fell without warning, and struck the plaintiff upon her head; that the plaintiff, without any negligence or carelessness on her part, was walking along the sidewalk adjoining said street, and over which said awning was so carelessly and negligently maintained by the plaintiff, and that, while so walking along said sidewalk, the frame of said awning, in its fall, struck her upon the head; that the suddenness and force of the blow of the iron frame of said awning felled her to the ground, rendering her unconscious. The plaintiff further alleges that by reason of said injury plaintiff was rendered sick and sore throughout her whole body, suffering concussion of the brain and traumatic neurosis (a nervous trouble in this case arising from a wound upon the head). The complaint then proceeds to allege certain special damages, such as loss of compensation for her services, and that she had been unable to engage in her usual employment for a long period of time, that she had incurred certain expenses for medical attendance, medicines, and also certain expenses for the attendance of nurses.

The defendant denied: (1) The alleged careless and negligent manner of maintaining the awning in question, denied that it fell upon the plaintiff, and, as a special defense, alleged that the premises in question were under lease to other parties.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Upon this appeal the defendant presents for our consideration four questions: (1) The insufficiency of the evidence to warrant a finding that plaintiff was injured by the falling awning; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to warrant a finding of negligence; (3) that the court erred in not instructing the jury that the premises were leased; and (4) that the damages awarded are excessive.

[1] In support of the first assignment the appellant lays the premises of his argument upon the statement that the awning which fell, and by the falling of which the plaintiff alleges she was injured, was maintained over the northerly, instead of over the southerly one of two large windows in front of said hotel building, and was so far away as not to be within the range of vision of two witnesses seated nearby in a bootblack stand in the recess adjoining the front of said hotel building adjoining the sidewalk along which the plaintiff was walking. An examination of the exhibits and of the testimony in this case shows that the appellant is in error in laying down the premises for his argument. The awning that fell is shown beyond any reasonable contradiction to have been the one maintained over the southerly window of the front of said hotel and within a very few feet of the bootblack stand, readily visible to any one seated thereon while having his shoes shined. There is some doubt left in the testimony as to whether the southerly or the northerly end of the irons which fell came nearest to the ground. This difference in the testimony of the several witnesses, however, is utterly immaterial, because whether it was the iron supporting the southerly end or the northerly end of the awning which came closest to the sidewalk, if either struck the plaintiff upon the head, as alleged by her, the witnesses seated in the bootblack stand, as stated by them, had a sufficiently clear vision to see what was taking place, if by any means their attention was called thereto. The awning was stretched on canvas with the roller at the top, upon which the canvas was rolled up when the awning was raised, and having an iron tube or iron rod around the lower portion thereof to give the canvas extension out over and far enough from the window to give shade and protection from the summer sun. Some of the witnesses described this iron rod or pipe as being three-fourths inch in diameter. There seems to be no question raised as to the fact that the iron pipe used in the lower portion of the awning to give extension thereof was of sufficient weight to strike a very severe blow in the event of its fall.

The witnesses L. B. Farman and J. J. Hartman testified as to seeing the awning in its fall strike the head of the plaintiff. Hartman's testimony is, in substance, as follows:

"I know where the Merritt-Jones Hotel is situated. I know the cigar stand next door to it. I have friends in that neighborhood. During the past six years I have been frequently in the neighborhood of the hotel. I know the location of the shoe-shining stand. It is next door to the hotel. I worked at the hotel when it was being built, have known the owners and operators of the hotel from time to time. The picture shown me is a fair representation of the front portions of the Merritt-Jones Hotel on Marion avenue. The large window is in front of the café. I was sitting on the shoe-shining stand somewhere between 3 and 4 o'clock on the afternoon of July 14, 1923, first chair from the street. I could see all the front part of the awning. I was looking up toward the Pacific Electric car. I saw the plaintiff, Miss Helfer, on that day. I saw her and another woman coming down the street. Just as they got at that corner, the awning fell on them. I saw the awning just as it struck the woman's head. There was no man with Miss Helfer. No one pulled the awning down. There was no one near the awning except those two women."

The witness Farman testified that he saw the awning frame strike the plaintiff on the top of the head; that, after the injury, he saw the awning frame torn loose from the building; that no one pulled the awning down; that the plaintiff was in the position of a passerby on the street.

This witness testified that he was looking at the two women when they walked along the sidewalk; that, when they came in front of the Merritt-Jones Hotel, he saw the awning fall and hit the plaintiff on the head; that it was the awning frame that hit the plaintiff. The witness then identified the window from which the awning fell; that the plaintiff was looking down toward the beach at the time she was struck by the falling awning. In view of this testimony, it seems unnecessary to consider further appellant's argument that there is no testimony to support the finding by the jury that the plaintiff was struck by the falling awning.

[2] Upon the question of the awning being maintained in a negligent manner, the witness D. B. Young, called by the defendant as an awning expert, on cross-examination, testified that, when the awning is maintained in a normal manner or condition, it would not come down below a distance of eight feet from the sidewalk; that it would not be possible to come down to within about four feet of the sidewalk, if maintained in a normal condition; that it cannot come down to within four feet of the ground if in good condition.

The defendant's witness Seeley, the engineer for the hotel building, testified that he was called to attend to the awning; that the awning was in front of the dining room; that he found it running down on an angle, one end right up as it would be, and the other was down to four feet, and was drawn away from the side of the building. The slide that goes up and down, that holds the awning, was torn. The awning covering was partly torn off; that he took the awning frame down, and put it in the basement; that he did not pull it up because it was practically torn off; that he had orders to take it down, one end of it was practically torn off. It was not in a normal condition. "I got my orders from the superintendent of the building, I did all the repairs to the hotel. It is my duty to make inspections, my duty was to inspect everything, the rooms, bathroom, down stairs, engineer's room and everything around in general, including the awnings."

The witness R. A. Worthy, on cross-examination, testified that he was familiar with the awning in front of the café; that he tried to get the awning down; that something held it, he did not know what; that, when he found it would not work, he just left it there; that he did not look any further when it did not come down.

The defendant's witness, Mead, on cross-examination testified that he saw the awning some time between 3:30 and 3:45 p. m.; that the end of the awning nearest the ocean was normal, the one nearest the hotel door had dropped about two feet, the canvas was torn on this end of the awning, and it had dropped as much as the pipe, of which it was constructed, would allow, that is, the flexibility of this pipe would allow one end normally to drop lower than the other.

H. P. Knight, a witness for the defendant and manager for the hotel, likewise testified that he saw the awning in front of the cafe the afternoon in question; that, when he saw it, it was out of place, one corner hanging down, looked like somebody had run into it; it was the corner nearest the café door; that he did not notice the canvas covering at the time; that the end he was speaking of was down to about four or five feet from the sidewalk, the other end was at an angle running up. "As soon as I saw the condition, I thought it had better be taken down, gotten out of the way; somebody might run into it; I went down stairs and told the engineer to have it removed."

Mr. Hoegee, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that he had seen the awning and the roller on which it operated; that he would regard the frame and awning as in a dangerous condition; that awnings of this kind fall when they are not taken care of; that the awning was not in first-class condition, it was pretty old. It had not been taken care of; it was rusted from the salt air.

We do not need to follow the testimony any further to show that plaintiff's second contention is without merit.

[3] As to the third ground of appeal that the premises were leased and were not under the management of the defendant, the record shows, among other things, the following (testimony of William Seeley):

> "I am the engineer of the Merritt-Jones Hotel. I was working in that capacity in July, 1923. I know the awning in controversy. I had been working for the hotel for over two years. I did all the repairs around the hotel. It was my duty to make all the inspections. I was employed by Dr. Glaze. He paid my salary. It is my duty to inspect the awnings every day. I was always around the hotel outside and inside. It was my duty to look after the repairs. I took the awning frame down and put it in the basement. I took it down because the awning was practically torn off. I had orders to take it down. I got my orders from the superintendent, Mr. Knight."

Mr. Knight, a witness for the defendant, testified as follows:

> "I was manager of this hotel for Dr. Glaze. Mr. Worthy was operating the café. A percentage of the receipts was paid to Dr. Glaze which was operated under that kind of an agreement, there was no lease."

The evidence of Mr. Worthy was to the effect that Dr. Glaze was the owner of the café, owned the tables, silverware, etc.; that Dr. Glaze had a certain percentage of the net receipts.

Dr. Glaze, the defendant, testified that he owned the hotel and everything herein referred to. This testimony clearly shows that the jury had a right to conclude that the defendant Glaze controlled, operated, managed, and had the general supervision of everything involved in this action, and that the cases which turn upon the liability of a landlord for the negligence of his tenants are inapplicable, and need not to be reviewed in this opinion.

At the request of the defendant, the court gave the following instructions to the jury:

> "Instruction No. 13: If you find that the awning in this case was, at the time of the alleged injury, under the exclusive care and control of another person, not the servant or agent of the defendant, then you must find on the issues for the defendant."
>
> "Instruction No. 14: If you find that the awning in this case was, at the time of the alleged injury, under the joint care and control of another person with the defendant, then you must find, if any negligence existed at the time of the alleged accident in its maintenance, whether or not such negligence can be imputed to the defendant, and, if not, then that he is not liable."

We do not need to inquire whether the second of these instructions is correct, because it was given at the request of the defendant, and the two instructions taken together certainly presented the law as favorably to the defendant as he could ask under the theory that he was not responsible for the condition of the awning.

[4] The fourth assignment of error involves the amount of the verdict. Before considering the question of whether the verdict is excessive, we may state that the testimony shows sufficient to justify the jury in finding the following special damages, to wit: Expenses for attending physicians in the sum of not less than $282, medicines $70, loss of earnings at the lowest figure of $100 per month, given as the earning capacity of plaintiff, eleven months, $1,100, and attendance of nurses, $350.

Thus we have slightly over $1,800 direct and readily ascertainable losses on the part of the plaintiff. The verdict is for the lump sum of $6,000, which, excluding the items which we have mentioned, leaves a trifle less than $4,200 to cover the physical injuries suffered by the plaintiff

The trial was had twelve months after the injury. At that time the plaintiff testified that she had not yet been able to do any work; that she was suffering a great deal from headache and from nausea or fainting spells; that she suffered considerably from dizziness or fainting spells; that since the injury she had not been able to attend to her usual employment; had not been able to go out anywhere; that she had suffered relapses; that her nervous condition did not seem to improve; that she had had several severe nervous attacks; that she suffered at times from loss of memory.

Dr. J. Mather, her attending physician, testified that he found the plaintiff in a semiconscious condition when he first called; that he found she was suffering from traumatic neurosis; that she was suffering from fainting spells, had a great deal of pain in her head, fainting spells, and nausea; that the plaintiff at the time of the trial was not a well woman; that in cases of traumatic neurosis symptoms in some may appear much greater than in others, "though the condition of traumatic injuries is this that comes from the exhaustion; there is a functional nerve condition of the general system; that may be some better; sometimes they have a relapse, have a great deal of excitability;" that in this case the concussion was an injury to the brain. The witness further testified: "In considering the fact of the number of months that have elapsed since the injury, I believe the injury to a large extent to be permanent." To the same effect was the testimony of Dr. Parkin.

In respect to the suggestion of the defendant was shamming her nervous injuries, both these witnesses testified that in their opinion and experience with the patient such was not the case. Both these doctors also testified that the injury which the plaintiff had suffered was very similar to what is called shell shock suffered by soldiers in the World War.

Dr. Parkin also testified that, while patients recovered from this injury, "the majority recover so as to be able to work, but, on the other hand, that same majority are subject to relapses under stresses, strains, that formerly would have been inadequate to have produced any disability"; that it is necessary for such patients to take precautions against strains or anything which would tend to bring on a relapse.

As tending to combat this testimony, the defendant introduced the testimony of Dr. Harding to the effect that the injury was slight; that there was no permanent injury; and that, when he was called to examine the patient, she emitted no groans indicating pain; that he called the evening after the accident, but did not see her again until the time of the trial; that this was a case susceptible of complete recovery, and that in his opinion the condition did not resemble that of shell shock; that he had never had a case of traumatic neurosis where the injury was to the brain.

Mrs. Margaret Eicholz testified that the plaintiff was compelled to remain in bed about two months after the accident; that she was very nervous, could not control herself; and that her head shook considerably as though she had the palsy; that she suffered from nausea or fainting.

Miss Kate Hegel testified as to the nervous condition of the plaintiff; that she could not sleep and had fainting spells; that was her condition in January after the injury in July; "I took care of her for some time."

We think the foregoing testimony shows a substantial injury to the plaintiff, and also justified the jury in coming to the conclusion that the injury suffered by the plaintiff is, as stated by one of the physicians, one of a permanent character. Our attention has not been directed to anything in the case which would indicate that the jury was actuated by any malice or prejudice, or under anything whatever, other than a desire to reach a just and correct conclusion. Excluding the $1,812 covering items which we have mentioned, the remainder of the verdict allowed to cover the damages suffered by the plaintiff on account of her physical injuries does not impress us as being excessive, or indicate that the jury was actuated by any improper motives. Much learning has been expended, and much time consumed, in writing opinions as to when appellate courts may or may not interfere with the verdict of jurors on the ground that the award of damages is excessive. It would serve no useful purpose to restate the law on that subject. This court recently, in the case of Rocca v. Tuolumne County Light & Power Co., 245 P. 468, had occasion to go into this question very carefully, and it is sufficient to refer to the authorities there cited showing that there is nothing in this case which justifies interference with the verdict of the jury on the ground that the award is excessive.

No other questions being tendered for our consideration upon this appeal, it follows from what we have said that the judgment of the trial court should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

81 Cal. App. 61

PHŒNIX ASSUR. CO., LIMITED, OF LONDON, et al., v. TEXAS HOLDING CO.★
(Civ. 3124.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 24, 1927.)

1. Explosives 🔑8—Evidence held to sustain finding of negligence in maintaining oil storage tanks and furnace.

In action for loss by fire of motor trucks, standing on street near oil tanks, which exploded, evidence held sufficient to show that explosion was caused by gas traveling from tanks to nearby open furnace, and to support finding of negligence of defendant in manner of maintaining tanks and furnace.

2. Evidence 🔑7—It is common knowledge that oil storage tanks do not ordinarily explode, in absence of negligence.

It is a matter of common knowledge that oil storage tanks do not ordinarily explode or ignite, in the absence of some negligent act or omission on the part of those in charge of the operation and maintenance of such tanks.

3. Explosives 🔑8—Absence of evidence of proper care held not to preclude finding of negligence in maintaining oil tanks and furnace.

Absence of evidence, showing what would have been proper care under the circumstances, held not to preclude a finding of negligence in defendant's maintenance of open furnace in proximity to oil storage tanks.

4. Explosives 🔑8—Evidence that others maintained oil storage tanks similarly situated held inadmissible.

In action involving alleged negligence of defendant in maintaining open furnace in proximity to oil storage tanks, exclusion of questions tending to show that others than defendant maintained equipment similarly situated held not error, in view of court's offer to receive testimony tending to show proper practice and defendant's conformity thereto.

5. Negligence 🔑4—"Ordinary care" varies according to circumstances.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, and the standard by which it is to be measured varies with the circumstances attending each particular case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ordinary Care.]

6. Negligence 🔑5—Custom cannot make due care out of conduct in fact negligent.

Mere custom or usage cannot make due care out of conduct that is, in fact, negligent, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1078(4)—Errors assigned but not discussed by appellant need not be discussed by appellate court.

It is not incumbent on the appellate court to discuss alleged errors in instructions not discussed by appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the Phœnix Assurance Company, Limited, of London, and another against the Texas Holding Company to recover for loss of certain motor trucks destroyed by fire. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carnahan & Clark, Oliver O. Clark, Charles R. Nelson, and Dan V. Noland, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The period given for the filing of additional briefs herein having expired and no additional briefs having been filed, it is assumed that the parties have elected to stand upon the briefs already on file.

During all the times mentioned herein, the defendant was in possession of and operating certain oil property situate at Huntington Beach, in the county of Orange, state of California. This property was located on Crystal street between Summit and Garfield streets. On the property was an oil well and certain tanks for the reception and storage of crude petroleum. For some time prior to the 24th day of February, 1923, the defendant had been producing crude petroleum and storing the same in the tanks just mentioned. These tanks were located in close proximity to Crystal street. Crystal street was a much traveled public highway. On the 24th day of February, 1923, an explosion occurred on the premises occupied by the defendant, and burning oil from the tanks referred to was thrown over and upon Crystal street and over and upon three automobile trucks, then and there being, belonging to the copartnership of Shaffer & Best, and destroying said trucks by fire. This action is for the value of said trucks. The insurance company paid the insurance policies on the trucks in question and took an assignment of the right of action against the defendant herein. Judgment was awarded plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals.

The action is based upon the alleged negligent manner in which the defendant maintained its oil tanks and conducted its oil-producing operations. As stated, the oil tanks were maintained in close proximity to the public highway known as Crystal street. The evidence set forth in the transcript shows that manholes or openings were maintained in the tanks, and that a boiler used in the operation of its pumping machinery was located approximately thirty feet from the nearest oil tank; that this boiler was so erected that the fires maintained thereunder would flash up along the rear end of said boiler from two to six feet.

The appellant alleges four grounds as reasons for reversal herein, to wit, insufficiency of the evidence, erroneous rulings of the court in the rejection of evidence, erroneous instructions given to the jury, and error in refusing instructions requested by the defendant. In support of the alleged insufficiency of the evidence, the appellant sets forth that there was an entire absence of any testimony showing that the tanks, appliances, equipment, and other instrumentalities and methods of handling oil and gas by the defendant was negligent; that is, that no witness actually testified that the manner in which the defendant maintained its instrumentalities and conducted its business operations was negligent.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

[1] Before discussing this misconceived statement of what we think the law is, we will set forth the testimony bearing upon the issues involved. Before doing so, however, we will state that the testimony adduced was for the purpose of showing that crude oil, as taken from the wells and stored in tanks, generates inflammable gases; that this gas in foggy weather will drop to the ground and move along the ground with the wind, if any is blowing, in the same direction with the wind; that at the time in question there was a rather brisk wind blowing from the direction in which the tanks were situated toward the place where the furnace and boiler herein mentioned were maintained, and that this wind moved the gases along from one of the tanks to the furnace where it was ignited by the exposed blaze of the fire under the boiler. With this in view, we will quote from the transcript, which, we think, amply justifies the conclusion reached by the jury and the trial court.

J. W. Hankins, a witness called for the plaintiffs, testified that the storage tanks were located upon the property of the Texas Holding Company; they were in the northeast corner, about four feet apart; the tanks were about six feet from Crystal street; the tanks were of about 1,200 barrels capacity; they were about fifteen feet tall and twelve feet across.

H. G. Best, a witness called for the plaintiffs, testified as to the location of the tanks and placed them at about six or eight feet from the line of Crystal street.

George Shaffer, a witness called for the plaintiffs, testified as to the location of the tanks and as to the burning of the trucks, locating the tanks about the same distance from Crystal street and the trucks in the street a short distance from the tanks.

The witness Albert testified that there was heavy traffic on Crystal street. The witness Hankins further testified that there was oil on fire in the tanks; that one of the tanks was full when the fire started; that the south tank was about two-thirds full; after the fire there was some oil left in the tanks; after the fire there was nothing left of the trucks, except junk, iron and ashes; that there was a manhole around the intake pipe of the tank; that they were not covered.

Eugene A. Whitten, an expert witness, testified that crude petroleum gives off gas shortly after being taken from the well.

L. N. Shaffer, a witness called for the plaintiffs, testified that the fire was burning in the open furnace about thirty feet from the nearest uncovered storage tank; that he saw fire burning in the vicinity of the tanks immediately before the explosion; that he saw the fire burning under the boiler; it was coming out at the back end of the boiler. The fire came out around the boiler and out of the back end of it, as it was not bricked up over the back end. It was open; an open-end boiler, so to speak; that there was a sump ten or fifteen feet distant.

The witness Ashburn testified that the boiler was not bricked up; it was what you would call a tubular boiler bricked up around the outer edge and half way up on the back was open; that the flames would jump up four to six feet out of the back of the boiler.

The witness Hankins further testified that he would approximate the distance between the furnace and the nearest tank at about thirty to forty feet; that the boiler was used for making steam and that the back end of the boiler was open; that every once in a while the flames would shoot up from two to six feet high.

The witness Height testified that the fire was coming out of the back of the boiler and going approximately three or four feet high.

The witness Best testified that there was a fire under the boiler at the time of the explosion and also as to the fire blowing out the end of the boiler.

The witness Hankins, on cross-examination, testified that gas would travel with the wind, never against the wind; that there was a good stiff breeze at the time of the explosion; that the wind was blowing directly from the south; that oil, freshly produced, gives off gas.

W. T. Wallace, a witness called for the plaintiffs, testified that he noticed the direction in which the wind was blowing at the time in question. It was from the southeast to the northwest; that the wind was blowing from eight to twelve miles per hour.

George Shaffer, a witness for the plaintiffs, testified that natural gas was permeating the atmosphere all around the premises in question; that there was some fog.

Eugene A. Whitten, an expert witness, further testified that he had observed the effect of weather conditions upon gas that is given off from petroleum; that fog and night air will cause the gas to lie on the ground; that the gas tends to creep along the ground in the direction of the wind; damp air has the same effect; that the sump referred to had oil in it; that the gas would naturally go with the wind from the tanks toward the furnace; would naturally go right along with the wind. "I have seen gas travel along the ground as far as one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet. The fog has a tendency to hold the gas closer to the ground. The wind blowing toward the north would mean that the gas would drift toward the furnace; when the explosion occurred the oil was thrown across the road over toward the east.

Mr. Sistrunk, a witness called for the plaintiffs, testified that the trucks were on the street opposite the tanks; that the explosion seemed to be right in among the tanks; "it just seemed to be in under the tanks; that is, where I was, the flash and the explosion I heard came from that point."

The witness L. N. Shaffer testified there was just a flash and the fire and then there was an explosion and the fire and oil came right across the road, blew onto the trucks across the road. "The first I saw was a flash of fire. It seemed to be right in between the tanks. It just seemed to come up all around them."

The witness Hankins further testified:

> "I was sitting there looking toward the trucks and all at once saw a puff of smoke and flash come up from the tanks. When I first saw the flame it was between the tanks; we had been checking up the drill stem; there was a great light and right in about a second or so I heard the explosion; there was a flash followed by an explosion and fire."

Other witnesses testified as to the burning oil being thrown from the tanks across the road and over upon the trucks and that the trucks were burned by the burning oil.

This testimony shows the circumstances and conditions upon which the jury based its conclusions as to the origin of the explosion, and seems to us to lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the explosion was occasioned by the gas being propelled along the ground over the intervening space between the tanks and the open end of the furnace and there ignited by the exposed flames. The commonly known fact that gas is inflammable and explosive required no testimony. It is true that the transcript discloses no testimony that anybody actually saw the flaming gas run from the furnace to the tanks, but the distance was so short that there could be only, as the witnesses describe, a flash preceding the explosion. To hold in this case that the evidence is insufficient to support the conclusion that the fire and explosion occurred by the creeping gas being ignited by the exposed flame, we would have to hold that, as a matter of law, no jury could reasonably have found that the origin of the explosion was in the ignition of the creeping gas; also, we would have to hold that no jury could reasonably find that it was negligence to maintain a fire where the flames were exposed within such proximity to oil tanks, from which gases were being given off. In so far as our attention has been called to the testimony, it is uncontradicted that fresh oil discharges gases which are inflammable. Instead of being insufficient to support the conclusion as to the origin of the explosion and fire, we think the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the surrounding circumstances is that the explosion and fire came about just as detailed by these witnesses, and that it came about by the exposure of the flames of the fire maintained under the boiler. We also think it is beyond question that the jury had a right to draw the inference of negligence from the maintenance of an exposed fire in close proximity to oil tanks discharging gases, and that it had a right to conclude that, under the circumstances, it was only a matter of time when the prevailing winds would come from the right direction to propel the gas of the tanks to the exposed flames and lead to the results described herein. The explosion and fire which caused the damage occurred on premises under the exclusive control and management of the defendant.

[2] It seems to be conceded also, as a matter of common knowledge, that storage tanks do not ordinarily explode or ignite in the absence of some negligent act or omission on the part of those in charge of the operation and maintenance of such tanks. As said in Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 P. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146:

> "The real cause of the explosion being unexplained, it is probable that it was occasioned by a lack of proper care."

And further:

> "When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care."

As stated by this court in Hallawell v. Union Oil Co., 36 Cal. App. 672, 173 P. 177:

> "We do not think plaintiffs were required to show with absolute certainty that the fire which originated at the stills through what we regard as an act of negligence on defendant's part, * * * was communicated to the asphalt shed and was the proximate cause of the death of these two men."

The evidence in that case simply showed the circumstances by which inflammable gases rising from the oil were carried along by the air currents of the strong wind then blowing. And further on, in describing inferences that may be drawn from the circumstances, the court in that case said:

> "Respondents contend that having shown the circumstances surrounding the fire sufficient appears to justify the invocation of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, and that in the absence of explanation by the defendant, the circumstances afford reasonable evidence that the accident arose from want of care" (citing Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 P. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, 40 P. 1020; O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 P. 674; Van Horn v. Pac. Refining, etc., Co., 27 Cal. App. 105, 148 P. 951). "We think this doctrine may be urged with more than plausibility. Everything in the present case which in any way contributed to the accident was under the management of the defendant; the thing which caused the injury was shown to have been under the management of the defendant, and that in the ordinary course of things the accident would not have happened if those having the management had used proper care."

[3] Appellant also urges that there is no showing what would have been proper care under the circumstances, and therefore the jury was not authorized in coming to the conclusion that the defendant negligently maintained a fire in close proximity to the oil tanks. The answer to this contention is well set forth in plaintiffs' brief, which we will paraphrase: If such testimony is necessary, what function has the jury to perform? If the ultimate fact of negligence is for witnesses, why the necessity of a verdict by the jury? The circumstances being shown, the ultimate fact is for the jury and for the jury exclusively in these matters. The law is thus stated in Redfield v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., 112 Cal. 220, 43 P. 1117:

> "All the circumstances from which the ultimate fact of negligence upon the one hand, or due care upon the other, must be found were established by unconflicting evidence, and such ultimate fact was a matter to be inferred by the jury from the evidence."

This case quotes from Shafter v. Evans, 53 Cal. 32, where it is said:

> " 'The ultimate fact of negligence in such a case is not one to be established by the mere opinion of witnesses called to testify. The evidence of experts is not admissible.' * * * In applying circumstantial evidence which does not go directly to the fact in issue, but to facts from which the fact in issue is to be inferred, the jury have two distinct duties to perform: First, to ascertain the truth of the fact to which the evidence goes, and thence to infer the truth of the fact in issue. When this experience is of such a nature that it may be presumed to be within the common experience of all men of common education moving in the ordinary walks of life, there is no room for the evidence of opinion; it is for the jury to draw the inference."

And further on:

> "If the circumstances out of which the negligence is said to arise have been established by proof, or can be shown, the ultimate fact of negligence is an inference to be drawn by the jury, and is not to be established by the opinions of others."

As stated in respondents' brief:

> "Surely, it was not necessary to inform the jury, through oil experts, of all possible consequences to be anticipated from the presence of exposed quantities of natural gas and oil in close proximity to an open fire."

See, also, Arnold v. California, etc., Cement Co., 161 Cal. 522, 119 P. 913, and Barboza v. Pacific Portland Cement Co., 162 Cal. 36, 120 P. 767. As stated in County of Alameda v. Tieslau, 44 Cal. App. 332, 186 P. 398:

> "If the finding of fact is based upon a reasonable inference, it is not within the power of this court to set it aside any more than it is within its power to set aside any other finding supported by sufficient legal evidence. For a finding of fact based upon reasonable inference drawn from facts proved with legal sufficiency is as much and as completely as is any other finding of fact a finding based upon good and sufficient evidence. It is the peculiar and exclusive province of the trial court or trial jury in the first instance to make such finding of fact, and it is the especial right of every litigant to have all facts so determined by court or jury, this court sitting only to review the findings and being empowered to set them aside as matter of law only when not sustained by adequate evidence" (citing Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 799, 158 P. 756).

Notwithstanding the fact that the reporter's transcript of the testimony in this case covers some 800 pages of typewritten matter, the appellant has not called our attention to any insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict other than the mere statement that no witness testified before the jury that the appliances maintained and operated by the defendant were maintained and operated in a negligent manner. An examination of the testimony, however, brief excerpts of which we have set forth, sufficiently discloses the fact that the jury had ample information upon which to base its conclusion, without the aid of either expert or opinion testimony.

In support of appellant's allegations of the insufficiency of the testimony are cited the cases of Webber v. Bank of Tracy, 66 Cal. App. 29, 225 P. 41, Marovich v. Central Cal. T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 598, and Perara v. Panama-Pac. Int. Exp. Co., 179 Cal. 63, 67, 68, 175 P. 454. An analysis of these cases shows, however, that they are inapplicable. The case of Webber v. Bank of Tracy, supra, rests upon contract, where the relation of bailor and bailee existed. In that case it was held that the bank engaged in the business of maintaining safe deposit boxes was held to no higher degree of care than the fair average of those engaged in a like occupation, and as conducted by the average prudent man. The bank was not an insurer and could not be held to any stricter accountability than that which was reasonably exercised by others engaged in the same occupation. It is there said:

> "The standard of ordinary care is established by competent testimony upon the custom and general usage of the business. Absolute protection against bank burglary, in small communities, is unattainable."

The question really presented in the Webber Case was as to the reasonable sufficiency of the safe deposit boxes, vaults, and building to safeguard the property of the plaintiff. It differs from the facts of the case at bar in that the question really presented here is, Was or was not the defendant maintaining and operating an obviously dangerous contrivance? In the one case, the question of safe deposit boxes, vaults, and building maintained by other banks would indicate the standard of care ordinarily considered to be sufficient. In the case before us, the circumstances are such as to call only for the exercise of the common judgment of reasonable men as to whether an exposed and unguarded furnace, the flames from which, from time to time, would leap from two to six feet in the air, distant some thirty feet from the oil tanks, exuding gases, was or was not a continuing menace to life and property and constituting self-evident facts, from which a jury could reasonably draw all proper conclusions. Likewise, in the Marovich Case it was a question of whether certain additional appliances were reasonably necessary, in that case a rear-end mirror in a one man car, not whether the appliances and equipment of the car were essentially hazardous or dangerous to life and property in and of themselves. In the Perara Case the question involved was that of whether care in the guarding of jewelry, where the defendant occupied no position of liability or responsibility other than that imposed upon a bailee, and in that case we may here state that testimony as to the custom or manner in which jewelers protected their property was held to be inadmissible. Ordinary common knowledge would indicate that a jury need not be told that gas, when exposed to a flame of fire, will explode.

[4] Appellant also relies upon certain alleged rulings of the trial court, excluding testimony as to the character of the tanks and appliances used by other people operating in the Huntington Beach oil field. We quote the questions and the rulings of the court:

"By Counsel for Appellant: Now, these tanks that I have called your attention to were just the ordinary storage tanks that are used in the Huntington Beach field? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. There are hundreds of them all around there, aren't there?

"Counsel for Plaintiff: We object to that as irrelevant and immaterial and not cross-examination.

"The Court: What is the purpose of that?

"Mr. Clark: Why, they are charging us with negligence. They have described the tanks. We want to find out if there was anything negligent about the kind of a tank we had.

"The Court: Well, I don't think it would affect your negligence if these tanks either were or were not the same kind of tanks that other people used. Objection sustained.

"Mr. Clark: And are there any other open boilers in that field that you know of? A. Yes.

"Mr. Ashburn: Move to strike out the answer.

"The Court: It will be stricken out.

"Mr. Clark: Well, was your description that you gave a description particularly applying to the Texas Holding Company property or one that applied to the whole field? A. Not exactly, but there is other property—there were other leases just as bad as theirs.

"Mr. Ashburn: I move to strike out the statement about the other leases on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial and not responsive.

"The Court: Yes; the latter part, 'there were other leases just as bad,' will be stricken out as not responsive and a conclusion of the witness.

"Q. Have you seen the boilers on other leases in the Huntington field as they were used at and immediately prior to the fire? A. Oh, yes.

"Q. I wish you would describe the manner in which those boilers were placed upon the other leases that you have seen down there in the Huntington Beach field.

"Mr. Ashburn: Objected to as irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"Mr. Clark: Can you tell whether other oil storage tanks in the Huntington Beach oil field at and immediately prior to the fire were covered or open?

"Objected to. Objection sustained."

Other like questions were asked and objections thereto sustained by the court, and the court then said:

"Now, I am not precluding you by showing from this or any other witness properly qualified what was considered among oil men good and safe practice, and then from introducing evidence to show whether or not the proper implements, including tanks upon the lease of the defendant company, comported with such proper and good practice, but I don't think the kind of implements that somebody else was using has the slightest materiality. To illustrate: If, for instance, A. is using implements that are improper and the use of which is negligence, the fact that B., C., D., E., and F. and the rest of the outfit are also using the same kind of implements does not make his negligence any the less. And, on the other hand, if he is using implements that are good practice to use and proper in the same trade or calling, then also the fact that others in the same trade or calling are using similar implements is immaterial."

In support of its contention that the ruling of the court in excluding the proffered testimony was erroneous, appellant cites the Webber Case, where the relationship of master and servant existed, and contends that it should have been permitted to show the kind of tanks that others were using in the same field and also the kind of boilers and furnaces being maintained and operated in said field. In the Webber Case, as we have shown, contractual relations existed, and in other cases relied upon by appellant, where the relationship of master and servant was found to exist, there arose also the question of assumption of risk. In all such cases the master is held to furnish appliances reasonably safe and the servant to assume the risks incident to the employment, etc. It is evident that these cases have no application where such relationships do not exist, and where it is a matter or question of whether the defendant has been guilty of obvious negligence, and not whether some one else is also likewise guilty

As stated by respondent, the question specifically is, In an action for damages caused to the property of another by the alleged negligence of the defendant in the operation and maintenance of its premises, may the defendant, to rebut the charge of negligence and to show its freedom therefrom, introduce evidence of the practices of others of the vicinity who are engaged in similar operations? In answering this question, it is to be noted that the court did not prohibit the appellant from introducing testimony tending to show proper practice, but only excluding testimony as to practices of particular individuals conducting oil-producing operations. It is to be noted that there is a marked distinction between cases having to do with negligence where the relationship of master and servant is involved, and, also, of cases where there exists contractual relations, and in cases like the one at bar, where there is no assumption of risk, no contractual relationship, and only the application of the ordinary legal maxim that all persons are in duty bound to so conduct their own business as not to injure the lives or property of others. The standard by which liability is to be measured in the latter case is that of ordinary care.

[5] This term "ordinary care" is a relative one, and the standard by which it is to be measured varies with the circumstances attending each particular case. That which may be sufficient under one set of circumstances may be wholly inadequate under changed conditions. The care must be in proportion to the danger to be avoided and the consequences which may reasonably be anticipated as the result of the conduct, and the circumstances may be such that far greater care is exacted from one party to an action than from the other. 19 California Jurisprudence, 579, § 24, and, as stated in the same volume, section 138, p. 729:

> "In most cases the law has fixed no standard of care other than the general one that it must be such as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the particular circumstances. Whether a party's conduct measures up to this standard presents a question of fact which ordinarily should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions as to the law. In determining this question, the jury and not the witnesses should apply the standard; so it is improper for an expert to testify that certain acts do or do not amount to a want of ordinary care, or that certain defects could be discovered with reasonable diligence. However, if it appears from the undisputed facts, judged in the light of common knowledge and experience, that a party has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in like positions, or that the necessity of doing a particular act is apparent, and the custom of performing such act under certain circumstances is universal and relied upon, negligence may be declared, as a matter of law."

[6] That a mere custom or usage cannot make due care out of conduct that is, in fact, negligence, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, has been stated a number of times by the courts of this state, as well as of other states. Likewise, that the standard of care required is not to be established by proof that others have been in the habit of acting in the same manner, and, as cited with approval in the case of Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 636, 105 P. 957, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 20 Ann. Cas. 124:

> "Not even a general custom can be deemed a relevant fact, in an action for negligence respecting any noncontractual duty which is not performed under fixed conditions."

And, as stated in a citation from Utah, hereinafter set forth:

> "Local customs, when reasonable, uninterrupted, and uniform, in a locality or district, and not contrary to public policy, may affect the interpretation of contracts made in their locality, by raising a presumption that such contracts were made with respect to them; but such custom cannot change the law of negligence."

And, further, as said in one of the Texas cases herein cited:

> "While it is true that an established custom may be looked to, in many cases, for the purpose of determining what parties really intended by a given contract, and what acts in the performance of it will satisfy it, it may well be questioned whether in any case in which, in the absence of contract express or implied, negligence as an element, is the foundation of a right, custom may be set up for the purpose of showing that negligence does or does not exist."

Without analyzing the various cases, it is sufficient to state that the following authorities all hold that where no contractual relations exist, and, further, where there is no assumption of risk, as is the case where the relation of master and servant is concerned, the specific practice of others cannot be admitted in testimony as an excuse for the alleged negligent act of the defendant. County of Alameda v. Tieslau, 44 Cal. App. 332, 186

P. 398; Bosqui v. Sutro R. Co., 131 Cal. 390, 63 P. 682; Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 636, 105 P. 957, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 20 Ann. Cas. 124; Pulsifer v. Berry, 87 Me. 405, 32 A. 986; Jenkins v. Hooper Irrigation Co., 13 Utah, 100, 44 P. 829; Wright v. Boller et al., 42 Hun (N. Y.) 77; Illwaco Railway & Navigation Co. v. Hedrick, 1 Wash. St. 446, 25 P. 335, 22 Am. St. Rep. 169; Metzgar v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. Co., 76 Iowa, 387, 41 N. W. 49, 14 Am. St. Rep. 224; G. C. & Santa Fé Ry. Co. v. Evansich, 61 Tex. 3; Grand Trunk Railway Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356.

The substance of the foregoing cases may be epitomized in the following quotation taken from one of them:

> "It would seem that the question whether negligence exists must be determined by the facts in the very case in which the question arises."

We might also call attention to the fact that the case of Standard Oil Co. v. Swan, 89 Tenn. 434, 15 S. W. 1068, 10 L. R. A. 366, relied upon by the appellant, does not support its contention. In that case it was held that the manner in which individual dealers in the vicinity store and handle gas and oil was inadmissible. The court did say that custom and usage of well-appointed and managed companies engaged in the business of storing oil would have been competent evidence on the question of negligence in the proper conduct of the business. This, of course, is simply dicta. No question there was raised as to what constitutes well-appointed and well-managed concerns. There is no evidence in the case at bar as to well-appointed and managed concerns, although the court did offer to permit the appellant to introduce testimony along that line.

We are not called upon to state whether we agree or disagree with the court's statement in this particular from the fact that no testimony was offered under the permission granted by the trial court.

[7] Appellant assigns as error the giving by the court of instructions Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9, 12, 14, 15, and 17, but no reasons are set forth or authorities cited showing in what particular the giving of any of said instructions constituted error. Under such circumstances, we do not think it incumbent upon the court to discuss alleged errors not considered worthy of discussion by appellant We will state, however, that we have read the foregoing numbered instructions and do not find in them, or any of them, any errors prejudicial to the appellant.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

253 PACIFIC REPORTER

200 Cal. 396

McKEAN et ux. v. ALLIANCE LAND CO. et al. (S. F. 11457.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Findings of trial court on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

Where the evidence is contradictory, findings of trial court are conclusive.

2. Injunction 🔑195—Award of damages instead of requiring removal of part of brick and tile building projecting part of inch over lot line held proper.

Where brick and tile building extended only part of inch onto adjoining lot and there was no direct evidence of actual damages, held award of $10 damages instead of requiring removal of encroachment was proper.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by T. A. McKean and wife against the Alliance Land Company and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

John S. De Lancey, of Oakland, and Clarence De Lancey, of San Francisco, for appellants.

R. M. Wright, of San Jose, and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Plaintiffs own the northern one-half of lot 9, Alice Park property, Oakland, Cal. Defendants own lot 10, adjoining. Plaintiffs claim the common boundary between said lots is located 1,182.84 feet from the point of intersection of Twelfth and Harrison streets; defendants contend it is located 1,182 feet from the same point, and, relying upon this contention, caused to be erected upon their property a brick and tile garage building, which building upon completion, according to the testimony of their own witness, Mr. Prather, encroached beyond the boundary claimed by them a distance of from one-half to five-eighths of an inch.

Plaintiffs sued to enjoin defendants from depriving them of their property, being the said .84 of a foot, more or less, in dispute, and for abating said building as a nuisance; also for damages in amount of $5,000.

There is a conflict in the evidence. Clifford H. Boardman, and experienced surveyor, gave testimony in support of plaintiffs' contention. Plaintiffs also introduced certain old city ordinances in an effort to prove that subsequent to the filing for record of the map of Alice Park there has been a change made of about one foot in the monument line of Twelfth street and certain old maps purporting to show a variation of one foot in the location of Twelfth street. None of these exhibits showed a difference of .84 of a foot, and at most they appear to be but proof of inaccuracy in the surveys.

On the other hand, E. C. Prather, also an experienced surveyor, gave testimony fully supporting defendants' claim, and they further introduced evidence showing that every conveyance of lot 9 and lot 10 from 1868 to date of the trial gave the distance from Twelfth street or Fourteenth street, in accordance with the filed map distance and as found by the court. Mr. Prather stated he had first surveyed the tract in question six years prior to commencement of this action, that at the request of defendants he surveyed lot 10 in December, 1921, and again went over the survey after construction of the garage; that as his initial point he took the northerly line of Twelfth street, as fixed by the city monuments, at its intersection with the easterly line of Harrison street; that he found the distance along Harrison street from said point to the point of intersection with the southerly line of lot 10 to be 1,182 feet. This distance is corroborated by the map of Alice Park and is .84 of a foot less than the distance testified to by Mr. Boardman. It is conceded that Mr. Prather's survey is right, and Mr. Boardman's wrong, if the northerly line of Twelfth street is located now where it was in 1868. In other words, it is a disputed question of fact as to whether the monument line of Twelfth street was changed subsequent to 1868. Mr. Prather testified that he never knew it was changed. Counsel for appellants then asked him if he would say that it was not changed after the filing of the map of Alice Park property, and objection to this question was sustained on the ground that it was not the proper way of showing a change of location of streets, not the best evidence, but a matter of opinion. From the record it appears that no convincing proof of such change was given.

Mr. Prather further testified that upon his survey after erection of the garage building he found it had been so constructed that it encroached on lot 9 half an inch at one end, increasing to five-eighths of an inch at the other.

The trial court found that the boundary line was, as claimed by defendants 1,182 feet from the above-described point of intersection, and found further that defendants' building encroached from one-half to five-eighths of an inch on plaintiffs' lot, by reason of which encroachment plaintiffs had been damaged in the sum of $10, and no more, and gave judgment accordingly.

On appeal plaintiffs complain: First, that the findings, and particularly finding No. 4 placing the damage at $10, were not supported by the evidence or the facts; and second, that the judgment of the trial court awarded damages instead of requiring removal of the encroachment.

[1] It is well settled that where the evidence is contradictory, the findings of the trial court are conclusive. "The rule adverted to above, that the jury is ordinarily the sole judge of the weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses, applies with great force in a case of conflict. It is the duty of the trier of facts to reconcile, if possible, any apparent conflict, whether such conflict is developed upon the whole case or in the testimony of an individual witness, and to give effect to all the evidence, when the nature of the case will admit of such a disposition, or, if the conflict is irreconcilable, to affix their own value to the contradictory evidence. * * * It is a cardinal doctrine often enunciated that where, upon a question of fact, the testimony in the court below involves a substantial conflict, the action of the court below will not be disturbed. It is to be presumed that the trial judge reconciled and accounted for to his own satisfaction any and all inconsistencies which might be made to appear in the testimony." 10 Cal. Jur. pp. 1171, 1172, §§ 382, 383, citing Adkins v. Brett, 184 Cal. 252, 193 P. 251; Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 731, 198 P. 626; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 P. 671; Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891; Union C. Co. v. Madera, etc., Irr. Co., 179 Cal. 774, 178 P. 957, and many other cases.

[2] On the question of awarding damages instead of ordering removal of the encroachment, we find Rothaermel v. Amerige, 55 Cal. App. 273, 203 P. 833, in point. There the foundation of defendant's building encroached 1½ inches on plaintiff's land. The circumstances were such that the foundation footings could not be removed without great inconvenience and damage. Ownership and possession of the disputed 1½ inches had been placed by a judgment of the court in plaintiff. The court awarded to plaintiff nominal damages of $1 for the withholding of the property by defendant. In the opinion the following citation from Ruling Case Law, vol. 14, pars. 14–57, is quoted with approval:

> "It is also true, as a general rule, that the court should not interfere by way of mandatory injunction, * * * where the injury is so slight as to bring it within the maxim de minimis, or full compensation can be made in damages. If there is an adequate remedy at law, no relief will be granted, especially where there is no appreciable damage, and its issuance would require the performance of an act which would be difficult, and involve a considerable expense."

Here the correct boundary line is established protecting the rights of appellants. The court further specifically found that "a judgment for said sum of $10 is an adequate remedy for said damage and will afford said plaintiffs, and each of them, full, complete, and adequate relief." There was no direct evidence that the encroachment of from one-half to five-eighths of an inch caused any actual damage to plaintiffs, and to our mind the award of the trial court is both wise and just.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.

---

200 Cal. 403

WESSELS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR MENDOCINO COUNTY et al.

(S. F. 12406.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1927.)

Prohibition ⚷3(3)—Prohibition will not lie to prevent commitment of petitioner for contempt, in view of remedy by certiorari or habeas corpus.

Prohibition will not lie to prevent commitment of petitioner for contempt; proper remedy being to present defense on hearing of contempt proceedings, and then, if found guilty, to apply to higher court for certiorari or habeas corpus.

In Bank.

Application of A. L. Wessels for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Mendocino County, H. L. Preston, Judge, to prevent commitment of petitioner for contempt. Writ denied.

Chas. A. Shurtleff, of San Francisco, and W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, for petitioner.

WASTE, C. J. The application for a writ of prohibition herein is denied. The remedy of the petitioner is to first present his defense upon the hearing of the contempt proceedings, and then, if found guilty of the contempt, to apply to a higher court for a writ of certiorari or habeas corpus. Commercial Bank v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 395, 397, 220 P. 422; Drew v. Superior Court, 43 Cal. App. 651, 655, 185 P. 680.

200 Cal. 316

HULSE v. DAVIS et al. (L. A. 9522.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error ⚷458(1)—Supersedeas may be granted only to restrain enforcement of judgment or order by court below or its officers pending appeal.

Writ of supersedeas may be granted in proper case only to restrain and prevent enforcement of judgment or order by court below or its officers pending appeal therefrom.

2. Appeal and error ⚷458(2)—No supersedeas is allowed where judgment or order appealed from is self-executing.

Where judgment or order appealed from is self-executing and no process is required to be issued for its enforcement, no supersedeas is allowed.

3. Execution ⚷163 — Where execution is quashed, levy made pursuant thereto falls with it, and title to property in sheriff is defeated.

Where an execution is quashed, any levy made pursuant thereto falls with it, and any title to property vested in sheriff by levy is defeated.

4. Appeal and error ⚷458(2)—Writ of supersedeas could not be issued pending appeal from order quashing execution.

An order quashing execution is self-executing, and no process is required for enforcement of such order, and therefore, pending appeal therefrom, writ of supersedeas cannot be issued.

In Bank.

Action by B. F. Hulse against Sesa Davis and others. Judgment for plaintiff. On application by plaintiff for writ of supersedeas to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Albert Lee Stephens, Judge, to stay proceedings pending appeal from an order quashing writ of execution. Writ denied.

Alfred J. Smallberg and Philip Cohen, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

William A. Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Application for a writ of supersedeas. The applicant herein instituted an action against the above-named respondents on July 19, 1915, in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles. Judgment was entered in said action in favor of the applicant on January 28, 1916. On May 10, 1916, execution issued upon said judgment and was thereafter returned partly satisfied. No further proceedings were had or taken in the action until September 3, 1926, at which time, on an ex parte motion of counsel for the applicant and apparently without prior notice thereof having been given to the respondents, an order was made by the court below for the issuance of a second execution upon the judgment theretofore entered. Pursuant thereto a writ of execution was duly issued and levied. Thereafter, and on September 23, 1926, a temporary restraining order was entered by said court, on motion of the respondents, enjoining any further action or proceedings under and by virtue of said writ of execution. On October 5, 1926, the lower court made and entered an order vacating the prior order for the issuance of a writ of execution, recalling and quashing the writ issued pursuant thereto, and denying further process of said court for the enforcement of the judgment. In accordance with this latter order the sheriff on October 9, 1926, released and discharged the property of respondents theretofore held in custodia legis. The applicant has appealed from the order quashing the writ of execution, and pending the determination of said appeal a writ of supersedeas is sought "staying all proceedings in the above-entitled matter" and directing "that if the said sheriff has released from levy the property of the defendant * * * to relevy thereon and keep the same intact until the determination of this appeal."

The respondents oppose the application on the ground that this is not a proper case for the issuance of a writ of supersedeas.

[1, 2] This court in the case of Imperial Water Co. v. Hall (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 394, recently had occasion to consider the nature, scope and purpose of a supersedeas. A reading of the opinion in that case and the authorities cited and quoted from therein reveals that a writ of supersedeas may be granted in a proper case only to restrain and prevent the enforcement of a judgment or order by the court below or its officers pending an appeal therefrom. If the judgment or order appealed from is self-executing and "no process is required to be issued for its enforcement, no supersedeas is allowed." Tyler v. Presley, 72 Cal. 290, 12 P. 289, 13 P. 169; Dulin v. Pac. Wood & Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 P. 123; Imperial Water Co. v. Hall, supra.

[3] In the instant case the order appealed from is complete and final in itself and no process of the court below is required to be issued for it enforcement, for it is settled that "when an execution is quashed, any levy made pursuant thereto falls with it, and any title to the property vested in the sheriff by the levy is defeated." Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 469, 475; Buffandeau v. Edmondson, 17 Cal. 436, 442, 79 Am. Dec. 139. See, also, 11 Cal. Jur. 61, § 18. If the sheriff, in violation of the court order, continues in possession of the property, he does so unlawfully and without right, in the absence of some other process in his hands which would justify his action.

[4] It is apparent, therefore, that an order quashing execution has an intrinsic effect and is self-executing. Process is not required for the enforcement of such an order, and pending the determination of an appeal therefrom a writ of supersedeas may not properly be issued.

For the foregoing reasons the application for a writ of supersedeas is denied, and the temporary stay heretofore granted by this court is hereby terminated and ended.

---

200 Cal. 284

GENERAL MOTORS ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION v. GANDY. (Sac. 3664.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1927.)

1. Pleading 🔑165—Special defense need not be answered.

Plaintiff need not answer special defense set up by defendant.

2. Estoppel 🔑110—Plaintiff may prove estoppel without pleading it as against guarantor's plea that guaranty did not apply to subject-matter.

Plaintiff may prove estoppel without pleading it as against guarantor's plea that guaranty had no application to contract and notes giving rise to action.

3. Estoppel 🔑116—Burden rests on person asserting estoppel to prove all elements constituting it.

Existence of estoppel is question of fact, and burden rests on party asserting estoppel to prove all elements constituting it.

4. Estoppel 🔑54—Actual ignorance of material facts arising from false representation and concealment is essential to estoppel.

False representation or concealment of material facts is essential to estoppel, and party to whom such representation or from whom such facts are concealed must have been ignorant, actually and permissibly, of truth.

5. Estoppel 🔑118—Estoppel must be established with nothing left to surmise or questionable inference.

Estoppel must be so established as to leave nothing to surmise or questionable inference.

6. Guaranty 🔑36(3)—Partner, indemnifying against loss in purchasing firm notes, held not estopped to deny liability on notes of corporation of same name organized by him.

Where firm partner contracted to indemnify partnership against loss in purchasing firm notes, etc., and subsequently organized a corporation under same name to engage in similar business, and both entities were operated at same place, defendant was not estopped to deny liability under guaranty on notes purchased from corporation, where these were executed to the corporation, and plaintiff's subsequent letters concerning notes were addressed to corporation.

7. Guaranty 🔑36(1)—Contract of indemnity for benefit of partnership, providing that benefits and obligations should extend to successors and assigns, held not extended to corporation subsequently organized.

Contract of guaranty executed for benefit of partnership held not, because of provision that benefits and obligations should extend to and bind heirs, administrators, and assigns of respective parties, to extend to obligations of corporation of same name organized by guarantor, since such corporation was not the successor or assign of partnership; both entities existing at same time and conducting different business operations.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by the General Motors Acceptance Corporation against C. W. Gandy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. J. Carlson, of Modesto, for appellant.

Charles W. Haswell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. A petition for hearing in this court was granted in the above cause after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District. In said petition it was urged by the respondent that an important provision of the contract upon which the action was founded had been overlooked in the decision of the District Court of Appeal. No reply was made to this petition by the appellant. After careful consideration of the entire record we are of the opinion that the decision of the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, written by Mr. Justice Hart, correctly states the law of this case and considers every material legal element involved therein, with the exception of one additional feature urged by the respondent upon its petition for hearing in this court, which we shall discuss hereinafter. Accordingly we accept and adopt the said decision of the District Court of Appeal as follows:

"This action was brought by plaintiff to recover the sum of $3,063.65 alleged to be the amount due on a contract of guaranty executed by the defendant for the purpose of indemnifying the former against any loss which it might incur by reason of taking over by purchase certain notes or other evidences of indebtedness accruing in favor of a certain partnership with which the defendant was connected as a copartner. The cause was tried by the court, sitting without a jury, and plaintiff was awarded judgment for the sum of $1,668.70, from which this appeal is prosecuted by the defendant upon a record made up in pursuance of the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The plaintiff, a corporation, as its name to an extent implies, is what is known as an acceptance corporation, engaged in the business of buying and discounting conditional contracts of sale of motor vehicles and promissory notes and other written evidences of indebtedness given to dealers in such vehicles by those purchasing the same on credit.

"The defendant, at the time he executed the contract of guaranty upon which the plaintiff declares, and one J. A. Anderson, were, as copartners and under the firm name of 'Modesto Motors Company,' engaged, in the city of Modesto, in the business of selling the Oakland, the Davis, the Paige, and the Haynes automobiles. The Oakland automobile was manufactured by a corporation known as the 'General Motors Corporation.' The copartnership arranged to discount its automobile paper—notes, conditional contracts of sale, and other written evidences of indebtedness owing to it by purchasers of the automobiles from it on time credit—and to perfect said arrangement, and, in pursuance of a demand by plaintiff therefor, the members of the partnership (defendant and Anderson) executed and delivered to plaintiff, on the 8th day of April, 1920, although the instrument was dated March 30, 1920, the contract of guaranty upon which this action is predicated. The said guaranty provides as follows:

" 'In consideration of General Motors Acceptance Corporation, hereinafter called the "corporation," hereafter extending credit at any time and to any extent to Modesto Motor Company, hereinafter called the "dealer," or to any one at the request or for the benefit of said dealer, through issuing, drawing, accepting, indorsing, discounting, purchasing, or acquiring any draft, note, acceptance, bill of exchange, letter of credit, or other instrument or obligation, for the account or the behalf of said dealer, or hereafter refraining to any extent from enforcing any rights under any contract or arrangement entered into by said dealer, and of other good and valuable consideration, the undersigned agrees to hold the corporation harmless from, and does hereby unconditionally at all times guarantee the performance and payment at maturity of each and all drafts, notes, acceptances, bills of exchange, letters of credit, negotiable instruments, and agreements and other obligations between the dealer and the corporation heretofore or hereafter issued, drawn, accepted, executed, entered into, indorsed, discounted, purchased, or acquired by the corporation for the account or in the behalf of said dealer, including all costs, expenses, and attorney's fees heretofore or hereafter incurred by said corporation in connection with the default of said dealer.

" 'This is a contract of continuing guaranty and, until canceled as hereinafter provided, shall not be limited to any amount, and shall at all times include the full indebtedness of the said dealer to the said corporation.

" 'The liability of the undersigned, for any unpaid balance, shall not be affected by any indulgence, compromise, settlement, extension of credit, or variation of terms effected by or with the dealer or any other person interested, nor by the amount of dealer's obligations outstanding at any one time, nor by payments previously made by the dealer or the undersigned, nor shall it be necessary for the corporation to procure the consent of the undersigned or give any notice in reference thereto.

" 'The undersigned hereby does expressly waive and dispense with notice of acceptance of this guaranty, notices of nonpayment and nonperformance, notices of amount of indebtedness outstanding at any time, protests, demands and prosecutions of collection, foreclosure, and possessory remedies.

" 'This guaranty is to remain in full force and effect until written notice of the withdrawal of the same has been served by the undersigned upon the corporation at its principal office at New York City, provided that such withdrawal shall in no case be effective except as to new transactions subsequent to the actual receipt of such notice. The obligation of all parties signing this guaranty, where more than one, shall be joint and several. The benefits and obligations hereof shall extend to and bind the heirs, administrators, successors, and assigns of the respective parties hereto. This guaranty and the performance thereunder shall be construed and determined according to the law of the state of New York.'

"Gandy testified that the partnership held the agency in Modesto and adjacent territory of the Oakland, the Davis, the Paige, and the Haynes cars; that the General Motors Corporation, as seen, manufacturer of the Oakland cars, finally objected to the partnership 'handling so many other makes of cars,' and it was hence decided by the partnership, or Gandy and Anderson, the sole members thereof, to organize a corporation and to transfer to such corporation the agencies in Modesto of the Oakland and Davis automobiles; that in pursuance of this decision a corporation was by said parties formed on the 11th day of June, 1920—approximately two months after the above contract of guaranty was executed—under the name of Modesto Motor Company. The articles of incorporation were filed in the office of the county clerk of Stanislaus county on the 21st day of June, 1920. A short time after the organization of said corporation, so defendant continued to testify, the partnership transferred to the corporation the agencies for the Oakland and Davis cars and certain personal assets of the former to said corporation, consisting of 'certain personal property and some automobiles.' As a consideration for such transfer the stock of the corporation was issued to the copartners in the partnership; Gandy, the defendant, receiving, approximately, two-thirds of the stock, Anderson one-third, and one Bryan Milton one share thereof. Defendant testified that immediately upon the organization of the corporation he became president and his copartner in the said partnership, Anderson, became vice president thereof. The Modesto Motor Company, partnership, and the Modesto Motor Company, corporation, occupied the same premises—that is, there were two buildings, Gandy testified, on one lot, but connected together; the entire premises being in the possession and under the control of the partnership, the front building, however, occupied by the corporation and the rear by the partnership. Both the Modesto Motor Company, a partnership, and the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, were doing business on the same premises at the same time.

"The defendant, having been called by the plaintiff as a witness under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a number of times stated that he severed his connection with the corporation some time in the fall of the year 1921. When testifying as a witness for himself, however, he stated that it was some time in the fall of 1920 that he severed his connection with said corporation by selling his stock therein to one Knorr, who became president thereof, and another party whose name he was unable to recall. The Modesto Motor Company, partnership, continued to carry on business on the same premises that were occupied by the corporation of the same name until the month of January, 1921, when the Gandy Motor Company, a corporation organized by defendant, took over the business of the Modesto Motor Company, partnership.

"Gandy, further testifying, stated that in the month of October, 1920, after the corporation was formed, and he had sold and relinquished all interest he had in the said corporation, he and the Mr. Knorr spoken of above as the party succeeding to the presidency of the corporation, called on the manager of plaintiff in San Francisco, and that he, in the presence of Knorr, informed said manager that he (defendant) had disposed of his interest in the agency of the Oakland car; that Mr. Knorr was the president of the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., and that Knorr or said corporation would handle the Oakland cars from that time on in Modesto; that his partner, Anderson, would remain with the corporation, while he would control the Modesto Motor Company, partnership, until he discontinued the same, as he then contemplated, and turn over its business and the Paige and Haynes agencies in Modesto to a corporation he intended to organize under the name of Gandy Motor Company. Defendant stated that the plaintiff's manager asked him why 'we called it (the corporation) the "Modesto Motor Company, Inc.," under the same name as our company. I told him because we were going to discontinue the Modesto Company, a copartnership, and that I was going into the Gandy Motor Company, and that the agencies for the Paige and the Haynes would be turned over to the Gandy Motor Company, and that Mr. Anderson was going to continue with the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., but I was leaving it altogether.' Defendant further testified that on the same occasion he asked plaintiff's manager 'to check up the contracts that were outstanding, and I told him I would personally see that the terms were carried out, but wouldn't go any further because I had nothing to do with the company'; that the manager gave him a statement of the status 'of the contracts that were outstanding, and I checked up my books and I followed each contract out to see that it was taken care of—that is,' he continued, 'I had the books and in a good many cases I collected the money and sent it in to the General Motors Acceptance Corporation. * * * The contracts that have been offered in evidence here (those upon which this action is founded), numbered "Exhibits 2 to 8," inclusive, were not in existence at that time.'

"Certain letters passing between plaintiff and the Modesto Motor Co., Inc., after the corporation was formed—those from the latter being signed by Knorr as president of said corporation—were introduced in evidence. The letters to plaintiff from the corporation were upon sheets of paper containing the following at the top thereof: 'Modesto Motor Co., Inc., 1204 Ninth Street, Modesto, Cal.' One of the letters from the plaintiff to the corporation, dated October 10, 1921, called for a guaranty covering contracts which might hereafter be taken over by plaintiff, and in said letter it was suggested that the guaranty, the form of which was inclosed with the letter, be executed by 'all the officers of the corporation.' The guaranty thus requested was executed by the officers of the corporation on the 4th day of November, 1921, and was forwarded to plaintiff with a letter from the corporation, dated November 7, 1921. Under date of October 9, 1920, the corporation addressed and mailed to the plaintiff the following letter or card:

" 'GMAC Form No. 517.

" 'Name Modesto Motor Co., Inc.

" 'Address 1204 9th St., Modesto.

" 'Dated Oct. 9, 1920.

" 'To General Motors Acceptance Corporation:

" 'Below find signature of those authorized until further notice to execute and/or indorse, in behalf of the undersigned, notes, acceptances, contracts, and all other instruments or assignments thereof used in connection with your wholesale and retail financing plans. In the absence of special instructions, signature of any one individual may be accepted.

" 'A. S. Hinckley, President.
" 'E. L. Callander, Vice Pres.
" 'Secretary.
" 'Treasurer.

" 'Yours truly,
" 'Name Modesto Motor Co., Inc.,
" 'By A. S. Hinckley, President.'

"The defendant's testimony that the contracts for the sale of automobiles which plaintiff took over, and which are the bases of this action, were made by and between the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., and the purchasers, is not contradicted; in fact, the contracts themselves show this to be true. One of these contracts was dated and therefore presumptively executed, on the 11th day of December, 1921, seven days after the guaranty last hereinabove spoken of was executed.

"The complaint, after setting out in hæc verba the contract of guaranty of April 8, 1920, alleges that 'plaintiff, on the faith of said guaranty, extended credit to the said Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, the principal named in said guaranty, by accepting, purchasing and acquiring certain notes, acceptances, and conditional sales contracts, which said instruments were duly set over by the said Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, to the plaintiff herein, for a valuable consideration, and were purchased and acquired by the said plaintiff in the regular course of business with the said Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, and indorsed by said Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, through and by its duly authorized officers,' etc.; that the said notes, or the respective balances thereof, are now due and payable, but that the makers thereof, although demanded by plaintiff to do so, have 'wholly refused, neglected, and omitted to pay the said balances,' etc.

"A demurrer, on both general and special grounds, was interposed by the defendant and the same overruled. Thereupon defendant filed an answer specifically denying the averments of the complaint, and also affirmatively declaring that 'the contract of guaranty in said complaint set forth does not apply to or include or cover any of the contracts or notes referred to in plaintiff's complaint'; that he (defendant) 'is not responsible for the payment of any of the items or outstanding balances referred to in the complaint or set out in "Exhibit A of said complaint,"' which exhibit involves a bill of particulars setting forth in detail the balances respectively due on the promissory notes referred to in the complaint.

"The court found the existence of the partnership between Gandy and Anderson under the name of the 'Modesto Motor Company' during the period above mentioned, the organization of the corporation by the same parties under the same name, and that the two entities were operated for the period of time above indicated at the same time and place, and then found as follows: 'That the defendant, C. W. Gandy, did not serve any notice upon said General Motors Acceptance Corporation of the existence of a corporation known as the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., or advise the said plaintiff, General Motors Acceptance Corporation, of any distinction between the Modesto Motor Company, a copartnership, and the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation; that, by reason of the premises, the said plaintiff, General Motors Acceptance Corporation, purchased certain notes, conditional sales contracts, and evidences of indebtedness from the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., a corporation, relying upon and believing that in truth and in fact it was the same firm or entity and described as Modesto Motor Company as set forth in the said contract of guaranty executed by the defendant herein; that the said defendant, C. W. Gandy, by reason of permitting the Modesto Motor Company to operate under the same identical name both as a copartnership and a corporation and at the same place of business, and interchanging the assets of the said copartnership to the corporation, caused the plaintiff, General Motors Acceptance Corporation, to rely and believe that the said Modesto Motor Company, either as a partnership or as a corporation, was the same entity as described as Modesto Motor Company in the contract of guaranty executed by the defendant herein; that, by reason of the foregoing acts on the part of the said defendant, C. W. Gandy, the court further finds that the contract of guaranty was intended to, and did, guaranty all obligations of the Modesto Motor Company, either as a copartnership or as a corporation, and that the defendant, C. W. Gandy, is, by reason of the premises, estopped to deny the obligations incurred under the said contract of guaranty by the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation; that the said contract of guaranty provided that the same should be in full force and effect until revoked in writing to the office of the said plaintiff, General Motors Acceptance Corporation, in the city of New York, state of New York; that the said contract of guaranty was not revoked within the terms and in accordance with the conditions of the said contract, but was in full force and effect at all times herein mentioned.'

"The theory upon which the plaintiff tried its case below and presents it on this appeal embraces several hypotheses, and may be stated as follows: (1) That the organization of the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, was not effectuated for the purpose of dissolving or terminating the partnership, but that the corporation was formed by the parties constituting the partnership as a mere agency for the purpose of the more conveniently carrying on the partnership business, and that, therefore, the acts of the corporation within the scope of the partnership purposes and business were those of the partnership (see 6 Cal. Jur. § 201, p. 338, for a statement and an application of the rule by which the proposition stated is supported); (2) that defendant is estopped from denying his liability upon the contract of guaranty sued on for the reason that, assuming that said contract was in any way affected or impaired by reason of the formation of the corporation, his conduct and acts with reference to the organization of said corporation were such as to have had the effect of misleading plaintiff, or rather leading it to the belief that the Modesto Motor Company was, at all times during the subsistence of the contract of guaranty, a single entity, as to the legal form or status of which the plaintiff had no knowledge until the month of November, 1921, when, for the first time, plaintiff received information that a corporation under said name had been organized independently of the partnership existing and conducted under the same name; (3) that, assuming that the corporation was formed for the purpose only of acting as trustee or agent for the partnership in carrying on of the latter's business transactions, the defendant was bound and would remain bound to the terms of his guarantyship until he revoked the contract of guaranty in the mode prescribed thereby, to wit, by serving upon the plaintiff, at its principal office, at New York City, his withdrawal from said guaranty.

"The general contention of the defendant that the findings vital to the legal integrity of the judgment derive no support in the evidence necessarily involves an attack upon the position of the plaintiff, as above specifically pointed out, since, as will be noted, the theory of the findings is in accord with the theory upon which the plaintiff evidently presented its case below and presents it on this appeal.

"Although, as we have above pointed out, several different propositions are advanced here in support of the appeal, still the real problem the solution of which is decisive of the case is reducible to the simple question whether, as the court found, the defendant, upon the facts and circumstances characterizing the transactions culminating in this controversy, must be held to be estopped from claiming immunity from the obligations of the contract of guaranty pleaded in the complaint; in other words, the plaintiff's case, as we view the record, can only be sustained upon the theory that the circumstances attending the formation of the corporation—the part taken by defendant therein, his interest in both the corporation and the partnership, the fact that both the partnership and the corporation bore, substantially, the same name, and the asserted concealment from the plaintiff by him of the fact that the partnership and the corporation represented two separate and independent entities—were such as legally to foreclose in him the right to deny his liability upon the contract of guaranty, regardless of whether the promissory notes discounted and acquired by plaintiff were executed and delivered to the partnership or to the corporation.

[1, 2] The plaintiff did not plead an estoppel. Its case, as made by its pleading, rests entirely upon the contract of guaranty, and thus it had the right to proceed. It was not required to anticipate any defense that might be pleaded or relied upon by the defendant. Under our system of pleading, unlike that of the common-law system, whereby, if necessary, a series of pleadings by the respective parties were required and could be resorted to in order to accomplish a joinder of issue upon any particular or other matter, the law answers for the plaintiff any special defense set up in the answer by the defendant. Therefore the plaintiff here was entitled to introduce or rely upon the proof of any fact or facts which would impeach any special defense which the defendant by his answer has interposed, and this either by evidence directly contradicting the facts constituting such defense or by evidence of facts which, assuming the existence or truth of the facts upon which the special defense is predicated, will tend to avoid the legal effect thereof. Hence the plaintiff here was at liberty to prove, if it could, an estoppel as against the defendant upon his plea that the contract of guaranty has no application to the contracts and the notes giving rise to the present litigation, and that, consequently, as a guarantor on said guaranty, he was not legally 'responsible' for the defaults of the makers of said notes in the payment thereof. The important question, then, is: Does the evidence warrant the finding that the defendant is estopped by reason of his conduct with respect to the several transactions involved herein from denying his liability upon the contract of guaranty?

[3] The existence of an estoppel is a question of fact, and the settled rule as to the proof of equitable estoppel is that the burden rests upon the party asserting such estoppel to prove all the elements constituting it 'by evidence having some reasonable tendency to establish the fact.' 10 Cal. Jur. p. 656, § 31. See, also, cases cited in the footnotes to said section. The plaintiff, it appears clear to our minds, failed to sustain this burden. In the first place, it is to be noted that the evidence, without conflict, shows that the Modesto Motor Company, a partnership, and the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, were two separate and independent entities; the partnership, from and after the formation of the corporation, being the agent for and dealing in certain kinds of automobiles, and the corporation the agent for and dealing in other kinds of automobiles. It is also undisputed and, indeed, indisputable, that the guaranty declared upon by plaintiff was executed and in operative effect some two months before the corporation was formed. In the second place, it is to be observed that, save and except the testimony of Wm. Robb, the assistant credit manager of plaintiff, and the only witness introduced by the latter, that he did not know, when the contracts and the notes directly concerned herein were taken over by the plaintiff, that the Modesto Motor Company was incorporated, the plaintiff made no affirmative showing in support of an estoppel, nor did it make any attempt to do so. Aside from said testimony of Robb, it relied entirely for the support of an estoppel upon facts brought out upon the examination of defendant under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure and on his cross-examination, the fact that the partnership and the corporation bore the same name, and the asserted fact that it was not informed by defendant or any other person connected either with the corporation or the partnership or any other party to the contract of guaranty, prior to its acquisition of the contracts and the notes involved herein, that the corporation had been formed and that the automobile agencies with which said contracts and notes were alone concerned had been transferred to said corporation. This, as stated, embraces the entire foundation for the claim and the support of the estoppel.

The testimony of defendant on his examination by plaintiff under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure was substantially the same as that given by him when he testified as his own witness or in his own behalf, both upon direct and cross-examination. Attention, however, may here be called to the testimony of the defendant that, within a brief time after the formation of the corporation and the transfer to the latter by the partnership of the agencies of the Oakland and Davis automobiles, and prior to the time at which, respectively, the contracts and the notes involved herein were acquired by plaintiff, he called at the offices of the plaintiff, and, in the presence of Knorr, informed its manager (a Mr. Warner, he believed to be the name of the manager) that the corporation had been formed, and that the Oakland and Davis agencies had been transferred by the partnership to said corporation, and that he had severed his connection with the latter concern; that said manager stated to him (defendant) that the notice thus given was sufficient, and that it was not necessary for him to transmit to and file with the main office of the plaintiff in New York City the written notice required by the contract of guaranty where the guarantors desire to withdraw therefrom as such guarantors. As before stated, this testimony of the defendant was not directly contradicted. Neither plaintiff's manager at San Francisco nor any other official of the plaintiff was called by the latter to give testimony in rebuttal of the defendant's testimony, if, indeed, any such adversary showing could have been made by the plaintiff. Nor was any explanation vouchsafed for the failure of plaintiff to call the said manager as a witness. But it may be conceded that the court as the trier of the issues of fact, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, hedged by those tests which constitute the criterion by which the credibility of a witness may be determined, and therefore the weight and the probative value of his testimony may be determined and appraised by the jury or the court by which the questions of fact are tried, was legally at liberty to disbelieve and so disregard the defendant's testimony. In support of the finding as to an estoppel, such would be the presumption. But, this being so, or at least assumed, it follows that there is no testimony remaining in the record as to the knowledge of the plaintiff of the fact of the formation of the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, prior to the acceptance by the former of the contracts and the notes involved herein, other than the documentary evidence consisting of the contracts themselves and the letters passing between plaintiff and the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, after the latter was formed, and the testimony of Robb to the effect that he did not know of the existence of the Modesto Motor Company as a corporation. The letters from the plaintiff to the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, after the acquisition by the former of the contracts and the notes themselves, show beyond all question that plaintiff then had full knowledge of the fact that the Modesto Motor Company with which it was dealing as to said contracts and notes was a corporation. And, in this connection, it is important to note that there is absolutely no testimony in this record that the plaintiff did not know, at the time the contract of guaranty was executed and delivered to it, that the Modesto Motor Company with which it was then dealing was a partnership. But further consideration of the evidence need not be pursued, since the problem presently before us is not one whose solution is to be controlled so much by a consideration of the rule as to evidentiary conflicts as upon a consideration of the question whether the estoppel claimed is the necessary effect of the facts and circumstances from which it must have arisen, if at all.

[4-6] Among the dominant essentials of equitable estoppel or estoppel in pais are that there must have been a false representation or a concealment of material facts of the matter as to which the estoppel is claimed, and the party to whom such representation is made or from whom such facts are concealed must have been ignorant, actual, and permissibly of the truth of the matter. As a rule, manifestly, an equitable estoppel must be proved by oral testimony; hence the rule that certainty is essential to all estoppels is peculiarly applicable to estoppels in pais. The estoppel must be so established as to leave nothing to surmise or questionable inference; in other words, the representation, whether express or implied from the conduct of the party against whom the estoppel is sought to be invoked, must be such as to justify a prudent man in acting upon it, and must be plain and not doubtful. Bigelow on Estoppel (5th Ed.) pp. 570–578, inclusive. Clearly, the estoppel claimed here does not measure up to the requirements of the above rules relating to the establishment of equitable estoppel. The testimony of Robb that he did not know at the time material here that the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., was in existence and the entity with which plaintiff was dealing with respect to the contracts and the notes in question is contradicted by the documentary evidence, and, indeed, by the plaintiff's own pleading. Assuming, though, that personally he had no knowledge of that fact, certainly it cannot be denied that he and other officers of the plaintiff were familiar with facts and circumstances sufficient to put them on notice as to the existence of two separate entities under the name of the Modesto Motor Company, and that the plaintiff in the transactions involved here was dealing with the corporation of that name.

"It is hardly necessary to suggest that the contract of guaranty had no relation to or connection with the Modesto Motor Company, Inc. That instrument applies solely to the partnership of that name, and therefore the requirement of said contract that a withdrawal therefrom by one or all of the guarantors could be effected only by a written notice filed in the New York office of plaintiff to that effect has no bearing upon any transactions had with the Modesto Motor Company, Inc."

After the foregoing opinion was filed by the said District Court of Appeal, respondent petitioned for a rehearing of said cause, which petition was by said court denied and an opinion filed in response to said petition, in which it was pointed out that the contracts purchased by the plaintiff from the Modesto Motor Company, Inc., which are the basis of defendant's alleged liability, showed upon their face that they were between purchasers of automobiles and Modesto Motor Company, Inc., and not with the partnership of that name.

[7] The only question raised by respondent's petition for a hearing by this court which has not been answered by the foregoing opinions of the District Court of Appeal is predicated upon the language of the guaranty as follows:

> "The benefits and obligations hereof shall extend to and bind the heirs, administrators, successors, and assigns of the respective parties hereto."

It is contended that under this provision the defendant was bound to guaranty the obligations of the corporation as the successor or assign of the partnership. The contention seems worthy of but brief consideration. First, according to the record, the corporation was not the successor or assign of the partnership. Both entities existed at the same time and conducted different business operations. Second, the parties to the contract of guaranty were the plaintiff and the defendant, and not the Modesto Motor Company. The record, therefore, presents no question involving the heirs, administrators, successors, or assigns of the respective parties to the contract of guaranty.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.

200 Cal. 389

FIRST NAT. BANK OF OAKDALE v. BRASHEAR et al. (Sac. 3774.) *

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1927. Rehearing Denied March 3, 1927.)

1. Chattel mortgages ⚷127 — Bank, taking mortgage on crops to be sown during following year, had no lien where cropper abandoned lease prior to sowing crop.

Mortgagee, taking chattel mortgage from cropper covering crops to be raised during succeeding year, had no interest in crop where mortgagor abandoned land and lost interest therein prior to sowing crop, as lien of crop mortgage attaches only to interest which mortgagor may have in crops after they have come into being by planting of seed from which they are grown.

2. Husband and wife ⚷265—Cropper, who signed lease without wife's joining, could transfer and abandon his interest therein without wife's consent.

In action by bank to foreclose mortgage on crop, sought after mortgagor abandoned his interest in lease as cropper, cropper's written surrender of interest held effective, though not signed by wife, where lease was executed by husband alone, lease being merely chattel real with which husband had full power to deal, and where cropper and wife abandoned premises.

3. Husband and wife ⚷265—Interest of husband as cropper under lease is "chattel real," over which wife has no control.

Interest of cropper in lease is "chattel real," with which husband has full power to act by way of transfer or abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Chattels Real.]

4. Landlord and tenant ⚷325 — Interest of cropper in lease is chattel real.

Cropper's interest in lease to premises to be cropped is chattel real.

5. Chattel mortgages ⚷127—Cropper's abandonment of lease and premises, of which landlord resumed possession, destroyed interest of cropper's mortgagee in crops sown after abandonment.

Where cropper executed chattel mortgage on crop to be grown during following year and thereafter executed written surrender of interest and abandoned possession of premises to landlord's assignee, who seeded land to crop, mortgagee had no interest in premises or in crops due to mortgagor's abandonment prior to planting thereof.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Oakdale against E. E. Brashear and others, to foreclose a chattel mortgage. Judgment limiting plaintiff to recovery on its note, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Griffin, Boone & Boone and Edward T. Taylor, all of Modesto, for appellant.

T. B. Scott, W. H. Hatton, Vernon F. Gant, and Thomas M. Anaya, all of Modesto, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is prosecuted by the plaintiff in an action wherein the latter sought to foreclose a chattel mortgage which had been executed to it by the defendants E. E. Brashear and Marie Brashear on October 22, 1921, to secure a promissory note for the principal sum of $6,300, also then executed, and which note provided for interest and future advances. The mortgage in question was in form a crop mortgage, by the terms of which the Brashears mortgaged to the plaintiff the crops growing and to be grown during a series of succeeding years upon a certain tract of land consisting of 1,000 acres, which had been subleased to said E. E. Brashear during the year 1920 by two certain parties, named Collins and Cathey, who were in turn, the lessees of a much larger tract of land, which embraced the above acreage, from the Turlock irrigation district, the owner thereof. The sublease to E. E. Brashear provided that the latter should summer fallow at least 300 acres of said subleased land each year, and that, in the event of his failure so to do, his lease should become null and void. It was while he was the holder of said sublease that E. E. Brashear and his wife executed and delivered to the plaintiff the note and mortgage above mentioned, and which mortgage purported to cover two-thirds of the crops grown and to be grown upon said land.

In July, 1920, said Collins and Cathey assigned their lease of the larger tract to one J. T. Denton, and upon the date thereof the irrigation district executed a new lease to Denton covering the same property for a lengthened term of years and at a reduced rental. Upon the same date Denton executed a new sublease to Brashear for the remainder of the term covered by his former lease and containing the same clause relative to summer fallowing during the term thereof of 300 acres of the subleased land. During the spring of the year 1922 and while the defendant E. E. Brashear and his wife were in possession of the premises thus subleased, he proceeded to summer fallow approximately 400 acres of said land preparatory to planting the same with grain during the proper planting season of that or the following year. After having done so, and being apparently much involved financially, Brashear applied to the plaintiff for further credit; which application being rather coldly received, Brashear concluded to surrender his sublease to his immediate landlord, Denton, and abandon the premises, and he accordingly, on or about September 21, 1922, executed and caused to be recorded a formal surrender of said sublease to said Denton, and shortly thereafter Brashear and his wife abandoned said premises and went to live elsewhere.

Thereupon said Denton went into possession of the premises thus surrendered and abandoned, and subsequently thereto and on October 22, 1922, made and entered into an agreement with the defendant Huddleson, which agreement was in the form of a cropping lease covering about 360 acres of said 1,000-acre tract, wherein it was provided that said Huddleson was to plant and cultivate a crop or crops of grain upon said land which had theretofore been summer fallowed, and was upon the harvesting thereof to deliver to Denton one-fourth of the crops thus sown and harvested. Huddleson, under this agreement, went into the possession of said 360 acres of land and proceeded to plant, cultivate, and harvest a crop of grain thereon, while Denton proceeded to plant and harvest a crop of grain upon some 50 acres of said already summer fallowed land of which he retained possession.

In August, 1923, while the crops so seeded and cultivated by defendants Huddleson and Denton were in process of being harvested, the plaintiff herein commenced this action, making Brashear and his wife and also Denton and Huddleson defendants therein, seeking to foreclose its aforesaid crop mortgage upon the crops thus grown upon said land. A receiver was appointed in said action, who took possession of the crops and harvested and sold the same under order of said court and deposited the proceeds of such sale with the clerk of the court to await the outcome of said action. The case, when the issues were made up, was first brought to trial before a jury, but the trial court presently concluded that the action was equitable in its nature, and after discharging the jury proceeded to hear and determine the same. By its findings of fact and conclusions of law, the trial court found and concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against E. E. Brashear and his wife upon their promissory note to it for the amount remaining due thereon, but that, as to the crops and the proceeds thereof grown and harvested by Huddleson and Denton upon said premises, the plaintiff was entitled to no relief. From the judgment which followed to the same effect, the plaintiff has prosecuted the present appeal.

[1] The sole question presented to the court for consideration upon this appeal is as to whether or not the crop mortgage, which had been given by the Brashears to the plaintiff, had become so far effective upon the summer fallowing work upon said premises which had been done by the Brashears in the spring of 1922 as to entitle the plaintiff to enforce its crop mortgage against the crops thereafter sown and grown upon said premises, when it appeared that the same had been sown and grown thereon after the surrender and abandonment of said premises and of his sublease thereof by said Brashear, and when the possession of said premises had been resumed by Denton and a new cropping agreement had been entered into as between himself and the defendant Huddleson, and when the latter, in pursuance thereof, had sown and grown the crops which were sought to be subjected to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage. It is the contention of the appellant that, when the summer fallowing of that portion of the said premises had been done by the Brashears, a sufficiently decisive step had been taken in the direction of the planting and growing of the crop or crops of grain thereon as would suffice to entitle the plaintiff to assert the lien of his mortgage against such crops as were thereafter grown upon said summer fallowed premises, even though the Brashears had surrendered the possession of said lands to their lessor, who had, in turn, executed a new cropping lease to the succeeding tenant Huddleson, by whom the crops sought to be subjected to said mortgage had been actually sown and grown.

We are unable to agree with this contention, for while it is true that a crop mortgage may be made to cover the crops thereafter to be sown and grown upon leased land, as was held by this court in the case of Arques v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620, 21 Am. Rep. 718, and while it is true, as stated in that case, that such a mortgage has a potential existence during the period prior to the actual planting of the seed in said land upon which the crops to be subjected to said mortgage are to be grown, our attention has been called to no case, either in this or in any other jurisdiction, which goes so far as to hold that such a crop mortgage shall pass the point of such potential existence at any time prior to the actual planting with seed of said land. The rule applicable to this class of securities may seem to be an arbitrary one, but it has nevertheless been given universal application and has never, so far as we have been advised by the appellant or have investigated the authorities upon our own account, been extended to a case wherein the land, although plowed or summer fallowed by the tenant, has passed, through his surrender of his lease, back to his landlord or into the possession and control of others who have thereafter undertaken to plant and grow the crops thereon. The case of Isbell v. Slette, 52 Mont. 156, 155 P. 503, presents a practically identical situation to the case at bar. The Montana statutes relating to crop mortgages are similar to our own. The Supreme Court of Montana, after citing the case of Arques v. Wasson, supra, proceeded to hold that the crop mortgage in that case could not be held to attach to the crops planted and grown upon the leased premises after the lessee had parted with his possession and leasehold interest therein. A similar ruling was made by the Supreme Court of Minnesota in the case of Simmons v. Anderson, 44 Minn. 487, 47 N. W. 52, and a like holding was made by the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case of Gammon v. Bull, 86 Iowa, 754, 53 N. W. 340. The text-writers recognize and state the general rule to be that the holder of a crop mortgage has no interest in or lien upon the land, but that the lien of such mortgage attaches only to the interest which the mortgagor may have in the crops after they have come into being by the planting of the seed wherefrom they are grown (6 Cyc. p. 1048; 11 Corp. Jur. at page 444), in which latter authority the foregoing cases from Montana and Minnesota are cited with approval.

[2-4] The appellant, however, further contends that the written and recorded surrender of his lease by Brashear was void for the reason that the writing evidencing such surrender was not signed by the wife of Brashear. The theory of the appellant in making this contention is apparently that the leasehold interest of said Brashear was community property which the husband could not transfer without the written consent of his wife. This contention has no merit for the reason that the lease of the premises by Brashear was executed by himself alone, his wife not joining therein, and that the same amounted in law merely to a chattel real with which the husband had full power to deal. But even were it otherwise, the undisputed evidence disclosed that, after such written surrender of his said lease by Brashear, both he and his wife abandoned said leasehold premises and their immediate landlord accepted such surrender and abandonment and resumed possession of the premises. All interest of the Brashears therein was thus terminated, and with such termination all rights of their mortgagee as to crops not yet planted upon the premises came to an end, under the authorities above referred to.

[5] It follows necessarily that the plaintiff retained no interest whatever in the premises, or in the crops thereafter to be sown and grown thereon, and the trial court was not, accordingly, in error in holding that the plaintiff had no lien upon the crops planted upon said premises by the defendants Denton and Huddleson, and hence no right to receive any portion of the proceeds thereof which had resulted from the harvesting and sale of said crops by the receiver and the deposit of the proceeds thereof with the court to abide the result of the judgment in said action.

No appeal having been prosecuted from said judgment by the defendants E. E. and Marie Brashear as to that portion thereof which bound them to the payment of their promissory note to the plaintiff, it follows that said judgment as to the respondents Denton and Huddleson should be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

---

200 Cal. 310

In re LEE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 12036.)★

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1927.)

1. Divorce 🔑172—Unimpeached judgment of divorce is conclusive as to jurisdiction of parties and cause, and that they had been married, and that sufficient grounds were alleged and proved (Civ. Code, § 60; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1916, 1917).

On claim to decedent's estate as his daughter, where divorce between claimant's mother and decedent was not impeached on legal ground, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1916, 1917, jurisdiction over cause and parties and finding that ceremony in which parties participated resulted in marriage, that they were married persons when case was tried, that sufficient grounds for divorce had been alleged and proved, must be assumed, regardless of Civ. Code, § 60, prohibiting marriage between white persons and those of other races.

2. Divorce 🔑7—Divorce proceeding in relation to marriage status and termination thereof is one "in rem."

Divorce proceeding, in so far as it relates to marriage status, is one "in rem," brought to establish judicially such status and for dissolution thereof on finding that it exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, In Rem.]

3. Divorce 🔑168, 172—Divorce is binding on all world as to determination of marital status, and is immune from collateral attack, except on statutory grounds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1916).

Judgment of divorce is one in rem, binding on all world as to determination of marital status, and is immune from collateral attack, except on grounds specified by Code Civ. Proc. § 1916.

4. Bastards 🔑3—Child born in wedlock is presumed legitimate, and entitled to estate of deceased father, and divorce of parents makes presumption conclusive as to persons other than husband or wife, or descendants (Civ. Code, §§ 193, 195).

Judgment of divorce between mother of claimant of estate as heir of decedent and decedent was conclusive determination of existence of marriage between them, and child born during such marriage was entitled to presumption of legitimacy, under Civ. Code, § 193, which opposing parties, who were not husband or wife, or descendants of either, under section 195 could not dispute, and such child was entitled to decedent's estate.

5. Trial 🔑396(2)—Finding that claimant was not heir of decedent, based on inadmissible evidence, held erroneous.

Finding that claimant was not heir of decedent, based on inadmissible evidence of her illegitimacy, held erroneous as not supported by any competent evidence.

---

★Rehearing denied.

6. Judgment ⚷305—Where complete findings were made showing claimant was entitled to estate, motion to set aside judgment denying claim and to enter new judgment should have been granted.

Where trial court made sufficient findings based on competent evidence to entitle claimant to estate of decedent, her motion to set aside judgment denying her claim, based on incompetent evidence of her illegitimacy, and to enter new and different judgment on same findings, should have been granted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Robert S. Lee, deceased. Action by Josephine Marie Lee Wrynn against Kitty Tooty Johnson and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

See, also, 241 P. 851.

Chas. N. Douglas, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. W. Watson and Joseph T. Curley, both of San Francisco (Charles S. Peery, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

SHENK, J. Robert S. Lee died on the 20th day of September, 1922, in the city and county of San Francisco, leaving an estate therein consisting of real and personal property of the appraised value of $17,784.35. On the next day his will, bearing date December 31, 1918, was filed with the clerk of the superior court in and for said city and county. After proceedings duly taken the will was proved and admitted to probate. Bequests of $100 each were left to some 15 different institutions and individuals, including Kitty Tooty Johnson, who was also made residuary devisee and legatee. None of the persons named in the will was related to the decedent. The first and final account of the executor was settled and allowed and the court postponed distribution of the estate until it was determined to whom distribution should be made pursuant to the issue of heirship tendered by the petition of Josephine Marie Lee Wrynn, who claimed to be the daughter of the decedent and a pretermitted heir, and who prayed that the entire estate be distributed to her. Upon the trial of the issue the court found that the petitioner was not the child or any heir at law of the decedent, and therefore not entitled to any portion of said estate. From a judgment entered accordingly Mrs. Wrynn prosecutes this appeal.

The court found that Robert S. Lee, the decedent, and Marie Dierse, engaged in a marriage ceremony on the 16th day of May, 1895, in the city and county of San Francisco; that they lived together until they separated about three years thereafter; and that the decedent commenced an action for and was, on March 26, 1903, granted a divorce from Marie Dierse Lee in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The appellant was born on July 5, 1895, and it is undisputed that she was the daughter of Marie Dierse Lee, the same person who engaged in the marriage ceremony with the decedent and who was divorced by the decedent about eight years thereafter. It also appears as an undisputed fact that the appellant was not named in said will.

The appellant bases her claim to heirship first upon the presumption of legitimacy declared by section 193 of the Civil Code that "all children born in wedlock are presumed to be legitimate." She then contends that under section 195 of the Civil Code "the presumption of legitimacy can be disputed only by the husband or wife, or the descendant of one or both of them," and that none of the parties to the present proceeding belongs to any of the classes of persons entitled to dispute her legitimacy.

Over the objection of the appellant evidence was introduced by the respondents to prove, and the court found, that the decedent was a mulatto; that the mother of the appellant is a white woman; that the mother was pregnant about seven months before she knew or became acquainted with the decedent; and that a white man was the father of the appellant. From the facts so found the trial court concluded that the deceased and Marie Dierse were never legally married; that the claimant was not the child of the decedent, and therefore not a pretermitted or any heir of the decedent. It is insisted by the respondents, first, that the said marriage was void under section 60 of the Civil Code, which provides that "all marriages of white persons with negroes, Mongolians, or mulattoes are illegal and void," and, secondly, that since it appears that the decedent was not the father of the appellant the latter was not the "issue" of said void marriage so as to entitle her to the benefit of section 1387 of the Civil Code, which provides that "the issue of all marriages null in law * * * are legitimate."

It is argued by the appellant that evidence to the effect that said marriage was illegal and that her natural father was a white man was inadmissible to establish her alleged illegitimacy under the facts here presented. The determination of this question depends upon the effect to be given the decree of divorce granted March 26, 1903. It is the contention of the appellant that the effect of that decree was judicially to establish the relationship or status matrimonially of the parties to said action and that such determination was and is conclusive under the provisions of section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

> "The effect of a judgment * * * before a court or judge of this state * * * having jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment * * * is as follows: (1) In case of a judgment * * * in respect to the personal, * * * or legal condition or relation of a particular person, the judgment * * * is conclusive upon * * * the condition or relation of the person."

The respondents dismiss the point with the statement that it is unworthy of consideration. We are satisfied that the contention may not be so or at all dismissed.

[1] The judgment of divorce was not impeached, nor was it sought to be impeached by the respondents on any legal ground. Section 1916, Code Civ. Proc. In the absence of such impeachment it must be assumed that the court had jurisdiction over the cause and over the parties. Section 1917, Code Civ. Proc. It must further be assumed that the court found in that action, among other things, that the ceremony in which the plaintiff and defendant participated resulted in their marriage; that they were married persons when the cause was tried; that sufficient grounds for divorce were alleged and proved; and that the plaintiff, the decedent herein, was entitled to a judgment dissolving the bonds of matrimony theretofore and since the 16th day of May, 1895, existing between the parties.

[2, 3] A divorce proceeding, in so far as it relates to the marriage relation of the parties to the action and the termination of the marriage status, is a proceeding in rem. In re Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 16 P. 887, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146. Such an action is brought for the purpose of establishing judicially the matrimonial status of the parties, and, if it be found that a matrimonial relation exists, then for the purpose of a dissolution of that relation. Gridley v. Boggs, 62 Cal. 190, 202; De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 P. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165. As a judgment in rem it is binding upon all the world as to the determination of the marital status of the parties and is immune from collateral attack (People v. Perris Irrigation District, 132 Cal. 289, 64 P. 399, 773; 15 Cal. Jur. 239), except on grounds specified by the Code (section 1916, Code Civ. Proc.), none of which is urged here.

[4] The judgment here under consideration was a conclusive determination of the status of the parties to said action as husband and wife from May 16, 1895, to the dissolution of that relation by the judgment of divorce on March 26, 1903. Said judgment was and is binding upon the parties to the present proceeding and constitutes a judicial determination of a state of "wedlock" existing between the parties to said action when the appellant was born on July 5, 1895. Since the appellant must therefore be held to have been born in wedlock, she was and is entitled to the presumption of legitimacy declared by section 193 of the Civil Code, and, since none of the respondents nor any person named in said will is included within the class enumerated in section 195 of the Civil Code as entitled to dispute the legitimacy of the appellant, all question as to her alleged illegitimacy is here foreclosed. In re Madalina, 174 Cal. 693, 164 P. 348, 1 A. L. R. 1629.

The respondents rely on Estate of Gregorson, 160 Cal. 21, 116 P. 60, L. R. A. 1916C, 697, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1124, where it was said:

> "A marriage prohibited as incestuous or illegal and declared to be 'void' or 'void from the beginning' is a legal nullity and its [in]validity may be asserted or shown in any proceeding in which the fact of marriage may be material."

Assuming that the foregoing statement was necessary to the decision and that it correctly declared the general rule, the question of a prior judgment of divorce as affecting the marital status was neither involved nor considered in that case and cannot be deemed determinative under the facts here presented. Other authorities cited and relied upon by the respondents are likewise not in point in the state of the record.

[5] As the evidence relating to the alleged illegitimacy of the appellant was inadmissible and the finding and conclusion of the court that she was not an heir of the decedent were predicated thereon, it follows that said finding and conclusion were not supported by any competent evidence in the case. Under the evidence material to the controversy the appellant was entitled to a judgment declaring that she was and is the sole heir of the decedent and as such entitled to the distribution of said estate.

[6] Sufficient findings were made by the court, based upon competent evidence, and there is none to the contrary, to entitle the appellant to a decree of distribution. After entry of judgment in the trial court appellant made a motion to set aside the judgment and to enter a new and different judgment on the same findings. This motion was denied. We think the motion should have been granted.

It is ordered that the judgment be and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to enter a judgment on the findings declaring the appellant to be the sole heir of the decedent and distributing to her the property constituting said estate.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

200 Cal. 374

WAYBRIGHT et al. v. ANDERSON et al.
(L. A. 8433, 8434.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1927.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑81(5) — Opening judgments of dismissal held not abuse of discretion, where delay in amending complaints, after demurrers were sustained, was based on verbal stipulation thought to allow indefinite time (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Setting aside judgments of dismissal in two actions involving identical parties held not abuse of discretion, where failure of plaintiffs' attorneys to amend complaints within time allowed after sustaining demurrers was due to verbal stipulation under which attorneys understood indefinite time was to be allowed, and where notice of motion to vacate was served within month after entering judgment, as judgment was taken through mistake or excusable neglect of plaintiffs; Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that judgment so taken may be set aside on application made within reasonable time.

2. Appeal and error 🔑957(1)—Judgment 🔑139—Order setting aside default judgment is discretionary and will not be disturbed except on clear showing of abuse of discretion.

Motion to set aside default judgment is addressed to sound discretion of trial court, and court's order setting aside judgment will not be disturbed by appellate court except on clear showing that discretion has been abused.

3. Appeal and error 🔑957(1)—Appellate court will listen more readily to appeal from order refusing to set aside default, than where motion has been granted.

On appeal, court will affirm order setting aside default, where result is to compel trial upon merits, more readily than where result would be to allow judgment by default to stand, as policy of law is to favor hearing on merits.

4. Judgment 🔑143(1)—Statute providing for setting aside judgments, taken against party through mistake or excusable neglect, should be liberally construed (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing for setting aside judgments, taken against party through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, should be liberally construed so as to dispose of cases upon merits.

5. Judgment 🔑143(17) — Whether judgments were taken through plaintiffs' excusable neglect depended on whether counsel reasonably believed verbal stipulation gave extension for amending complaints (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

In determining whether judgments should be set aside, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for excusable neglect, where excuse was verbal stipulation postponing time for filing amended answer, whether sufficient excuse existed depended on reasonable belief of plaintiffs' counsel as to verbal stipulation.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1024(4)—On appeal from order setting aside judgment, decision on conflicting affidavits of counsel held conclusive.

On appeal from order setting aside judgment, decision of lower court was conclusive on appeal in so far as affidavits of counsel were in conflict as to understanding regarding time of filing of amended complaints.

7. Appeal and error 🔑946—Abuse of discretion by trial court is not shown by fact that appellate court would have decided otherwise.

That appellate court would, upon same showing, have reached opposite conclusion does not indicate that trial court abused discretion.

8. Judgment 🔑143(17) — Delay in amending complaints based on verbal stipulation with opposing counsel held excusable, warranting setting aside of judgments of dismissal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 283, 473).

Though stipulation of counsel cannot generally be enforced unless put in writing or entered in minutes of court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 283, delay of plaintiffs' counsel in amending complaints after demurrers were sustained and time for filing had expired held excusable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, allowing judgments to be set aside when taken through party's excusable neglect, where plaintiffs' counsel understood by verbal stipulation with opposing counsel that time was indefinitely extended.

9. Judgment 🔑143(12)—Mistake of plaintiffs' counsel in failing to amend complaints within time allowed held not inexcusable, preventing setting aside judgments of dismissal (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Mistake of plaintiffs' counsel in failing to amend complaints within time allowed after demurrers had been sustained held not inexcusable mistake, requiring reversal of order setting aside judgments of dismissal, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

10. Judgment 🔑143(2) — Whether judgment should be set aside for mistake depends upon whether mistake of person, against whom judgment was taken, was inexcusable (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Whether party, against whom judgment was entered, is entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to have judgment set aside depends on whether mistake, through which judgment was taken, was inexcusable.

11. Judgment 🔑158—Plaintiffs, against whom judgments were entered, were not required to file affidavits of merits, where verified amended complaints were served and filed.

On motion to vacate judgments, taken through mistake or excusable neglect of plaintiffs in failing to amend complaints within time allowed after sustaining of demurrers, serving and filing of verified amended complaints rendered unnecessary presentation and filing of affidavits of merits.

12. Appeal and error 🔑876—Whether verified amended complaints, filed and served on motion to vacate judgments, stated causes of action held for trial court.

On appeal from order setting aside judgments of dismissal after demurrers to complaint had been sustained, whether verified amended complaints stated causes of action held for decision of trial court.

---

13. Judgment ⚷153(1)—Application to vacate judgments by notices of motion within month of entry and notice thereof held seasonable (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where, within one month of entry of default judgments of dismissal and notice thereof, plaintiffs' attorneys served and filed notices of motion to vacate, applications held presented within reasonable time, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Actions by John S. Waybright and another against W. O. Anderson, E. S. Babcock, Warren C. Wolf, and another. Judgments of dismissal, entered against plaintiffs in both actions, were ordered set aside and vacated, and the two defendants first named appeal. Affirmed.

A. B. Shaw, Jr., and I. W. Stewart, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Moote & Patterson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The above-named appellants have prosecuted appeals from two orders of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, setting aside and vacating judgments of dismissal entered against the plaintiffs in two actions involving the same parties. A stipulation that the two appeals may be consolidated and considered upon one set of briefs is on file herein.

The first of said actions was instituted on June 5, 1924, and is founded upon an alleged extortion. On the following day a second action was commenced and had for its purpose the recovery of a treble penalty. A demurrer to each of said complaints was interposed and sustained on the ground of defect of parties plaintiff. The time within which the plaintiffs might amend their complaints expired on August 4, 1924, without their having so amended. Thereafter and on August 12, 1924, a judgment of dismissal was entered in each of said actions on motion of the defendants. On the next succeeding day the plaintiffs attempted to serve their amended complaints, and were thereupon, for the first time, informed of the entry of the judgments of dismissal. Subsequently, and on September 10, 1924, the plaintiffs served and filed in each action a notice of motion to set aside the judgment theretofore entered therein. An affidavit of counsel and a copy of an unverified amended complaint accompanied each notice of motion. On October 1, 1924, and before final hearing on said applications, the plaintiffs served and filed in each action a new notice of motion to vacate and attached thereto copies of new and verified amended complaints. A hearing on each of said applications was had on October 8, 1924, at which time the judgments of dismissal were set aside by the trial court and the verified amended complaints ordered filed. As already indicated, it is from the orders setting aside the judgments of dismissal that the appellants have appealed.

[1, 2] Preliminary to a consideration of the propriety of the trial court's action in the instant cases it may be stated that the authorities uniformly declare that a motion to set aside a default judgment is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse in the exercise thereof, an appellate court will not disturb the order of the court below. Downing v. Klondike Min. Co., 165 Cal. 786, 788, 134 P. 970; Alferitz v. Cahen, 145 Cal. 397, 398, 78 P. 878; O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 P. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105; McGowan v. Kreling, 117 Cal. 31, 35, 48 P. 980; Harbaugh v. L. & W. Co., 109 Cal. 70, 72, 41 P. 792; Sampanes v. Chazes, 54 Cal. App. 612, 613, 202 P. 462; Porter v. Bryson, 35 Cal. App. 688, 691, 170 P. 1068; Watson v. Col. Basin Dev. Co., 22 Cal. App. 556, 561, 135 P. 511.

[3] Moreover, it is the policy of the law to favor, wherever possible, a hearing on the merits, and appellate courts are "much more disposed to affirm an order when the result is to compel a trial upon the merits than it is when the judgment by default is allowed to stand, and it appears that a substantial defense could be made." O'Brien v. Leach, supra; Downing v. Klondike Min. Co., supra; Porter v. Bryson, supra. This is clearly indicated in the case of Berri v. Rogero, 168 Cal. 736, 740, 145 P. 95, 97, wherein it is stated that:

> "The policy of the law is to have every litigated case tried upon its merits, and it looks with disfavor upon a party who, regardless of the merits of his case, attempts to take advantage of the mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or neglect of his adversary. * * * A broad discretion is allowed to courts in granting relief against default, and it is in cases only where the lower court has abused its discretion that the appellate court will reverse its action."

[4] Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a remedial provision and is to be liberally construed, so as to dispose of cases upon their substantial merits, and to give to the party claiming in good faith to have a subsisting cause of action or a substantial defense thereto an opportunity to present it. It is for this reason that appellate courts more readily listen to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside default than where the motion has been granted, since in such case the defaulting party may be deprived of a substantial right. Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 P. 63.

The affidavits of counsel, presented to the trial court upon the hearing of the applications herein, show that a telephone conversation was had between opposing counsel at a time subsequent to the expiration of the period within which the plaintiffs were to have amended their complaints; that a verbal stipulation or understanding of some sort was entered into whereby the plaintiffs were to be permitted to thereafter file their amended complaints; and that there was a misunderstanding or divergence of opinion between counsel as to the effect of their verbal stipulation. Respondents' counsel in his affidavit in support of the motions to vacate asserts, in part, that:

> He "felt absolutely assured the filing of the amended complaint upon any day that it might be ready would be satisfactory to the defendant. Absolutely no statement was made by Mr. Shaw [counsel for appellants] to the effect that it would have to be filed on any day certain or that default would be taken. If such had been our understanding, a written stipulation would have been obtained, a court order extending our time secured or the pleading would have been duly filed. * * * The defendants' attorneys did not notify us of their intention to disregard our verbal stipulation or inform us that our default would be taken if said complaint was not in within a given period of time. Our office had at all times acted upon and relied upon such verbal understanding in good faith."

The counter affidavit of appellants' counsel states, in part, that in their telephone conversation respondents' counsel said:

> "He would see to it that said amended complaint was served and filed by Friday, August 8, 1924, to which affiant responded, 'All right.' That said Mr. Patterson [counsel for respondents] did not state that 'the amended complaint would be served and filed in a few days,' or at any indefinite time, and affiant did not say to him, in words or in substance, nor did affiant orally or otherwise stipulate, that plaintiffs' attorneys might have an indefinite or uncertain time, or such time as they desired, or any other time than up to and including said Friday, within which to serve and file said amended complaint."

[5-7] As indicated in the affidavit of respondents' counsel, he interpreted the agreement with opposing counsel as leaving the date or time open within which amended complaints might be served and filed, and he further believed that judgments of default or dismissal would not be entered in the interim. In our opinion, this belief was not, under the circumstances, unreasonable, and "it is his belief and the reasonableness thereof that controls the question." Savings Bank v. Schell, 142 Cal. 505, 76 P. 250. The decision of the court below is conclusive on appeal, in so far as the affidavits of counsel are in conflict. Savings Bank v. Schell, supra. That an appellate court would have, upon the same showing, reached a conclusion opposed to that of the trial court is not indicative of an abuse of discretion upon the part of said lower court. Alferitz v. Cahen, supra.

[8-10] We are familiar with the general rule that a stipulation of counsel cannot be enforced unless put in writing, or entered in the minutes of the court (section 283, Code Civ. Proc.), but the courts have been indisposed to give this otherwise general rule application to default judgments (McGowan v. Kreling, supra; Johnson v. Sweeney, 95 Cal. 304, 306, 30 P. 540; McGillivray v. Owen, 30 Cal. App. 763, 765, 159 P. 452). Under the circumstances presented herein, the neglect or delay of respondents' counsel—for it would not have been neglect if his belief in the effect of the verbal stipulation had been well founded—was excusable, within the meaning of the statute which requires a default to be set aside, where the same was taken through the excusable neglect of a party. In so declaring, we are not unmindful that appellants urge that:

> "The law requires the excuses for negligence to be shown."

Aside from our opinion that the affidavits filed herein sufficiently explain and excuse the respondents' delay in pleading, it may be said that:

> "In view of the settled disposition of the appellate courts in viewing the action taken under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, * * * the question is rather as to whether the affidavits show that the mistake was inexcusable, and that we are not prepared to hold." Porter v. Bryson, supra.

The order of a trial court vacating a default judgment has been sustained on appeal where the failure to seasonably plead resulted from an erroneous office filing by counsel (Downing v. Klondike Min. Co., supra); also, where counsel erroneously assumed service of summons had been had in the county wherein his client resided (O'Brien v. Leach, supra); and where counsel made entry of a wrong date of trial in his diary (Hagenkamp v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 29 Cal. App. 713, 717, 156 P. 520). These authorities sufficiently illustrate that, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse in the exercise of its discretion, the order of the lower court setting aside a default will not be disturbed on appeal. There has been no showing herein that the court below abused its discretion.

[11, 12] What has been said adequately disposes of the first two contentions urged by the appellants on this appeal. As a third contention it is asserted that "no proper showing of merits was made." It is true that affidavits of merits were not filed herein, but, under the doctrine of Sampanes v. Chazes, supra, the service and filing of verified amended complaints rendered unnecessary the presentation and filing of affidavits of merits. We are not prepared to hold that said verified amended complaints fail to state causes of action, as urged by the appellants, for this question is primarily one to be decided by the trial court.

[13] Nor can we agree with the appellants' final contention that respondents' applications to set aside the judgments of dismissal were not made within a reasonable time. The entry of the default in each action was brought to the knowledge of respondents' counsel on August 13, 1924, whereupon he served and filed notices of motion to vacate the same on September 10, 1924, and made application in open court on September 22, 1924. Under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, a motion to vacate and set aside a judgment must be presented within a "reasonable time," not exceeding six months. The applications herein were, in our opinion, seasonably made.

For the foregoing reasons, the orders appealed from are affirmed.

---

81 Cal. App. 1

PEOPLE v. DENAULT.

Ex parte LUNA.

(Cr. 1382, 1460.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 24, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑90(2)—Justice courts have no jurisdiction of high grade misdemeanors.

Justice courts do not have jurisdiction in case of high grade misdemeanors.

2. Criminal law 🔑88—Jurisdiction vested in municipal court is exclusive of like jurisdiction in superior court (Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 11; St. 1925, p. 658, § 28; Pen. Code, § 1462, as added by St. 1925, p. 948).

Under Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 11, whatever jurisdiction is vested in municipal courts by St. 1925, p. 658, § 28, and Pen. Code, § 1462, as added by St. 1925, p. 948, is exclusive of a like jurisdiction in the superior court.

3. Constitutional law 🔑56—Legislature may not vest jurisdiction in municipal courts over high grade misdemeanors committed in parts of county lying outside city boundaries (Const. art. 6, § 11).

Under Const. art. 6, § 11, Legislature has no authority to vest in municipal courts jurisdiction over high grade misdemeanors committed in parts of county lying outside boundaries of city within which municipal court has been established.

4. Courts 🔑26—Grant of jurisdiction over matters some of which are local confers only local jurisdiction, in absence of specific provision for extraterritorial jurisdiction.

Where a grant of jurisdiction to a court over various matters is made by a single sentence, and jurisdiction over some of them is necessarily local, entire grant confers only local jurisdiction, unless it be specifically provided in the grant that as to some of the matters mentioned an exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction is intended.

5. Courts 🔑52—Grant of jurisdiction, formerly residing in superior court, to municipal court, must be strictly construed.

A grant of jurisdiction to municipal court which jurisdiction formerly resided in the superior court must be strictly construed, since municipal courts are inferior to superior courts, in that the superior may entertain appeal from municipal court.

6. Courts 🔑472(1)—Court is not ousted of jurisdiction by subsequent legislative enactment conferring jurisdiction on another court, unless intention is plainly manifested.

A court is not ousted of jurisdiction which it possesses over a subject by subsequent legislative enactment conferring jurisdiction on another court over the same subject, unless such intention is plainly manifested either by word of statute or by necessary implication therefrom.

7. Constitutional law 🔑12—Principles for construction of statutes apply to Constitutions.

General principles governing construction of statutes apply also to construction of Constitution.

8. Criminal law 🔑88—Constitution held not to authorize Legislature to confer jurisdiction on municipal courts over misdemeanors in territory lying outside city (Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 11).

Const. art. 6, § 11, authorizing Legislature to provide for jurisdiction of municipal courts except as otherwise specified, held not to authorize grant of jurisdiction under section 1, to municipal courts over misdemeanors committed in territory of county lying outside of limits of cities in which municipal courts were created, and jurisdiction as to such offenses resides in superior court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Jack Denault was convicted of a high grade misdemeanor, and he appeals, his appeal being considered together with an application for habeas corpus by Felipe Luna, prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Los Angeles county to secure release of petitioner after conviction of high grade misdemeanor. Conviction of defendant Denault affirmed, writ of habeas corpus discharged, and prisoner remanded to custody.

In case No. 1382:

W. W. Judd, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

In case No. 1460:

A. T. Folsom, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. The facts presented on the appeal and those alleged in the petition in the original proceeding are so similar (hereafter to be stated) that they present the same legal questions. Disposition of those questions, therefore, may be made by a single opinion and upon a statement alone of the few material facts presented upon the appeal.

[1] There are in the county of Los Angeles two municipal courts. Appellant was convicted of what is termed a high grade misdemeanor. The alleged offense was committed in territory of the county which lies outside the territory of the cities within which, respectively, the municipal courts hold their sessions. The ultimate question presented for decision is whether the superior court had jurisdiction of the offense. It is conceded by the parties—and correctly so—that a justice's court has no jurisdiction of such misdemeanors as that with which appellant was charged.

Section 28 of the act of the Legislature concerning municipal courts (Stats. 1925, p. 648) provides:

> "Each municipal court shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment in the city or city and county, or county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment where the offense charged was committed within the county in which the municipal court is established."

Section 1462 of the Penal Code as added by St. 1925, p. 948, reads, in part:

> "Whenever a municipal court shall have been established, * * * such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment, or by both such fine and imprisonment, committed in the city, * * * where such municipal court is held. * * * In each city wherein a municipal court shall have been established, such courts shall also have jurisdiction over any misdemeanor committed in the county in which such city is located."

These enactments of the Legislature, if they do not infringe the provisions of the Constitution, confer upon the municipal courts a jurisdiction over such offenses as that with which appellant was charged, laying aside for the moment the question whether the jurisdiction so attempted to be conferred is exclusive, or whether it is concurrent with a jurisdiction resting in the superior court. The jurisdiction over such charges was without doubt vested in the latter courts before the passage by the Legislature of the enactments mentioned.

Sections 1, 5, and 11 of article 6 of the Constitution are material to a discussion of the questions which arise upon the appeal.

Section 1 reads:

> "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, district courts of appeal, superior courts, such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county, and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county." Stats, 1923, p. 1678.

Section 5 provides, in part:

> "The superior courts shall have original jurisdiction * * * in all criminal cases amounting to a felony, and in all cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for. * * *" Stats. 1923, p. 1678.

Portions of section 11 follow:

> "In any * * * city which is governed under a charter * * * containing a population of more than forty thousand inhabitants, * * * a municipal court may be established as in this article provided, anything in this Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. * * * Municipal courts shall have original jurisdiction, * * * in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to one thousand dollars or less, and of actions of forcible or unlawful entry or detainer where the rental value is one hundred dollars or less per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed is one thousand dollars or less, and in cases to enforce and foreclose liens on personal property where the amount of such liens or the value of the property is one thousand dollars or less, and in all criminal cases amounting to a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment in the city * * * or county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment [which offenses include what are known as high grade misdemeanors]. * * * The Legislature shall provide by general law for the Constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts, and for the jurisdiction thereof except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section, and for the establishment of municipal courts in cities [of the size and character above specified]. * * * Upon the taking effect of such general law, a municipal court may be established in any such city [upon the completion of certain preliminary steps]." Stats. 1923, p. 1679.

[2] If it be conceded for the moment that the above-quoted provisions of section 28 of the act of 1925 and of section 1462 of the Penal Code are not in excess of the terms of the Constitution upon grounds later to be discussed, it seems plain that the jurisdiction attempted to be conferred upon the municipal courts by them is exclusive and that the sections have ousted the former jurisdiction of the superior courts over the same matters. So much is apparent from Green v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. 556, 21 P. 307, 541. In that case it appeared that jurisdiction over certain offenses had been vested by the Constitution (article 6, § 5) in the superior court when "not otherwise provided for." Jurisdiction over the same offenses was later conferred by statute upon the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, which court was created by the Legislature under appropriate provisions of the Constitution. Green was indicted in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco for the commission of one of those offenses.

He asked the Supreme Court for the writ of prohibition to halt proceedings under the indictment, and contended that the statute conferring jurisdiction on the police court vested an exclusive jurisdiction in that tribunal. The Supreme Court upheld the contention in the following language:

> "The evident purpose of the constitutional provision as evinced by its language, is that the jurisdiction of the superior court shall be conditioned upon the establishment of other courts upon which the same jurisdiction shall be conferred, and when that condition happens, and the jurisdiction is by the Legislature conferred upon such inferior courts, from that time the Constitution itself transfers such jurisdiction from the superior court and vests it in the inferior courts. From that time the jurisdiction is 'otherwise provided for,' and the jurisdiction of the superior court at once ceases."

That part of section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution which is above quoted is substantially the same as the language of the same section as it stood when it was construed in Green v. Superior Court. We are therefore of the opinion that whatever jurisdiction was vested in the municipal courts by section 28 of the act of 1925 and by section 1462 of the Penal Code is exclusive of a like jurisdiction in the superior court.

[3] The most disturbing question which is now before us is whether the Legislature was empowered by the Constitution to vest in the municipal courts a jurisdiction over high grade misdemeanors committed in parts of a county which lie outside the boundaries of any city in the county within which a municipal court has been established. It is contended that this question is concluded by the decision in Green v. Superior Court, but we think it is not. The police court whose jurisdiction was under consideration in that case was the police court of the city and county of San Francisco and the superior court whose jurisdiction was questioned was the superior court of the state of California in and for that city and county. The area which the police court was "of" and which the superior court was "in and for" was the same—the territory included within the exterior boundaries of the city and county. We should have the same situation here if the county of Los Angeles were coterminous with either the city of Long Beach or the city of Los Angeles, in which two cities municipal courts have been established. There is within the boundaries of the two cities, however, but a fraction of the territory of the county. It is that fact which renders Green v. Superior Court inapplicable and which makes the question here presented a difficult one.

A point arises from the language of the Constitution which must be considered as a stepping-stone to the discussion of the questions springing from the two enactments of the Legislature attempting to confer jurisdiction upon the municipal courts. The organic law itself vests a certain jurisdiction in those tribunals. We have already seen that section 11 of article 6 contains the provision:

> "Municipal courts shall have original jurisdiction * * * in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to one thousand dollars or less, and of actions of forcible or unlawful entry or detainer where the rental value is one hundred dollars or less per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed is one thousand dollars or less, and in cases to enforce and foreclose liens on personal property where the amount of such liens or the value of the property is one thousand dollars or less, and in all criminal cases [including high grade misdemeanors]."

[4-7] Does this language confer upon a municipal court jurisdiction over high grade misdemeanors committed in any part of the county within which the court is located or only over such offenses when they are committed within the limits of the city in which the court sits? As indicating that only a strictly local jurisdiction was intended to be conferred, it is to be observed that the grant of jurisdiction over misdemeanors made in the Constitution is coupled, in the same sentence, with a grant of jurisdiction over civil cases, including actions as to real property, and particularly over actions of forcible or unlawful entry or detainer. These latter actions—those affecting real property generally—are local in character (Code Civ. Proc. § 392), and although the section cited, strictly speaking, makes them local as to county only, the Legislature has heretofore regarded actions of entry or detainer, especially, as local in a more restricted sense. In the legislation (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 113, 1163) vesting a concurrent jurisdiction in such cases in the justices' courts and in superior courts, the jurisdiction of the former is limited to the township over which each justice presides. And it is to be noted in this connection that actions of entry and detainer were the only real actions over which justices' courts were given jurisdiction. These enactments of the Legislature, venerable in their age, and therefore well known to the public, furnish an aid to the construction of the Constitution. It must be assumed, we think, that the people had them in mind in reframing the organic law. We think, therefore, that the criminal jurisdiction conferred upon the municipal courts by the Constitution is strictly local as to each court; that is, that under the grant only those offenses are cognizable by it which are committed within the limits of the municipality in which the court was created and in which it sits. In a grant of jurisdiction to a court named as the municipal courts are, with the direct and positive provisions which the Constitution contains as to their location—as to the territoriality within which they may exist—it can hardly be supposed that the people could have intended an exercise of an extraterritorial jurisdiction without saying so expressly. This statement must be true, especially, as it seems to us, under the form in which the grant of criminal jurisdiction is made. It accompanies a grant of civil jurisdiction which, in part, at least, is strictly local to each city in which a municipal court exists. Where a grant of jurisdiction over various matters is made by a single sentence, and the jurisdiction over some of them is necessarily local, it would appear that the entire grant confers only a local jurisdiction, unless it be specifically provided in the grant that as to some of the matters mentioned an exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction is intended. This conclusion is apparently not in accord with the views of a late text-writer. He refers to section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution as containing a "general grant of jurisdiction in terms unlimited territorially" (Tuttle on Cal. Mun. Courts, § 37, p. 72), and the reference is made in such a connection as to induce the view that the author's purpose is to concede a county-wide jurisdiction to municipal courts solely for the reason that the Constitution does not expressly provide that the jurisdiction granted is intracity, although he hints at a different possibility elsewhere (section 42, p. 87). We have shown that at least a part of the jurisdiction granted is local to cities in which municipal courts may be created, and that fact, with the consequences which flow from it in a construction placed upon the entire grant, would seem to meet the suggestion made by the author in question. Irrespective of this consideration, however, we think the author's view is incorrect upon general principles. That part of the jurisdiction conferred upon the municipal courts by section 11 of article 6, not taken from the justices' courts, formerly was vested in the superior courts, which are left by the Constitution to exercise a higher jurisdiction than the municipal courts. This is evident from the fact that the amount limiting the jurisdiction of the latter courts in civil cases, and the grade of offenses by which their jurisdiction is limited in criminal cases, are both below the limits prescribed for the superior courts, and by the further fact that the superior courts are to entertain appeals from the municipal courts. The latter courts are then inferior to the superior courts. Under such circumstances it seems that a grant of jurisdiction to the municipal court, which jurisdiction formerly resided in the superior court, must be strictly construed, and that, therefore, the failure of the Constitution to specify the territorial limits of jurisdiction operates as a restriction of the grant contained in it. Under Green v. Superior Court, supra, whatever jurisdiction is granted by the Constitution to the municipal courts is exclusive of the jurisdiction formerly vested in the superior court. The grant in section 11 of article 6, doubtless, comes within the meaning of the clause "otherwise provided for," contained in section 5. Upon the authority of the case cited the jurisdiction granted by section 11 is, doubtless, exclusive within the city limits of each municipality within which a municipal court is established; but we think the decision goes no further, for the reasons already stated, and because no question as to territorial jurisdiction was involved in it. To extend the effect of the case beyond the point indicated would be to violate a well-established proposition of law:

> "A court is not ousted of the jurisdiction which it possesses over a subject by a subsequent legislative enactment conferring jurisdiction on another court over the same subject, unless such an intention is plainly manifested either by the words of the statute or by a necessary implication therefrom." 15 C. J. 1131.

And it is a familiar rule that—

> "The general principles governing the construction of statutes apply also to the construction of Constitutions." 12 C. J. 699.

The grant of jurisdiction contained in section 11 is "subsequent" to the grant to the superior court contained in section 5, for in that respect the latter section has been in the same form for many years. The grant contained in section 11 was made at the general election of 1924.

[8] The question of which we have just made disposition is not free from difficulty, by any means, but we now come to one which is yet more troublesome. Did the people, by the clause to the effect that "the Legislature shall provide by general law * * * for the jurisdiction" of municipal courts "except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section," contained in section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution, intend to empower the lawmaking body to provide for the exercise of jurisdiction over misdemeanors committed in the territory of a county which lies outside the limits of cities in which municipal courts are created? As we have already discovered, the people themselves, by the Constitution, have granted to the municipal courts a jurisdiction which is strictly local to the city in which each of those courts is established. Here is the stepping-stone to which we have alluded on an earlier page. As the people so limited their grant, did they intend that the Legislature should confer upon the new courts an extraterritorial jurisdiction? The very form of the question indicates to some extent that they did not, but various other considerations are to be weighed before the question is finally answered. If the grant of jurisdiction contained in the Constitution were not clogged with the limitation which we see in it, the question before us might take on a different aspect. The courts have placed a construction upon section 1 of article 6 of the organic law which appears to support the view that the Legislature has power to confer upon municipal courts a county-wide jurisdiction. That section provides that "the judicial power of the state shall be vested in" certain courts, including "such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, * * * or city and county." To the list of courts contained in the section there was added, by amendment adopted in 1924, "such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county." Prior to this amendment the section had stood unchanged, in all respects material to our present inquiry, since the adoption of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has seen in the section, not a mere designation of the courts which may be established in the different parts of the state, each perhaps with a jurisdiction limited territorially to the city, town, or city and county within which it is created, but a list of courts for each of which the Legislature may prescribe a jurisdiction extraterritorial to the municipality "in" which it is established. This construction seems to have arisen from the fact that the Constitution reads that the judicial power of the state, not of a certain municipality in particular instances, shall be vested in the city courts contemplated by the provision, along with the other tribunals named in it, and was apparently forecasted in People v. Cobb, 133 Cal. 74, 65 P. 325, and perhaps in other cases, although it is not there directly declared. The construction is, however, directly announced in a later case. In the opinion there rendered the court referred to section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, in part, then provided (Stats. 1905, p. 49; Stats. 1907, p. 190), as it does now, that city justices of the peace "shall have the same jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as justices of the peace of townships and township justices' courts." In order that the effect of the decision may be appreciated, it becomes necessary to refer to the language of section 1425 of the Penal Code to the effect that "justices' courts have jurisdiction of the following public offenses committed with the respective counties in which such courts are established"; the particular offenses being then named. It is to be noted that, in addition to the language of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure above quoted, section 1425 of the Penal Code is found in a "title" which is headed "Proceedings in Justices' and Police Courts and Appeals to Superior Courts" and in a "chapter" headed "Proceedings in Justices' and Police Courts." In the opinion now under examination the Supreme Court, after referring to section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, said:

> "Justices of the peace are part of the constitutional judicial system of the state, having concurrent jurisdiction with superior courts in certain matters expressly given by the Constitution (article 6, § 11), and also having such jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases as is given by the general laws of the state to all justices of the peace. In this regard there is no distinction whatever between township and city justices. * * * A city justice is simply a part of this general state system, elected for a certain subdivision thereof. It is immaterial in this connection that the Legislature has attempted to confer upon city justices an additional jurisdiction in matters peculiar to the city, such as cases arising from violations of municipal ordinances, etc. The Constitution in terms provides that the Legislature shall determine the number of such justices of the peace to be elected in townships, incorporated cities and towns, or cities and counties, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of such office. Article 6, § 11." Graham v. City of Fresno, 151 Cal. 465, 91 P. 147.

The case cited should be read in connection with In re Kaster, 52 Cal. App. 454, and In re Kaster, 185 Cal. 647, 198 P. 1031, which plainly decide that the Legislature may confide to township justices' courts a jurisdiction over offenses committed in any part of the respective counties in which such courts sit. The effect of all three of these cases, under section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution, if that section alone be considered in its application to the new municipal courts, is obvious. By the amendment of 1924 the last-named courts were included in the list of tribunals specified in the section. In them a part of the judicial power "of the state" is now lodged. If we consider section 1 alone, under the cases cited, we must conclude that the Legislature has power to confer upon municipal courts a jurisdiction over offenses committed anywhere in the counties in which they respectively sit. But section 1 cannot be considered alone. We must reckon with section 11 of the same article. Section 1 itself makes no grant of jurisdiction. Section 11 does, but the grant contemplates only a jurisdiction, as to each municipal court, over offenses committed within the city in which the court sits and in which it exists. May the Legislature now grant to municipal courts a county-wide jurisdiction, under section 1 of article 6, or is the power to be exercised by that body controlled by the provisions of section 11 only, with such limitation as is imposed by the nature of the grant of jurisdiction contained in the section itself? And in answering the question it must be remembered that section 11 reads that the Legislature may provide for the jurisdiction of such courts "except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section." Here arises another question. Does this language import that the grant as to other particulars may include all the jurisdiction, territorially, grantable to justices' courts under section 1?

At this point in the discussion we are called upon to consider a late decision of the Supreme Court in a prohibition proceeding, announced under a condition of affairs now to be stated. Section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution contains this provision:

> "In any city * * * where such municipal court has been established, and in townships situated in whole or in part in such city * * * there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court except as herein provided,"

—the evident purport of the language being that in the territory described there should be no court inferior to the superior court except a municipal court. A municipal court was established in the city of Long Beach, and at the time of its creation a certain township lay partly within and partly outside the corporate limits of the city. The question was presented to the Supreme Court whether, under the language of the Constitution last above quoted, the existence of the justice's court which had theretofore exercised jurisdiction within the township in question was terminated. The Supreme Court determined that the township court continued to exist, but that its powers within the city were at an end. The decision limited the territorial jurisdiction of the justice to that portion of the township lying outside the limits of the municipality. The conclusion was reached and is expressed in the following language:

> "Reading said constitutional amendment as a whole, it is manifest that its purpose was to provide for the organization and functioning of so-called municipal courts within the territorial limits of such cities and cities and counties as possessed the requisite population therefor and as should by the ways provided therein conclude to embrace its benefits, the municipal courts to be thus established to be confined in some respects as to their jurisdiction and functions to the territorial limits of the municipalities thus resolving to establish the same. It was a matter of public political record and history of which the framers of this amendment apparently took notice that in the course of establishing such municipal courts in such municipalities cases would arise where townships with their already established justices' courts would be found to lie partly within and partly without the prescribed limits of such municipalities, and which would as to that portion of the area of such townships as lay within the boundaries of such municipalities be affected by the action of the latter in resolving to bind themselves within the terms of said amendment and that as to such portions of such townships thus to be affected the provisions of said amendment should be operative. But it nowhere appears from said amendment when considered as a whole that it was the intent of those who framed it to disturb to the extent of destroying the judicial organization within those portions of such affected townships as lay outside of the limits of those municipalities which had decided to set up municipal courts within their said limits. To so interpret the particular language of the portion of said amendment upon which the petitioner relies, and which is above excerpted, would be to give to the amendment as a whole the effect of either taking away from the inhabitants of the portion of such townships as lay without the bounds of such municipalities their already established justices' courts, leaving them without tribunals for the institution and trial of causes within the jurisdiction of such court, or of extending the jurisdiction of the municipal courts of contiguous cities over such outlying territory, neither of which results is thinkable as within the intent of the framers of this amendment to the Constitution, since to give it such an interpretation would be to take away from the inhabitants of such outlying territory their already established system of justices' courts and township officers by the vote of the electorate of an incorporated municipality of which they form no part, and to substitute in place thereof a system of municipal courts in the establishment of which and in the selection of the judges and other officers of which they would have no vote or voice."

The italics are those of the Supreme Court. After quoting from various cases dealing with questions of statutory and constitutional construction the court proceeds:

> "Having in mind these principles and applying them to the amendment as a whole and to the particular language in the portion thereof above quoted and upon which the petitioner places his main reliance, we are of the opinion that the phrase therein reading, 'In townships situated in * * * part in said city or city and county, there shall be no other court,' etc., should be interpreted to mean that it was the intent of the framers of said amendment to provide that in such part of such townships as would be found to be situated within such city or cities establishing such municipal court there should be no other inferior courts than such municipal courts as were to be provided therefor under the terms of said amendment. Such an interpretation would leave said amendment entirely free from the absurdity and confusion which would result from placing the meaning upon said clause for which the petitioner contends."

The opinion then refers to a statute passed by the Legislature and touching the subject of municipal courts, and says further:

> "It thus appears that the Legislature by the foregoing provisions in said act has placed upon the constitutional amendment in question precisely the interpretation which in our opinion should be given to its terms. It would seem to follow from the foregoing considerations that within that portion of Los Angeles township lying outside of incorporated territory and wherein the original case against said petitioner arose, the justice's court of said township still continued to exist and function. It is true that it did so within restricted territory in view of the action of the city of Long Beach in electing to organize a system of municipal courts within its own territorial limits, but the original jurisdiction of said justice's court remained otherwise unimpaired. And, if this conclusion be correct, it would seem to further follow that the fact, if it be a fact, that the city of Long Beach had or had not succeeded by amendment of its charter in bringing itself within the terms of the constitutional amendment and in thus establishing a system of municipal courts within its territorial limits, would be immaterial to the determination of this cause, since the offense with which the petitioner stands charged was committed in a portion of Los Angeles township which was never within the territorial limits of said city of Long Beach." Bakkenson v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 504, 241 P. 874.

We have studied this case with the utmost care, in an endeavor to see in it no departure from the reasoning upon which is based the decisions in Green v. Superior Court, supra, and in the two cases In re Kaster, supra, in so far as it may be contended that those decisions affect the jurisdiction of municipal courts, but without avail. In its late decision the Supreme Court declares that it is intended by the Constitution that the municipal courts are "to be confined in some respects as to their jurisdiction and functions to the territorial limits of the municipalities * * * resolving to establish the same." Owing to the use by the court of the qualifying phrase "in some respects" this passage itself presents no great difficulty. It is only when later expressions of the court are examined that a conflict with the earlier cases, if it be sought to apply them to the municipal courts, seems to appear. One of these later expressions is that in which the court says that the contention of the petitioner leads to one or the other of two unthinkable results. One of these results is that of extending the jurisdiction—and the court is careful to italicize the words —"of the municipal courts of contiguous cities over such outlying territory." The court says that neither of the results mentioned is thinkable, because to allow them would be "to take away from the inhabitants of such outlying territory their already established system of justices' courts and township officers by the vote of the electorate of an incorporated municipality of which they form no part, and to substitute in place thereof a system of municipal courts in the establishment of which and in the selection of the judges and other officers of which they would have no vote or voice." The latter part of this reasoning—that relating to "the selection of the judges and other officers"—is necessarily, as it seems to us, in conflict with the conclusion reached in Green v. Superior Court and in the cases In re Kaster, if it be sought to apply those cases to municipal courts. We need not pause to cite the statutes under which city and township justices are to be elected by the people of the cities or townships within which, respectively, they are to sit. Under the rule of the cases last cited any citizen of a county—and that, of course, means, in the last analysis, every citizen of a county—may be subjected to the jurisdiction of any and every city and township justice in the county, in the election of none of which he has had a vote or choice, except that one or those who occupy the bench in his own city or township. We have above referred to the statutes under which justices are limited to the territory of their respective townships or cities in the exercise of jurisdiction in actions of entry and detainer, and to the understanding of that rule which permeates the community—the state. Doubtless, under the cases last cited, the Legislature has the power to confer upon justices' courts a county-wide jurisdiction in such actions. The entire effect of those cases, as bearing upon the various instances just stated, seems to be obliterated by the reasoning of Bakkenson v. Superior Court, when it is sought to apply them to municipal courts.

The remark in the opinion in Bakkenson v. Superior Court to the effect that, under the contention of the petitioner, the people of the portion of the township lying outside the limits of Long Beach might be deprived of their system of courts "by the vote of the electorate of an incorporated municipality of which they form no part," requires a particular consideration. The courts contemplated by the decisions in Green v. Superior Court and in the cases In re Kaster, are created by the Legislature, a body which represents the entire electorate of the state. As to the municipal courts the situation is quite different. In the establishment of such courts the people of the state at large have no voice, and in that fact lies a very cogent reason for the conclusion reached by the Supreme Court in its late decision. A system for the creation of municipal courts has been established by the people of the state by means of the Constitution, just as they have established a system for the adoption of freeholders' charters by cities, but a municipal court may not be erected, nor may a charter be adopted in any city except at its own behest. The Constitution provides, as to municipal courts, that such a tribunal may be established in a city when its charter, or an amendment thereto, so provides, or when its people shall so vote at an election. Article 6, § 11. The actual establishment of a municipal court therefore takes on the character of a "municipal affair" as that term is employed in the section of the Constitution relating to the adoption of freeholders' charters. These observations, somewhat amplifying the language of Bakkenson v. Superior Court, show a vast difference between justices' courts and municipal courts in a respect which is most material to the question now before us, and are persuasive of a conclusion that the municipal courts were intended to exercise but an intracity jurisdiction.

Another consideration is closely allied with the point touched upon in the last preceding paragraph. Townships are political subdivisions of a county (Pol. Code, § 4015), just as counties are political subdivisons of the state. Added together, townships cover the entire state. In this circumstance there would seem to exist a warrant for a grant of a county-wide jurisdiction to justices' courts. If an offense is committed in a certain township, and there is any sound reason why a charge based upon it should not be tried there, another township is near at hand, the jurisdiction of which may be invoked for a trial of the charge. The situation is different as to cities, and especially as to cities of over 40,000 inhabitants governed under freeholders' charters; these being the only cities within which municipal courts may be established under the Constitution. Cities are not together continuous and connected political subdivisions of the state. They are distinct individual entities. Cities, and especially charter cities, are in a sense independent political organizations, each practically imperium in imperio. Const. art. 11, § 8. Charter cities of more than 40,000 inhabitants are few and far between and in many, perhaps in a majority, of the counties there is none. Under all these circumstances a peculiar situation would arise if the contention of appellant was upheld. In many of the counties—those in which there can be no municipal courts—the superior courts would still possess jurisdiction over high grade misdemeanors. In those counties in which municipal courts are established the same jurisdiction would rest in the single municipal court, or in the few municipal courts in each, to the utter exclusion of the superior courts in those counties. It cannot be supposed that the people, by the Constitution, would authorize such an anomalous condition of affairs to be created by the Legislature except by express language intended to vest such an authority. It is therefore quite logical upon these considerations to see in the provisions of the Constitution as to municipal courts an intention upon the part of the people to authorize the establishment of strictly city courts.

We conclude that the Legislature was without power to give to municipal courts a county-wide jurisdiction over high grade misdemeanors, and that such jurisdiction, when invoked as to offenses committed outside of the territory of cities in which municipal courts have been established, rests now, as it did formerly, in the superior courts.

In criminal No. 1382 the judgment is affirmed. In criminal No. 1460 the writ is discharged, and the prisoner is remanded to custody.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

81 Cal. App. 76

OLES v. KAHN BROS. et al. (Civ. 5484.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1927.)

1. Trial ⇨139(1), 165—Motion for nonsuit should be denied, if there is any evidence sustaining plaintiff's case, and facts which evidence tends to prove are assumed as true.

Motion for nonsuit should be denied, if there is any evidence to sustain plaintiff's case, without passing on question of sufficiency; material facts which evidence tends to prove being assumed to be true.

2. Trial ⇨165—On motion for nonsuit, evidence contradictory to plaintiff's evidence must be disregarded.

Where, on motion for nonsuit, evidence is susceptible of two constructions, court must take view most favorable to plaintiff, disregarding contradictory evidence.

3. Negligence ⇨136(27)—Whether lunch counter customer slipping on uneven platform knew of danger, held for jury.

In action against owner of department store as lessor of lunch counter enterprise, for injuries sustained by customer, who, after arising from stool at lunch counter, stumbled on uneven platform to which stool was fastened, issue at to whether plaintiff observed unevenness of platform and had knowledge of existence of danger at time of stepping thereon held for jury.

4. Negligence ⇨136(27)—Customer's knowledge of dangerous condition of platform at lunch counter held for jury.

In action against lessor of lunch counter for injuries sustained on leaving counter by stumbling on uneven platform to which stools were attached, mere fact that plaintiff saw platform when she stepped on it, did not warrant court, as matter of law, in finding that plaintiff knew, or should have known, of existence of unevenness in surface of platform.

5. Negligence ⇨136(27)—Contributory negligence of customer in failing to remember dangerous condition of lunch counter platform held for jury.

In action by customer against lessor of lunch counter for injuries sustained by stumbling over uneven platform in leaving counter, though plaintiff observed unevenness on ascending platform, whether her failure to keep such element of danger in mind while arising from stool and leaving platform was want of ordinary care, held for jury, in view of rule that forgetfulness of known danger will not operate to prevent recovery, unless it constitutes want of ordinary care.

6. Negligence ⇨136(22)—Whether lunch counter platform was dangerous held for jury.

In action for injuries sustained by stumbling over uneven platform on leaving lunch counter, whether unevenness rendered platform unsafe and dangerous held for jury.

7. Negligence ⇨136(27)—Whether dangerous condition of lunch counter platform was patent to customer held for jury.

Whether unsafe condition of platform at lunch counter was patent to customer because of its unevenness held for jury, in action for injuries sustained by stumbling over platform on leaving lunch counter.

8. Trial ⇨159—Insufficiency of pleadings in action for injuries caused by uneven platform at lunch counter did not warrant nonsuit, where issue of defective condition was raised in answer and at trial.

In action for injuries from stumbling over uneven platform at lunch counter, though complaint did not set out fact of negligence or facts constituting negligence, court was not justified in granting nonsuit, where defects in complaint were rendered harmless because of defendant's answer, which made issue of alleged defective and unsafe condition of platform and trial which proceeded on that issue.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

9. Negligence 🔑108(2)—Pleading must allege injurious acts were done negligently or facts excluding any other hypothesis than negligence.

In action for injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, it must appear from complaint that acts causing injury were done negligently, or else facts alleged must of themselves necessarily exclude any hypothesis other than that of negligence.

10. Pleading 🔑403(2)—Complaint lacking necessary averment may be aided by allegations of answer.

Complaint which lacks averment of fact essential to cause of action may be aided by averments of fact in answer to uphold judgment.

11. Pleading 🔑403(4)—Where issue of defendant's negligence as proximate cause of injury is raised by answer, and case is fairly tried, defect in complaint becomes immaterial.

Though complaint fails to allege that negligence of defendant was proximate cause of injury, such defect is rendered immaterial where issue of negligence is raised by answer, and case fairly tried under circumstances indicating defendant was not injured by pleadings.

12. Landlord and tenant 🔑169(11)—Whether department store leasing lunch counter was liable for injuries caused by defective condition of platform held for jury.

Whether department store leasing lunch counter had sufficient control over business of lunch counter to legally connect it with liability for injuries caused by defective condition of platform to which stools were attached held for jury, in action for injuries sustained by slipping on platform.

13. Landlord and tenant 🔑169(5)—Where department store, sued for injuries sustained from uneven platform at lunch counter, claimed to be mere lessor, rejecting menu which contained name of store held error.

In action against department store leasing lunch counter for injuries sustained from stumbling over platform at counter, sustaining objection to menu used at lunch counter on which name of department store was printed held error, as such menu tended to show department store had interest in business beyond that of mere lessor.

14. Negligence 🔑32(1)—Owner or occupant of premises owes invitee duty of ordinary care to keep premises in safe condition.

Owner or occupant of premises who induces others to come upon it by invitation expressed or implied owes them duty of using reasonable care to keep premises in safe and suitable condition, so that invitees will not be unnecessarily or unreasonably exposed to danger.

15. Landlord and tenant 🔑167(2)—Department store, leasing lunch counter, over which it retained partial control, owed duty to invitees to keep counter in safe condition.

Department store, leasing lunch counter in its store, which retained control over its business with regard to employees and quality of goods and prices, owed duty of reasonable and ordinary care to persons using lunch counter to keep premises in safe and suitable condition so that such persons would not be unreasonably exposed to danger.

16. Negligence 🔑32(2)—Persons entering store during business hours to purchase goods are invitees.

Person who enters store during business hours to purchase goods enters on implied invitation of owner of store.

17. Negligence 🔑44—Storekeeper is required to use ordinary care to keep passageways used by customers in safe condition.

Storekeeper owes to customers duty of exercising ordinary care to keep aisles and passageways through which customer goes in reasonably safe condition so as not to expose customer to danger or accident.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Mortimer Smith, Judge.

Action by Katherine C. Oles against Kahn Bros., a corporation, and W. J. O'Brien. Judgment of nonsuit for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for appellant.

Snook & Brown and Thos. J. Ledwich, all of Oakland, for respondent Kahn Bros.

George A. Connolly, of San Francisco, for respondent O'Brien.

KNIGHT, J. An appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit in an action to recover damages for personal injuries. About noon on the day of the accident appellant entered a department store owned and operated by Kahn Bros., a corporation, for the purpose of making a purchase of merchandise, and, while there, seated herself on a stool in front of a lunch counter maintained in said store and operated by respondent W. J. O'Brien, intending to lunch thereat. Upon arising from the stool, she slipped or stumbled from a low platform on which the stool was fastened and was thereby injured.

The complaint alleged:

"That the said fall by plaintiff to the floor, and the said injuries, was and were occasioned by the unsafe and defective condition of said stool and platform, in this, that a portion of the said temporary platform, and to which portion the stool upon which plaintiff had been seated was affixed, consisted of a wooden plank of an inch or more in thickness, one end of which was immediately to the right of said stool, so that, when plaintiff was arising from said stool, and turned to the right to step to the floor, her right foot slipped from the end of said plank causing her to lose her balance and fall as aforesaid;" that plaintiff "did not know that the platform was uneven, or in the condition hereinabove described, or in any dangerous or defective condition."

The evidence shows with more particularity, the construction of said platform and stool to have been as follows: The stool upon which appellant seated herself, together with three other stools, was fastened to an inch plank laid upon, and securely fastened to, a temporary wooden platform, composed of two-inch planks resting on joists laid upon and along the surface of the tile floor. The platform was about two and a half feet wide, and the elevation was approximately six inches above the tile floor; the space between the tile floor and the under surface of said two-inch planks being left open. The edge of the one-inch plank on which the stools were fastened extended to within a few inches of the outer edge of the platform, and the end thereof projected five or six inches beyond the base of the fourth or extreme right-hand stool on which appellant was seated, causing an uneven surface on the platform the thickness of said one-inch plank. The circular-shaped seat of the stool was thirty inches above the surface of the platform, and rested on a standard running down into a cone-shaped base, fastened to said one-inch plank, the base of the cone resting in the center of, and covering about two-thirds of the width of said plank. The evidence further shows that the construction of said platform and stool was rigid and strong.

The direct cause of appellant's fall, as testified to by the only witness who observed the movement of appellant's feet as she was about to leave the platform, was that "* * * one board was shorter than the other, and her foot turned on it." Continuing, the witness stated: "I saw her foot as it turned, and it just threw her—there was nothing there for her foot to rest on, she lost her balance, and just plunged off the platform." Regarding this same matter, and aside from any confusion which respondents claim exists in the testimony, appellant testified in effect that, after arising from the stool, she stood erect, took one short step, and, as she started to take another step, fell; that when taking the second step, she felt her foot "strike the board," but that she "did not see the board," nor did she "actually see" what caused her "to stumble."

Respondents contend that, even though it be conceded that the platform was in an unsafe condition on account of the unevenness thereof, the granting of the nonsuit must be sustained upon the ground of appellant's contributory negligence, in that it affirmatively appears from her testimony, as they claim, that she observed the condition of the platform when she stepped up to take her seat on said stool, and that, having knowledge of its condition, failed to exercise ordinary care in arising from the stool and leaving the platform.

[1, 2] The general rule is that a motion for a nonsuit should be denied when there is any evidence to sustain the plaintiff's case, without passing upon the question of its sufficiency, or as to whether the court believed it or not. Upon such motion the material facts which the evidence tends to prove must be assumed to be true; if the evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiff, and, if contradictory evidence has been given, it must be disregarded. Mitchell v. Brown, 18 Cal. App. 117, 122 P. 426.

Disregarding, therefore, any asserted contradiction in the proof, it appears from appellant's testimony that she looked down and saw "the platform" when she "stepped up" to be seated on the stool; that it appeared to her "like it was just temporary construction"; also that she "just glanced down at the platform" as she arose from the stool in leaving. (Italics ours.) But in connection therewith she further testified, on redirect examination, that prior to the accident she had not observed any unevenness in the platform at the point where she fell; that after she had fallen, and was seated in a chair which had been brought to her, she noticed "that the end of the board extended out a short distance from the stool."

[3, 4] We are of the opinion that the latter testimony is, as appellant contends, susceptible to the fair inference that, athough appellant realized, necessarily, that there was a platform upon which she stepped in taking her seat on the stool, she did not in fact observe the details of construction of said platform so as to note the unevenness of its surface; and, therefore, since the evidence tends to show, as already pointed out, that the unevenness of said platform was the element of danger which caused appellant to fall, the question of whether appellant did observe the unevenness of the platform, and, consequently, have knowledge of the existence of the said danger, should have been left to the determination of the jury. In other words, we believe that the mere fact that appellant saw the platform when she stepped upon it would not warrant the court in declaring, as a matter of law, that she knew, or should have known of the existence of any unevenness in its surface, particularly in view of her positive statement to the contrary. Brinkworth v. Sam Seelig Co., 51 Cal. App. 668, 197 P. 427.

In furtherance of their contention that appellant did observe the unevenness of said platform, respondents call attention to the fact that appellant testified as to particular matters concerning the construction thereof, in so far as it related to projections and measurements, and the location of the stool thereon. But in this connection the record fairly supports the conclusion that the facts thus testified to by appellant were gained by her as a result of the observations she was making from the photograph of the platform, regarding which she was then being cross-examined, and also from those made by her while seated in the chair, near the point of the accident, after the happening thereof, and that said testimony was not based upon observations made by her before she started to leave the platform.

[5] Even though appellant's testimony was susceptible of the one construction that prior to the accident she did observe the unevenness of said platform, which it is claimed constituted the element of danger, there would still be the question for the determination of the jury as to whether or not it was a want of ordinary care on the part of appellant not to have kept in mind such element of danger while arising from the stool and leaving the platform. Hayward v. Downer, 65 Cal. App. 450, 224 P. 265; Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 205 P. 1078. In the former case it was said:

> "There is much respectable authority in support of appellant's first point, and such, in fact, was the rule in this state until the Supreme Court, in Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 503, 205 P. 1078, held that, notwithstanding this knowledge and means of knowledge, it was for the jury to determine whether it was a want of ordinary care for the injured not to have the source of danger in mind."

And in the latter case it was declared:

> "Even forgetfulness of a known danger will not always operate to prevent such recovery, for to forget is not negligence, unless it shows a want of ordinary care. Generally the question is one for the jury (Roseberry v. Edward F. Neihaus & Co., 166 Cal. 481, 483, 137 P. 232) and the present case comes well within the rule."

[6, 7] We find no merit in the further point made by respondents that under neither the allegations of the complaint nor the circumstances proved at the trial was it shown that the platform was defective; or, if it was, that such defect was patent, and, consequently, no recovery can be based thereon. The complaint alleged, and substantial evidence was offered to prove, that the platform was uneven, and that by reason of that condition alone appellant sustained injuries. It was therefore a question for the jury to decide as to whether such unevenness rendered the platform unsafe and dangerous, and, if so, whether, under the circumstances adduced, its dangerous and unsafe condition was patent to appellant. The action herein is not based upon the ground that appellant's fall was occasioned by the mere presence of said platform, but on account of the uneven surface thereof; the action in this respect differing from those cited by respondents upon this point, wherein the injuries were caused by falling on steps or elevated structures which the owner has a right to assume would be obvious to an invitee upon the ordinary use of the latter's own senses.

[8-11] Respondents further contend that the judgment of nonsuit must be sustained in any event upon the ground that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that it contains no general allegation of negligence, nor any general allegation as to the stool and platform being "unsafe and defective"; and that, although appellant attempts to set out with particularity the specific defective condition of the stool and platform, the facts alleged do not of themselves show such condition to have been unsafe or defective. It is doubtless necessary, as respondents assert, that it appear in the pleading by direct averment that the acts causing the injury were done negligently, or else the facts alleged must in and of themselves necessarily exclude any hypothesis other than that of negligence (South v. County of San Benito, 40 Cal. App. 13, 180 P. 354); but we think that the allegations hereinabove referred to bring the complaint within the rule stated. But, even though the complaint be subject to the defects claimed, they were rendered harmless, because the answers of respondents fully tendered the issue of the alleged defective and unsafe condition of said platform and stool, and the trial of the action proceeded upon that issue. "The rule is well settled that a complaint which lacks the averment of a fact essential to a cause of action may be so aided by the averment of that fact in the answer as to uphold a judgment thereon, * * * even though a demurrer to the complaint for the want of this fact had been erroneously overruled" (Daggett v. Gray, 110 Cal. 169, 42 P. 568, cited approvingly with other authorities in Martin v. Southern Pacific Co., 44 Cal. App. 3, 185 P. 1030); and, where a complaint is defective in that it does not expressly allege that the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury, but such issue is raised by the answer, and the case is fairly tried upon the merits, and under circumstances indicating that nothing in the pleadings misled defendant to his injury, the matter of pleadings becomes immaterial. Fay v. Cox, 45 Cal. App. 696, 188 P. 623.

[12] Equally without merit is the contention urged on behalf of respondent Kahn Bros., Inc., that, irrespective of all questions of negligence, the nonsuit as to it must be sustained upon the ground that its legal relation to the lunch counter enterprise was merely that of lessor. True, there was a provision in said lease that Kahn Bros. "should have no interest in said business"; but, when all the evidence adduced on this point is considered, the inference may be reasonably drawn therefrom that the interest mentioned was a financial one only, and that it still retained a certain amount of control over the conduct of said business and of that portion of the premises occupied by it which would tend to legally connect it with liability for any injuries proximately caused by the alleged defective condition of said platform.

The evidence in this respect was in substance as follows: Said counter was located within the department store, and on the main floor thereof; and, according to the testimony of the vice president of said corporation, was maintained for the purpose of serving meals to patrons of said store, the aisle adjacent to the stools in front of said counter being used in common by patrons of the store and the lunch counter. The lease provided that said enterprise should be conducted in the name of Kahn Bros. and not in the name of the lessee. The right was given to the lessor to cause the discharge of the lessee's employees on reasonable grounds; to require the lessee to improve the quality of his goods or reduce his prices; and make such discounts on sales made to dressmakers, employees, and such other classes as the lessor should deem wise. It further provided that the lessee should do no advertising of said business in his own name or otherwise than in the name of the lessor, nor without first obtaining the consent of the lessor, and many other restrictions were placed upon the conduct and operation of said lunch counter business, which need not be mentioned herein. Said lease contained the further provision that the location, style, arrangement, color, and construction of all fixtures should be subject to the approval of the lessor, and it was shown that, pursuant to the provision last mentioned, the original installation and construction of said lunch counter, together with the necessary equipment, including said platform and stool, and the subsequent changes and repairs thereto, were done and made with the approval of Kahn Bros.

[13] In addition appellant, offered in evidence a printed menu generally used at said lunch counter, on the front cover of which is printed: "Kahn's Soda Fountain Menu," but, on objection by respondent Kahn Bros., the evidence was excluded. We believe that appellant was entitled to the proof as a circumstance tending to show that Kahn Bros. had an interest in said business beyond that of mere lessor.

[14-17] In view of the foregoing facts, it would seem that the status of the respondent Kahn Bros. was sufficiently brought within the general rule that the owner or occupant of premises who induces others to come upon it by invitation, express or implied, owes them the duty of using reasonable and ordinary care to keep the premises in a safe and suitable condition so that they will not be unnecessarily or unreasonably exposed to danger (29 Cyc. 453; Herzog v. Hemphill, 7 Cal. App. 116, 93 P. 899; Means v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 144 Cal. 473, 77 P. 1001, 1 Ann. Cas. 206), and also within the rule of Brinkworth v. Sam Seelig Co., supra, and the cases therein cited, which hold that one who, during business hours, lawfully enters a store to purchase goods, does so at the implied invitation of the owner, upon whom the law imposes the duty of exercising ordinary care and prudence to keep the aisles and passageways, in and through which by their location and arrangement a customer in making his purchases is induced to go, in a reasonably safe condition so as to not unnecessarily expose him to danger or accident; it appearing here that said platform in question was located in a part of said store where customers were wont and were required to go while making purchases therein. Williamson v. Hardy, 47 Cal. App. 377, 190 P. 646.

From the state of the record before us, we conclude that the motions for nonsuit were erroneously granted, and therefore the judgment entered thereon is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

81 Cal. App. 30

PEOPLE v. RICHARDS. (Cr. 1351.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 25, 1927.)

Criminal law ⟹1186(4)—In prosecution for rape, court's statement of evidence to jury, while so unfair as to constitute error, held not ground for reversal (Const. art. 6, §§ 4½, 19; Pen. Code, § 1138).

In prosecution for rape, court's statement of evidence, on return by jury for further instructions, held so one-sided and unfair to defendant as to constitute error, under Const. art. 6, § 19, and Pen. Code, § 1138, though not ground for reversal, in view of clear case against defendant and Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Craig, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Tom D. Richards was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Karl A. Machetanz, of Exeter, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant in this case was charged by information with the crime of rape, alleged to have been committed by force and violence, and against the resistance of a female not his wife, in the county of Tulare, on or about the 5th day of July, 1925. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, a motion for new trial was presented which was denied, and this is an appeal from the judgment and from the order denying such motion.

The only question here in controversy is as to whether or not the trial court committed reversible error in a statement made by it following protracted deliberation and return by the jury into court for further instructions. We deem it expedient to first relate the predominant facts as they were presented to the jury by the respective parties.

It is conceded that on the evening of July 4, 1925, the prosecutrix, the appellant, and a companion of the latter drove from the city of Visalia to Porterville, and thence to Terminus Beach at the invitation of appellant and in the latter's automobile; that the appellant and the prosecuting witness danced at the beach, and at about 11:30 p. m. started back toward Visalia; that the third party did not return with them; that the two principals followed the Mineral King highway for a distance of six or seven miles, whereupon the defendant turned onto a byroad, stopped his car, turned out the lights, and stepped from the car; that he walked to her side of the machine, and she moved to the other side and stepped out; they both testified that shortly afterward the defendant had intercourse with her. The crux of the case consists of the construction placed by the jury upon conflicting evidence as to whether there was resistance or voluntary submission upon the part of the prosecutrix, and, as to whether or not the remarks of the trial court improperly influenced the jury in its conclusion in this respect, as indicated by the verdict. The girl testified that the defendant threw her to the ground; that she fought, kicked him, and pulled his hair, and that she struggled until too exhausted to further resist; that she screamed nearly all of the time, and that the defendant told her that if she did not keep quiet he would knock her senseless; and ten other witnesses, including a physician, corroborated her testimony as to her physical condition. It appeared that her clothing was soiled, her hair was matted with dirt, her body was bruised, and she was in such a deplorable state that she was confined to her bed for several days thereafter. In the face of these facts, the defendant testified that the prosecuting witness had submitted with almost no reluctance.

The jury retired at about 4 o'clock p. m., and on the following morning returned into court, whereupon the foreman stated that some of them could not understand the question of fact as to "whether it was force or whether it was not." The trial judge replied as follows:

> "That is for the jury to determine. The court cannot instruct you as to whether it was force or not. The court cannot give any instruction that involves a construction by the court of what the facts are, that is, as to how the jury should find the facts. The jury should determine these facts for themselves.
>
> "Now, this case has been tried twice and the jury have all the evidence before it, and it appears to the court as though they ought to arrive at a verdict; and the only thing the court can do is to give you further time to consider it. It might state the testimony to the jury in relation to the fact that you have inquired about. The defendant admits the sexual intercourse. He testified it was obtained by consent of the prosecuting witness. On the other hand, the prosecuting witness testifies that she did not consent; that the act was committed by force and by threats of great bodily harm; and that she was exhausted and gave up. She came into town with the defendant. She was covered with filth—that is, with dirt; her clothing, her arms and face and her hair full of dirt and dust. Three or four witnesses besides her testified to those facts. They testified to bruises on her body. She was with the defendant up to the time she arrived in town and at her home. She immediately went up the stairs and told her friend of what had occurred. And the testimony of her friends and of the doctor are that she was in the condition as stated by the court; that is as the testimony has been given by those witnesses. Now it is for the jury to determine from all the facts whether the defendant committed the act by force or not, or by threats of great bodily harm."

The authorities upon which appellant relies for a reversal recite and condemn expressions of trial courts stating their conclusions to juries upon the testimony before them. In People v. Casey, 65 Cal. 260, 3 P. 874, it was said:

> "To state the testimony is one thing. To declare what it shows is another and very different thing. It is for the jury, exclusively, to determine what the testimony shows." (Italics in original.)

In that case the jury were told that the evidence showed that the defendant had endeavored to dispose of the property, the subject-matter of the action. In People v. Pitisci, 29 Cal. App. 727, 157 P. 502, the jury were present when the court stated to counsel that a given theory was "an absurdity." Other inhibited statements to juries, such as "Do not be contrary," "It seems very plain to me," "As to those facts there is no contention and you must find accordingly," that they were not at liberty to disregard the testimony of a witness, that "of course" the defendant "has a powerful motive to swear himself out of this thing," and that, as men of common sense, they must recognize the interest of the defendant's daughters, who testified in the case.

Section 19, article 6, of the Constitution, provides that:

> "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact but may state the testimony and declare the law."

In the instant case the trial judge stated the testimony of eyewitnesses, without resort to details, and correctly declared that:

> "It is for the jury to determine from all of the facts whether the defendant committed the act by force or not, or by threats of great bodily harm."

It nowhere appears that the court indicated a belief as to the truth or falsity of any witness' testimony, or that the jury should believe the facts to be true as had been testified, or find for or against the defendant if they believed them.

As long as we preserve the system of giving the jury the exclusive right to pass upon matters of fact and exclude judges from that right, no suggestion must be made by the trial court as to its opinion upon the weight of evidence or the credibility of witnesses. It is, indeed, a difficult matter to avoid error in that regard and to state a considerable portion of the testimony, especially in trials of long duration. Hence, in a number of instances our Supreme Court has advised that trial judges refrain entirely from the exercise of their authority to state the evidence, and has further suggested that, if it be found necessary to state the evidence, all of the testimony be read. The wisdom of such a course cannot be doubted. However, trial courts are often confronted with situations which no measure of foresight or degree of wisdom can prophesy or provide against. And so, in many cases, a wide discretion is permitted, and the rule is universally accepted that all intendments must be resolved favorably to the rulings made at the time of the trial. In connection with this question in spite of the pointed advice against the statement of the testimony, in a number of cases in this state, and in numerous other jurisdictions where similar provisions as to the distinction between the province of the court and the jury exist, the action of a trial judge who has stated the testimony had been held not only to be not prejudicially erroneous, but free from error. Therefore trial courts may state the testimony, using their own language to do so. They may do this without giving all of the testimony or having it read by the stenographic reporter. This was done and was upheld in the following cases: People v. Perry, 65 Cal. 569, 4 P. 572; People v. Wilson, 23 Cal. App. 513, 138 P. 971; People v. Vasquez, 49 Cal. 561; People v. Christensen, 85 Cal. 568, 24 P. 888.

Of all of the instances where the Supreme Court has advised against this procedure perhaps the danger has been most pointedly set forth and the admonition most strongly pronounced in People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 67 P. 694. It will be sufficient for the purposes of this case to take that decision as a measure. If we may safely say that the instruction here under consideration does not violate the fundamentals there indicated as reasons for the warning given, no error has in fact been committed, although by pursuing the course which followed great risk of falling into such error was perhaps unnecessarily run. In that case it was said:

> "It is as dangerous as it is unnecessary for the court to attempt to state the evidence. To state the evidence means to state it with fairness and exactness, and this is impracticable, unless all of the evidence in the case should be repeated. The attempt usually results, as it has in this case, in an instruction upon the facts, or upon the supposed facts, which is both argumentative and unjust—argumentative, because the apparent opinion of the court as to the defendant's guilt can be seen thinly veiled; unjust, because of its assumption of matters either not proved, or at least in dispute—an assumption which eliminates any consideration of the evidence favorable to the defendant, and which, coming from the court, bears most heavily against him."

The instruction which the trial court had given was very lengthy, and, as the opinion points out, assumed a number of important facts which were in dispute, and contained statements which were clearly argumentative. Such an instruction called forth a strong caution against the practice of attempting to state the testimony to the jury; and yet, it was certainly not intended to deny to trial courts the right provided by our state Constitution to "state the testimony." The objection to the court attempting to do this is based upon the proposition that such an effort usually results in an instruction which is both argumentative and unjust. From a careful analysis of the instruction of which complaint is here made, we cannot say that it is in any sense argumentative. It cannot be said that the court's opinion is exhibited by its statement of the testimony of the witnesses. In the opinion in the Matthai Case it is said that such an instruction is usually unjust, "because of its assumption of matters either not proved, or at least in dispute." In the instruction in the case at bar, nothing was assumed. The court did no more than to state the effect of the testimony of the defendant himself and that of other witnesses, all of whose statements, except those of the complaining witness, were entirely undisputed. In view of other decisions of our Supreme Court, it cannot be concluded that the trial court, in its exercise of the authority conferred by the provision of the Constitution to which we have adverted, must give a verbatim statement of the testimony of witnesses, or none at all.

In People v. Perry, supra, the trial court instructed the jury that:

> "The testimony there certainly could be no misunderstanding with regard to. I state as the testimony in the case, the only testimony in the case touching the time when the watch was taken, is that tending to show it was taken near the door, and that of the defendant that he picked it up in front of the counter."

While the Supreme Court, in commenting upon this instruction, stated that it is always safer to read the testimony from the judge's notes or the shorthand reporter's notes, still, the instruction quoted is held not to have been erroneous, since it did not invade the province of the jury by expressing an opinion of the court as to the weight of the evidence nor as to the facts proved. The same may be said of the instruction to which objection is here urged. The most serious criticism that can fairly be made is that, in stating the testimony upon the point as to which the jury had requested further information (that is, whether the defendant used force or not in committing the act which he admitted), the defendant's evidence is stated more briefly than that of the prosecution. However, from a careful reading of the transcript it appears, as the jury must have also known, that this was necessary, since the people produced many witnesses whose testimony bore upon that issue, whereas no other witness than the defendant gave testimony for him, and his own evidence on the question of force was substantially confined to the statement that the prosecuting witness consented to the act of intercourse. When the court stated that the defendant testified that the intercourse was obtained "by consent of the prosecuting witness," it put the matter more strongly favorable to the defendant than did his own testimony, for nowhere in his recitation of the transaction did the defendant say that the prosecutrix gave her express consent to the intercourse, although it is true that from his version of the occurrence consent might well have been inferred.

The constitutional provision is not that the trial court may "quote" or "have read" the testimony, but that it may "state" the testimony. In doing this, some discretion must be left to the judge as to the form of the statement. As long as such statement is complete upon this subject of inquiry, does not assume an argumentative trend, or is not unjust, it is within the authorization of the Constitution.

But the trial court in People v. Matthai, supra, it will be observed, also took it upon itself, in general instructions to the jury, in the first instance to state the testimony and to construe it, upon an isolated issue in the case, whereas, in the instant case, the jury returned into court after receiving the instructions and having deliberated upon a verdict, requesting information upon the point already mentioned. Section 1138 of the Penal Code provides that:

> "After the jury have retired for deliberation, if there be any disagreement between them as to the testimony, or if they desire to be informed on any point of law arising in the cause, they must require the officer to conduct them into court. Upon being brought into court, the information required must be given in the presence of, or after notice to, the district attorney, and the defendant or his counsel, or after they have been called."

It has been held that, under such circumstances, the judge may restate the testimony of a witness (People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 166), that the judge may state it from recollection, read his minutes, or a memorandum taken by another (People v. Boggs, 20 Cal. 432), but that the court is required to give only such instructions as may be asked (People v. Anthony, 20 Cal. App. 586, 129 P. 968). In the case at bar the jury returned and asked as to whether or not force was used by the defendant in the accomplishment of the admitted intercourse. This question the court declined to answer, and twice stated that it was not authorized to do so, but it did state that the defendant denied such fact, whereas witnesses for the prosecution had testified to conditions which we have heretofore related. We think that under the provisions of the section last cited, in view of the fact that much of the evidence upon the point in question was circumstantial, the trial court did not err in restating from recollection the evidence of such circumstances as tended to indicate the use of force, and the testimony of the defendant directly denying it and tending to indicate that there was none. Furthermore, it may appropriately be remarked that the appellant does not contend that the trial court misstated the testimony in any respect. The most that can be said of his argument is that the court was without authority to give the instruction complained of. But the supplemental instruction added nothing to those already given, and merely gave to the jury a restatement, as required by section 1138 of the Penal Code. They were then emphatically, and properly, told that they alone could decide the question asked by their foreman.

Appellant insists that the verdict itself indicates that the jury were influenced to convict him by the remarks of the trial court. It reads as follows:

> "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the information.
> "J. W. Munsey, Foreman.
> "We, the jury, recommend the greatest leniency in this case."

It is but a truism to say that the defendant was guilty or that he was not guilty, and that it appears from the verdict that, although the jury may have felt constrained to intercede for him, yet, bearing in mind the admonition of the trial court that they should determine the facts for themselves, they were finally convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that he was guilty. As said in People v. Collins, 195 Cal. 325, 233 P. 97, the language of the first paragraph that appellant is guilty of the crime charged is complete and unequivocal, and the additional words recommending mercy or leniency are merely surplusage.

From what has been said herein, other points presented do not require further discussion, and, prejudicial error not appearing, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

WORKS, P. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment, but on grounds different from those stated in the foregoing opinion. I cannot escape the conclusion that the trial court erred in the statement made to the members of the jury when they returned to the courtroom, after some time spent in deliberating on the case. I think, however, that the error does not require a reversal.

If we consider the judge's statement as a recital of the evidence in the cause, it was unfair to appellant. He remarked:

> "He [the appellant] testifies it [the sexual intercourse] was obtained by the consent of the prosecuting witness."

This is the only part of the judge's statement which relates to testimony given on behalf of appellant. On the other hand, he recited in considerable detail, during the remainder of his comment, the testimony produced by the prosecution. It will appear below that the testimony of defendant himself contained matter of detail which could have been given by the judge in connection with his comparatively lengthy statement of the testimony produced by the prosecution. The entire statement was so one-sided as to be unjust to appellant, and it was therefore erroneous, even upon the assumption that it was a statement of testimony.

But the judge's recital was not altogether a statement of testimony. He did not state testimony when he said that appellant had testified that the sexual act was committed "by consent of the prosecuting witness." Appellant testified to conduct of his alleged victim from which the jury might have concluded that she had voluntarily yielded herself to his embraces. The evidence is undisputed that the two were together for some hours preceding the time when the act of sexual intercourse took place. They had been to a dance together and traveled together in appellant's automobile for miles. Appellant testified that the prosecuting witness submitted, without protest, to suggestive handling and pressure on his part while they danced together. He said that she was kissed by him several times in his car, without objecting. As to the few minutes immediately preceding his alleged violation of her person, he detailed conduct on her part, which, if his testimony was to be believed, indicated that she was a willing participant in the act to which it is claimed he forced her. The jury, judging from the verdict, refused to believe appellant, but his testimony might have had greater weight with that body if the judge had stated it as fully as he stated the testimony offered by the prosecution, instead of giving his mere conclusion that appellant had testified that the prosecuting witness had consented to his act.

The judge did not state the evidence when he said:

> "She was covered with filth—that is, with dirt; her clothing, her arms and face and her hair full of dirt and dust."

The remark was in form a statement of his own, and the jury must so have considered it. It is true that he followed it with, "Three or four witnesses besides her testified to those facts," but, considering what he had just said, the jury must have viewed this addition, not so much as a statement for them, as one indicating the basis upon which the judge had reached his own conclusion.

On the whole, and taking the judge's entire statement, I think the jury must have concluded that he was convinced that appellant had violated the person of the prosecuting witness. To my mind, two decisions of the Supreme Court uphold the view that the remarks of the judge constitute error. See People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 P. 502; People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 67 P. 694.

I think, however, that the error of the trial court cannot result in a reversal. I have examined the entire cause, including the evidence, as required by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, and am not of the opinion that the error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The evidence against appellant was overwhelming.

THOMPSON, J. I concur in the foregoing concurring opinion.

80 Cal. App. 768

NUETZEL v. MACKIE. (Civ. 3125.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 21, 1927.)

1. Bills and notes ⚷275—Payee, indorsing nonnegotiable note to "order," held liable in favor of remote indorsee.

Payee, indorsing note to "order," held liable as indorser in favor of remote indorsee, though instrument was originally nonnegotiable.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Order (in Commercial Law).]

2. Bills and notes ⚷170—Nonnegotiable instrument may be made negotiable between indorser and subsequent holders by indorsement to order, though intermediate indorsement is without recourse.

Rule that nonnegotiable instrument becomes negotiable between indorser and subsequent holders, if indorsed to "order" or "bearer," applies even though intermediate indorsee may have limited his liability by using words "without recourse."

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Bills and notes 🔑170—Holder of nonnegotiable note may not convert blank indorsement into special indorsement by adding words "order or bearer" (Civ. Code, § 3116).

Civ. Code, § 3116, providing holder may convert blank indorsement into special indorsement by writing over indorser's signature in blank any contract consistent with character of indorsement, does not authorize holder to insert words "order or bearer" in blank indorsement of nonnegotiable note, as such change would not be consistent with character of contract.

4. Mortgages 🔑218—Holder of note secured by mortgage is not precluded from enforcing indorser's liability by statute allowing but one action for recovery of debt secured by mortgage (Code Civ. Proc. § 726).

Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing there can be but one action for recovery of debt or enforcement of a right secured by mortgage, does not bar holder of note secured by mortgage from enforcing indorser's liability, as such section is for benefit of mortgagor, and does not apply to independent contracts of indorsers on mortgagor's note.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by C. R. Nuetzel against Julia Mackie. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Jarrott & Jarrott, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter E. Burke, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. On the 3d day of April, 1920, B. R. Smith and wife executed and delivered to the defendant, Julia Mackie, a promissory note for $3,000. This note was secured by mortgage upon certain real property in San Bernardino county, state of California. On the 30th day of June, 1920, Julia Mackie transferred said note to the Globe Land Company, a corporation, by a written indorsement on the back thereof in the following words: "Pay to the order of Globe Land Co. Julia Mackie." Thereafter, and on or about July 13, 1920, said Globe Land Company transferred the note to the plaintiff by written indorsement on the back thereof in these words: "Without recourse, pay to the order of C. R. Nuetzel Globe Land Company by Harry B. Goodman, President & Manager." The indorsements above mentioned were for a valuable consideration, interest being unpaid, the plaintiff declared the note due and payable according to the terms thereof, demanded payment of the makers, and, upon dishonor, caused the note to be protested, and notice of protest and nonpayment given to the defendant. Thereafter this action was brought against the defendant to recover upon her indorsement. Upon the foregoing facts, the court rendered judgment for the defendant and plaintiff appeals.

[1] Two questions are presented for consideration: (1) By indorsing the note in the form above set forth, did the defendant assume any liability to the indorsee of the Globe Land Company? and (2) Does section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure prohibit the prosecution of this action?

The note in question was secured by a mortgage under the terms of which said note was rendered nonnegotiable. The liability of the defendant depends upon the question of her intent, as evidenced by the form of indorsement used by her in the signing of the note to the Globe Land Company. In many of the states the defendant would be liable, though the indorsement were in blank; in others, when the indorsement is in blank, the payee is not liable to a remote indorsee. In 8 C. J., under the title of Bills and Notes, §§ 73, 74, and 75, the decisions of the various courts to be considered here is thus epitomized:

> "The liability of a regular indorser of a nonnegotiable note, to his indorsee, is the subject of much conflict in the decisions. While it would seem that a party indorsing a nonnegotiable note cannot but intend to make himself liable in some capacity, it is often held that he is not liable, or, at least, not to the same extent, as is the indorser of a negotiable note."

States are then named in which it is held that the indorser is a mere assignor, and not liable to the indorsee on the contract of indorsement; following which states are named in which it is held that an indorser is liable to the indorsee either as indorser or as guarantor. The text-writer then states:

> "However, all the courts agree that a payee of a nonnegotiable note may become liable as an indorser by expressing such intent in his indorsement or otherwise, or by inducing the assignee to take it by an agreement to that effect."

The text-writer further states that in many of the states apparently no distinction is made in the decisions concerning irregular indorsers between instruments which are negotiable in their character and those which are not, the presumptive liability of the indorser being the same in either case.

In many of the cases cited, the decision turns upon the ascertained intent of the indorser, as evidenced by the form of the indorsement. In 19 Cal. Jur. 885, the liability of an indorser on negotiable paper is thus stated:

> "Although it has been said that as between the immediate indorsee of the payee of a nonnegotiable instrument, and the payee, the rights and liabilities of the parties are the same as in the case of a negotiable instrument, it seems clear, in general, that the payee who in-dorses a nonnegotiable instrument is to be regarded as the mere assignor of the paper, and he is not liable to the indorsee of his indorsee where the indorsements are in blank or 'without recourse.' However, as in the case of other contracts, it is competent for the parties to make any contract they choose; and in case they clearly express intention to be bound in the same manner as the indorsers of negotiable instruments, the court will give effect to their intention."

In 3 R. C. L. 876, the rule is thus stated:

"Although an instrument as originally made is not negotiable for lack of words of negotiability, yet if it is indorsed to 'order' or 'bearer,' it becomes as between the indorser and subsequent holders a negotiable instrument and subject to the principles and usages of instruments of that character."

And on page 1161 of the same volume, the text reads:

"Nonnegotiable instruments do not fall within the pale of the law merchant; and the law therefore, writes no contract over a blank indorsement on a nonnegotiable instrument as it does over a blank indorsement on a negotiable instrument. The reasonable presumption as to what was intended as an indorsement, in the absence of evidence showing a different intention, is that the indorser intended to do only that which was necessary to transfer the title to the assignee; and the indorsement standing alone, creates no liability against him. Of course, if the indorser expressly agrees, or the form of the indorsement is such as to show an intention on the part of the indorser, that he shall be held liable for payment in case the maker defaults, such effect will be given to the indorsement. If the indorser of a nonnegotiable note writes over his indorsement the words 'pay to B or order,' the note will become negotiable as between the indorser and B or any subsequent holder."

To the same effect is the decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in Carruth v. Walker, 8 Wis. 252, 76 Am. Dec. 235, where it was held that an indorsement, "Pay to the order of Charles Albert," on the back of a nonnegotiable instrument, rendered the indorser liable to remote indorsees, citing the cases of Brenzer v. Wightman, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 264; Patterson v. Poindexter, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554; Leidy v. Tammany, 9 Watts (Pa.) 353; Seymour v. Van Slyck, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; Dean v. Hall, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 214; Story on Promissory Notes, pars. 128, 129; Chitty on Bills, 219. In Ann. Cas. 1912B, 707, the annotator states the rule as follows:

"If the indorser expressly agrees or the form of the indorsement is such as to show an intention on the part of the indorser that he shall be held liable for payment in case the maker defaults, such effect will be given to the indorsement," citing San Diego First National Bank v. Falkenhan, 94 Cal. 141, 29 P. 866; Jossey v. Rushin, 109 Ga. 319, 34 S. E. 558, 77 Am. St. Rep. 377; Jenness v. Barron, 95 Me. 531, 50 A. 712; Kline v. Keiser, 87 Pa. 485; Shaffstall v. McDaniel, 152 Pa. 598, 25 A. 576; Benton v. Gibson, 1 Hill (S. C.) 56; Wilson v. Mullen, 3 McCord (S. C.) 236 (also a number of cases enunciating the same rule).

In the case of First National Bank, etc., v. Falkenhan, 94 Cal. 141, 29 P. 866, the court was considering the effect of an indorsement of a nonnegotiable note which contained a waiver of protest. It was there held that the words "waiving protest" indicated an intention on the part of the indorser to charge himself with liability. In Haber v. Brown, 101 Cal. 445, 35 P. 1035, while not necessary to a decision in that case, it is said:

"In respect to the immediate indorsee of the payee of a nonnegotiable promissory note, the indorsement will ordinarily create the same liabilities and obligations as the indorsement of a negotiable note," —and then, in considering indorsements made in blank, it is held that the indorsee ought not to be allowed to alter the terms of a writing by inserting anything above such blank indorsement which would give the indorsement the character of negotiability.

In Kendall v. Parker, 103 Cal. 319, 37 P. 401, 42 Am. St. Rep. 117, the blank indorsement on a nonnegotiable instrument was not sufficient to hold the payee liable to an indorsee of his indorsee. No question of intention of the indorser was present in that case. The indorsement was simply in blank, and, as stated in the annotations found in Ann. Cas. 1912D, p. 5, it is uniformly held that, in order to make a note negotiable, the words "to order" or "to bearer," or equivalent words, must be used. The court in the Kendall Case had before it no language in the indorsement indicating other or further intention on the part of the indorser than simply to assign his rights in the instrument to his immediate indorsee. Thus the Kendall Case neither extends nor limits the rule which is set forth by a number of the authorities holding the mere indorsement of a nonnegotiable instrument by the payee will not render it negotiable, nor give the indorsee a cause of action against prior parties; although it will render such indorsee liable to his indorsee, and will, if he use fit words in the indorsement, render him liable to all subsequent indorsees. Randolph on Commercial Paper, § 17; Story on Promissory Notes, § 128; Carruth v. Walker, 8 Wis. 252, 76 Am. Dec. 235; and the cases there cited; First Nat. Bank v. Falkenhan, 94 Cal. 141, 29 P. 866; De Hass v. Dibert, 70 F. 227 (C. C. A.) 30 L. R. A. 189.

[2] In the recent case of Quinn v. Rike, 50 Cal. App. 243, 194 P. 761, it is held: "Where the payee of a nonnegotiable promissory note assigns all his interests therein and by the assignment, which is evidenced by a writing on the back of the note, excuses presentment, demand, and notice of protest, there is an implied intent to become liable as an indorser; and where such intent appears the liability of indorser follows." This case cites several of the cases which we have been considering and shows clearly that where any apt words are used such as give negotiability to an instrument, the payee will be held liable to an indorsee of his indorsee. The rule which we have stated applies even though an intermediate indorsee may have limited his liability by using the words "without recourse." To meet this line of authorities, following which we must hold that the use of the words "pay to the order of" by the defendant evidenced the legal intention of the parties to fix liability on the defendant in favor of the plaintiff as an indorsee of her indorsee, the respondent calls our attention to section 3116 of the Civil Code, which reads:

> "The holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement by writing over the signature of the indorser in blank any contract consistent with the character of the indorsement,"

—and proceeds to argue that indorsees of the note in question would have the same right to write above a blank indorsement like words which we find used by the payee in this instance, and proceeds to deduce the conclusion therefrom that the words used in the indorsement evidence no intention on the part of the indorser.

[3] This argument, however, is not consistent with the cases which we have cited, which hold that upon a nonnegotiable instrument the indorsee possesses no such right. The section referred to is confined specifically to the character of the contract upon which the indorsement is to be made, and, if that contract is a negotiable instrument, then and in that case the holder thereof may insert the necessary words above a blank indorsement to make it a special indorsement, but, if it is not consistent with the character of the contract, no such right is given by the section. The case of Quinn v. Rike, supra, was decided December 2, 1920, three years after the adoption of the Code as amended, which, we think, is a sufficient answer to the respondent's contention.

[4] As to the right of the plaintiff to maintain this action, the answer turns upon whether section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure has any application. The respondent cites the case of Western Fuel Co. v. S. G. Leward Co., 190 Cal. 25, 210 P. 419, as authority for the statement that this action cannot be maintained. It is there said that under the Code an independent action at law cannot be maintained for a debt, whatever the form, if secured by a mortgage, citing a number of California cases upholding this rule. While the principle of law set forth in the case just cited is firmly established in this state, its inapplicability, however, is apparent. In the Western Fuel Co. Case, the action was against the mortgagor, and not against the indorser upon an independent contract. It has been several times held in this state that section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, is for the benefit of a mortgagor, and has no relevancy to independent contracts of other parties, though the action is based upon the same instrument, to wit, against a guarantor or indorser, etc. Jones v. Evans, 6 Cal. App. 88, 91 P. 532; Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171.

This precise question was before the court in the case of Murphy v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, 43 Cal. App. 579, 185 P. 485, and we need not go further into this question than simply to call attention to the opinion of the court in that case, found on pages 582 and 583 of the volume cited, and the decisions on this question there referred to and considered. A consideration of this case shows clearly that section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application whatever where the action seeks to enforce the liability of an indorser.

It follows from what has been stated that the judgment of the trial court must be reversed, but, as the findings of the trial court show all the facts necessary to be found for the entry of judgment in favor of the plaintiff, save and except the amount of interest to be added to the principal of the note, it is hereby ordered that the judgment of the trial court is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court, with directions to ascertain, by calculating, the amount of interest due, add the same to the principal, and to then enter judgment for the plaintiff.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

---

81 Cal. App. 199

PEOPLE v. LOPEZ. (Cr. 1406.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1159(3)—Appellate courts cannot determine facts when evidence is substantially conflicting.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, appellate courts have not the right to determine questions of fact.

2. Criminal law 🔑829(3)—Homicide 🔑286(2)—Refusing instruction defining malice held not error, conviction being for assault with deadly weapon not necessitating proof of malice, and other instructions covering one requested.

The refusal to instruct as to the nature of malice in prosecution for assault with deadly weapon with intent to murder held not error, where the conviction was only for assault with deadly weapon, and other instructions fully covered the substance of that requested.

3. Criminal law 🔑829(9)—Refusing instruction that burden of proving criminal assault never shifts held not error; instruction explaining reasonable doubt rule being sufficient.

Refusing instruction that the burden of proof in prosecution for assault with deadly weapon with intent to kill never shifted to defendant held not error; it being sufficient to instruct that the jury must be convinced beyond reasonable doubt to convict.

4. Homicide 🔑151(1)—Statute held not to shift burden of showing mitigation or justification in assault with intent to murder (Pen. Code, § 1105).

Pen. Code, § 1105, dealing only with murder trials, does not operate to shift to defendant burden of proof to show mitigation or justification in prosecutions for assault with deadly weapon with intent to kill, notwithstanding evidence of justification.

5. Homicide 🔑241—Jury balances evidence in mitigation or justification with other evidence in reaching verdict.

In prosecutions for homicide or criminal assault, facts in mitigation or justification are to be considered with all other facts, and if the jury are convinced of guilt beyond reasonable doubt, it is immaterial whether their conviction resulted from weakness of defense or strength of prosecution.

6. Aliens 🔑39—California court cannot order deportation of alien.

There is no authority by which California state courts may order an alien deported.

7. Criminal law 🔑1184—Portion of judgment ordering alien's deportation after serving sentence for assault with deadly weapon, being void, may be stricken and remainder affirmed (Pen. Code, § 245).

Where alien convicted of assault with a deadly weapon was ordered deported after serving sentence, such portion of the judgment, being void, may be stricken without violence to the remainder; proper penalty being that provided by Pen. Code, § 245.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Marguerito Lopez was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Theodore Gottsdanker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged by information with the offense of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of assault with a deadly weapon, upon which verdict defendant was sentenced for the term prescribed by law, with this additional order in the judgment: "After sentence has been served, defendant is to be deported to Mexico." Defendant's motion for a new trial of the cause was denied, and it is from the judgment thus pronounced and the order denying his motion for a new trial that he prosecutes this appeal.

It appears from the testimony that the defendant and one Hernandez had purchased four pints of whisky during the evening of February 27, 1926, of which they had consumed three pints before 12:15 a. m. of the 28th. At this time Police Officer William J. Hackett observed them near the Santa Fé depot in Los Angeles city. By reason of the fact, as he testified, that they were boisterous and noisy, he approached them and found them under the influence of liquor. Hernandez was able to walk and to talk coherently. A search of him revealing no liquor, the officer sent him home. The fourth pint of liquor was found on defendant's person, and the officer says he put him under arrest for violation of the Wright Act;[1] that he put his right arm under defendant's left armpit and started to lead him to the patrol box. They had not proceeded far when the defendant fell or swung himself in front of the officer and on his way down grabbed the officer's gun from the holster on his left hip. Simultaneously with the grabbing of the gun Officer Hackett let go of defendant's arm and struck upward with his arms so that the first shot fired passed between them close to the defendant's head. The defendant fell to the ground and shot the second time, this shot striking the officer about three inches below the left nipple and emerging from the tip of the left shoulder blade.

The defendant took the stand in his own behalf and testified that he and Hernandez were merely talking together when seen by the officer; that Hackett approached them and searched them; that he hit Hernandez on the back and sent him home; that the officer then commenced to pull him (the witness) along the street, bumping him with his knee and asking him questions in English which he did not understand; that finally the officer asked him for money, and because his purse had nothing but a dollar and some keys in it the officer pulled his gun; that the defendant made a grab for it, whereat the officer tripped and fell; that the defendant fell upon the officer and while grappling for the gun it was discharged. The defendant freely admitted possession of the liquor and that he was intoxicated.

[1] Under this state of facts the appellant says that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. It has been stated so many times that appellate courts have not the right to determine questions of fact where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence that it is unnecessary to refer to authorities to support the statement. There is a substantial conflict in this action, and for that reason we pass to the next question on this appeal.

---

[1] St. 1921, p. 79.

[2] And the next point presented is that the court erred in refusing to give the instruction requested by defendant as follows:

> "You are instructed that legal malice or the malice aforethought of statute denotes a wrongful act done intentionally and without legal cause or excuse."

It will be noted first that the defendant was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, an offense less than that with which he was charged, but necessarily included in it. The offense of which he was convicted did not necessitate the proof of a specific intent to commit it. People v. Marseiler, 70 Cal. 98; People v. Gordan, 103 Cal. 568–575, 37 P. 534. Hence the refusal to give the instruction cannot be considered to constitute error. Aside from this fact, however, the jury were given appropriate instructions covering the subject of intent and malice as necessary constituents of the offense with which defendant was charged, and the substance of the requested instruction was fully covered.

[3] The defendant next assigns as error the refusal of the court to instruct the jury as follows:

> "The court instructs the jury that in a criminal case, the burden of proof never shifts to the defendant, and in this case the burden of proof remains upon the state throughout the case to prove an unlawful shooting, and the burden does not under any circumstances shift to the defendant to prove his innocence."

This assignment by the defendant is dismissed by him in his brief by the statement "that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction requested by the defendant." The first impulse when no greater light is shed upon the question is to say the court did not err. Substantial justice to the client and the cause of precedent law, however, cause us to give it careful consideration. The testimony related by the defendant in this case tended to justify the assault, and the respondent argues that section 1105 of the Penal Code does shift the burden of proof to the defendant to show circumstances of mitigation or justification. That section, however, deals only with "a trial for murder," and has no application to the case at bar. People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 P. 502, and cases cited. The testimony in the case at bar was to be tested by the rule of reasonable doubt, and upon that doctrine of the law the court gave the usual instructions.

[4] In the case of People v. Byler, 35 Cal. App. 208, 169 P. 431, which involved a charge of murder, the defendant asked an instruction somewhat similar to that refused here under that portion of section 1105 which reads, "unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter." The requested instruction in that case which the court refused to give was, in effect, that if the proof showed that the offense only amounted to manslaughter the burden of proving mitigation or justification or excuse did not devolve upon the defendant, but that it rested upon the people to prove affirmatively and beyond a reasonable doubt that the mitigating circumstances or justification did not exist. In that case the court was of the opinion, as we are here, that the giving of the usual instruction upon the question of reasonable doubt was sufficient. The whole defense of mitigation or justification in a case of this character is to be considered by the jury in connection with all of the facts, and if after considering all the facts they are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt it matters not whether they are so convinced by the inherent weakness of the defense or by rebuttal testimony of the prosecution.

[5-7] We now come to that part of the judgment which orders the deportation of the defendant. The Attorney General concedes that there is no authority of law by which the state courts can make a valid order of this character. Without passing upon the question as to whether the state may properly enact such legislation, it is sufficient that it has not. The penalty provided for the crime of which defendant was convicted is that found in section 245 of the Penal Code, to wit, "imprisonment in the state prison, or in a county jail, not exceeding ten years, or by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by both." It follows, therefore, that the judgment for deportation is void. It does not necessarily follow that the remaining portion of the judgment is affected. The void portion of the judgment may be separated without violence to the remainder, as was done in a somewhat similar situation in People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 144, 26 P. 759.

It is ordered that the judgment appealed from be and it is hereby modified by striking out the words, "after sentence has been served, defendant is to be deported to Mexico," and, after such modification, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

81 Cal. App. 192

BAXTER v. KING. (Civ. 5597.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 3, 1927.)

1. Limitation of actions ⊂⊃21(1)—Action for money not identified as specific thing is not one for conversion, and is barred by two-year period of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3, § 339, subd. 1).

Action for money not identified as specific thing is considered as one on contract or debt and not for conversion, and is within two-year statute of limitation provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1, and not section 338, subd. 3, providing for three-year statute of limitations.

2. Limitation of actions ⊂⊃21(1)—Action for damages for refusal to deliver corporate dividends received by defendant is barred by two-year period of limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3, § 339, subd. 1).

Action for damages for refusing to deliver corporate dividends received by defendant does not come within Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3, setting three-year period of limitation, which includes actions for specific recovery of personalty or actions for damages for taking or injuring personalty, but is barred by section 339, subd. 1, setting two-year limitation on actions on contract or debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Jennie M. Baxter, as administratrix of the estate of Sadie E. Pritchard, deceased, substituted as appellant in place of Sadie E. Pritchard, against Hazel H. King. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. Franklin Baxter, of Los Angeles, and Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George Clark Sargent, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment for defendant after order sustaining demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint. The demurrer, besides demurring generally, raised the statute of limitations by appropriate specifications. The complaint in many respects is like the one passed upon in Pritchard v. Mercantile Trust Co. & King, 65 Cal. App. 327, 224 P. 103. The defendant there was sued as administratrix, but here individually. The complaint alleges that plaintiff was a partner of Fred G. King; that he conducted the partnership business in his own name from 1892 until the time of his death in 1920; that a large sum of the profits of said business was invested by said King for said partnership in the purchase of a large number of shares of stock in the Boston-Pacific Oil Company, a corporation; and that the certificates representing said stock, "which had been issued to him in his lifetime in his name being in his possession at the time of his death as a part of the assets and property of said partnership, belonged to plaintiff as the sole surviving partner of said partnership." Allegation No. VI is as follows:

"That said defendant made representations to said corporation that she was the administratrix of the estate of Fred G. King, and that the stock and dividends mentioned belonged to the estate of Fred G. King, and demanded said dividends of said corporation, and was paid by said corporation the sum of $25,146.68, on and after the 19th day of July, 1921, and converted the said amount to her own use, and refuses to deliver said sum or any part thereof to plaintiff as the sole and surviving partner of the firm of Fred G. King, and still detains the said sum of money from plaintiff to her damage of her interest in said sum in the sum of $12,578.34, and the interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. from the said time of the conversion thereof."

The complaint was filed July 15, 1924, which was more than two years, but less than three years, after the alleged cause of action accrued. The cause is not barred by the statute, therefore, if it is one included in subdivision 3, § 338, Code of Civil Procedure, which requires to be commenced within three years "an action for the taking, detaining or injuring any goods or chattels, including actions for the specific recovery of personal property." But if the cause alleged is one included in subsdivision 1 of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, to wit, "An action upon a contract, obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing, other than that mentioned in subdivision 2 of section 337," then it is barred by the statute of limitations.

It will be noted from reading tne allegations of the complaint above quoted that a cause which would ordinarily be stated as an action for money, simply, is worded as if it were an action for damages for detaining or converting said money.

[1] It is true that sometimes money can be treated as specific property, and where identified can form the basis of an action for conversion, and might also be the subject of an action for the specific recovery of personal property. But where the money or fund is not identified as a specific thing the action is to be considered as one upon contract or for debt and not for conversion. Randolph & Co. v. Walker, 78 S. C. 157, 59 S. E. 856; Larson v. Dawson, 24 R. I. 317, 53 A. 93, 96 Am. St. Rep. 716; Hazelton v. Locke, 104 Me. 164, 71 A. 661, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 35, 15 Ann. Cas. 1009.

[2] Subdivision 3 of section 338 divides itself into two divisions. Plaintiff's cause of action does not fall within the division which includes actions for the specific recovery of personal property, because plaintiff is not asking for a specific fund, but for damages for refusing to deliver corporation dividends received by the defendant, which damages are said to be one-half of the entire amount received by the defendant. This action would therefore have to fall within the remaining part of said subdivision 3 if it is governed by the three-year provision of the statute of limitations. In order to agree with this we should have to hold that this is an action for damages for the taking, detaining, or injuring of certain goods and chattels, to wit, one-half the amount of certain dividends received, together with interest thereon; or, in other words, an action for detaining money. It is obvious that such a ruling would have the effect of moving practically all actions for debt out of the two-year class into the three-year class. Nearly every creditor would have the same right as plaintiff here to claim that his debtor is in truth detaining money from him. We are unable to follow appellant to such lengths.

In view of the conclusion we have arrived at upon this point, it will not be necessary to consider the other alleged infirmities of the complaint.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

80 Cal. App. 754

RAUSCHAN v. GILBERT et al. (Civ. 3187.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 21, 1927.)

1. States 🔑191(1)—State cannot be sued without its consent.

The state cannot be sued without its consent, and is not liable for torts of its officers, agents, or servants, except when it has clearly and definitely consented thereto.

2. States 🔑191(1)—Action against State Compensation Insurance Fund or Industrial Accident Commission for torts of its officers held not authorized by statute (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 38 [b]).

Workmen's Compensation Act, § 38 (b), held not to authorize action against State Compensation Insurance Fund or Industrial Accident Commission for torts of its officers or agents committed in discharge of their duties as such.

3. States 🔑191(1)—Action against State Compensation Fund for tort of officers is not authorized on theory of being business enterprise conducted by state for profit (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 37 [c], as amended by St. 1915, p. 1098, § 19).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 37 (c), as amended by St. 1915, p. 1098, § 19, action is not authorized against the State Compensation Insurance Fund for torts of its officers on theory that it is a business enterprise conducted by the state for profit, since it clearly appears from such section that Legislature did not intend that Compensation Fund should be managed for profit.

4. States 🔑112—State does not waive immunity from liability for torts of its officers, employed in administration of private business enterprise conducted by state.

State engaging in prosecution of private business enterprise does not waive its immunity from liability for torts of its officers or agents employed in administration of affairs of such enterprise.

5. States 🔑112—State held not liable for torts of agents engaged in duties in administering state compensation fund unless consenting thereto.

State held not liable for torts of its agents, servants, or employees, committed while engaged in performance of their duties in administering the state compensation insurance fund, unless it has clearly given its consent to be so bound or liable.

6. States 🔑191(2)—Action held not maintainable against State Compensation Insurance Fund for slander based on employee's statement that plaintiff was afflicted with loathsome disease.

Since state has not authorized actions against it or any of its mandatories for torts of its agents, action cannot be maintained against State Compensation Insurance Fund for slander, involving a statement by one of its employees that plaintiff was afflicted with a loathsome disease.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Martin Rauschan against Dr. Ramon A. Gilbert and the State Compensation Insurance Fund. Judgment dismissing the action as to defendant last named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Emil G. Buehrer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action in tort, and was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages upon two separate and distinct causes of action—the one, for the utterance by the defendant Gilbert, "as the servant and agent of the (defendant) State Compensation Insurance Fund," of certain alleged slanderous language and words of and concerning plaintiff, and involving the statement that plaintiff was afflicted with a loathsome disease, and the second founded upon the charge that, by reason of said alleged slanderous language and words, as so uttered by said Gilbert, they having been uttered in the presence of the wife of the plaintiff, the latter lost the affection, consortium, society, etc., of his said wife, or, in other words, that the utterance of said language and words, as explained, caused the alienation from plaintiff of the affection, consortium, etc., of his wife.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

The defendant State Compensation Insurance Fund, to which hereinafter we will refer as the Compensation Fund, interposed a demurrer to the complaint upon both general and special grounds. The court sustained the demurrer so interposed, "without leave to amend." Judgment was thereupon entered dismissing the action as to the demurring defendant. The plaintiff appeals from said judgment.

The plaintiff, by this action, seeks to fasten upon the defendant Compensation Fund liability for the damage he claims to have sustained by reason of the alleged slanderous words used by the defendant Gilbert of and concerning plaintiff, and for the loss by him of the affection, consortium, etc., of his wife, because of the utterance of said language and words in her presence and hearing, upon the theory that Gilbert, at the time he used the alleged slanderous language, was the agent of the other defendant and then acting within the scope of his authority as such agent.

The complaint alleges that the defendant Compensation Fund was and is a corporation, organized under the laws of the state of California, and "was and is duly and regularly in the business of acting as an insurance carrier for employees and others in said state, under the provisions of the Workmen's State Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of the state of California, for profit"; that Dr. Ramon A. Gilbert, "at all times hereinafter mentioned, was in the employ and under the direction of said State Compensation Insurance Fund, as a physician and surgeon." The remainder of the story may the better be told in the language of the complaint itself as follows:

> "That on or about the 16th day of July, 1923, plaintiff was in the employ of the S. Bauer Cooperage Company at San Francisco, state aforesaid, and on said day in the due and regular course of his said employment, plaintiff sustained an injury to his person, to wit, a hernia. That at said time defendant State Compensation Insurance Fund was the insurance carrier of the said S. Bauer Cooperage Company, and under the provisions of the said Compensation Act was liable to pay any compensation which might or could be awarded to plaintiff because of the injury by him sustained as aforesaid. That on or about the 17th day of July, 1923, plaintiff was examined by one Dr. Peters, at the Franklin Hospital, San Francisco, and was by him informed that he was suffering with 'hernia,' and was advised to submit to a radical operation to cure him thereof. That on or about the 6th day of August, 1923, plaintiff was admitted to said Franklin Hospital, and thereafter on the 9th day of August, 1923, an operation was performed on the body of plaintiff by Dr. Conrad Weil, at said hospital, to cure plaintiff from said injury sustained in said employment, as aforesaid. That on or about the 24th day of September, 1923, at the request of the attorney of said State Compensation Insurance Fund, plaintiff was sent by said defendant to defendant Gilbert for an examination to determine the extent of his disability on account of said injury. That on said day plaintiff, in company with his wife and his representative, proceeded to the office of said Gilbert, where plaintiff was examined in private by said Gilbert. That thereupon said defendant Gilbert returned with plaintiff to where his wife and his representative, Moses Amaral, were standing, and in the hearing and presence of said Moses Amaral and his wife, Mrs. Rauschan, the said Gilbert, as the servant and agent of the said State Compensation Insurance Fund as aforesaid, spoke of and concerning the plaintiff the following words, to wit: 'This man was not operated on for hernia; he never had a hernia. What he had is the ——' (naming a loathsome disease). That immediately thereupon the said Gilbert was cautioned by plaintiff's said representative that such statements were untrue and would cause plaintiff great and irreparable injury, in that they would be the source and cause of discord between plaintiff and his wife and would probably result in causing a divorce to be had by plaintiff's wife, but that said Gilbert entirely ignored said warning and smilingly retorted, 'I don't care,' and walked away."

It is then alleged that the "words so spoken and published were and are deliberately false and defamatory," were so known to be by said Gilbert, and were made maliciously and "with the object to frighten plaintiff and cause him to abandon his claim for compensation for said injury, which said claim had been filed with and was then pending before the Industrial Accident Commission of the state of California, and were intended to save the said defendant State Compensation Insurance Fund from paying compensation to plaintiff to which he was lawfully entitled."

The complaint proceeds to allege that the plaintiff has been greatly damaged in his good name and reputation as a result "of the speaking and publication of the said words" by defendant Gilbert, as alleged; that, ever since the utterance of said words by said Gilbert, the marital relations of plaintiff have been disrupted; that his wife, ever since the utterance of said words as indicated, has vilified plaintiff, has wrongfully accused him of promiscuous sexual relations with other women than herself, and has and does wrongfully characterize him in language befitting one who habitually engages and has engaged in indiscriminate immoral relations with disreputable females; "that, since the said speaking of the said words, plaintiff's wife has refused and still refuses to have any marital relations with plaintiff, and because of the premises plaintiff has been deprived of his domestic happiness." For the damage so set up and claimed, plaintiff asks for an award of $25,000.

The second cause of action, as we have seen, is for the alleged loss by plaintiff of "comfort, consortium, and affection" of his wife, the direct result, as the complaint alleges, of the utterance by defendant Gilbert, under the circumstances described in the statement of the first cause of action, of the words therein set forth and which constitute the grounds of complaint herein. For the damage so claimed, plaintiff also asks for the sum of $25,000.

The demurrer to the complaint as to both counts was properly sustained.

An act known as the Workmen's Compensation Act was passed by the Legislature of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 796). In October, 1911, the people adopted and added to article 20 of the Constitution, section 21, expressly authorizing the Legislature to create and enforce a liability on the part of all employers to compensate their employees for any injuries incurred by said employees in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of either party. Stats. 1911, p. 2179. In pursuance of said amendment to the Constitution, the Legislature in 1913 passed a law entitled in part:

> "An act to promote the general welfare of the people of this state as affected by accident causing the injury or death of employees in the course of their employment, by creating a liability on the part of employers to compensate such employees and their dependents for such accidental injury or death irrespective of the fault of either party, and providing the means and methods of enforcing such liability; and creating a 'State Compensation Insurance Fund' to insure employers against such liability and providing for its administration and regulating such insurance by other insurance carriers," etc. St. 1913, p. 279.

Section 1 of this law provided that the same "may be cited as the 'Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act.'" In 1918, section 21 of article 20 of the Constitution was amended by a vote of the people. Among the changes therein made was a provision expressly authorizing "the establishment and management of a State Compensation Insurance Fund," a provision which was not contained in the amendment of 1911 of article 20 of the Constitution. However, the legislation involved in said acts represents the exercise of the state's power of police, nowithstanding the express grant in the Constitution authorizing such legislation. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 694, 151 P. 398, 401 (Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703). In other words, as was said in the case just mentioned, in which the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act was under attack:

> "If such a law may be given force, the sanction for it must be found in that legislative authority usually termed the police power."

These propositions, however, are not contested here. And, as we understand counsel for the appellant, he does not deny that the system or scheme involved in the Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act constitutes and was intended to constitute a governmental mandatory or agency to which the Legislature committed the administration of certain of the state's sovereign powers; that, in other words, the State Compensation Insurance Fund is an agency of the state and was established for the purpose of administering certain portions of the sovereignty of the state.

[1] It is a proposition placed beyond the realm of doubt—indeed, it is elementary—that the state cannot be sued without its consent, "and all the authorities are united upon the proposition that it is a general principle of law that a state is not liable for the torts of its officers, agents, or servants, and that it can be made so liable only upon its clear and definitely given consent." Western Assur. Co. v. Drainage Dist., 72 Cal. App. 68, 75, 237 P. 59, 62, in which a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court; see, also, notes to vol. 13 A. L. R. 1264, 1268, 1276. Upon this proposition we may well present excerpts from a few of the authorities. In Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 275, 19 L. Ed. 453 (see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes), Mr. Justice Miller said:

> "The general principle which we have already stated as applicable to all governments, forbids, on a policy imposed by necessity, that they should hold themselves liable for unauthorized wrongs inflicted by their officers on the citizen, though occurring while engaged in the discharge of official duties."

In his work on Agency, § 319, Judge Story declares that:

> "The government does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of its officers or agents whom it employs, since that would involve it in all its operations in endless embarrassments and difficulties and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests."

See, also, Hensley v. Reclamation Dist. No. 556, 121 Cal. 96, 97, 53 P. 401; Sels v. Green, (C. C.) 81 F. 555, affirmed in (C. C.) 88 F. 127.

[2] But we do not understand that the appellant disputes the foregoing proposition. He does claim, however, that under the Employers' Liability Act a party may sue the State Compensation Insurance Fund to recover damages for a tort committed by any of the officers or agents or servants thereof in the course of their employment as such for two reasons, to wit: (1) Because the act provides (section 38 [b]) that the Industrial Accident Commission may "sue and be sued in all the courts of the state in all actions arising out of any act, deed, matter or thing made, omitted, entered into, done, or suffered in connection with the State Compensation Insurance Fund, the administration, management or conduct of the business or affairs relating thereto"; (2) that the State Compensation Insurance Fund was established and is maintained by the state for the purpose of profit, and that the state thus is exercising its proprietary and not its governmental powers, and that therefore the state, as is true of municipal corporations when exercising their proprietary capacity, may be sued for the torts of its officers or agents or servants committed in the performance of their duties in the administration of the proprietary powers of the government. Answering the proposition first suggested, it is to be remarked that the provision of the statute authorizing the State Industrial Accident Commission to sue or to be sued is remedial only—"that is, its effect is not to create a liability against such governmental agency, but merely to afford a remedy where none was formerly available for the enforcement of 'such liability as would have existed if the statute had not been enacted.'" Denning v. State of California, 123 Cal. 316, 55 P. 1000; Chapman v. State, etc., 104 Cal. 690, 38 P. 457, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158; Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 P. 416. See, also, Western Assur. Co. v. Drainage Dist., supra. Counsel has not pointed out, nor have we been able to find, any provision of any law in this state which authorizes the maintenance of a suit against the State Compensation Insurance Fund or the State Industrial Accident Commission for the torts of its officers or agents or servants committed while in the discharge of their duties as such.

The case of Chapman v. State of California, 104 Cal. 690, 38 P. 457, 458, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158, is cited by appellant as authority for his position that the state, in instances in which it engages in the prosecution of what in an ordinary sense would properly be regarded as a business enterprise, may be sued and held liable for the torts of its officers or agents employed in performing the duties of its proprietary powers. In that case the action was for damages for the loss of a quantity of coal through the negligent act of certain officers or employees of the state. The complaint therein alleged that, on a date named, the defendant, "in consideration of wharfage and dockage charges, paid to its officers, the state board of harbor commissioners, received upon one of its public wharves, situated in the city of San Francisco, and under the jurisdiction and control of the state board of harbor commissioners, about one hundred and thirty tons of coal belonging to the assignors of plaintiff, and to be removed by them from such wharf"; that a large portion of the wharf on which the coal was placed broke and gave way "by reason of the negligence, omission, and carelessness of defendant, its officers, and agents, * * * in failing, and neglecting to keep said wharf in good and sound condition and repair," all said coal was sunk in the bay of San Francisco and became a total loss, etc. The contention of the Attorney General in that case was that the state was not responsible for the negligence of its officers, undoubtedly assuming that the action was one sounding in tort. The Supreme Court, in its opinion, held to the contrary, declaring, among other things:

> "A wharfinger is impliedly bound by his contract as such to exercise ordinary care for the preservation and safety of property intrusted to him (Edwards on Bailments [3d Ed.] § 359), and this imposes upon him the duty to exercise ordinary care to ascertain the condition of his wharf, that he may know whether it is reasonably safe for the purposes for which he hires it; and, if merchandise is received by him upon a wharf which is unsafe, and is thereby lost, so that he cannot deliver it according to his contract, the wharfinger is liable therefor if ordinary care would have enabled him to know the condition of his wharf; and such negligence on his part will be treated as a failure to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the property intrusted to him. This negligence, however, and the consequent loss of the goods intrusted to him, would be a breach of the terms of his contract, and his liability therefor could have been enforced at common law by an action of assumpsit (1 Chitty on Pleading, *114; Baker v. Liscoe, 7 Term Rep. 171); and under our practice the owner or consignee may sue upon the contract for the damages sustained by reason of such negligence." (Italics ours.)

But appellant seems to place much reliance upon the following language from the case of People v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 527, and which was approvingly quoted in the opinion in the Chapman Case:

> "'But when the sovereign engages in business and the conduct of business enterprises and contracts with individuals, whenever the contract in any form comes before the courts the rights and obligations of the contracting parties must be adjusted upon the same principle as if both contracting parties were private persons. Both stand upon equality before the law, and the sovereign is merged in the dealer, contractor, and suitor.' See, also, Carr v. State, 127 Ind. 204, 26 N. E. 778, 11 L. R. A. 370, 22 Am. St. Rep. 624."

The foregoing language should be read in the light of the declarations of the court in the same case first hereinabove quoted. As so read and considered, it is clear that the court, in using the language which appellant construes as a support for his position, was referring entirely to cases in which the state had breached its contracts, negligently or otherwise. In other words, the court, in the language referred to, was speaking of actions against the state sounding in contract and not actions to recover damages for the torts of the state's officers, agents, or servants committed while discharging their duties as such. While not saying so in so many words, it is clear that the court, in the Chapman opinion, had in mind and purposely recognized the proposition that, as to the state or any of its agencies or mandatories established for the purpose of administering portions of its sovereign powers, the rule of liability for wrongs committed by the state or such agencies appertains exclusively to breaches of contractual obligations, and not to the tortious acts of the agents or employees of the state committed in the course of their employment as such from which injury to the person or property of others directly follows. Indeed, if the Chapman decision could reasonably be construed as sanctioning the right of action in tort against the state or any of its mandatories for the torts of its officers, etc., the case would represent an exception to the general run of cases upon that subject in practically all the state as well as federal jurisdictions. Many of these cases are cited in respondent's brief. They are too numerous to mention herein.

[3] The contention that the case here is taken out of the category of cases in which the state or its agencies charged with the administration of certain portions of its sovereignty by reason of the asserted fact that the State Compensation Insurance Fund is a business enterprise conducted by the state for profits, is answered adversely thereto by the Compensation Act itself. Section 37 (c), as amended by St. 1915, p. 1098, § 19, provides:

> "Said fund shall, after a reasonable time during which it may establish a business, be fairly competitive with other insurance carriers, and it is the intent of the Legislature that said fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than self-supporting. In order that the State Compensation Insurance Fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than self-supporting, the actual loss experienced and expense of the fund shall be ascertained on or about the first of January in each year for the year preceding, and should it then be shown that there exists an excess of assets over liabilities, such liabilities to include the necessary reserves, and a reasonable surplus for the catastrophe hazard, then, in the discretion of the commission, a cash dividend shall be declared to, or a credit allowed on the renewal premium of each employer who has been insured with the fund, such cash dividend or credit to be such an amount to which, as in the discretion of the commission, such employer may be entitled as the employer's proportion of divisible surplus."

Thus it is clearly made to appear that the Legislature did not intend that the Compensation Fund should be managed for profit, but, to the contrary, plainly evinced the intention that it should not be conducted as a profit-bearing enterprise to the state. A similar proposition was advanced in the case of Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 P. 416. The plaintiff sought damages against the state for personal injuries received by the falling of a portion of the "grand stand" on which he was sitting as a spectator at the state fair held at Sacramento, claiming and alleging that said "stand" was, by the state's officers in charge of the fair, negligently maintained in a condition unsafe for the use or purpose for which it was erected and intended to be maintained. He paid the required admission fee to the grounds and buildings of the fair, and it was contended, among other things, as here, that the state fair was a business enterprise conducted by the state for gain or profit. The court held that, although all persons desiring to visit the fair were required to pay an admission fee and the same was collected by the state through its officers or agents in charge of the fair, it was not the design or intention of the act creating the institution (a governmental agency) that it should be profit-producing to the state, and that the language of the statute itself showed clearly that it was not to be so conducted. In this connection, it may well be stated that there is much in the opinion in the Melvin Case that cogently bears upon some of the other points presented here and which supports the position of respondent thereon.

[4] The proposition that the state, when it engages in the prosecution of a private business enterprise, waives its immunity from liability for the torts of its officers or agents employed in the administration of the affairs of such enterprise, is not supported either by principle or authority. As we have seen, appellant seeks to support the proposition upon the theory upon which municipalities are held subject to the rule of liability in cases in which the damage complained of has been caused by the negligent act or conduct of an officer, agent, or servant engaged in the discharge of duties appertaining to or connected with the administration of some function of the municipality in the employment or exercise of its proprietary capacity or powers. In the case of Riddoch v. State, 68 Wash. 329, 123 P. 450, 452, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1033, the court had before it precisely the same proposition. In a well-considered opinion, the Supreme Court of Washington held that the proposition was entirely untenable. What is said in the opinion on the subject involves such a clear exposition of the rule and of the reasons that mark a clear line of distinction between the state and municipalities in such a case, that we feel that we are justified in reproducing it in full:

> "The appellant seeks to confine this rule of nonliability for torts to cases where the negligence of the officer or agent occurred in the discharge of some purely governmental function of the state. He contends that, in leasing the armory, the state was engaged in a private enterprise, and that the rule of nonliability, therefore, does not apply. The question is admittedly a new one. No authority distinctly so holding, nor indeed recognizing such an exception, has been cited, and we have found none. It is argued that the distinction is sustained by analogy to a similar exception to the rule of nonliability as applied to municipal corporations. The analogy, however, does not hold. Municipal corporations enjoy their immunity from liability for torts only in so far as they partake of the state's immunity, and only in the exercise of those governmental powers and duties imposed upon them as representing the state. In the exercise of those administrative powers conferred upon, or permitted to, them solely for their own benefit in their corporate capacity, whether performed for gain or not, and whether of the nature of a business enterprise or not, they are neither sovereign nor immune. They are only sovereign and only immune in so far as they represent the state. They have no sovereignty of their own, they are in no sense sovereign per se. Their immunity, like their sovereignty, is in a sense borrowed, and the one is commensurate with the other. Such is, in effect, the conclusion reached in Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332, after a most exhaustive review of the authorities, both American and English. The same principle underlies our own decisions. Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 39 P. 273, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847; Russell v Tacoma, 8 Wash. 156, 35 P. 605, 40 Am. St. Rep. 895; Cunningham v. Seattle, 42 Wash. 134, 84 P. 641, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 629, 7 Ann. Cas. 805; Linne v. Bredes, 43 Wash. 540, 546, 86 P. 858, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1068, 11 Ann. Cas. 238.

"On the other hand, the state is inherently sovereign at all times and in every capacity. It is the organized embodiment of the sovereign power of the whole people. By reason of this sovereignty, it possesses all powers, but only such powers, as are within the limitations of the state Constitution and without the prohibitions of the federal Constitution. It can do no act, except in the exercise of this sovereign power and within these constitutional limitations. If it may constitutionally take over any enterprise, though usually of the nature of a private business, the very taking over is an exercise of this sovereign power. It seems much more logical and much more consonant with the idea and genius of sovereignty that the enterprise thus taken over should be impressed with the sovereign character of the state, than that the state should become hampered by the private character of the enterprise. The latter result is incompatible with the concept of sovereignty.

"This seems to us to be the only logical basis for the following decisions, holding the state not liable for torts in connection with the administration of such enterprises taken over by the state: State v. Hill, 54 Ala. 67, in which the state was held not liable, at the suit of an owner, for the tortious killing of stock by the agents of the state in operating a railroad; Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 P. 416, in which the state was held not liable to a spectator, who had paid for admission to a state fair conducted by an agency of the state, for a tortious injury by the falling of negligently constructed seats; Denning v. State, 123 Cal. 316, 55 P. 1000, in which the state was held not liable to an employee, injured by the fall of a negligently fastened ladder on a tug boat owned by the state, and operated by the state harbor commissioners as an agency of the state."

To the same effect are all the cases to which our attention has been directed. Of these, the following may be named: Davis v. State, 30 Idaho, 137, 163 P. 373, 375, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 911; Herkimer Lumber Co. v. State, 189 N. Y. S. 119, 122, 196 App. Div. 708; State v. Sharp, 21 Ariz. 424, 189 P. 631; Dietrich v. Palisades Interstate Park Com., 187 N. Y. S. 454, 456, 114 Misc. Rep. 425; Stephens v. Commissioners of Palisades Interstate Park Com., 93 N. J. Law, 500, 108 A. 645; State v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., etc., 175 Ind. 59, 93 N. E. 213, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, 261; Clodfelter v. State, 86 N. C. 51, 41 Am. Rep. 440.

[5, 6] The necessary conclusion from the foregoing considerations is, obviously: That the State Compensation Insurance Fund is an agency of the state, created and maintained for the purpose of administering certain of the state's sovereign powers; that the state cannot be bound by or held liable for the torts of its agents, servants or employees committed while engaged in the performance of their duties as such, unless it has clearly given its consent to be so bound or liable; that the state of California has not authorized the maintenance of actions against it or any of its mandatories for the torts of its agents, etc., committed while prosecuting their duties as such; and that therefore the plaintiff cannot maintain this action against respondent herein. The conclusion thus arrived at and announced is manifestly decisive of the case here as to both counts of the complaint. It is hence unnecessary to consider herein the attack upon the complaint on the other grounds raised by the demurrer and discussed in the briefs of the respective counsel.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J., and PLUMMER, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 86

KRUSE et ux. v. WHITE BROS. et al.★

(Civ. 5464.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1927. Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1927.)

1. Municipal corporations 🔑706(7)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian injured by automobile held for jury.

Evidence, in action by pedestrian to recover for injuries by automobile while crossing a public highway, held sufficient for jury on question of contributory negligence.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑705(2) — Pedestrian has equal rights on highway with automobile driver.

Pedestrian, although having duty of using ordinary care for his safety, has equal rights on public highway with those of automobile driver.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Master and servant 🔑302(1)—Employee's deviation exonerating employer from liability for negligence must be for purpose entirely personal.

In order that employee's deviation from strict course of duty will exonerate employer from liability for injuries resulting from employee's negligence, it is essential that the deviation be for purpose entirely personal to employee and must be so substantial as to amount to an entire departure.

4. Master and servant 🔑332(2)—Employee's deviation as constituting complete departure from duty is question of fact.

Whether employee's deviation from strict course of duty has been so material or substantial as to constitute a complete departure is usually a question of fact.

5. Master and servant 🔑332(2)—Employee's abandonment of employment at time of injuring pedestrian by automobile held for jury.

In pedestrian's action for personal injuries by automobile owned by corporation and operated by employee, evidence on question of whether injury occurred after employee had abandoned employment held for jury.

6. Trial 🔑253(4)—Instruction directing verdict for pedestrian injured by automobile held not erroneous as ignoring defense that employee was not acting within employment.

Instruction, in pedestrian's action for injuries from automobile, directing verdict in event of finding certain facts, held not erroneous as ignoring defense that employee was not acting within scope of employment, since such question was fully covered by other instructions and use of word "defendants" necessarily implied that jury must find, in connection with facts specified, that employee was acting within scope of employment.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1170(9)—Instruction authorizing inference that automobile driver, when injuring pedestrian, was acting within employment, held not reversible error under evidence supporting finding (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Instruction directing jury to infer that automobile driver at time of injuring pedestrian was acting within scope of employment held not to require reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of evidence sufficient to support jury's finding without aid of inference referred to in instruction.

8. Trial 🔑296(7)—Instruction requiring overcoming presumption that employee, when injuring pedestrian, was within employment by satisfactory evidence, if erroneous, held not prejudicial in view of other instructions (Code Civ. Proc. § 1835).

Instruction, in pedestrian's action for injuries by automobile, requiring inference that at time of accident defendant employee was engaged in business of defendant employer to be overcome by satisfactory evidence, if erroneous, held not prejudicial, in view of other instructions, since in absence of instruction as to significance given term "satisfactory evidence" by Code Civ. Proc. § 1835, jury must be presumed to understand words according to ordinary meaning.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by E. A. Kruse and wife against White Bros. and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. E. Reardon, of San Francisco, for appellant William T. Meyer.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and Walter H. Linforth, all of San Francisco, for appellant White Bros.

Preston & Duncan, of San Francisco (Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

CASHIN, J. Appeals by defendants from a judgment entered on a verdict for the plaintiffs in an action to recover for personal injuries.

E. A. Kruse is the husband of Madeline C. Kruse, and the latter—who will be hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff—while crossing a public highway known as the Alameda, near its intersection with Yosemite avenue in Berkeley, Alameda county, was injured by an automobile owned by the corporation defendant and operated by Meyer, one of its employees. As grounds for reversal of the judgment, it is urged by appellant corporation that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a finding that Meyer was acting within the scope of his employment, and that certain instructions to the jury were prejudicially erroneous; and, by appellant Meyer, that the only inferences reasonably to be drawn from the evidence support his special defense of contributory negligence.

Meyer, who resided in Oakland, was there employed as a salesman for the corporation, a dealer in hardwood lumber, with its place of business in San Francisco. According to the testimony his working hours commenced at 8 a. m. and ended at 5 p. m., it being his duty during those hours to solicit orders for his employer, for which purpose the automobile was furnished by the latter. The automobile when not in use was kept in a garage in the possession of Meyer, the employer making a money allowance for this service. Some days before the date of the accident—which occurred on November 23, 1921, at about 6 p. m.—Bruce Bartholomew, who wished to purchase a quantity of hardwood lumber, communicated his wants to Meyer, and the testimony tends to show that it was the intention of the latter on the evening of the accident to call at the Bartholomew residence, which was situated at Colusa avenue between San Pedro and Tacoma avenues, one block southwest of the Alameda. At about 5 p. m. on that day Meyer drove the automobile from the yard of a lumber company, to which his duties had taken him and which was situated several blocks south and west of the Bartholomew residence, to a point several blocks east and south of the yard mentioned. He there by previous arrangement met Miss Keaha Ingram, who also resided on Colusa avenue, but four blocks northwest of the Bartholomew residence. Meyer testified that, accompanied by her, he drove back over the same route to Milvia street, which runs north from the route previously traversed, followed this street to Hopkins street, and thence through the latter to the Alameda. From this point for a considerable distance the Alameda runs in a northerly direction, thence turns to the northwest, from the turn running nearly parallel with the section of Colusa avenue in which are situated the residences mentioned. These streets are connected by cross-streets, two of which, namely, San Pedro and Tacoma avenues, lead from the Alameda to points between which is situated the Bartholomew residence, and two, called Capistrano and San Lorenzo avenues, join Colusa avenue further to the northwest at points nearer the Ingram residence. Meyer testified that he, with his companion, proceeded along the Alameda, passing San Pedro and Tacoma avenues, and then turned to the northeast near its intersection with Capistrano avenue into a street known as Lovers' Lane, which follows a winding course in that direction, ending at Yosemite avenue. The latter street, which Meyer followed, runs thence to the west and ends at the Alameda at the place of the accident, which was northeast of the residences and cross streets mentioned. The distance from the junction of Tacoma avenue with the Alameda along the latter to Lovers' Lane and thence through the lane and Yosemite avenue to the point of the accident was approximately 2,150 feet; and from the junction mentioned directly along the Alameda to the same point it is approximately 1,600 feet. Meyer further testified that it was his intention to turn at the place of the accident and proceed southeast along the Alameda to San Lorenzo avenue, distant about 400 feet, and thence to the junction of the latter with Colusa avenue, which junction is approximately 600 feet from the Bartholomew residence and 1,000 feet from the Ingram residence; thence to drive northwest to a point near the latter residence, allow his companion to alight, and then, if time permitted, to proceed to the dwelling of Bartholomew.

To prove that there was no diversion from the direct route to the latter residence, plaintiff sought to show by certain physical conditions that, contrary to the testimony of Meyer and his companion, he reached Yosemite avenue by a route to the east of the Alameda and Lovers' Lane. On the evening of the accident, which was dark, vision being made more difficult by a thick fog, the plaintiff, who was proceeding to her home, in attempting to cross from the southwest to the northeast side of the Alameda to a point a few feet to the north of a triangular parked space at its junction with Yosemite avenue, was struck by the automobile driven by Meyer, which approached from the east along the latter street and turned in a northwesterly direction into the Alameda. Yosemite avenue before reaching the Alameda divides in order to permit vehicles to pass to the north and south of the parked space mentioned, the north curb line of the avenue turning to the northwest for that purpose. The plaintiff testified that she stopped, looked, and listened before starting to cross; that she neither saw nor heard the approach of an automobile; that she then proceeded to the north of the parked space, where she stopped and looked east along Yosemite avenue; that she saw the lights of an automobile in that direction which appeared to be stationary; that hearing no warning signal she continued her course to the gutter on the further side of the Alameda and had placed her foot on the curb when, having seen no approaching light until immediately before the impact, she was without other warning struck and injured. Appellant Meyer admitted that the automobile rounded the curb to the north at a speed between 10 and 15 miles an hour; that he had not seen respondent until the car reached the point about 2 feet from the place where she was struck, and that the horn was not sounded.

[1, 2] While, as contended by Meyer, it was the duty of the plaintiff to use ordinary care for her own safety, her rights in the street, although not superior, were equal to his, and her testimony, if believed by the jury, was sufficient, in view of the circumstances, to sustain the finding that in pursuing the course shown she was not wanting in ordinary care. As stated, Meyer was a salesman, and while it appears from the testimony of officers of the corporation that he had been instructed that the auto should be used only for business purposes it further appears from that of the sales manager that the latter knew that the order was not being strictly followed. The automobile was at all times in Meyer's possession, and he was not forbidden to use it for business purposes after his regular hours, nor to permit others to accompany him while so using it. He was given a wide discretion as to his movements, not being restricted—as might happen with an ordinary servant—to particular routes while performing his duties.

[3] In Gousse v. Lowe, 41 Cal. App. 715, 183 P. 295—where it appeared that it was the duty of a servant to drive his employer's automobile from a garage to the home of the latter four blocks to the west, but who drove the car on a mission solely his own to a point 2½ miles to the east, a collision occurring while returning to the garage—it was held that the act of the servant was not within the scope of his employment, following the general rule there stated that if a servant abandons or departs from the business of the master and engages in some matter suggested solely for his own pleasure or convenience, or pursues some object which relates to an end or purpose which may be said to be the servant's individual and exclusive business, and while so engaged commits a tort, the master is not answerable. Kish v. Cal. State Auto Assn., 190 Cal. 246, 212 P. 27. To exonerate the master, however, it is essential that the deviation be for purposes entirely personal to the servant (39 Corp. Jur., p. 1297, Master and Servant, §§ 1493, 1494); and a deviation will be regarded as immaterial if the latter combines his own business with that of the master or attends to both at substantially the same time (Brimberry v. Dudfield Lumber Co., 183 Cal. 454, 191 P. 894). A mere deviation from the strict course of his duty does not release the master from liability. In order to have that effect it must be so substantial as to amount to an entire departure. 39 Corp. Jur. p. 1297, Master and Servant, § 1493. As the rule has been stated:

> "One does not cease to be acting within the course of the master's employment because his most direct and immediate pursuit of the master's business is subject to necessary, usual or incidental personal acts, nor even by slight and immaterial delays or deflections from the most direct route for a personal or private purpose, the pursuit of the master's business continuing to be the controlling purpose. Such acts, not amounting to a turning aside completely from the master's business so as to be inconsistent with its pursuit, are often only what might be reasonably expected, to which, therefore, the master's assent may be fairly assumed; or they are in many instances the mingling with the pursuit of the master's business some purpose of the servant's own." Shearman & Redfield Negligence (6th Ed.) § 147a.

[4] Whether there has been a deviation so material or substantial as to constitute a complete departure is usually a question of fact. In some cases the deviation may be so marked, and in others so slight relatively, that the court can say that no conclusion other than that the act was or was not a departure could reasonably be supported; while in still others the deviation may be so uncertain in extent and degree in view of the facts and circumstances as to make the question of what inferences should be drawn from the evidence properly one for the jury. Healey v. Corkrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L. R. A. 1918D, 115; Ritchie v. Waller, 63 Conn. 155, 28 A. 29, 27 L. R. A. 161, 38 Am. St. Rep. 361; Gousse v. Lowe, supra; Dennis v. Miller Automobile Co. (Cal. App.) 238 P. 739.

In the instant case the evidence was sufficient to show that Meyer was not required to follow certain or fixed routes while engaged in the performance of his duty, and to support the conclusion that acts not amounting to a complete turning aside from the employer's business so as to be inconsistent with its pursuit were anticipated by the employer; and that deviations from the strict line of his employment, so long as the pursuit of the employer's business remained the controlling purpose, were tacitly assented to by the latter.

In Dennis v. Miller, supra, it appeared that it was the duty of an employee of the defendant corporation to transport packages from its garage to the office of an express company situated 14 blocks to the west and 10 to the north of the garage; that instead of proceeding to his destination by the usual and more direct route to the west and thence to the north, as an accommodation to other employees, who wished to be transported to their home situated 6 blocks to the south and 11 to the west of the garage, he proceeded south to the street on which the residence was situated, and thence towards the west, and that when at a point near the residence an accident occurred. It was there held that the question whether the employee was then acting within the scope of his authority was one for the jury.

[5] Whether the detour made by Meyer on the evening of the accident amounted to an abandonment of the employment was in view of the evidence a question on which reasonable men might differ. We cannot say as a matter of law that such was its effect; and are of the opinion that, as in the case last cited the question was one for the jury; and that their implied finding that it was not such abandonment is supported by the evidence.

It is admitted that the corporation owned the car and that it had been furnished to the employee for use in its business. It might fairly be inferred from the testimony of Meyer and Bartholomew that the pursuit of the master's business was the controlling purpose of the employee throughout his course, and that the deviation from the direct route was within the rule stated—one which the employer might reasonably be deemed to have anticipated and assented to, and was not such as to amount to an abandonment of the employment.

[6] The court by three of its instructions directed a verdict for the plaintiff in the event the jury found certain facts to be true. Appellant corporation contends that in so doing the court ignored the defense that Meyer at the time of the accident was not acting within the scope of his employment. Two of the instructions referred to provisions of the law requiring the signal device directed to be attached to a motor vehicle to be sounded as a warning of danger, and forbidding the operation of the car without adequate braking equipment; and the third to the care required of the driver. By the first the jury were told that if at the time of the accident the "defendants" violated the first provision mentioned, and by the second and third that if the "defendants" at the time of the accident were operating the car without adequate brakes or without due care as to speed, they should render a verdict in favor of the plaintiff if they further found that the omissions mentioned were the proximate cause of the injury and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

The question presented by the defense mentioned was fully covered by other instructions; and the use of the word "defendants" necessarily implied that the jury must find, in connection with the facts specified, that the servant at the time of the accident was acting within the scope of his employment.

[7] The jury were further instructed as follows:

> "In this case it is admittedly the fact that at the time of the accident the defendant Meyer was in the employ of the defendant White Bros., Inc., and that the automobile which he was driving was the property of the defendant White Bros., Inc., and was intrusted by that company to Meyer for use as a solicitor for said White Bros. From these facts the law infers that at the time of the accident in question the defendant Meyer was acting within the scope of his employment by the defendant White Bros., Inc. This inference, however, may be overcome by other evidence in this case."

It is contended that this instruction in effect directed the jury to infer from the admitted facts that the servant at the time of the accident was acting within the scope of his employment. As held, the jury might draw the inference in the absence of proof to the contrary (McWhirter v. Fuller, 35 Cal. App. 288, 170 P. 417), but are not bound to do so (Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 P. 530; Fahey v. Madden, 56 Cal. App. 593, 206 P. 128); and an instruction that a presumption arises or that the law infers therefrom that the servant was so acting is a misdirection of the jury (Fahey v. Madden, supra; Albert v. McKay & Co., 53 Cal. App. 325, 200 P. 83), which, as held in the cases last cited, is a ground for reversal if, as section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution in effect provides (People v. Chapman, 55 Cal. App. 192, 203 P. 126; Vallejo & Northern R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 P. 238), it affirmatively appears that the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The testimony of Bartholomew tends to prove the fact that an engagement had been made for the evening in question, and this, with Meyer's testimony that he then intended, time permitting, to call on the former was sufficient to support the finding of the jury without the aid of inferences drawn from the admitted facts referred to in the instruction; and we cannot say that this finding was based on the erroneous statement that a presumption arose therefrom.

[8] Appellant corporation in its closing brief calls attention to a further instruction given at plaintiff's request which was as follows:

> "The inference that at the time of the accident the defendant Meyer was engaged in the business of the defendant White Bros. may be overcome by satisfactory evidence that Meyer had departed from the business of White Bros. and was engaged exclusively on business of his own."

It is urged that this instruction placed an undue burden on appellant, requiring more than a preponderance of the evidence to overcome the inference which might be drawn by the jury.

In Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093, an instruction was given which stated in substance that the defense of contributory negligence must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury by a preponderance of the evidence. The court in reversing the judgment and ordering a new trial on other grounds said with respect to the instruction that—

> "In a civil case it is the weight of evidence * * * which is sufficient to establish a fact. * * * As given, the instruction might tend to confuse a jury into believing that something more than this was required."

In a dissenting opinion Justice Shaw, referring to the criticized instruction, said:

> "The court seems to have feared that the words 'to your satisfaction' might be understood by the jury to mean 'beyond a reasonable doubt.' But the jury must be presumed to understand words according to their ordinary meaning."

The court, in Boa v. S. F.-Oakland Terminal Railways, 182 Cal. 93, 187 P. 2, with respect to a similar instruction given by the trial court, said:

> "This court has repeatedly decided that an instruction that in substance informs the jury that a party having the burden of proof as to a certain fact or issue must establish it to the satisfaction of the jury by a fair preponderance of the evidence is not reversible error, where the other instructions in the case clearly define what is meant by a preponderance of the evidence and distinctly advise them that a preponderance of the evidence will be sufficient to justify a finding in favor of the party having the burden. In such cases it is held that the words 'to the satisfaction of the jury' are equivalent to 'find' or 'believe.'"

In the absence of an instruction as to the signification given the term "satisfactory evidence" by the Code section (Code Civ. Proc., § 1835), as said in the Hutson Case, supra, "The jury must be presumed to understand the words according to their ordinary meaning." According to Webster, New International Dictionary, the word "satisfactory" means "sufficient"; and by the Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia the definition "fulfilling all demands and requirements" is given, the term "satisfactory evidence" being therein defined as "such evidence as in amount is adequate to justify the court or jury in adopting the conclusion in support of which it is adduced."

In the instant case the jury was instructed that in civil cases a preponderance of the evidence is all that is required. The meaning of the term was defined; and it was further instructed that if it found from the evidence that at the time of the accident the driver was not performing any work for his employer, but was on a mission of his own, its verdict should be for the appellant corporation notwithstanding that the latter owned the automobile and the driver was its employee. These instructions were sufficient to correct the impression which the criticized instruction might tend to create, and the latter, if erroneous, was not prejudicial.

The evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict, and we find no error in the proceedings which can reasonably be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

81 Cal. App. 159

PEOPLE v. STAFFORD. (Cr. 1438; 3010.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 31, 1927. Rehearing Denied March 1, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1927.)

1. Embezzlement 🔑10—Evidence showing sale of securities, under power of attorney fraudulently obtained, and appropriation of proceeds held not to warrant acquittal on charge of embezzling securities (Pen. Code, § 507).

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 507, for embezzling certain corporate stocks and bonds belonging to complaining witness, evidence that defendant had sold the stocks and bonds involved, under a power of attorney fraudulently obtained, authorizing him to act for complaining witness and for her use and benefit, held not to entitle defendant to acquittal on theory that he had not appropriated the stocks and bonds, but rather their proceeds.

2. Embezzlement 🔑8—Though complaining witness was estopped to claim title to securities, sold under power of attorney fraudulently obtained, state could investigate execution of power.

In prosecution for embezzlement of stocks and bonds, sold under power of attorney fraudulently obtained, complaining witness was estopped to contend, as against innocent purchaser, that title did not pass, though state was not estopped to inquire into circumstances of transaction prior or subsequent to the execution of the power of attorney.

3. Embezzlement 🔑10—Defense that power of attorney, under which stocks were sold, fixed defendant's rights, though fraudulently obtained, held not available.

In prosecution for embezzling stocks and bonds, sold under power of attorney fraudulently obtained, defense that defendant's rights were controlled by the written power, however obtained, held not available, being based on his own wrongdoing.

4. Criminal law 🔑696(7)—Refusal to strike out answer only in part responsive to question held not error, motion being addressed to whole.

In prosecution for embezzlement of stocks and bonds, sold under power of attorney fraudulently obtained by promise of marriage, refusal to strike out answer of complaining witness concerning defendant's authorized use of her charge accounts held not error, though part of answer was not responsive to question; the motion being addressed to the whole.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

James L. Stafford was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. T. Aggeler, Public Defender, and G. A. Benedict, Deputy Public Defender, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

YORK, J. The defendant was convicted on the first count of an indictment, which first count charged him with the embezzlement of certain corporation stocks and Liberty bonds, "all of the aggregate value of $686." A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and the defendant has appealed from the order denying motion for a new trial, and from a judgment of conviction on the verdict.

[1] Appellant contends that he was given authority to sell the stocks and bonds by the complaining witness by a letter or power of attorney executed by her, and he claims that, having been so authorized, he was acting within the scope of his authority when he sold the bonds, and hence, that there could have been no unlawful conversion of the property by him. But unfortunately for his contention, the letter or power of attorney executed by the complaining witness authorized him to act for her and for her use and benefit, and the jury could have found, and undoubtedly did find, that he obtained the possession of the property dishonestly, and obtained the power of attorney dishonestly, and did not intend to dispose of the property for her or for her use and benefit, but for himself and for his own use and benefit.

Reduced to plain terms, appellant's contention, in effect, is that, because by this power of attorney he was authorized to sell the bonds and stocks, he could not be convicted of embezzling that property (which is the charge against him), even though he might have been guilty of embezzling the money obtained by selling that property. But the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in determining that the stocks and bonds had been intrusted to him for no further purpose than that he might use them as collateral in borrowing money for use in a certain business; that he promised to return said stocks and bonds to the owner, Mrs. Meagher, when they had served that specific purpose; that he obtained the power of attorney by pretending that it was needed to enable him to use the stocks and bonds for said stated purpose; that, instead of using the property for the purpose and in the manner authorized by the owner, defendant sold said property outright and decamped with the money. Under such facts, it cannot be maintained that there was not an embezzlement of the property intrusted to the defendant, or that the embezzlement, if any, must have been embezzlement of the money and not of the stocks and bonds. The transaction, the fraud, the crime, was single and inseparable, and included the very property which had been intrusted to the defendant. Pen. Code, § 507.

---

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

There was no error in the trial court's refusal to give the requested instruction pertaining to an alleged partnership, or the requested instruction to acquit the defendant. There was no evidence worthy of consideration that the complaining witness was ever a partner with the defendant, or that he ever intended to form a partnership with her, or that there ever was a bona fide partnership such as defendant contended existed, and the evidence is not sufficient to establish that defendant ever intended to apply any of the proceeds of a sale or loan of the property of the complaining witness to any partnership venture.

[2] Appellant's contentions with regard to the alleged partnership and the binding force of the power of attorney are inconsistent in that, while he contends that the terms of the power of attorney should control, and that they cannot be varied by any oral stipulations, he himself endeavored to modify or change the terms of the trust imposed upon him, by contending that oral stipulations gave him further authority to deal with the property to promote the alleged partnership. While it is true that if the defendant sold the property and the purchaser was innocent of the defendant's breach of trust, the complaining witness would be estopped to contend that the title did not pass, such a condition would have no significance as to appellant's obligation to the complaining witness. The state would not be estopped to inquire into the circumstances of the transaction, prior or subsequent to execution of the power of attorney. People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 36 P. 952; People v. Tambara, 192 Cal. 236, 219 P. 745.

[3] If we interpret the position of appellant accurately, he seeks to show his innocence of the charge by proving his own perfidy He virtually contends that he obtained the authority to do with the property as he pleased, even though such authorization was obtained by deceiving the complaining witness, making love to her, and promising to marry her, although he was a married man, of which fact he kept her uninformed. In People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. at page 235, 10 P. 508, our Supreme Court quotes Lord Mansfield:

> "No man shall set up his own iniquity as a defense, any more than as a cause of action."

His position shows his guilty intent. Appellant, among other things, wrote complaining witness, whom he had fraudulently induced to consent to marry him:

> "Anent the handling of your affairs, Billy dear, you will have to give me a legal power of attorney to do this, otherwise, it would not be lawful for me to transact any business on your behalf."

The time was set for the proposed wedding, and just before that time arrived appellant surreptitiously disappeared, and the complaining witness had never been informed what he had done with her stocks and bonds, and now, in his defense, he argues:

> "The written document is controlling."

In the face of all his fraudulent scheming to obtain for his own use property of the complaining witness without compensation to her, and his violation of the terms of the trust, the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury to acquit him. In the case of People v. O'Brien, 106 Cal. 104, 39 P. 325, cited by appellant, there was no felonious intent and no deception. There is undisputed testimony in this case sufficient to establish such a continuous story of felonious intentions and deceptions on the part of appellant that it would be difficult to believe that he had any honest purpose in any of his acts, either in obtaining the property or the power of attorney.

[4] Many rulings of the trial court have been cited as erroneous. We have reviewed them all, and the court may have made some remarks of a slightly prejudicial nature. In cross-examination of the complaining witness as to her authorizing him to purchase on her account at a store, appellant's counsel asked of her:

> "And you told whatever Mr. Stafford charged was all right?"

She answered:

> "I told him that Mr. Stafford and I expected to be married on Saturday and that he was financially embarrassed temporarily; that I had given him right of my charge accounts. I went into the store the next morning, and when I saw the list I realized that it was all wrong because there were many items of women's apparel and things."

A motion was made to strike out the answer, that it was not responsive. The motion was denied. The last sentence was not responsive, but inasmuch as the motion pertained also to matter that was responsive, the court could not grant the motion in full without striking out the responsive matter. It was therefore not error, as it would have been if the motion had been to strike out the unresponsive portion only, definitely setting forth in the motion the unresponsive portion. Some rulings were made which were subject to criticism, but they were not prejudicial, because, while evidence was excluded or admitted against objections which should have been sustained, the fact of the bad faith of the defendant would otherwise have been fully sustained by evidence which is not open to objection.

To review here separately all of those rulings objected to would have no useful purpose. The remarks of the trial judge excepted to, if omitted, would still have left facts which could not be refuted as establishing appellant's guilt beyond controversy. Therefore there was no miscarriage of justice in the trial of this case.

Therefore the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing in the Supreme Court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal is denied. In denying said petition we do not wish to be considered as approving any language to be found in the opinion to the effect that the appellant should have been found guilty of embezzlement if he had formed, at or prior to the time he acquired possession of the property, the felonious intent to convert the same to his own use, in violation of the terms upon which it had been entrusted to him. Such language was not necessary for the decision of any question involved in this appeal, and is an incorrect statement of the law applicable to the crime of embezzlement.

---

81 Cal. App. 187

BAXTER v. BOSTON-PACIFIC OIL CO.

(Civ. 5558.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 3, 1927.)

1. Pleading 🔑270—Demurrer could be amended after issue joined, by leave of court, to contain certificate of counsel (Code Civ. Proc. § 473, superior court rule 40).

Demurrer was pleading, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, could be amended by leave of court, after issue joined, to include certificate of counsel, required by rule 40 of the superior court.

2. Courts 🔑85(1)—Rules of court should not be permitted to obstruct justice.

Rules of court are but a means to facilitate justice, and should not be permitted to obstruct it.

3. Corporations 🔑133—Corporation was not guilty of conversion for refusal to transfer stock for partner of deceased stockholder, who claimed stock to be partnership property, but who produced no proof of legal title (Code Civ. Proc. § 1585).

Corporation was not guilty of conversion for refusal to transfer stock on demand of partner of deceased stockholder, an apparent stranger, who produced no proof of legal title, nor the certificate itself, but who claimed that stockholder had purchased shares for partnership, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1585.

4. Partnership 🔑67—Legal title to stock purchased for partnership in name of partner, whose name was also partnership name, was in estate of deceased partner, who purchased stock.

Where partnership name was that of one of partners, who bought stock for partnership, legal title to stock was in estate of deceased partner, in whose name it was bought.

5. Corporations 🔑130—Corporation occupies fiduciary relation with shareholders in holding and transferring title to stock.

Corporation occupies fiduciary relation with its shareholders in holding and transferring title to shares of stock, and is required to act in good faith and with care in making such transfers.

6. Corporations 🔑131—Corporation was not bound on its peril to correctly interpret legal relations existing between partners and transfer stock to partner seeking it.

Corporation was not bound on its peril to correctly interpret legal relations existing between partners, and award title of stock to partner seeking it, where there was disputed claim, which required judicial settlement.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Sadie E. Pritchard against the Boston-Pacific Oil Company, to compel the transfer of stock. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order refusing to strike defendant's amended demurrer, plaintiff appeals, and Jennie M. Baxter, as administratrix of the estate of Sadie E. Pritchard, deceased, was substituted as appellant in place of plaintiff. Affirmed.

C. Franklin Baxter, of Los Angeles, and Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank Hall and Harry S. Whitthorne, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. When the demurrer to the complaint came on for hearing in the court below, the point was raised that no certificate of counsel was attached to the demurrer, as required by rule 40 of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The court thereupon granted defendant leave to file an amended demurrer. The amended demurrer was afterwards filed, containing the missing certificate. Thereafter a motion was made by plaintiff to strike the amended demurrer, upon the ground that the filing of the same was without authority of law. This motion was denied. Thereafter the court heard the amended demurrer upon its merits, and made its order sustaining the same, without leave to amend. Judgment was entered for defendant. This appeal is from the order refusing to strike and from the judgment for defendant.

[1, 2] It is urged that a demurrer to a complaint is not a pleading, and cannot be amended after issue joined. The case of Hedges v. Dam, 72 Cal. 520, 14 P. 133, is relied on. That case, however, is authority to the contrary. It holds that a demurrer is a pleading, which may be amended as of course under section 472, Code of Civil Procedure, before the trial of the issue of law thereon. If a demurrer is a pleading under section 472, which may be amended as of course, then it is also a pleading which, under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, may be amended by leave of court, as was done in this case. We think the amendment to the demurrer was properly allowed and that the motion to strike was properly denied. Rules of court are but a means to facilitate justice, and should not be permitted to obstruct it. Pickett v. Wallace, 54 Cal. 147; Sullivan v. Wallace, 73 Cal. 307, 14 P. 789.

The next question to be considered is whether the complaint states a cause of action. In brief, it alleges as follows: That plaintiff, in 1892, entered into a verbal "partnership and association" with Fred G. King to engage generally in mining business. Plaintiff was to supply the capital and King his time and abilities to the business. Thereafter the business was carried on by them "in and under the firm name of Fred G. King" up to the time of the death of King in 1920, leaving plaintiff the sole surviving partner of said firm; that large profits were made; that no accounting or settlement of the partnership affairs has been made; that a large sum of said profits was invested by said King for said partnership association in the purchase of 50,354 shares of the defendant corporation, of the "face value" of over $300,000, "which were standing in said partnership name on the books of said corporation, and were held by him as such partner at the date of his death, the certificates * * * which had been issued to him in his lifetime in his name being in his possession at said date as a part of the assets and property of said partnership." It is further alleged that demand was made of defendant to transfer and deliver one-half of said stock and certificates to plaintiff as sole surviving partner of said King; that defendant has refused to do so, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $150,000. The prayer is that defendant be compelled by an order of court to transfer one-half of said stocks and certificates to plaintiff, or for judgment for $150,000, the value thereof, and damages to plaintiff by reason of said refusal.

Plaintiff calls this an action for conversion, and cites authority to the effect that conversion lies against a corporation for refusing to transfer shares of stock to one entitled thereto. She especially relies on Ralston v. Bank of California, 112 Cal. 208, 44 P. 476, to this effect. She also cites Code of Civil Procedure, § 1585, and authorities to the effect that a surviving partner may continue in possession of the partnership property and wind up its affairs. From this it is apparent that this action is brought on the theory that plaintiff had a present existing right upon demand to have the shares (one-half thereof) transferred to her by the corporation; that plaintiff is entitled to damages for conversion, the conversion being the refusal of the corporation to transfer the one-half of the stock and certificates to the plaintiff upon demand.

The Ralston Case cited above does not support plaintiff's contention. In that case the plaintiff was the transferee and the holder of the certificate of stock. The defendant corporation refused to transfer the stock on demand, claiming a lien thereon under its bylaws on account of indebtedness to the bank of the former stockholder. The court held that, inasmuch as the bank had sold the said indebtedness of the stockholder, it was no longer entitled to a lien.

[3, 4] While in a proper case a surviving partner is entitled to possession of the partnership shares of stock, it does not for that reason alone follow that the corporation is guilty of conversion for its refusal to transfer stock upon the demand of an apparent stranger who produces no proof of legal title nor the certificate itself representing its shares. Whatever might be the ultimate right of plaintiff in the stock under the facts alleged, the fact is that the legal title to the stock was in the estate of Fred G. King, deceased. Notwithstanding the allegation in the complaint that the stock was held in the name of the partnership, to wit, Fred G. King, that being also the name of the deceased, it was as if he held in his own individual name the legal title for the alleged partnership.

[5, 6] A corporation occupies a fiduciary relation with its shareholders in holding and transferring title to shares of stock and is required to act in good faith and with care in making such transfers. Cooper v. Water Co., 171 Cal. 158, 153 P. 936; Nagel v. Ham, etc., 88 Wash. 99, 152 P. 520. A corporation is not bound upon its peril to correctly interpret executory contracts of shareholders or other legal relations existing between its shareholders and to award the title of stock to the ultimate and true owner. There may be a disputed claim made which requires judicial settlement between the claimants before it should be recognized. We think this is such a case. Damages for conversion have been refused against a corporation for its failure to transfer stock where the one demanding transfer relied for his rights upon an executory contract without the legal title and where proper evidence of his title or right of possession was not produced. Edwards v. Sonoma Valley Bank, 59 Cal. 136; Morrison v. Gold, etc., Co., 52 Cal. 306: Hawkins v. Mansfield Gold Mining Co., 52 Cal. 513. Likewise damages for conversion have been awarded against a corporation for transferring stock without sufficient proof of authority from the registered owner. Tafft v. Presidio, 84 Cal. 131, 24 P. 436, 11 L. R. A. 125, 18 Am. St. Rep. 166, citing Civ. Code, § 324.

Under these authorities we think the defendant was justified in refusing to transfer the stock (one-half thereof) to plaintiff upon her demand as alleged in the complaint.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

81 Cal. App. 55

CLOVER v. JACKSON. (Civ. 5332.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 26, 1927.)

1. Constitutional law 🔑240(1), 296(1)—Licenses 🔑7(1)—Broker's act requiring license for sale of shares of stock by owner whose predecessor acquired shares before enactment of act, held unconstitutional (Corporate Securities Act, § 2, subds. 9, 9 [a], and §§ 5, 14).

Corporate Securities Act, § 2, subds. 9, 9 (a), and sections 5, 14 (St. 1917, p. 673), requiring natural person to secure broker's permit before he may sell his own securities where he was not issuer or underwriter of same, is unconstitutional, and hence does not affect validity of sale of shares of capital stock by owner having no broker's license whose predecessor acquired shares before enactment of act.

2. Courts 🔑90(1)—Case, falling clearly within rule stated in prior decision of Court of Appeals, is controlled thereby.

Where facts of case fall clearly within rule stated in previous decision of Court of Appeals such decision is controlling.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Bertin A. Weyl, Judge.

Action by J. B. Clover against J. C. Jackson, in which defendant filed cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant on cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. B. Ogden, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. H. Neblett, and John Dickinson, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. An appeal by plaintiff from a judgment given in favor of defendant on a cross-complaint in an action brought to recover installment payments claimed to be due under a written contract whereby defendant agreed to buy from plaintiff 80 shares of the capital stock of the Rush Creek Mutual Ditch Company.

Answering, defendant denied that said installments were then due, and interposed affirmative defenses alleging fraud in procuring the contract, and that said contract was void under the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), in that the sale of said stock was made by plaintiff without having first obtained a broker's license as required in said act. Defendant also filed a cross-complaint setting forth substantially the same matters alleged in the affirmative defenses, and prayed for a rescission of the contract of sale and the return of a cash payment of $800 made on the purchase price of said stock at the time of the execution of the contract. In answer to the cross-complaint plaintiff denied the material allegations thereof, and alleged that the provisions of said Corporate Securities Act under which defendant sought to invalidate the sale were unconstitutional.

The trial court found in substance that nothing was due plaintiff under the complaint for the reason that the action had been brought prematurely; that plaintiff had committed no fraud, but that the contract of sale was void under the Corporate Securities Act for the reasons set forth in the affirmative defense and in the cross-complaint. Accordingly, judgment was entered that plaintiff take nothing by his action, that the contract of sale be canceled, and that defendant have and recover from plaintiff the said sum of $800 with interest.

Plaintiff's appeal herein is directed against that portion of the judgment, given under the cross-complaint, declaring the contract to be void, and for the return of the $800 cash payment made thereunder, and does not involve the remaining portions of the judgment pertaining to the issues arising under the allegations of the complaint, or those relating to the question of fraud.

Section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act as it stood at the time the foregoing transactions occurred provided in part that:

> "No person or company shall act as an agent or broker until such person or company shall have first applied for and secured from the commissioner a certificate, then in effect, authorizing such person or company so to do. * * *"

And subdivisions 9 and 9 (a) of section 2 of said Corporate Securities Act provided as follows:

> "The word 'broker' as used in this act includes every person or company, other than an agent, who shall, in this state, engage, either wholly or in part, in the business of selling, offering for sale, negotiating for the sale of, or otherwise dealing in any security or securities issued by others, or of underwriting any issue of securities or of purchasing such securities with the purpose of reselling them or of offering them for sale to the public for a commission or at a profit; excepting therefrom the following: (a) any owner of any security who is not the issuer and underwriter thereof, who sells or exchanges the same for his own account; provided, that such sale or exchange is not made in the course of repeated and successive transactions of like or similar character by him. * * *"

By section 14 of said act it was declared that any person who failed to comply with or willfully violated said act was guilty of a public offense punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary or in the county jail or by a fine. It was therefore respondent's contention in the trial court, as it is here, that since the statute denounced as a penal offense the act of selling stock without a broker's certificate, a contract founded upon or made pursuant to such criminal act is void even though the statute does not expressly so declare. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14.

The following are the facts: The Rush Creek Mutual Ditch Company, a mutual irrigation company, organized during the year 1912, under the laws of this state, was engaged in developing water in Mono county, Cal., for the purpose of irrigating certain land in the vicinity of Mono Lake. The total capitalization of said company consisted of 30,000 shares, of which 29,995 were, in January, 1913, issued to the Mono Valley Improvement Company in consideration of the performance of a contract made by the latter company to construct a canal through lands to which the ditch company proposed to furnish water for irrigation. Each share represented and carried with it an ownership interest in said canal and the water rights and other properties of said ditch company, and a permanent right to have, use and enjoy one inch of water, measured under four-inch pressure, diverted from said canal during the irrigation season for irrigating and reclaiming lands under and contiguous to the canal.

Said improvement company failed to complete the construction of said canal, and in June, 1918, its contract to do so was taken over by appellant, who is a construction engineer, having specialized in irrigation work for over 20 years in the states of Oregon, Idaho, Colorado, and California. In consideration for the assumption by appellant of the performance of said uncompleted contract to build said canal, said improvement company transferred to him 19,120 shares of the stock held by it in said ditch company, also certain promissory notes of the face value of $55,000, and an interest in 428 acres of land in Mono county. Under his contract appellant was obliged to construct the canal for a distance of about 30 miles, and up to the time of trial he had completed 9 miles thereof and expended for this purpose approximately $50,000.

Soon after receiving the entire block of stock from said improvement company appellant advertised the same for sale through the medium of newspapers and printed literature. Being attracted by said advertisements, respondent, in April, 1919, entered into the contract in question for the purchase of said 80 shares at a price of $60 a share, making an initial payment thereon of $800 and agreeing to pay the balance of $4,000 in annual installments extending over a period of ten years; but appended to the contract was an agreement on the part of appellant that none of said installments should become due and payable until said canal had been completed to a point specified therein, from which water could be diverted for irrigation of the real property described therein, and thereafter all payments due up to that time should be paid within 30 days. The contract for the sale of the stock to respondent was the first one made by appellant after acquiring the stock, the next one being made with other parties some five months later, and thereafter 15 or 20 similar contracts were entered into, the total sum received from all sales of stock amounting to approximately $20,000.

The trial court found specifically from the foregoing facts that at the time of the sale in question appellant was the owner of a large number of shares of the capital stock in said company, of which the 80 shares sold to respondent were a part, and that the entire block of stock acquired by him had been issued to, fully paid for by, and the right to transfer, sell and assign vested in, appellant's assignor in January, 1913, prior to the enactment of said Corporate Securities Act. The main question presented for determination, therefore, is whether, in view of appellant's conceded ownership of the stock, which so far as the record shows is not tainted with fraud, and under the circumstances under which the sale was made to respondent, the provisions of said Corporate Securities Act requiring a broker's certificate to sell the same are, as appellant contends, unconstitutional, as being violative of the rights of individuals to own, hold and dispose of property, and consequently inoperative as to the transaction here involved.

Since this action was tried and decided in the trial court, and subsequent to the filing of the record on appeal herein, the constitutionality of the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act challenged herein were fully considered and determined in the recent case of People v. Pace (Cal. App.) 238 P. 1089, a petition for hearing before the Supreme Court having been subsequently denied. It was therein held that subdivisions 9 and 9 (a) of section 2 of said act, as amended in 1923 (Laws 1923, p. 87), which, so far as the questions here involved are concerned, are identical in terms with the original enactment of 1917, in force at the time of this sale, were unconstitutional in so far as they attempted to require a natural person to secure a broker's permit as provided in said act before he may lawfully sell his own securities, where he was not the issuer or underwriter of the same.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that the facts of the instant case fall clearly within the rule there stated, and that therefore the decision in that case must be held as controlling here. There the defendant Pace, president of a domestic corporation engaged in the candy business, acquired a large amount of the stock of said corporation by purchasing from the company certain unpaid promissory notes given in payment of stock subscriptions, the company holding the stock as collateral for the payment of said notes. Upon default in payment of said notes, Pace became the bona fide owner of said stock, and thereafter, without having a broker's certificate, disposed of a number of shares thereof in 16 separate sales covering a period of about five months. In support of the constitutionality of the statute it was there contended, as here, that the effect of the provisions of said act under consideration was merely to reasonably regulate the mode of disposing of property for the protection of the public and in the interests of general welfare, and that the owner's right of disposition was not taken away thereby. Answering this contention the court said, after reviewing a number of cases upon the subject:

> "But nowhere in the authorities sustaining the regulation of the business of brokers do we find authority to sustain the contention made here, that the police power under the guise of general welfare may be invoked to interfere with the sale by an individual of his own property when the acquiring and possession of such property is not contrary to law."

The instant case, on principle, cannot be fairly differentiated from the case cited, although in two particulars their facts differ; here the stock was acquired by the present owner's predecessor several years prior to the enactment of the Corporate Securities Act, which does not appear to be the fact in the Pace Case, and appellant herein did not apply for a broker's certificate prior to the sale of the stock; whereas, in the Pace Case the stock was sold by Pace after a broker's permit, previously issued to him, had been revoked. But it would seem that the presence in the case before us of the distinguishable facts above mentioned only furnishes additional grounds for the application herein of the doctrine announced in the Pace Case.

Appellant's constitutional objections herein were based mainly upon the proposition that the stock which was the subject of the sale in question was issued to and paid for by appellant's predecessor long before the enactment of the Corporate Securities Act, by virtue of which act respondent seeks to annul the sale, and no contention was made as to the effect of the provisions of said act upon a case where the owner sold stock issued subsequent to the passage of said act, such as the Pace Case proved to be. Nevertheless, the legal principles announced in that case, being decisive of the legal issues presented here, must be given application herein and this appeal governed thereby.

Therefore, upon the authority of the Pace Case and for the reasons stated therein, it is held that the sale of said stock by appellant, under the circumstances hereinabove mentioned, did not constitute a public offense, and consequently the judgment declaring the sale to be void upon that ground is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, J. pro tem.

---

81 Cal. App. 195

PEOPLE v. SEIFFERT. (Cr. 1404.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1927. Rehearing Denied April 4, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 4, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑59(1)—Knowledge that crime is to be or has been committed does not make one accomplice, unless he aids in commission of crime.

Mere knowledge or belief that crime is to be or has been committed does not render person an accomplice, unless such person aided or participated in commission of crime.

2. Criminal law 🔑59(5)—To be an "accomplice," one must knowingly and with criminal intent aid or assist in criminal act.

To render a person an "accomplice," he must in some manner, knowingly and with criminal intent, aid, abet, assist, or participate in criminal act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

3. Criminal law 🔑507½—Evidence held to justify finding that sister, who went with deceased sister to defendant's office to have abortion performed, was not accomplice.

In prosecution for murder, evidence held to justify finding that sister, who went with deceased sister, to defendant's office to have abortion performed, was not an accomplice, where there was evidence that she had urged deceased sister not to go to defendant's office.

4. Criminal law 🔑742(2)—Whether sister, who went with deceased to doctor's office to have abortion performed, was accomplice held for jury.

In prosecution for murder, question whether sister of deceased, who accompanied deceased to defendant's office to have abortion performed, was an accomplice held for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

John H. Seiffert was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

A. T. Johnson, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James W. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The appellant was jointly charged with one Charles E. Marsh with murder. Marsh was granted a separate trial. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree against this appellant. After denial of his motion for a new trial judgment was pronounced, and it is from that judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial that he appeals.

The facts necessary for the disposition of this appeal are, briefly, as follows: On February 25, 1926, the deceased, Louise Giovanazzi, being then pregnant, went to the home of her sister, Mrs. de Pietri, where she remained until she was taken to the hospital a few hours before her death on March 4, 1926. On February 25, 27, 28, and March 1 and 2, the deceased visited the offices of the defendants for the purpose, as she said, of having a curettement. She was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. de Pietri, in Mrs. de Pietri's automobile. The latter remained in the reception room while the deceased was in the private room with the doctor. During the last visit and while in the private room, the deceased appeared to suffer great agony; she called her sister in, who found her "sweating just like you would take a cloth and just get it out of a bath tub." As she went to the office of the defendant on March 2, the deceased gave no indication of suffering, but after the operation they had to carry her out and put her into the automobile. About 2 a. m. the next morning the deceased was operated upon, and, according to the attending physician, a packing was removed; the abdomen was full of blood; two punctures in the uterus and one in the posterior peritoneum were found and sutured. On March 4 an autopsy was performed, and, in addition to the three punctures just mentioned, an opening or puncture of the ascending vena cava was discovered, and also a six or eight weeks' fœtus. The testimony of the physicians was to effect that death resulted from the puncture of the vena cava, which is the vein carrying the blood back to the heart. Mrs. de Pietri testified to the visits to the appellant's office and that she asked her sister not to go there any more. She also testified that her sister had told her that the doctors said she was pregnant, and she judged she was having curettement for the purpose of bringing about a miscarriage, and that she (the witness) was willing to aid her in any way she could.

The contention of the appellant is, in substance, that the verdict is not justified by the evidence for the reason that Mrs. de Pietri was an accomplice and that subtracting her testimony there was not sufficient to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. We might as well observe at the outset that, while there is ample evidence of an attempted abortion, the only testimony tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged is the testimony of Mrs. de Pietri and her son, Dominico de Pietri, who testified that he drove the automobile and saw his mother and aunt go into the Stimson building, the place where defendants had their office, several times, and that on the last visit she was feeling pretty good when he took her there, but extremely ill when he took her home. This statement of Dominico de Pietri is of very slight corroborative value on the questioned point, but we do not feel that we are called upon to pass upon its sufficiency for the reason that the jury were given proper instructions covering the subject of accomplices and the value to be attached to the testimony of accomplices.

While there was testimony of statements made by the deceased shortly before her death that she had gone to the defendant's office for the purpose of having an abortion performed, the jury was instructed that this testimony was admitted for the sole purpose of showing her condition of pregnancy and the purpose of her visit, and that the same could not be considered by them as tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged. So far as this testimony is concerned, therefore, we are not called upon to determine its corroborative value or whether the deceased could, under the circumstances detailed, be held to be an accomplice in her own death, it having been admitted under the rule laid down in People v. Wright, 167 Cal. 1, 138 P. 349, for the limited purpose specified in the instructions.

[1, 2] As has been suggested, the court fully instructed the jury upon the subject of accomplices. It defined accessories as "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission," and called special attention to the testimony of Mrs. de Pietri in telling them that they could not render a verdict of guilty on the testimony of an accomplice unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and also instructed them as follows:

> "I also further instruct you that mere knowledge or belief that a crime is to be committed or has been committed does not render a person an accomplice, unless such person aided or participated in the commission of the crime.
>
> "I further instruct you that, in order to render a person an accomplice, he or she must in some manner knowingly and with criminal intent aid, abet, assist, or participate in the criminal act.
>
> "I further instruct you that an accomplice is one who, knowing that a crime is being committed, willfully and with criminal intent intentionally aids, abets, or assists another in the commission of such crime or criminal act; and whether or not one is an accomplice, as defined in these instructions, is for the jury to determine from all the testimony and circumstances in proof in the case."

The instructions given correctly stated the law with respect to who are to be regarded as accomplices, and the effect to be given to the testimony of such a witness.

[3, 4] It should be remembered that there is no suggestion that Mrs. de Pietri was actually present when the operation was performed, nor any suggestion that she assisted the doctor in the performance of the operation, or spoke to the defendant concerning the operation. Also, there was testimony that Mrs. de Pietri urged her sister, the deceased, not to go to the doctor's office. Under these circumstances, the jury evidently believed that Mrs. de Pietri was not an accomplice, and the testimony was such that a finding to that effect must be upheld. People v. Brewer, 19 Cal. App. 742, 127 P. 808; Greenwood v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 247, 105 P. 371; People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62, 32 N. E. 616. We are not justified in saying, as a matter of law, that the witness was an accomplice. People v. Brewer, supra. In fact, whether, as a matter of law, the witness could be considered an accomplice is discussed in the cases heretofore cited, and People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 P. 1017.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 176

SKELLENGER v. ENGLAND et al.
(Civ. 3188.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 1, 1927.)

1. Life estates 🔑3—Evidence held to warrant finding son gave mother life estate and retained vested remainder in unused portion of principal.

Plaintiff's testimony that, by agreement, he gave mother property for her lifetime and all moneys and properties left after her life were to revert to him held to warrant finding that mother was given life estate, with right to consume such part of principal as was necessary for her support, and that plaintiff retained vested remainder in unused portion.

2. Life estates 🔑5—Life tenant, with right to consume principal for support, is not "trustee," in ordinary sense.

One given life estate in property, with right to consume such part of principal as might be necessary for her support, where donor retained vested remainder in unused portion thereof, was not a "trustee," in ordinary sense in which word is used.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Trustee.]

3. Life estates 🔑3—Gift held to create relation of life tenant and remainderman.

Where son gave property to mother for her lifetime, under agreement that all properties left after her life should revert to son or his heirs, relation created was that of life tenant and remainderman.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1012(1)—If evidence is sufficient to support finding, question whether it is clear and satisfactory is for trial court.

If evidence in any case is sufficient to support a finding, question whether it is clear and satisfactory is for trial court.

5. Estoppel 🔑68(5)—Plaintiff, having convinced court in former action that statements were true, cannot complain of finding in instant case that they were true.

Plaintiff, having convinced court in divorce case that he had given property to mother absolutely, could not justly complain of court's finding, in instant action to establish trust in property given, that his previous statements were true, where contrary finding would deprive his children of support which his mother provided for them out of same property, which, he testified in divorce action, he had given her.

6. Trial 🔑91—Refusal to strike out declaration of deceased donee regarding gift, where no objection was made to question, held not error.

In action to establish trust in property, in which plaintiff claimed he had given mother life estate only, refusal to strike out testimony of witness as to statement of deceased mother, "I can do anything I please with this money," where no objection was made to question, held not error.

7. Gifts 🔑49(1)—Evidence held to show verbal gift to mother of property, of which she was in possession, after son had given her life tenancy (Civ. Code, § 1147).

In action to establish trust in real and personal property of plaintiff's deceased mother, evidence held to show that after plaintiff had given mother life estate in property of which she was in possession, he verbally gave her property absolutely, in view of Civ. Code, § 1147.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Harry D. Skellenger against Mary D. England, as executrix of the last will and testament of Sophia R. Winslow, deceased, and others, to establish trust in real and personal property. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Karl C. Partridge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gerald C. Halsey, Frederick T. Leo, and Philip C. Boardman, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment herein in favor of defendants.

Sophia R. Winslow, plaintiff's mother, died May 1, 1919, leaving a last will and testament, executed September 28, 1914, by the terms of which she made disposition of her real and personal property. The will was duly admitted to probate, and defendant Mary D. England, decedent's daughter, was appointed executrix. Defendants Don and Robert Skellenger are sons of the plaintiff, both of whom were minors at the time of the trial. The plaintiff and all of the defendants are beneficiaries under the will. December 14, 1903, in the settlement of the estate of plaintiff's aunt, Caroline E. Cogswell, there was distributed to him property of the value of about $85,000, consisting of stocks, bonds, and $10,598.89 in cash. Out of the property so distributed to him, the plaintiff delivered to his mother property of the value of $20,000, consisting of money and bonds, which, he alleges, was "to be held and invested for said plaintiff in trust" for him, under an agreement "wherein and whereby it was agreed that said Sophia R. Winslow would have a life estate in said moneys and said bonds and the income thereof, and that upon the death of the said Sophia R. Winslow said moneys and bonds or the property in which said moneys had been invested should go to and vest in the plaintiff." Some of the money delivered by the plaintiff to his mother was by her invested in a city lot and the construction of flats thereon and certain bonds so delivered were held by her at the time of her death. The prayer of the complaint is that:

> "It be adjudged and decreed that Sophia R. Winslow held the herein described real and personal property in trust for the plaintiff herein, and that the said Sophia R. Winslow was the owner of a life estate only in said property, and that plaintiff herein is the owner in fee simple absolute of the property herein described, and that the defendant Mary D. England be required to deliver to plaintiff herein all the personal property and money herein described."

On issues raised by the answers of the several defendants, the court found:

> That "in or about December, 1903," the plaintiff and his mother entered into a written agreement, "under and by the terms of which agreement he gave to his mother money and other personal property * * * of the total estimated amount and value of $20,000, with the full right and power to invest, use, or dispose of the same or any part thereof as she might see fit, during her life, * * * that any of said moneys or property remaining at the death of said Sophia R. Winslow should revert to said Harry D. Skellenger, or to his heirs"; that in the year 1907 she invested a part of the money so given her in the aforesaid lot and flats; that at the time plaintiff received the $85,000 referred to herein, "he and Sophia Batchelor, the guardian herein of the minor defendants, Don and Robert Skellenger, were husband and wife, and said minor children, Don and Robert Skellenger, are the children of said marriage; that in the month of November, 1906, said Sophia Batchelor, as the wife of said Harry D. Skellenger, did commence an action to obtain a decree of divorce from Harry D. Skellinger, and for the support of herself and said two minor children; that about the time of the commencement of said action for divorce, but prior thereto, and after the execution of the said agreement, * * * but before said Sophia R. Winslow had invested any portion of any money or property received under such agreement in the real property or flats hereinabove described, said plaintiff, Harry D. Skellenger, freely and intentionally gave and voluntarily transferred, released, and intentionally gave and voluntarily transferred, released, and relinquished all of said money and other personal property to his mother, said Sophia R. Winslow, absolutely, and said money and personal property and the property described hereinabove was never given back to said plaintiff by his mother, but thereafter and up to the time of the death of said Sophia R. Winslow, the said money and personal property and the said real property hereinabove described was the sole and separate property of said Sophia R. Winslow in fee simple absolute; and by reason of said gift of all of the said property to his mother, plaintiff's said first wife, Sophia Batchelor, and said minor children, Don and Robert Skellenger, said children then being infants, and still being minors, by way of property settlement in said divorce action, received from plaintiff the sum of only $4,600, which last amount plaintiff borrowed from his said mother; that thereafter, and in the early part of the year 1919, * * * and prior to the 13th day of March, 1919, said plaintiff did direct and instruct his said mother, Sophia R. Winslow, to destroy the said agreement in writing hereinabove referred to, with the intent, purpose, and object of vesting the ownership of said money and personal property in her absolutely, and at said time said plaintiff freely and intentionally gave, released, and relinquished to his said mother any right, title, or interest in or to said property which he had or might have had by reason of the existence of said agreement, or its proceeds in whatever form it might then have been, and did further then and there confirm the ownership in fee simple absolute of said property and its said proceeds in his said mother, Sophia R. Winslow; * * * that a few days after such authority and direction was given by plaintiff to his said mother, the said Sophia R. Winslow did, pursuant thereto, destroy the said written agreement; and at all times subsequent to the making of said gift in the year 1906, by plaintiff to his said mother, and up to the time of her death, the said Sophia R. Winslow had full and complete dominion and control over all property, both real and personal, hereinabove mentioned; that at all such times the said Sophia R. Winslow had and was entitled to the possession of all of said property and held the legal title thereto as her own sole and separate property."

The attorney who drew the agreement between the plaintiff and his mother testified:

> That it was executed about the time the estate of the plaintiff's aunt was distributed; that the terms of the agreement, according to the recollection of the witness, "were that Mr. Skellenger was to convey to his mother money and stocks or bonds, I don't remember which, to the amount, as I remember it, of $20,000. * * * She * * * agreed that she would keep that sum and invest it, and that she was to receive the income from it as long as she lived and at her death the principal was to revert to Mr. Skellenger. The document contained more than that, but that is my best recollection of the gist of its terms."

The plaintiff testified:

That he placed his copy of the agreement in his mother's safe deposit box; that he last saw it "a short time before the earthquake"; that his mother had a copy which she placed in the same safe deposit box; that "the agreement read like this: $20,000 to be given to my mother for her lifetime, and all moneys and all properties left after her life was to revert to me or my heirs"; that he told his mother to burn the agreement "about four years ago, I believe, when I was in the insane asylum" as an inebriate; that his present wife (he having contracted a second marriage after his first wife was granted a divorce) applied for letters of guardianship of his person and estate; that "it made me pretty sore when she served those papers on me, and * * * I told my mother to burn up these papers * * * so that my wife couldn't get hold of them. * * *"

"Q. * * * You do not mean that it was your intention to divest yourself of your claim to this property? A. Not on your life. I had to have something to protect my other two boys (Don and Robert). * * *

"Q. You had prior to that, had you not, made a conveyance of your property in Napa county to your present wife? A. I did."

The plaintiff further testified:

That at about the time the agreement between him and his mother was executed, "I signed over everything I had to her, * * * all properties, all moneys and all properties. * * * I gave it to her so that she would be independent, * * * she wouldn't have to come to either one of us; I gave her a lifetime interest in this money, and all money and all property was to revert back to me after her death. * * *

"Q. Did you testify as a witness in your divorce proceedings in 1906? A. I think so.

"Q. Isn't it a fact that you testified on that occasion * * * that you had absolutely nothing, no property or money or interest of any kind whatsoever? A. I testified at that time because, as I told you before, I turned over all my property to my mother at that time. * * *

"Q. Previous to 1906 you had turned over all your property to your mother absolutely? A. Yes; she had charge of all my property.

"Q. And at that time in 1906 you did not claim or assert any interest whatsoever in any property held by your mother? A. I disremember.

"Q. You are quite positive that you testified that you had absolutely no property or interest whatsoever, in the divorce proceedings? A. I think that is correct; I wouldn't be positive of it; I think it is correct.

"Q. The reason why you testified so under oath was because you had previously to that time turned over to your mother all of your properties and interests absolutely? A. I think so. * * *

"Q. Did you ever make any conveyance in writing of any of this property to your mother? A. I did not."

Mrs. Sophie Batchelor, the former wife of plaintiff, testified:

"Q. Were you present in court * * * in 1906 and 1907 when the plaintiff in this case, Harry D. Skellenger, was in court testifying as to his property and his holdings or interest in property? A. Yes, sir. * * *

* * *

"Q. What did he say at that time in regard to this property? A. He said that he did not have any money of his own; that what he had received in this will was given to his mother in fulfillment of a promise made to her. * * * That he hadn't anything.

"Q. What did he say regarding the $4,600 that you received under this interlocutory decree pursuant to that agreement? A. He said that was his mother's property, * * * it was not his. * * *

"Q. In 1919 * * * were you present at any conversation or conversations in which his mother and he took part? A. Yes. * * * That was in the latter part of February or the early part of March. * * * There had been some conversation in an adjoining room which I did not overhear. * * * As he was about to leave his mother * * * said, 'Well, Harry, now I will destroy those papers.' He said 'Mother, you can do as you please; I don't give a darn what you do. I have given it to you.' * * * I did not know to what it alluded, not having known anything about any agreement."

Mary D. England testified:

That she saw the agreement, "about a year or so before the earthquake," and also two or three years prior to her mother's death; that it provided "that Harry was to receive the money, after mamma's death, that was left. * * *

"Q. 'Money that was left,' did it state what that meant? A. No, I don't know that it did."

Fred C. Skellenger, plaintiff's brother, testified:

That, shortly after Mrs. Winslow's death, "I says to him (plaintiff), 'Now, you give mamma that property to do as she pleased with it,' * * * the property of the flats and the stocks, whatever it was. * * * He as much as acknowledged that he did, but * * * he wouldn't let it go through, because he said he didn't want the Englands to have another dollar of his money."

Lulu B. Skellenger, the wife of Fred C. Skellenger, testified:

That, at the time referred to in her husband's testimony, "We said the change that mother had made in the will was done with his consent, after he had given her the property to do as she pleased with and had told her to destroy the agreement. * * * He said that he had changed his mind; that he at that time told her to do as she had done, but that he had changed his mind because he did not want the Englands to get any more money through him."

The plaintiff denied having made the foregoing statements. There is other testimony tending to support the respective theories of the parties, but since such testimony only affects the weight of the evidence, which is substantially conflicting, it need not be set out, except in so far as it relates to the will of Mrs. Winslow.

The will was executed September 28, 1914. March 13, 1919, Mrs. Winslow cut out and burned the third paragraph of the will, and on the margin of the page upon which that paragraph appeared she wrote, in her own hand, the following:

> "March 13, 1919. Having changed my mind abut about paragraph No. III I cut it out myself I wold like to have Dan & Rabart Skellenger sones of my son Hary D. Skellenger have the rents of flats 6 flats on Caselli Ave until they are 21 and then to be sold and my 3 children Fred Harry and Mary England to shair and share alike. Sophia R. Winslow."

L. M. Hoefler was a subscribing witness to the original will. It was stipulated at the trial that Hoefler, if called as a witness, would testify that the third paragraph of the will was as follows:

> "My son, Harry D. Skellenger, having given me certain moneys which he received from the late Mrs. Dr. H. D. Cogswell, with the understanding that I should use said moneys as long as I should live, and upon my death whatever remained of the said moneys or of property purchased therewith should revert to my said son, Harry, and the moneys so given me having been invested and used by me in the building of the six flats known as Nos. 179, 179A, 179B, 181, 181A, and 181B Caselli avenue, San Francisco, Cal., I therefore give, devise, and bequeath the said six flats, together with the lot upon which the same are situated, to my said son Harry D. Skellenger."

Mary D. England testified that she was present when her mother cut out the third paragraph of the will; that the third paragraph "just said that the flats and the money that was in the bank was to revert to my brother Harry at her death"; that it did not state "where she had gotten the money to invest in these flats"; that she was certain the third paragraph did not read as stated by Hoefler; that she read that paragraph carefully, and had seen the will "a great many times." By the terms of the will three bonds of the Oakland Transit Company, of the par value of $1,000 each, which plaintiff had given to his mother at the time of the execution of the agreement, were given to Don and Robert Skellenger. The total value of the estate of Mrs. Winslow, as shown by the inventory and appraisement, is $18,195.56.

[1-3] If it be conceded that the finding to the effect that the original agreement between the plaintiff and his mother gave her the right to use or dispose of the property "as she might see fit during her life" is without support in the evidence, the plaintiff's testimony that, by the terms of the agreement, he gave his mother the property "for her lifetime, and all moneys and all properties left after her life was to revert to me or my heirs," is sufficient to warrant the inference that she was thereby given a life estate in the property, with the right to consume such part of the principal as reasonably might become necessary for her support, and that the plaintiff retained a vested remainder in the unused portion thereof. Hardy v. Mayhew, 158 Cal. 95, 104, 110 P. 113, 139 Am. St. Rep. 73; Luscomb v. Fintzelberg, 162 Cal. 433, 441, 123 P. 247; Adams v. Prather, 176 Cal. 33, 40, 167 P. 534; Colburn v. Burlingame, 190 Cal. 697, 700, 214 P. 226, 27 A. L. R. 1374.

Mrs. Winslow was not a trustee in the ordinary sense in which that word is used. In a similar case it is said:

> "Judge Mayhew was a trustee only in the sense that the duty rested on him, as a life tenant merely, to have due regard for the rights of those in remainder, a duty in the nature of a trust constituting him an implied or quasi trustee for the remaindermen." Hardy v. Mayhew, supra, page 104 (110 P. 117).

The relation created by the agreement was that of life tenant and remainderman.

The court found, in effect, that in the year 1906, shortly after the execution of the agreement and before any of the money had been invested in real estate, the plaintiff made an absolute gift to his mother of the property referred to therein, and that in the year 1919 he confirmed the gift. The only evidence tending to support the finding that such gift was made in the year 1906 consists of the declarations of the plaintiff and the conduct of the parties to the agreement. Appellant contends that such evidence is insufficient to establish the gift, quoting from 28 Corpus Juris, page 681, as follows:

> "Declarations and admissions of an alleged donor in respect to a gift are not in themselves sufficient evidence to establish the gift. * * * But since they are admissible as evidence of his intention, they are to be weighed by the jury, and, when considered together with other corroborative evidence showing a delivery of possession and an absolute parting of all dominion or interest in the subject of the gift, may be sufficient to establish the gift. It has been held that the fact of delivery must be shown by other evidence than the mere declarations of the donor."

In the next sentence following the language quoted, it is said:

> "By the weight of authority, however, the delivery may be proved by the declarations of the donor, just as the gift itself may be."

On page 638 of the same volume it is said:

> "Where property is at the time of the gift in the possession of the donee, as agent for the donor or otherwise, it is not necessary that the donee should surrender to the donor his actual possession in order that the latter may redeliver it to him in execution of the gift, but a relinquishment by the donor of all dominion over the property and recognition of the possession of the donee as being in his own right is sufficient to perfect the gift."

In Wilson v. Hotchkiss, 171 Cal. 617, 619, 154 P. 1, L. R. A. 1916F, 389, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 570, the same rule is applied to a sale made to a vendee in possession. Section 1147 of the Civil Code reads as follows:

> "A verbal gift is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee."

In Adams v. Merced Stone Co., 176 Cal. 415, 418, 178 P. 498, 499, it is said:

> "That the fact that the thing was already in possession of the donee at the time, of declaring the gift is not enough, is well settled by the authorities."

That statement, however, is mere dictum. The alleged gift in that case was of intangible property, being an indebtedness due the donor from the defendant corporation, evidenced only by the books of the corporation, and the gift was made in view of death. The donor died before the trial, and the only evidence offered to prove the gift was the uncorroborated testimony of the donee that the donor had made a verbal gift of the property to him, he being the president and general manager of the corporation. The court said:

> "In the case of a chose in action not evidenced by a written instrument, the only means of obtaining control that is recognized by the authorities is an assignment in writing, or some equivalent thereof."

Of the decisions cited by the court in support of the dictum quoted, Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 137, 59 P. 389, involved the question of a gift by a wife to her husband of money which was the separate property of the wife deposited in a savings bank, she having taken a passbook showing an account with the bank in the alternative names of the husband or wife, and it not being "shown that the husband had any possession of the bank book until after the death of his wife." The court said that:

> "The idea of a gift is inconsistent with the retention by the wife of the right in herself to withdraw the whole of the money from the bank."

The other cases cited involved the validity of gifts made in view of death. In one of them, Drew v. Hagerty, 81 Me. 231, 17 A. 63, 3 L. R. A. 230, 10 Am. St. Rep. 255, it is said:

> "A gift, inter vivos, may be sustained without a distinct act of delivery at the time of the gift, if the property is then in the possession of the donee, and the gift is supported by long acquiescence of the donor, or other entirely satisfactory evidence. This court so held."

In Gray v. Gray, 111 Me. 21, 87 A. 661, it is said:

> "The law requires gifts inter vivos to be completed by actual delivery to the donee, or to some person for him, unless the property which is the subject of the gift is at the time in the possession of the donee, in which case the evidence must be clear and satisfactory that the donor had relinquished all control of and claim to the subject of the gift."

[4] This statement of the law applicable to verbal gifts is supported by the great weight of authority. As has been stated frequently, however, if the evidence in any case is sufficient to support a finding, the question whether it is clear and satisfactory is for the trial court. The requirement of clear and satisfactory evidence to establish a verbal gift is specially applicable in a case where the alleged donor has died prior to the trial and the only evidence offered to prove the gift is the testimony of the donee. This was the situation in Adams v. Merced Stone Co., supra. Here the position of the parties to the gift is reversed, the donee having died and the donor appearing in court to testify.

> "Evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061.

[5] Mrs. Batchelor testified that, in the divorce action, the plaintiff stated that he had given the property received from his aunt's estate to his mother, "in fulfillment of a promise made to her." The plaintiff testified that he had "signed over everything" that he had to his mother, "so that she would be independent"; that, in his wife's action against him for a divorce in 1906, he testified that he "had absolutely nothing, no property or money or interest of any kind whatsoever"; that he did not remember whether he then claimed or asserted any interest in the property held by his mother; that the reason he so testified in the divorce action was because he had previously turned over to his mother all of his "properties and interests absolutely"; that he had placed his copy of the agreement in his mother's safe deposit box, and had not seen it since a short time before the earthquake; and that subsequently, in the year 1919, he had directed his mother to destroy the agreement. His surrender in 1906 of possession of the agreement, which was the only written evidence of his rights in the property, and his subsequent direction to destroy it are consistent with the findings of the court and inconsistent with his present claims. His testimony at the hearing in the divorce action did not consist of unguarded statements, but they were made deliberately, under oath, for the purpose of defeating the claim of his wife and children for support. Having convinced the court in that case that such statements were true, the plaintiff cannot justly complain of the court's finding in this case to the effect that they were true, where a contrary finding would deprive the children of the support which his mother provided for them out of the same property, which, he testified in the divorce action, he had given to her.

[6, 7] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to strike out testimony of Mrs. England that, at the time the agreement was burned, her mother said:

> "I can do anything I please with this money."

No objection was made to the question to which the answer was responsive. In 28 Corpus Juris, page 676, it is said:

> "The declaration of a donee in possession, to the effect that he claims the property by gift, is inadmissible as substantive evidence of the gift, but is admissible as tending to show claim of ownership, or to rebut any inference of an admission against his ownership."

The fact that by her will, executed in 1914, Mrs. Winslow gave to her grandsons a part of the specific property which the plaintiff had delivered to her tends to show that she then claimed absolute ownership of the property.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

200 Cal. 382

HUNT, MIRK & CO., Inc., v. PATTERSON et al. (S. F. 11164.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1927.)

Judgment ⚷153(2)—Motion to vacate default judgment, made 20 months after entry, held ineffective; not being within 6 months after clerk's entry date (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Motion to vacate default judgment, made 20 months after entry of default, held ineffective; application to vacate being required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to be made within reasonable time, not exceeding 6 months from date of clerk's entry of default.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Hunt, Mirk & Co., Incorporated, against H. B. Patterson and the Hesperides Mining Company. Default judgments were entered against both defendants, and subsequently motion of last defendant named to vacate default judgment was granted, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. D. Knight, of San Francisco, for appellant.

D. P. Eicke and Frank G. Warren, both of Stockton, and William Grant and J. B. Zimdars, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court, upon an order to the respondent to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. The appeal herein is from an order of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco setting aside and vacating a default judgment theretofore entered in the above-entitled action against the defendant Hesperides Mining Company, a corporation. An examination of the record reveals that the clerk of said superior court duly entered the default of the Hesperides Mining Company on June 19, 1922, for failure to appear and plead within the time allowed by law. Thereafter and on November 9, 1923, the default of the other defendant, H. B. Patterson, was likewise and for the same reasons entered by said clerk. On the same day a judgment of default was entered by said superior court as against both defendants. Subsequently, and on January 4, 1924, the defendant Hesperides Mining Company filed a notice of motion to vacate and set aside the default judgment theretofore entered against it. This notice, though inartificially worded, may be interpreted to indicate that said motion would be made under and pursuant to the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On February 4, 1924, the motion to vacate and set aside the default judgment, entered against said defendant Hesperides Mining Company, was made in open court, and, after submission, was granted on the following day. This appeal was thereupon taken.

The appellant's contention touching the asserted abuse in the discretion exercised by the trial court is without merit. However, under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, a motion or application to vacate and set aside a default on the grounds therein enumerated must be made within a "reasonable time" not exceeding 6 months. The authorities declare that "the clerk's entry of the default, and not the entry of the judgment by the court, fixes the beginning of the 6 months within which the application must be made." McLain v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 56 Cal. App. 58, 59, 204 P. 869; Mader v. Christie, 52 Cal. App. 138, 141, 198 P. 45; Title Insurance Co. v. King Co. 162 Cal. 44, 46, 120 P. 1066. It is readily apparent, from the above chronological statement of the case, that the application to vacate and set aside the judgment entered herein was made approximately 20 months after entry by the clerk of the respondent's default, and therefore not within the time prescribed by law.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

For the foregoing reasons, the order appealed from is hereby reversed.

---

200 Cal. 414

PEOPLE v. ALLISON. (Cr. 2960.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑507(1)—Witness for state to whom burglars handed hams from railroad car held accomplice, requiring corroboration as matter of law, and submission of question to jury was reversible error (Pen. Code, §§ 459, 1111, 1181, subd. 6).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 459, for burglary of railroad car, where a codefendant testified that defendant and another inside of the car handed hams to him which he piled on the ground and which they later carried away, held the entry of such witness was sufficient to constitute his crime burglary and not merely larceny and make him an accomplice; hence submission of special issue whether such witness was an accomplice to the crime of burglary was reversible error, under sections 1111, 1181, subd. 6.

2. Criminal law 🔑780(1)—State's witness, who had received hams handed out by persons, held accomplice as matter of law in burglary of railroad car.

In prosecution for burglary of railroad car, state's witness, testifying that defendant and a companion within the car handed hams to him, held an accomplice as a matter of law, and instruction that if he did not encourage the breaking or entering or had no part in it he was not an accomplice was erroneous.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Bernard P. Allison was convicted of burglary, and after affirmance in the District Court of Appeal, and denial of rehearing, he petitions the Supreme Court for a hearing. Reversed.

Donald McKisick and J. S. Daly, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PRESTON, J. Defendant was convicted by a jury in the superior court of Sacramento county of the crime of burglary. He petitions this court for a hearing after decision of the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, on hearing and rehearing, affirming the judgment of conviction and order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of conviction in that there was no testimony introduced by the people to support a conviction but that of an accomplice, uncorroborated by other testimony or evidence tending to connect the accused with the commission of the crime; also that the trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony against the defendant, in submitting to the jury a special verdict as to whether the witness Speascock was an accomplice, in allowing the district attorney to misstate the law during his argument to the jury, and in giving instructions to the jury which were erroneous and prejudicial to the rights of defendant.

[1] The facts are briefly: On February 1, 1926, between the hour of 8 p. m., when it was inspected and seals found intact, and the hour of 10:30 p. m., when it was scheduled for departure, car No. 2100 stationed in Haggins yards attached to a freight train and loaded with freight, including a crate of hams, was broken open and about one-half the hams contained in the crate were removed. Subsequently, one Daniel E. Speascock and later defendant and one Hudson were arrested and charged with commission of the offense. The information in the court below read in part as follows:

> "The said Dewey Hudson, alias Roy Allen, Daniel E. Speascock, and Bernard P. Allison on or about the 1st day of February, A. D. 1926, * * * did then and there willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously enter car S. N. 2100, * * * with the felonious intent then and there to commit the crime of larceny. * * *"

On March 6, 1926, Speascock pleaded guilty to the information and asked for probation; he then became a witness against this defendant. There was no other testimony directly connecting defendant with commission of the crime.

Speascock testified in substance as follows: That on the evening of February 1st, he went with this defendant and Hudson to Haggins yards. They entered an empty box car to sleep. Shortly afterward defendant left the car and later called Hudson, who joined him; shortly thereafter he, Speascock, also left the car, and upon getting out saw defendant and Hudson in car No. 2100, the door being open. He stated:

> "I stood there just a few minutes, I don't remember which one of the boys first handed me the hams, but he told me to take them, and I did. * * * I took them on the other side of the track and laid them in the lot."

He testified that he did know they were going to break into this box car and had nothing to do with the breaking; that he piled the hams on the ground and after a large number were taken the three of them wrapped them in defendant's overcoat and secreted them at a point about 150 feet from the car. After the arrest Speascock accompanied a police officer to the spot and the hams were recovered.

Section 1111 of the Penal Code provides:

> "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. * * * An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

The question is: Was Speascock an accomplice? It is perfectly clear that not only was he "liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant," but he was in fact convicted on a plea of guilty of the identical offense charged against defendant herein. Nevertheless, it is urged that as Speascock did not enter the car, he was guilty of larceny according to the facts and not of burglary; that therefore he could not be an accomplice to the crime of burglary; that the evidence was such as clearly to make the question one of fact for the jury to determine, and, in this instance, relying upon certain alleged erroneous instructions, the jury rendered a special verdict as follows: "Was Daniel E. Speascock an accomplice in the commission of the crime of burglary as charged in the information? No."

Section 459 of the Penal Code provides:

> "Every person who enters any * * * railroad car, * * * with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary."

There is certainly no evidence to disprove the fact that Speascock did enter the car. If he reached up into the car, as he must have done to take the hams from the persons inside, his reaching in was an entry, coupled with the intent to abstract the hams, sufficient to constitute the crime of burglary. Or even if it be argued that the evidence does not prove the actual introduction of his arm into the car, nevertheless, it is clear that whenever he took a ham from his confederate inside, his arm was extended by the length of the ham to its contact with the hand of the other within the car, and, under the authorities, as will be shown by those hereinafter cited, this too would be deemed an entry, coupled with the specified intent, sufficient to constitute the crime of burglary, just as though he had reached into the car with the aid of a hooked stick or other artificial appliance and extracted the hams.

> "It is not necessary that the party shall get his whole body into the house. The least entry of any part of the body is sufficient, as the entry of the hand, or a finger only, or of the head or the foot." 9 Corp. Jur. 1020, § 24; State v. McCall, 4 Ala. 643, 39 Am. Dec. 314; Fisher v. State, 43 Ala. 17.
>
> "However, we do not construe the statute as meaning that there should be an entering of the whole body into the car, but an entry into the car, however slight, such as putting the hand through the opening with the intent to steal property, etc., therefrom, would be an entry in the meaning of the statute. * * *" Price v. Commonwealth, 129 Ky. 716, 112 S. W. 855.
>
> "When the thief breaks the house, and his body or any part thereof, as his foot or his arm, is within any part of the house, it is deemed an entry; or when he puts a gun into a window which he has broken (though the hand be not in), * * * this is an entry. * * * The same is true of the mere introduction of the offender's finger. * * * It has been said that discharging a loaded gun into a house is a sufficient entry." 1 Wharton's Criminal Law (10th Ed.) pp. 695, 696, §§ 774—776.
>
> "The statute dispenses with breaking but clearly contemplates the necessity for an entry. * * * No words are found in the statute qualifying the character, kind, time or manner of entry, save that such entry must be accompanied with the specified intent." 4 Cal. Jur. p. 718, § 3. See, also, People v. Barry, 94 Cal. 481, 29 P. 1026.
>
> "A breaking is not an essential element of the crime of burglary, as an entry of any character made for the purpose and with the intent to commit the crime of grand or petty larceny is sufficient." Syllabus People v. Ferns, 27 Cal. App. 285, 149 P. 802.

In view of these authorities, in our opinion, it was error to submit to the jury the special verdict above quoted. There was no conflict in the evidence, and it called for a finding not upon a question of fact, but upon a question of law, and it was in effect prejudicial to defendant. As stated in People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 436, 119 P. 901, 902 (39 L. R. A. [N. S.] 704):

> "When the question of an accomplice arises in the trial of a case, the general and accepted rule is for the court to instruct the jury touching the law of accomplices, and leave the question whether or not the witness be an accomplice for the decision of the jury as a matter of fact. People v. Kraker, 72 Cal. 459, 14 P. 196, 1 Am. St. Rep. 65. Whenever the facts themselves are in dispute, that is to say, whenever the question is whether the witness did or did not do certain things, which, admittedly, if he did do them, make him an accomplice, the jury's finding, upon familiar principles, is not disturbed. But where the facts are not in dispute, where the acts and conduct of the witness are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court to say whether or not those acts and facts make the witness an accomplice. For the law declares in mandatory terms that 'A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof.' Pen. Code, § 1111. Therefore, whenever upon appeal it is argued that the conviction was had upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it is equivalent to a declaration that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence, and this is always a legal question. Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 6. Hence, in every proper case, a Court of Appeals is called upon to consider whether or not the witness is an accomplice, and, if so, whether his evidence has received the corroboration demanded by the law before a defendant may be convicted upon it."

[2] It is also apparent from the foregoing authorities that appellant's complaint that the following instruction was erroneous is justified:

> "You are instructed that if the witness Speascock did not aid or encourage the breaking or entering of the car, if you find such car was broken and entered, and if you further find that he took no part in the breaking and entering of the car, if you find such car was broken and entered, then you are instructed he is not an accomplice within the meaning of the law although he may have received hams while standing outside from persons who were on the inside of the car, if you find such hams were so received."

In further support of this view we quote again from People v. Coffey, supra:

> "Wherever the commission of a crime involves the co-operation of two or more people, the guilt of each will be determined by the nature of that co-operation. Whenever the co-operation of the parties is a corrupt co-operation, then always those agents are accomplices, even as at common law they were principals."

This conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of the other points urged by appellant.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

200 Cal. 428

FARREN v. HOBBS. (Sac. 3766.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1927.)

1. Sales 🔑52(5)—Evidence justified finding of contract for sale of pump and appliances, in action for purchase price.

In action for services in boring well and for purchase price of pump installed in well, evidence justified finding that contract was made between defendant's testator and manufacturer for sale of pump and appliances.

2. Frauds, statute of 🔑89(3)—Where pump received and used by purchaser without denial of liability until action for price, case held not within statute.

Where purchaser of pump received pump shipped to him, paid freight, installed and used it, and ordered several extensions without denying liability under bills rendered him until action for purchase price, case was taken out of statute of frauds.

3. Sales 🔑284(1, 2)—Owner must guard against sand pouring into well after completion, and injury to pump by sand is not chargeable to seller installing pump.

Where contract for drilling water well was fully performed, subsequent danger of sand and gravel pouring into well, which might be anticipated for years after completion of well, was one which owner must guard against, and seller of pump installed in well was not responsible, under manufacturers' warranties, for injuries to pump caused by infiltration of sand.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by R. C. Farren against Alice B. Hobbs as executrix of the estate of A. L. Hobbs, deceased, substituted in place of A. L. Hobbs, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, and Brown & Albery, of Colusa, for appellant.

C. D. McComish, of Colusa, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against her, in her capacity as executrix of the estate of A. L. Hobbs, deceased, for $4,286.95, in an action upon two assigned claims. One of these claims was for boring a well and the other for the purchase price of a pump for the well.

The appellant, while approaching the matter from many directions, in substance, presents by her brief a determined attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain findings regarding the making of the contract for the pump and the performance of either the contract for the pump or for the boring of the well by the assignors of plaintiff.

Defendant's decedent, A. L. Hobbs, was the owner of a piece of land in Colusa county, part of which he had planted with trees and vines. In March, 1921, he made a contract with I. E. Florey, a well driller, under which Florey was to bore a twelve-inch well upon this land, so that a 9-stage 90-foot pump of Western Well Works manufacture could be installed satisfactorily. The depth of the well was to be determined by Hobbs, who agreed to pay Florey 75 per cent. of the money due him after the first 100 feet had been drilled, and 75 per cent. of the amount due him after each additional 50 feet had been drilled, and the balance in full when pump "is satisfactorily installed and operated." Florey also agreed to furnish "one 12-inch No. 9 State Western Well Works Vertical Turbine pump, with sufficient line shaft, line shaft couplings, discharge columns, oil conduits, etc., to place the bowls of the pump approximately 90 feet below the surface of the ground. * * * Pump to be delivered within 30 days." The price of this pump was to be $2,070 installed complete, less 2½ per cent.

There is no dispute about the execution of the foregoing contract. It was in writing and signed by the parties. After signing this contract, Florey contracted with the Western Well Works of San Jose for a pump in accordance with the specifications of his contract with Hobbs. He then proceeded to bore the well. He bored it 12 inches in diameter to a depth of 370 feet, and then engaged another well digger, Steele, to carry it down at a diameter of 10 inches; this reduction of diameter being decided upon by Hobbs and the drillers because there was danger of a collapse in the 12-inch casing. Steele carried the well down to 494 feet, according to his testimony, and at this point Hobbs, after consultation with the drillers, decided there might be water enough to suit his needs, and ordered Steele to make the perforations to let the water into the well. Steele did so and cleaned the well of sand and gravel to the bottom. Presumably the well was now ready for the pump. At this point Hobbs measured the depth of the well, and, according to his testimony and that of the man who assisted him, it measured only 472 feet in depth. The prior measurement of Florey, according to his testimony, had disclosed a greater depth by about 20 feet. There is some uncertainty about the record as to how this occurred—perhaps through a mistake of one or the other of the parties, or perhaps through the filling in of sand and gravel; but, however it occurred, the discrepancy caused a dispute over the amount due for boring the well. Because of this dispute, Florey refused to install the pump.

There is some variation in the testimony as to the next phase of the transaction, and we shall recite the evidence most favorable to the findings made by the trial court. Mr. Hobbs telephoned to the Western Well Works personally and ordered a change in the pump which they were to supply under their contract with Florey. He ordered it changed from a 9-stage 90-foot pump to a 12-stage 140-foot pump, and the company agreed to change it at an additional price of $585. The company confirmed this new order in a letter appearing in the transcript which, in part, reads as follows:

> "This will confirm our receipt of your telephone order to change the depth of your pump on contract dated March 17, 1921, from a 9-stage 90-foot pump to a 12-stage 140-foot Pump. The price of this additional material will be $585."

This letter was dated June 20, 1921. A clerk in the office of the Western Well Works testified that she had a telephone conversation with Hobbs on or about July 1, 1921, in which Hobbs told her that his pump was on his land, and that Florey refused to install it. He also stated that Mr. Lavendar was present, and that Mr. Lavendar was the man who was to install the pump under the Florey contract, but that Lavendar did not wish to install the pump over Florey's objections unless instructed so to do by the Western Well Works. Lavendar and Hobbs were together at the telephone, and, after the situation had been explained to the Western Well Works, the clerk representing that company consulted with its attorney, who happened to be present, and then asked Hobbs if he would pay the company directly for the pump if it ordered it installed. Hobbs stated that he would do so, and in reliance upon this promise Lavendar was called to the telephone and instructed by the company to install the pump. Hobbs was also told that the pump would be billed to him f. o. b. San Jose, and he said he would pay the Western Well Works for it. Lavendar proceeded to install the pump. It was ascertained that more extensions were required, and from time to time Hobbs telegraphed to the Western Well Works for such extensions, which were furnished. The pump and extensions were shipped directly to Hobbs. A statement of his account was sent to Hobbs each month by the Western Well Works, to which he made no objection.

On September 2, 1921, Hobbs wrote to the Western Well Works as follows:

> "Yours of the 30th just received and in reply will say that the pump you have in my well is not satisfactory. It is pumping 350 to 150 gallons per min. and using 55 H. P. Using the same amount of H. P. pumping 150 as it does 350. The water does not break. * * * I do not know the pull down is so am not sure at this time whether the trouble is in the quantity of water or the pump. But I do know it is not satisfactory. It would seem to me that it would be well for you to determine the draw down of the water in the well—and why using power enough for 500 gal. and only getting 150—is it up to me to determine this or you. I feel that it is up to you to prove the efficiency of the pump. So please let me hear from you."

Mr. Lavendar was delegated to collect from Mr. Hobbs the money due to the Western Well Works, but could not make the collection. Nothing was said in the telephonic conversation between Hobbs and the Western Well Works about the disposition of the contract between that company and Florey, and as a matter of fact, when Florey learned that the company had ordered the pump installed at the request of Hobbs, Florey telegraphed to the company as follows: "You ordered pump in over me wire release on contract at once." Florey also went to Hobbs about the matter, and Hobbs told him he was dealing directly with the Western Well Works. So much for the formation of the contracts involved here.

Many practical difficulties developed. Quantities of sand and gravel poured into the well and went through the pump with the water, and the water supply was inadequate. Hobbs evidently attempted to exhaust the sand and gravel through the pump, and ran the pump at times during the months of July August, and September, making no complaint other than the foregoing letter complaining about the amount of horsepower the pump was using, which was made after another demand for payment. In June, 1922, Hobbs had the pump taken out of the well, and found it was badly cut and worn by sand and gravel passing through it.

Florey assigned his claim for services in boring the well and the Western Well Works assigned their claim for the pump and extensions to the plaintiff, and, during the pendency of the action which followed, Hobbs died, and his executrix was substituted in his place and stead.

The trial court found that Florey had performed all the conditions of his contract so far as the drilling of the well was concerned, and had drilled the well to a depth of 492 feet, and completed the same on or about July 1, 1921; that Florey did not install the pump provided for in said contract for the reason that the defendant Hobbs prevented him from doing so; that the wearing out of the parts of the said pump were caused by an improper use thereof by the defendant Hobbs, and that it is not true that the materials or workmanship employed in constructing the said pump were faulty or defective; that it is not true that the Western Well Works were ever duly advised or at all advised concerning any defects of said pump, appliances, or equipment.

There are also specific findings against the special defenses interposed by defendant, although they are also negatived in the findings above set forth.

[1, 2] The foregoing evidence justifies the finding that a contract was made between Hobbs and the Western Well Works for the purchase and sale of a pump and appliances. The objection of appellant that such contract was not in writing is met by the evidence in the record showing that the pump was shipped to Hobbs at Arbuckle; he received it at the station, paid the freight on it, had it hauled to his ranch, installed it, and tried it out, found that it exhausted the water quickly and would have to be placed deeper, and ordered several extensions for this purpose; that he operated the pump for several months, made no objection to it except the letter from which we have quoted herein and did not deny liability under the bills rendered to him until the action was brought. These facts and circumstances take the case out of the statute of frauds.

[3] An attempt is made by appellant to fasten upon either Western Well Works or Florey the responsibility for the infiltration of sand and gravel which ruined the pump and made the well unsatisfactory. Assuredly, this was not a risk assumed by the Western Well Works, nor a danger against which they contracted. Florey has testified that he cleaned out the well when Hobbs directed that it be perforated for water, and the court has found that Florey performed his contract in the matter of drilling the well. The subsequent danger of sand and gravel pouring into the well appears from the record to be one which might be anticipated perhaps for years after the well was completed, and was one which the owner of the land must necessarily guard against.

The respondent claims, and the record and findings bear him out, that the pump was ruined by operation under improper conditions, and that its condition was not chargeable in any way to any defects for which Western Well Works would be liable under a manufacturer's warranties.

The appellant's argument is divided and subdivided, but many of the matters urged are merely attacks from different angles upon the same ultimate facts found by the court, and there is no necessity for discussing these subdivisions separately. The foregoing discussion of the findings and the evidence supporting them disposes of every objection made by appellant.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.

200 Cal. 381

PENGELLY v. PENGELLY. (S. F. 10983.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1927.)

1. Divorce 🔑312—Appeal from order transferring custody of child after expiration of period for transfer presented moot question and will be dismissed.

Where single period of time during which defendant in divorce action was to have custody of child expired, appeal from order transferring custody during such period presented moot question and appeal will be dismissed.

2. Divorce 🔑312—Where order for temporary transfer of custody of child of divorced parents was clearly not abuse of discretion, appeal will be dismissed as frivolous.

Where order making temporary transfer of custody of child of divorced parents is clearly not abuse of discretion, appeal therefrom will be dismissed as frivolous.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Suit by Gertrude C. Pengelly against Wilbert F. Pengelly. From an order of the superior court modifying an interlocutory and final decree of divorce relating to custody of minor child, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Jos. A. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Timothy Healy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. It appears that the appeal is from an order of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco modifying the interlocutory and final decrees of divorce entered in the above-entitled action. The custody of the minor child of the parties was awarded to the plaintiff under said interlocutory and final decrees. Thereafter and on October 30, 1923, the modifying order appealed from was made and entered. This latter order provided that the custody of said minor child be in the defendant for the period from November 1, 1923, to April 30, 1924.

It appears upon the face of the order complained of that the custody of said minor, theretofore exclusively in the plaintiff, was to be given to the defendant only for the six months' period designated therein and for no other period of time. Aside from the fact that the child has now reached an age when he might properly select his own guardian, an examination of the appellant's brief and the record reveals that the period of time within which the transfer of custody was to take place has long since passed by and the question presented herein has therefore become moot. Furthermore, such examination discloses that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in thus ordering a temporary transfer of custody of said minor, and the appeal is, therefore, entirely without merit and is a frivolous appeal.

It is ordered that the appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed.

LONDON GUARANTEE & ACCIDENT CO., Limited, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5358.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Jan. 29, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 28, 1927.)

1. Master and servant 🔑373—Rules of negligence are of assistance in compensation proceedings to determine proximate cause of injury during earthquake (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 6a).

In action to recover compensation for death of employé, killed during earthquake, resulting either from act of God or from defective construction of walls, rules in negligence cases are of assistance in determining liability under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), § 6a, only in so far as they furnish guide in identifying proximate cause of injury.

2. Master and servant 🔑417(7)—Decision of Industrial Accident Commission on conflicting evidence as to risk of employment is conclusive.

If evidence is conflicting as to whether employé was subjected to greater risk than that to which the community as whole was subjected to by reason of his employment, decision of Industrial Accident Commission could not be disturbed by appellate court.

3. Master and servant 🔑373—Janitor, killed in collapse of building during earthquake, held not subjected to peculiar risk incident to employment.

In proceedings to obtain compensation for death of janitor, killed in earthquake, where witnesses unanimously agreed that buildings other than one in which janitor was killed collapsed at same time, and from same cause, and concrete out of which employer's building was made was above the average in quality and higher grade than that of other buildings that collapsed, there was no testimony to show that janitor was subjected to peculiar risk incident to employment.

---

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court, 259 P. 1096.

4. Master and servant 🔑371—Employer is under duty to furnish place of employment and safety devices reasonably adequate to make employment safe (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, §§ 34, 35, and § 33, as amended by St. 1919, p. 922, § 10, and St. 1923, p. 165).

Under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), §§ 34, 35, and section 33, as amended by St. 1919, p. 922, § 10, and St. 1923, p. 165, employer is under duty to furnish place of employment and safety devices as are reasonably adequate to render employment safe.

5. Master and servant 🔑373—"Act of God" for which there is no liability is one due to natural causes not preventable by human foresight.

Injury resulting from "act of God," for which there is no liability, is one due to natural causes, without human agency, which could not have been prevented by exercise of diligence or use of appliances which proprietor should reasonably have employed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Act of God.]

6. Master and servant 🔑372—Employer is not required to compensate for occurrences which human foresight could not reasonably have foreseen (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act).

Under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), employer is required to furnish safeguards against injury which are reasonably adequate, or be liable for injuries attributable to failure to provide reasonable safeguards, but is not required to compensate for occurrences which human foresight could not reasonably have foreseen.

7. Master and servant 🔑371—Accident must result from risk reasonably incident to employment to impose liability on employer (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act).

Accident resulting from injury for which master is liable, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), must be one resulting from risk reasonably incident to employment.

8. Master and servant 🔑373—Employer held not negligent in failing to provide against earthquake destroying building constructed of standard materials.

In proceedings to recover compensation for death of janitor in building destroyed by earthquake, where adequate materials of standard quality were installed in building with reasonable care, owners of building were not negligent in failing to provide against unknown forces, or in building in particular place.

9. Master and servant 🔑373—Death of janitor, in building destroyed by earthquake, held not compensable. (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act).

Injury resulting in death of janitor, employed in apartment building collapsing as result of earthquake, held proximately caused by act of God, and owners of building were not liable to compensate for death of janitor under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831).

10. Master and servant 🔑371—Humanitarian purpose of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act does not furnish additional ground for compensation to be paid by employer not responsible for risk.

Humanitarian purpose of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), to relieve victims of industrial mishaps of resulting burden, does not furnish additional ground for compensation by way of exception to recognized rights of employer, when no act or omission on his part necessarily accentuated the natural hazard.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act by Louisa Mosteiro for death of Segismundo Mosteiro, her husband, claimant, opposed by the London Guarantee & Accident Company, Limited, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries resulting in death, the insurer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Heaney, Price & Postel, of Santa Barbara, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. On June 29, 1925, at about 6:45 o'clock in the morning, a severe earthquake occurred at the city of Santa Barbara, which destroyed many buildings in the business section of the city and caused at least 13 persons to lose their lives. One Segismundo Mosteiro was at that time performing the duties of janitor on the fourth floor of the San Marcos building in said city, in the employ and under the direction of the owners of the building. As a result of the earthquake, a large portion of the walls of said building collapsed, crushing Mosteiro, and causing his death. Thereafter his widow, the respondent, Louisa Mosteiro, for herself and on behalf of two minor children of the decedent and his surviving spouse, filed with the respondent commission an application for adjustment of claim, wherein she alleged that Segismundo Mosteiro was killed by reason of an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment.

After a hearing upon such petition, an award of $5,000 was granted the applicant, and therein directed to be paid in amounts and at times specified by the commission, to which no objection is made by the petitioner herein if the casualty be here held to have been compensable under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act. Petitioner demanded a rehearing before said commission upon the ground that the evidence and findings did not support or justify any award, and, the same having been denied, this proceeding was instituted, praying that the findings and award be annulled.

The principal question presented is as to whether or not the fatal injuries suffered by the decedent proximately resulted from an act of God, or from the defective construction of walls, which would not have succumbed to seismic vibration but for the alleged inferior quality of materials used in their composition.

It appears that the San Marcos building was a four-story reinforced concrete structure; that it was erected in 1913, and in 1925 it was enlarged; the original building was placed on the corner of State and Anapamu streets, and subsequent additions were built onto the sides thereof, which faced approximately southwesterly and southeasterly, thus forming a triangle, or "L." The first story was devoted to stores, and the upper floors to offices, which were occupied by various professional men and tradesmen.

It is admitted that the earthquake came suddenly, without warning, and with great violence; that such a disturbance had not been recorded during the known history of the city for a period of 112 years. It is also conceded that the shock was so severe that the walls of the San Marcos building and others in the vicinity began to crumble. A contractor who had just left his office therein and descended the stairs was thrown to the floor at the doorway, immediately following which the walls of the main building collapsed, killing a dentist in one of the offices, burying a janitor who lay unconscious for a period of an hour, and was not rescued until four hours thereafter, and crushing Mosteiro in one of the hallways. In the immediate vicinity of this building two churches, the Elks building, public library, county jail, and courthouse, two hotels, a high school, and other buildings were substantially destroyed by the impact. In one of said hotels two persons lost their lives, and it was estimated by witnesses at the hearing that the buildings, photographs of which are furnished with the record, suffered a 75 to 80 per cent. demolition.

It is contended by the petitioner that the walls of the San Marcos building were as carefully and substantially constructed as the reasonable diligence and skill of the times would permit, and that they were as strong and as safe as those of the average reinforced concrete building in California. The respondents sought to show, and here insist, that inferior sand and gravel, containing loam and other dirt and foreign materials, were used in constructing said walls, that, had they not been defective, the earthquake would not have shaken them down, and hence that their collapse, rather than the seismic shock, constituted the proximate cause of the injuries which resulted in the death of Segismundo Mosteiro.

We note at the outset that one observation of respondents in their briefs is not warranted by the testimony relied upon by them. It is stated that sand and gravel were found to be inferior during the process of construction, and were rejected, but that they were used in the building. It is apparent that respondents have misapprehended the testimony of Hawley, one of the builders and owners of the building. The testimony in this respect was as follows:

> "A. The rock and sand was originally purchased from the Santa Barbara Lumber Company, and the sand was rejected before we had more than two or three carloads, which was used principally in the corner wall on the outside of the building; thereafter we purchased our rock and sand from Mr. A. R. Edmundson.
>
> "Q. With reference to the sand that went into the corner wall, were these that were rejected—did they fall? A. In every case they stood; they were below ground."

It further appears from the record that the building was constructed in accordance with plans and specifications of a qualified architect, by structural engineers; all sand, rock, and steel were tested by experts; a sufficient number of columns, reinforced according to the general practice for the estimated load, were installed; that the building was constructed by generally accepted standards used throughout the state, and elsewhere, and was designed in a practical manner, to withstand the wear and tear of ordinary business trade conditions. Certain witnesses swore that an examination of specimens of concrete, which they examined after the disaster, revealed a tendency to crumble, or cleave from the pieces of rock, rather than to adhere and break through the mass as a homogeneous whole, and that this indicated either improper mixing, the use of too much water, or the presence of dirt in the sand. A chemist, however, who had subjected the concrete to scientific tests after the earthquake, testified that specimens which he tested showed a sustaining strength of more than 1,400 pounds, whereas the general average for all standard concretes is approximately 1,000 pounds. From the testimony of scientists and building experts, it appeared that engineers, architects, and scientists, the American Society of Civil Engineers, and others are constantly gathering scientific data "and embodying it in the design of the modern building of the future, with the end in view that it will be so designed that it can reasonably be expected to resist any moderate earthquake, or an earthquake of average severity"; that "they do not know the forces that they have to build against, because nobody can prophesy as to the intensity of the earthquake." One of the witnesses, called on behalf of the applicant, asserted under oath that "it is beyond human engineering or calculation to design a building, steel, reinforced concrete, or otherwise, that will withstand unusual stress and strain; it is not common practice to do that, not expecting these unusual conditions."

[1] The petitioner cites numerous authorities bearing upon the question of negligence in actions for damages, whereas the respondents insist that the question of negligence is eliminated. Section 6a of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), provides for compensation when injury is sustained arising out of and in the course of employment, and is proximately caused thereby, either with or without negligence. We think, from a careful review of the authorities in this state and in other jurisdictions, that the rules applicable to negligence cases are of assistance in determining the question of liability in those such as we have before us only in so far as they furnish a guide in identifying the proximate cause of the injury.

[2, 3] The question is presented, and argued in the briefs, as to whether or not the employment of the deceased subjected him to a greater risk than that to which the community as a whole was subjected. If there were presented here a conflict of evidence as to the facts, the decision of the Industrial Accident Commission could not be disturbed in this proceeding, but the witnesses were unanimously agreed that other reinforced concrete buildings in the immediate vicinity of the San Marcos building here involved collapsed at the same time and from the same cause; that the whole community was subjected to a calamity which caused the death of many people, and which, as we have observed, it is beyond the ingenuity of human engineering and calculation to safely and with assurance guard against. The three sections of the San Marcos building, though built side by side, were not joined by interlacing steel bars, and it is contended that, since the separate buildings or structures acted as battering rams upon each other, this fact indicated faulty construction, but the situation would have been the same in the case of independent adjoining buildings. Further, such evidence does not pretend to suggest more than that the architects could have erected the structures differently. It was also testified that a test of the concrete indicated that a drill would go through it "like a piece of cheese," yet, as we have seen, the concrete in the San Marcos building was far above the average in quality, and there is no evidence that the concrete taken from other buildings which collapsed was or could have been of higher grade. Hence, there is no testimony showing a peculiar risk incident to the employment. To hold that the employment of a janitor subjected him to peculiar exposure to which others in the community were not subject would be to say that this is true, because earthquakes occur in the city of Santa Barbara in the early morning hours, whereas none of consequence had been known to occur in that city before the one in question.

Respondents seek to rely upon cases sustaining awards for injuries from the bite of a cat, from cyclone, from lightning which struck an employee who was working on a high scaffold, and from attack by robbers upon a person employed to carry large sums of money. Merely to state such propositions is to furnish their own distinction from the case at bar. A vicious cat is not dangerous to the community in general, and its attack may not have been unexpected; it surely constitutes a danger against which an employer could be expected to guard an employee. In the cyclone case it appeared that such danger had been experienced at other times, in the same neighborhood, and that the employee who was injured was compelled to remain in the building for the purpose of closing the windows, after the foreman and all other employees had been warned and had fled from the premises. The fact that an employee was required to work on an elevated structure during a storm, or to carry valuables, at once segregates such cases from any possible analogy to the one before us, since it is self-evident that no other person in the community was subjected by the employer to a like peril. In each such case, although the employer may not have failed to adopt or use methods and processes reasonably adequate to render the employment and place of employment safe, or to do everything necessary to protect life and safety, the risk was obviously incidental to the employment.

[4] The Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act requires only that an employer shall furnish a place of employment and such safety devices and safeguards as are reasonably adequate to render such employment and place of employment safe; that he shall not require, permit, or suffer an employee to enter a place of employment which is not safe, or fail to adopt and use methods and processes reasonably adequate to render such employment and place of employment safe, or to do everything reasonably necessary to protect life and safety. Section 33, as amended by St. 1919, p. 922, § 10, and St. 1923, p. 165, and sections 34, 35.

[5] It has been held by our Supreme Court that an act of God for which an employer shall not be liable is an accidental or providential event, excluding the idea of human agency or the intervention of man, which human foresight could not reasonably have foreseen or guarded against. Ryan v. Rogers, 96 Cal. 349, 353, 31 P. 244; Newman v.

City of Alhambra, 179 Cal. 42, 175 P. 414. And that an injury resulting from an act of God for which there is no liability is one which, although sustained during employment, is due directly and exclusively to natural causes, without human agency or intervention in part, the effect of which could not have been prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care and the use of appliances which the situation renders it reasonable that the proprietor should have employed. Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 416, 423, 95 Am. Dec. 115; Newman v. City of Alhambra, supra; Fay v. Pacific Improvement Co., 93 Cal. 253, 261, 26 P. 1099, 28 P. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198.

[6, 7] One of the most striking features of the Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, and which permeates and is emphasized by decisions construing it, is its reasonable protection of the rights of the employer and the employee alike. The employer is required to furnish safeguards against injury which are reasonably adequate, yet he is not required to compensate for occurrences which human foresight could not reasonably have foreseen. An accident must be one resulting from a risk reasonably incident to the employment, else he will not be held responsible for consequent injury. Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 P. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164. And yet an employee whose injury may be traced to the delinquency of the employer for having failed in his duty to provide such reasonable safeguard is entitled to compensation.

In Storm v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 4, 214 P. 874, the applicant recited, and the commission found, that the employee was injured by an explosion of dynamite caps which in some unknown manner had been placed in a room which the latter had been employed to sandpaper. Neither the employer nor the employee was responsible for the presence of the caps in the room, and there was no other reasonable or possible purpose for their use on the premises. Some of the authorities cited by counsel in this proceeding were relied upon by the respective parties interested in that case, and are distinguished by the Supreme Court, as we feel that they must be in the instant case. It was there held that, while Kimbol v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Cal. 351, 160 P. 150, L. R. A. 1917B, 595, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 312, presented points of similarity to the case at bar—

"that conclusion was predicated, at least in part, upon the fact that 'the danger was a constant one, inherent in the place itself under the conditions there existing,' and that it 'was peculiar to the particular place in which the employee was required to work.' No such conditions obtained here."

In annulling an award which was granted by the commission, it was said:

"To render an injury compensable there must be discernible some relationship of cause and effect between the employment and the injury. 'It is not sufficient for a workman to say "I should not have been injured unless I had been where I was and doing the work which I was employed to do."' Cooper v. North Eastern Ry. Co., 9 B. W. C. C. 129. It must be shown, in addition, that the injury was a natural or probable result of the employment, or of the conditions thereof. Such would seem to be the meaning of the requirement that it must have been 'proximately caused by the employment.'"

[8, 9] From what has been said, it becomes manifest that the only human intervention between the earthquake and the ultimate injuries to Segismundo Mosteiro was the fact that Hawley caused the San Marcos building to be constructed at all, which is not a ground for compensation. Adequate materials, of standard quality, scientifically tested and approved, were installed with reasonable diligence, care, and skill; all the methods, processes, and appliances reasonably adequate to insure safety were adopted. It cannot be said that, because in building the structure which fell those responsible for its erection did not look beyond the bounds of finite experience and genius, and avail themselves of safeguards against unknown and irresistible forces, they were negligent, or that their initiative in building at Santa Barbara constituted the proximate cause of the disaster.

[10] Attention is directed to the fact that the underlying principle of the Workmen's Compensation Act is to lift from the shoulders of unfortunate victims of industrial mishaps and their dependents some measure of the resulting burden, casting it upon industry, and through it, upon society at large.

Such has been held to be the purpose of the legislation authorizing the allowance of compensation in appropriate cases, but in no instance can it be said that this theoretical basis for humanitarian aid and distribution of burdens furnishes an additional ground for compensation by way of exception to the recognized rights of the employer, when no act or omission upon his part, or any avoidable risks attendant upon the industry, shall have necessarily accentuated the natural hazard.

We are therefore constrained to hold that the injuries sustained by the deceased, which resulted in his death, were proximately caused by an act of God, and the award of the commission is therefore annulled.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

81 Cal. App. 295

BATES v. UNITED CONST. CO. et al. ★
(Civ. 4831.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 11, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 11, 1927.)

1. Cancellation of instruments 🔑60—Judgment reciting plaintiff was entitled to have contract returned meant that contract was rescinded; "rescission" (Civ. Code, § 1688).

Judgment, which decreed that plaintiff was entitled to have contract forming subject-matter of action returned to her, meant that contract was extinguished or rescinded, even though word "rescission" was not used, in view of Civ. Code, § 1688; "rescission" meaning act of abrogating, canceling, vacating, or annulling it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Rescission.]

2. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Where it appeared that, had omitted finding been made, it would have been adverse to appellant, failure to make finding was no ground for reversal.

Where it satisfactorily appeared that, had omitted finding been made, it necessarily would have been adverse to appellant, he could not avail himself of failure to make such finding as ground for reversal of judgment.

3. Cancellation of instruments 🔑47—Evidence held to support finding that defendants received plaintiff's equity in conditional sales contract as payment on building contract made with plaintiff, as principals.

Where evidence showed that, before defendants executed contract to construct building for plaintiff and received plaintiff's conditional sales contract covering property previously owned by her, all defendants had discussed proposition, including manner of handling, and that, shortly after building contract was signed, defendant M. purchased conditional sales contract from defendant U., and defendant S. received money for services in connection with execution of building contract, finding that all defendants received conditional sales contract as principals was justified.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Appellate court could not interfere with conclusion of trial court on conflicting evidence.

Where evidence on question was conflicting, decision was primarily one for trial court to determine, and appellate court could not interfere with conclusion reached thereon.

5. Contracts 🔑99(3)—Evidence held to justify finding that defendants made fraudulent promises in inducing plaintiff to part with conditional sales contract, with no intention of performing promises.

In action for money had and received and for rescission of contract, evidence held to justify finding that defendants made fraudulent promises to plaintiff to construct building to induce her to part with conditional sales contract covering property previously owned by her, with no intention of performing promises.

6. Contracts 🔑99(3)—Evidence held to support finding that defendants represented to plaintiff, when inducing her to part with equity in sales contract, that they were acting as her agents (Civ. Code, § 1572).

In action for money had and received and for rescission of contract, evidence held to support finding that defendants, in inducing plaintiff to turn over equity in conditional sales contract covering property previously owned by her and sign building contract, represented that they were acting as her agent, and would charge no commission, and that they had no intention of performing their promise, which made promise fraudulent under Civ. Code, § 1572.

7. Contracts 🔑99(3)—Evidence held to support finding that plaintiff relied on and was deceived by representations of defendants in signing building contract and delivering conditional sales contract.

In action for money had and received and for rescission of contract, evidence held to show that plaintiff relied upon representations made her by defendants that they would construct building for her, was deceived thereby, and was thereby induced to sign building contract and deliver sales contract covering property previously owned by her to defendants.

8. Trial 🔑396(4)—Any substantial evidence is sufficient to support finding.

Where there was some substantial evidence presented to trial court on which to base finding, finding was justified.

9. Contracts 🔑90—Evidence held to support finding that there was no consideration for plaintiff's delivery to defendants of conditional sales contract.

In action for money had and received and for rescission of contract, where defendants had promised to construct building for plaintiff's equity in conditional sales contract, but had not done so, evidence held to support finding that there was no consideration for plaintiff's delivery of conditional sales contract.

10. Appeal and error 🔑994(3)—Matter of giving full credence to plaintiff's testimony was within discretion of trial court.

Where evidence was conflicting, matter of giving full credence to plaintiff's testimony was within discretion of trial court.

11. Appeal and error 🔑994(3) — Unless court's discretion is abused in giving full credence to party's testimony, appellate court cannot disturb conclusion reached.

Where evidence was conflicting, and trial court gave full credence to plaintiff's testimony, which was within discretion of trial court, appellate court could not disturb conclusion reached, where it did not appear that court had abused discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action for money had and received and for rescission of contract by Jennie Bates, against the United Construction Company, W. G. Magoon, and Elmer Salomon. From a judgment for plaintiff, W. G. Magoon and Elmer Salomon appeal. Affirmed.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

C. W. Stahl, Jarrott & Jarrott, and James S. Jarrott, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Davis & Thorne and Tillman E. Justice, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The action upon which the appeal herein was founded contained three counts; the first being for money had and received and each of the two others for rescission of the contract. Briefly, but in substance, the findings of the court show the following basic facts: That all the defendants represented to plaintiff that, if she would sign a certain building contract to be entered into between her and United Construction Company and turn over to defendants her equity of $8,500 in a conditional sales contract covering property theretofore owned by plaintiff, the defendants would finance, or cause to be financed, and construct the building referred to in the building contract which they wished plaintiff to sign; that plaintiff relied upon such representations, signed the said contract, and turned over to defendants as first payment thereon the conditional sales contract, upon which was then due to plaintiff the sum of $8,500; that defendants Magoon and Salomon represented to plaintiff that each of them was acting as plaintiff's agent, and that no commission would be charged for services rendered in that behalf, but that each of the defendants received the conditional sales contract as a principal; that the building proposed to be constructed by defendants was never built nor financed by either or all of the defendants, or by any other persons; that each of the said representations made by defendants was false, and that upon such discovery by plaintiff she immediately demanded of defendants the return to her of the said conditional sales contract in the sum of $8,500; that plaintiff offered to return to defendants everything of value received by plaintiff from defendants, and served on defendants notice of rescission of said building construction contract, but that defendants refused to deliver or return to plaintiff said $8,500 conditional sales contract, or any part thereof, or any money paid or due thereon; that "defendants and each of them knew of the claims of plaintiff on the defendant the United Construction Company, and the United Construction Company and defendant W. G. Magoon received, with the exception of $500, the entire benefit and total value of the $8,500 conditional sales contract; that the other $500 remaining value of the same was received by defendant Elmer Salomon; that each of them received the same with due notice and a full knowledge of the fraud on plaintiff and of plaintiff's claims."

On such findings and on conclusions of law made thereon by the court, judgment was ordered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants for the return to plaintiff of the $8,500 conditional sales contract, or, as an alternative, in the event of inability of said defendants to deliver said contract to plaintiff, damages against United Construction Company and W. G. Magoon in the sum of $8,500, and as against defendant Elmer Salomon damages in the sum of $500. It is from such judgment that defendants Magoon and Salomon prosecute the appeal herein.

[1] The first point presented by appellants is that the judgment is invalid, for the reason that "it is for the recovery of money as return of consideration on an action for rescission, while the judgment does not adjudge a rescission."

As applied to a contract, the word "rescission" may be defined as the act of abrogating, canceling, vacating, or annulling it; or, as illustrated by section 1688 of the Civil Code, "A contract is extinguished by its rescission." While in terms the judgment fails to use the word "rescission," among other things it does decree that, in accordance with the findings of fact and conclusions of law, plaintiff is entitled to have returned to her the conditional sales contract which formed the subject-matter of the action; which was a sufficient indication that, so far as the trial court was concerned, the building contract under the terms of which plaintiff delivered to defendants the conditional sales contract, was annulled and vacated. There is no "magic" in the use of a particular word to convey a thought, and it is apparent that the facts found by the trial court and the judgment rendered thereon mean nothing other than that the contract between the parties was "extinguished" or rescinded.

[2] Appellants' next contention, to wit, that "there is no conclusion of law stating that a rescission has been effected," is subject to the same conclusions as are applied to the preceding point made by appellants.

It is next urged by appellants that, because no direct finding was made by the trial court as to the value of the consideration paid by plaintiff to the defendants, the judgment is not supported by the findings. As a matter of fact, the findings contain many references to the value of the conditional sales contract, including the finding that on such contract "there was due and owing plaintiff the sum of $8,500"; also that "there was due the plaintiff, after one installment had been paid, the sum of $8,500"; furthermore that "the defendants and each of them knew of the claims of plaintiff on the defendant the United Construction Company, and the United Construction Company and defendant W. G. Magoon received, with the exception of $500, the entire benefit and total value of the $8,500 conditional sales contract, that the other $500 remaining value of the same was received by defendant Elmer Salomon. * * *"

While strictly speaking, it may be said that none of such findings makes a clean-cut statement that the value of the conditional sales contract was $8,500; nevertheless it is clear that no other or different meaning could be attached thereto than that the intention of the court, as measured by the entire findings, conclusions of law, and judgment, was that the value of such contract was the sum of $8,500. It is apparent that, had any express finding been made by the court as to the value of the contract, it would have been that the said contract was worth $8,500. The rule is that, where it satisfactorily appears that, had an omitted finding been made, it necessarily would have been adverse to appellant, he cannot avail himself of the failure to make such finding as a ground for a reversal of the judgment. Hulen v. Stuart, 191 Cal. 562, 572, 217 P. 750; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 342, 66 P. 309. See, also, vol. 24, Cal. Jur. § 188, p. 944, and cases there cited.

[3, 4] Appellants also complain that each of several of the findings of the court is not supported by the evidence. The first of such objections is to the finding "that said defendants and each of them received said conditional sales contract as principals." Without quoting the evidence with reference thereto at length, it may suffice to state that it appears to be sufficient, in that it shows that, prior to the execution of the building contract and the delivery to the defendants of the conditional sales contract all the defendants had together discussed in detail the proposition, including the manner in which it should be handled; that each of the defendants was much interested in the outcome of the negotiations in the matter, and within four days after the building contract was signed defendant Magoon purchased the conditional sales contract from the defendant United Construction Company at a discount of $1,000 from its face value, and defendant Salomon received $500 for services rendered by him in connection with the execution of the building contract. While some evidence was offered tending to offset such facts, the decision of the question as to whether the defendants were acting in concert was one primarily for the trial court to determine, from which it follows that this court may not interfere with the conclusion reached thereon.

[5] Within the general contention that the findings are not supported by the evidence is the specification of error as to the finding that Magoon and Salomon made fraudulent promises, with no intention of performing them. The intention of either or both of such defendants in the premises could be ascertained principally from the conduct of, and the statements made by, each of them. From the facts to which reference heretofore has been had, together with the additional circumstances that, before the building contract was entered into, defendants Magoon and Salomon advised plaintiff to get the conditional sales contract out of her hands just as quickly as possible, and that then the construction company "would sign it over in haste," also that, after the building contract was executed each of defendants consistently avoided plaintiff, and, as a finality, that the building was neither financed nor constructed—it would appear that the evidence was sufficient to justify the trial court in its conclusion as to the intention of the defendants.

[6] It is also urged by appellants that the finding that they further represented to plaintiff that they were acting as her agents and would charge no commission for their services, and that plaintiff could rely absolutely upon the representations made by said defendants to plaintiff, had no support in the evidence.

While the transcript of the proceedings fails to show that defendants Magoon and Salomon made a representation in so many words to plaintiff that they were acting as "agents" for plaintiff, nevertheless plaintiff testified that "they promised to get me a contractor who would obtain a loan for me and there would be sufficient funds. * * *" Furthermore, as testified by plaintiff:

> "Well, he just said through friendship—I had been going to Mr. Salomon for five years for advice—he said just through friendship he would be willing to find somebody for me; he was to lease the building and get his commission for that; he was not to receive anything from this deal."
>
> "Q. Did Mr. Magoon say anything with reference to that? A. The same things—all three talked together."

It would therefore appear that the statement in the findings that said defendants represented that they were acting as plaintiff's agents in effect is supported by the evidence. As to the remainder of the finding to which objection is made, appellants contend that it constitutes a promise, and that, in order that such promise be fraudulent as to plaintiff, it must be shown that it was made without any intention of performing it (section 1572, Civ. Code), which objection involves a question which has heretofore received consideration herein, whereby it has been attempted to show that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the conclusion here under consideration.

[7, 8] Under the same general heading appellants make further specification of error to the effect that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings by the court, in substance, that plaintiff relied upon the several promises and representations made to her by the defendants; that she was deceived thereby and was thereby induced to sign the building contract and to deliver the conditional sales contract to the defendants—together with other findings identical in meaning with those which heretofore have received consideration herein. No special argument is made by appellants with reference thereto other than the statement in effect that the weight of the evidence was against the conclusion that plaintiff relied upon the representations made by the defendants. The testimony of plaintiff in this regard includes the following:

> "Q. Now, did Mr. Magoon ever state anything with reference to you receiving the advice of anybody else other than himself? A. He objected to my taking Dr. Hudson with me. Q. What did he say? A. He and Mr. Salomon both said to rely absolutely on their judgment, not to listen to him. Q. To whom? A. To Dr. Hudson. He said if I would listen to them, and do as they said, I would come out all right —which I did do. Q. Did you follow the advice of Mr. Magoon and Mr. Salomon? A. I certainly did. I have already answered that."

It is therefore clear that some substantial evidence was presented to the trial court upon which to base the finding to which exception is taken, and the authorities are practically unanimous on the point that such a showing is sufficient.

[9] In addition to the findings which have already received consideration herein, appellants contend that there was no evidence to support the finding:

> "That no consideration, either in part or in whole, was ever given to plaintiff by defendants for the $8,500 conditional sales contract assigned by plaintiff to them."

In one sense, as is suggested by appellants, the promise on the part of defendants to construct the building was consideration for the delivery of the conditional sales contract; but manifestly such a construction on the acts of the parties is not what is meant by the finding in question. The context of the entire body of the findings, conclusions of law, and the judgment plainly indicates that the significance to be attached to the finding under consideration is that plaintiff delivered to defendants the $8,500 conditional sales contract, and that defendants failed to carry out the building contract or any part thereof. So construed, the finding to which objection is made would appear to be correct and not subject to the criticism to which reference has been had.

It is also urged by appellants that the evidence was not sufficient to support one of the findings, which declares that each of the defendants had knowledge of the claims of plaintiff on the United Construction Company, notwithstanding which said Construction Company and defendant Magoon, with the exception of $500, received the entire benefit and total value of the $8,500 conditional sales contract, and that the remaining $500 of the conditional sales contract was received by the defendant Salomon, and that each of said defendants received the same with due notice and full knowledge of the fraud and of plaintiff's claims.

[10, 11] An examination of the evidence discloses the fact that the most that may be said in favor of such contention on the part of appellants is that the evidence touching such finding is conflicting. If the trial court gave full credence to plaintiff's testimony, which it had the right and power to do, there can be no doubt but that the finding was correct and truly represented the facts with reference thereto. That was a matter which rested within the discretion of the trial court. Unless such discretion was abused, this court has no authority to disturb the conclusion reached. No direct claim is made by appellants to the contrary; nor is this court impressed with the implied suggestion that the discretion of the judge of the trial court was not wisely exercised.

Without in any manner touching upon the sufficiency of the findings and the evidence to sustain the judgment on the common count of money had and received, it sufficiently appears that, considering the question solely from a standpoint of any alleged errors with reference to the counts having to do with rescission, a conclusion free from errors prejudicial to appellants was rendered by the trial court.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be and it is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 304

IWATA et al. v. GOLDBERG et al.
(Civ. 4659.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 11, 1927.)

1. Sales ⚿8—Contract whereby consignee agreed to honor drafts for cost of goods and account for sales was contract for consignment by principal to agent.

Where consignor agreed to ship cantaloupes, and consignee agreed to honor drafts drawn by consignors for estimated cost and to account for sale of each shipment and deduct amount of drafts, contract was one for consignment of merchandise by principal to agent and not sales contract.

2. Principal and agent ⚿78(1)—Where agent accounted to principal for sales of merchandise received, principal could not recover unpaid drafts on agent for estimated cost of goods.

Where principal shipped cantaloupes to agent under agreement that agent should honor drafts drawn by principal for estimated cost of cantaloupes, and agent accounted to principal for all sales, in accordance with agreement, so that principal received net profits of transaction, principal could not recover for unpaid drafts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy S. King, Judge.

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Action to recover money claimed as due on contract, by K. C. Iwata and others, doing business as K. C. Iwata & Co., against A. Goldberg and another, doing business as Goldberg Bros. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Walter H. Sprague and Moote & Patterson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Milton M. Cohen, James S. Roche, and C. O. Bacon, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action to recover money claimed under a written contract for shipment of cantaloupes by plaintiffs to defendants. The demand of plaintiffs is for the sum of $2,999, balance claimed to be due in accordance with the contract, the purport of which plaintiffs attempted to state in their complaint, and therein described the contract as a contract of sale. The defendants included in their answer a complete copy of said contract. Defendants admitted their liability to the extent of $232.41 and no more, which admitted sum was duly tendered to the plaintiffs. After trial of the action, the court made its findings of fact, and awarded judgment for said sum of $232.41. The plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment.

The contract between the parties reads as follows:

"This agreement, made by and between K. C. Iwata & Co., of Brawley, California, hereinafter referred to as the consignor and Goldberg Bros. of Youngstown, Ohio, hereinafter referred to as the consignee, witnesseth:

"That for and in consideration of three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars ($3,750) to be paid by consignee to the consignor immediately upon signing of this contract the consignor will ship to the consignee at his place of business fifty (50) cars cantaloupes to be grown in Brawley district, Imperial Valley, Cal.; said shipment to be made regularly during the shipping season of 1922 at the rate of one or two cars daily commencing on or about June 1, 1922.

"The consignor assumes the obligation of routing and regulation of shipments to conform to the time of maturity of the cantaloupes which must be in merchantable condition and suitable for shipment to Eastern markets, and labeled Serenity Brand.

"The consignee agrees to accept and dispose of, for the account of the consignor, all cars to be shipped in accordance with the above terms and to use his best efforts to obtain the highest price obtainable at the time of arrival at destination.

"Consignee agrees to render detailed and accurate account of sale immediately after each car shall have been sold, and such account sale shall be accompanied by check in full, less amount advanced on account of price guaranteed, also less all freight, demurrage, icing charges, etc., also less commission of ten (10%) per cent. of the amount of the gross sale. Remittances as above to be mailed forthwith to the consignor at his Brawley, Cal., office. All records relating to transactions under this contract in possession of, or that come into possession of, the consignee, shall be and shall remain open for inspection by the consignor or his appointed representative. Consignee agrees to wire at his own expense to the consignor the gross sale of each car as sold.

"The consignor shall draw at sight upon the consignee for an amount equal to the cost (approximately $1.10 per standard and pony crate and $0.45 per flat crate) on each car at time of shipment and the consignee guarantees to honor such drafts when presented for payment with bill of lading attached, less $75 per car advanced.

"The consignee shall furnish to the consignor, at the earliest possible date, all information and data relating to loss or damage to the cantaloupes while in possession of the railroad company, together with all paid freight bills, bills of lading, copy of protest, and inspection reports; and all claims for loss or damage shall be controlled and collected by the consignor for his account.

"It is understood that consignor shall not be held responsible for failure to ship the number of cars stipulated in this agreement, if prevented from doing so by acts of Providence, crop failure, or other causes beyond the control of the consignor, and, in the event that all cars are not shipped as agreed, then the consignor agrees to refund immediately at the close of the shipping season an amount equivalent to the money advanced ($75) on each car not shipped."

On examining the record, we find that there was no controversy about any of the facts found by the court, other than the controversy about the amount of balance due. The determination of that balance would depend, first, upon evidence showing the amounts advanced by the defendants to the plaintiffs, together with the items of charges and credits shown by the statements of account and other documents connected with the shipments and sales of 47 different carloads of cantaloupes. Apparently it has been assumed by counsel that the results of the figures would be such that, on one interpretation of the contract, the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover the amount demanded by them, and, upon the other, the alternative interpretation of the contract, plaintiffs would not be entitled to any more than the sum admitted and tendered by the defendants. We shall follow that assumption of fact.

It is shown that, pursuant to said contract, plaintiffs shipped 47 cars, and that by mutual agreement the remaining 3 cars named were not shipped. With each shipment of a carload of fruit, plaintiffs sent a draft on defendants for a sum purporting to cover the cost of each car, less $75 per car advanced, at the time of shipment. It appears to be conceded that 36 of these amounts were paid (in three instances by check, without any draft), and on the last 11 drafts payment was refused, although the consignments were received and disposition and accounting made of them in the usual manner. In substance, the fact is that plaintiffs are suing for the amounts which they claim were left unpaid by reason of the failure to honor those drafts.

[1, 2] The contract, as we look upon it, was not a sales contract, but was a contract for consignment of merchandise by principal to agent. There was a promise on the part of the consignees to honor drafts drawn by the consignors, on account of each carload shipment, for an amount not less than the stated estimate of cost. In accounting for the sale of each such shipment, the consignees were to deduct and retain the amounts of these drafts, which were described as amounts advanced "on account of price guaranteed." But there is not in the contract any definite or intelligibly certain guaranty of price, or warrant by consignees that consignors should go without loss on any one of these shipments, or even on all of them together. Nevertheless, the consignors, plaintiffs herein, seek to recover on such supposed guaranty as a separate guaranty of the cost of each shipment, independent and apart from any other. So it is attempted here to compel the assignees to pay the amounts of said drafts covering estimated costs of the last eleven carloads, notwithstanding the fact that the defendants, although they did not make any advancements on these eleven carloads, have in fact accounted to plaintiffs for all sales of the merchandise shipped, and that the aggregate sum thus received leaves in the hands of the plaintiffs all of the net profits of the entire transaction.

Upon the facts stated, and our interpretation of the contract, plaintiffs are not entitled to any larger amount than that which was conceded to them.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 258

McKENRY v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. (Civ. 5677.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 8, 1927.)

1. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(4)—Damages for failure to deliver telegram, which were not too remote and were capable of being ascertained with certainty, were recoverable.

In action by person to whom telegram was addressed, sounding in tort, for breach of contract by telegraph company in failing to deliver telegram, plaintiff could recover all damages sustained from defendant's breach, provided such damages were not too remote and were capable of being ascertained with sufficient certainty.

2. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑70(2)—Amount paid for sending telegram held element of damages for nondelivery.

In action by addressee of telegram against telegraph company, sounding in tort, for failure to deliver telegram, amount paid for transmission was item of damages.

3. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(2)—Addressee could not recover special damages for failure to transmit telegram, without showing telegraph company knew special purpose.

Where, in action against telegraph company by addressee of telegram for failure to make delivery, special circumstances were claimed to exist entitling purchaser to damages for defeat of special purpose, it was necessary for plaintiff to show knowledge of telegraph company of special purpose intended to be accomplished by sending telegram.

4. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(2)—Right to special damages for failure to transmit telegram are recoverable, ascertained from face of message.

In action by addressee of telegram for failure to deliver, face of message, as well as averments of facts, brought to attention of defendant at time message was delivered for transmission, will be considered affecting right to special damages.

5. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(2)—Addressee, claiming damages for failure to deliver telegram, could not resort to custom to show meaning giving notice of special circumstances.

In action for damages for failure to transmit telegram, where terms of message were unambiguous, plaintiff could not resort to usage and custom or other rules aiding in interpretation of written instruments to show defendant knew special purpose for which message was sent.

6. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(4)—Nondelivery of telegram inquiring concerning employment held not proximate cause of failure to obtain employment.

When message is merely inquiry as to whether addressee desires or will accept position of employment, nondelivery of telegram cannot be held natural and proximate cause of failure to obtain employment.

7. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(2)—Baseball player held not entitled to special damages for nondelivery of telegram offering employment, in absence of showing notice of circumstances.

Baseball pitcher held not entitled to special damages for failure to deliver telegram, "If free to sign wire terms to Oakland Baseball Club," in absence of averment of special circumstance known to defendant.

8. Telegraphs and telephones 🔑67(2)—Telegraph company is not liable for special damages, if message is in cipher.

Since liability of telegraph company for special damages rests on fact that it has not taken such precautions as facts brought to its attention required, such companies are not liable where message is worded in cipher or language obscure and unintelligible to them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by Peter McKenry against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment dismissing plaintiff's action on demurrer, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and Dan F. Conway, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Beverly L. Hodghead, of San Francisco (Francis R. Stark, of New York City, of counsel), for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. To the plaintiff's second amended complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer which was general and special. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Thereafter a judgment of dismissal was entered. From that judgment the plaintiff has appealed, bringing up the judgment roll.

The plaintiff duly pleaded the incorporation of the Western Union Telegraph Company, etc. It also pleaded that the Oakland Association, Incorporated, was a corporation which owns and operates the Oakland Baseball Club, and that said club is a member of the Pacific Coast Baseball League. Continuing, the allegations of the plaintiff's pleading are as follows:

"That on the 8th day of June, 1925, said Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, wrote and delivered to the defendant at defendant's office in said city of Oakland, a telegraphic message addressed to plaintiff herein at Fresno, Cal., which said message was in the words and figures following, to wit:

" 'Oakland, Cal., June 8, 1925.

" 'Pete McKenry, Baseball Pitcher, Fresno, Cal. (Personal) If free to sign, wire terms to Oakland Baseball Club. G. E. Howard.'

"That thereafter said defendant demanded and received of the said Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, the sum of 32 cents lawful money of the United States for the transmission and delivery of said message to the said plaintiff herein at Fresno, Cal., in due course, and the said defendant at the time of the filing of said message agreed with the said Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, in consideration of said money so paid to forward the said message at once and to deliver the same to plaintiff in this action in the usual course of business; that at said time plaintiff was well known in and around the city of Fresno, county of Fresno, state of California, and his residence and headquarters were within a distance of two miles of the main office of defendant in the city of Fresno, as the agents and employees of the defendant corporation in the city of Fresno, county of Fresno, state of California, well knew.

"That said defendant carelessly and negligently failed and neglected to forward or deliver said message to the address thereof, and the said message was not delivered to or received by the plaintiff in this action, whereas the same in the ordinary course of prompt transmission and delivery should have been delivered to plaintiff, as aforesaid, on the 8th day of June, 1925.

"That according to the usage and custom of baseball clubs in said Pacific Coast Baseball League said telegram constituted an unconditional offer to employ plaintiff; that said Oakland Baseball Club had decided to employ plaintiff and to pay him for said services the sum of $600 per month from the 8th day of June, 1925, to the 18th day of October, 1925, and said plaintiff herein was at all times cognizant of said custom and usage and was ready, able, and willing to accept said employment at said sum of $600 per month from the 8th day of June, 1925, to the 18th day of October, 1925, and that said plaintiff was at said times a free agent according to the terms and meaning of said telegram; that if plaintiff had received said telegram from the Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, in due course, there would have been a contract entered into by and between the said plaintiff and the said Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, immediately whereby the said plaintiff would have been employed as a pitcher by the Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, from the 8th day of June, 1925, to and including the 18th day of October, 1925, at a salary of $600 per month.

"That plaintiff is and was at all times herein mentioned a professional baseball pitcher of recognized ability and would have accepted said salary of $600 per month for the term aforesaid, had said telegram been delivered to him in due course, all of which said Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, well knew.

"That during the period intervening between the 8th day of June, 1925, up to and including the 18th day of August, 1925, plaintiff was temporarily employed as a baseball pitcher by the Fresno Baseball Association at a salary of $150 per month under an agreement with said association, providing that plaintiff could terminate said employment at will; that on the 18th day of August, 1925, the Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, accidentally got in touch with the said plaintiff in this action, and that the said Oakland Association, Inc., immediately employed said plaintiff at a salary of $450 per month for a period from the 18th day of August, 1925, to and including the 18th day of October, 1925; that the said Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, was at the time of the filing of said telegram herein set forth and referred to, a strong contender for the pennant in the Pacific Coast League, an organization of baseball clubs, of which the said Oakland Association, Inc., was a member, operating in the Pacific coast states; that the reason for the employment of the plaintiff by the Oakland Association, Inc., a corporation, at the sum of $450 per month in lieu of $600 per month, as aforesaid, was due to the fact that on the 18th day of August, 1925, the pennant race in the Pacific Coast Baseball League was practically over so far as the Oakland Baseball Club was concerned, as said Oakland Baseball Club was eliminated as a contender therein; that by reason of the said carelessness, negligence, and failure of the said defendant, as aforesaid, to deliver the said telegram, this plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $1,350."

[1] From the facts pleaded it may be conceded that there was a breach of contract on the part of the defendant, and that the plaintiff, the sendee, is entitled to recover, in an action sounding in tort, all damages he sustained from the defendant's breach of contract, provided such damages are not too remote and are capable of being ascertained with sufficient certainty. Kenyon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 Cal. 454, 35 P. 75. The plaintiff's complaint properly sounds in tort, but the measure of his recovery is as stated above. M. M. Stone & Co. v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 35 R. I. 498, 87 A. 319, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 180; Frazier v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 Or. 414, 78 P. 330, 67 L. R. A. 319, 2 Ann. Cas. 396. Primarily, the first element of those damages is the amount paid for the transmission of the telegram. 37 Cyc. 1750.

[2, 3] However, in the instant case the plaintiff's pleading avers that the cost of sending the telegram was paid by the sender, and this plaintiff has not in his prayer asked to recover that sum, nor is the question as to the liability of the defendant to repay the cost of the transmission presented or argued in the briefs. In 1854 the leading case (Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341) was decided. In Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 P. 882, 60 Am. St. Rep. 529, in writing the opinion, Mr. Justice McKinstry referred to the Hadley Case, and then he said:

> "When reference is made to the terms of the contract alone, there is ordinarily little difficulty in determining what damages arise from its breach in the usual course of things, and the parties will be presumed to have contemplated such damages only. But where it is claimed the circumstances show that a special purpose was intended to be accomplished by one of the parties (a failure to accomplish which by means of the contract would cause him greater damage than would ordinarily follow from a breach by the other party), and such purpose was known to the other party, the facts showing the special purpose and the knowledge of the other party must be averred. This rule has frequently been applied to the breach of a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a certain time. In such cases the general rule of damages is fixed by reference to the market value of the goods at the time they were to have been delivered, because in the usual course of events the purchaser could have supplied himself with like commodities at the market price. And if special circumstances existed entitling the purchaser to greater damages for the defeat of a special purpose known to the contracting parties (as, for example, if the purchaser had already contracted to furnish the goods at a profit, and they could not be obtained in the market), such circumstances must be stated in the declaration with the facts which, under the circumstances, enhanced the injury. 1 Sutherland on Damages, 764."

The rule so stated for estimating damages has frequently been cited and followed in this state. As applicable to a case based on the failure to deliver a telegram, we are not aware of the principle having been in terms applied by any decision in this state. As early as 1887 the Supreme Court of the United States applied the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale in such a case (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 8 S. Ct. 577, 31 L. Ed. 479), and that court has done so in other cases (Primrose v. Western Union Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883). The same rule has been followed in the same line of cases in nearly all of the jurisdictions in America. Clark Manufacturing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 152 N. C. 157, 67 S. E. 329, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, 644.

[4, 5] Following that rule, it is patent that the courts will consider everything contained on the face of the message and likewise all proper averments contained in the plaintiff's pleading, showing or tending to show what facts were brought to the attention of the defendant or its agent at the time that the message was delivered to it for transmission. The plaintiff's amended complaint does not contain any allegations to the effect that any extrinsic fact was called to the attention of the agents of the defendant. His rights are therefore to be ascertained from what appeared on the face of the telegram. The telegram was free and clear of ambiguities, or it was not. If we assume for the moment that it was free and clear of ambiguities, then the plaintiff was not entitled to resort to usage and custom or any other rules aiding in the interpretation of written instruments.

> "Where the terms are plain and certain, * * * the court will be guided by the language used and construe the intention of the parties to have been in accordance with their agreement." Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 464, 472, 61 P. 64, 66 (79 Am. St. Rep. 56).

[6, 7] As so construed, the telegram was an inquiry as to whether the plaintiff would accept employment, and if so on what terms. When a message is a mere inquiry as to whether the addressee desires or will accept a position of employment a nondelivery or delay cannot be said to be the natural and proximate cause of a failure to obtain such employment. 37 Cyc. 1766; McQuilkin v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 27 Cal. App. 698, 701, 151 P. 21.

[8, 9] However, it is made plain by the plaintiff's pleading that he contends from facts known to him that the telegram was, in effect, as follows:

> "Oakland Baseball Club unconditionally offers to employ you as pitcher $600 per month June eighth to October eighteenth, 1925 wire acceptance."

[10] Assuming, solely for the purposes of this case, that such was the meaning of the message, the ruling of the lower court is correct. As the liability of a telegraph company for special damages rests on the fact that it has not taken such precautions as the facts brought to its attention called upon it to take, such companies are not liable when the message sent is worded in a private cipher or when the language is very obscure and unintelligible, because such language gives no information to the defendant or its agents. 37 Cyc. 1752. Applying that principle to the appellant's contention regarding the meaning of the message involved in the instant case, it is patent that the meaning claimed by the appellant is almost the reverse of the actual words used in the message. Under these circumstances, it is quite clear that the face of the message did not bring to the attention of the defendant any special circumstances which would warrant the courts in awarding special damages against the defendant. It follows that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any sum on the face of his pleading as it was written.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

81 Cal. App. 276

HONN v. HAMER et al. (Civ. 5709.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 8, 1927.)

Licenses ⚷39—One buying stock under agreement void because in violation of statute held not estopped to deny stockholder's liability as against creditors (Corporate Securities Act, § 3).

Where sale of stock was void because in violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) § 3, buyer, not estopped by attendance on corporation meeting or other conduct, from asserting invalidity of contract as to corporation, held not estopped as to creditors from denying stockholder's liability.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action to enforce stockholder's liability by Harlan Honn, assignee of the trustees of the creditors of the American Ice Machine Company, against Margaret E. Hamer and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Austin Lewis, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Carr & Guiler, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to enforce a stockholder's liability. The case is presented under stipulated facts. It appears therefrom that plaintiff is the assignee of the trustees of the creditors of American Ice Machine Company, a corporation. The record is silent as to the rights of defendants Hamer and Hodges. The alleged liability of defendant Reno is based upon an agreement entered into by him for the purchase of stock in the corporation named. At the date of the agreement of the sale the corporation did not have, nor had it applied for or obtained, a permit from the corporation commissioner to sell or dispose of its capital stock as required by the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673). Subsequent to the time the agreement was entered into the stockholders of the corporation held certain meetings, at which time Reno was present and he participated in the proceedings. The agreement upon which this action is based was before this court in a former proceeding. It appears therefrom that Reno had sued the corporation to recover payments which he had made on the stock, and it was there held that the contract was void by reason of the fact that the company had failed to comply with section 3 of the Corporate Securities Act, which provides that no corporation shall take subscriptions for any security of its own issue until it shall have first applied for and secured from the commissioner of corporations a permit authorizing it so to do, and that, as such company had not made the necessary application, it was never possible for it to have lawfully issued its stock, and the contract for the sale of the same was accordingly void, and plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the amount of his payment. Reno v. American Ice Machine Co., 72 Cal. App. 409, 237 P. 784. It was there further held that the fact that plaintiff had attended meetings of the stockholders and directors, and participated in the proceedings, in no manner affected the question, as the doctrine of estoppel by conduct and ratification has no application to a contract which is void for the reason that it violates an express mandate of the law or the dictates of public policy; that such a contract has no legal existence for any purpose, and neither action nor inaction of a party to it can validate it and no conduct on his part can be invoked as an estoppel against asserting its invalidity. The question, therefore, so far as the rights of the immediate parties to the contract are concerned, has been definitely settled and determined. The question here presented has to do with the rights of the creditors of the corporation in the premises.

Appellant claims that the rule above announced has no application to a case where, as here, the rights of innocent creditors are concerned; that as to them the rule is suspended in their interests under the principles of estoppel, and we are cited to the case of Moore v. Moffatt, 188 Cal. 1, 204 P. 220, as supporting this contention. The record before us does not show that estoppel was pleaded or proved. However this may be, as above pointed out, the contract being absolutely void, it could not be enforced or rendered enforceable by the application of the doctrine invoked (Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 631, 40 P. 1047), for where an issue of stock is wholly without sanction the principle of estoppel does not apply (Helliwell on Stock and Stockholders, § 455). Nor does the Moffatt Case, relied upon, support appellant in his contention. That case was one brought by trustees in bankruptcy of a corporation to recover an unpaid subscription of stock for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation. It appeared therein that the stock was issued before a permit was obtained. It further appeared, however, that after the granting of the same the parties had made a new contract for its purchase, and it was under these conditions that it was held the inhibition of the statute did not attach. The instant case does not present this situation. As lack of authority to issue the stock prevents the corporation from enforcing the subscription agreement, by the same token this lack of authority is a good defense instituted by the receiver of the corporation upon its insolvency. Kampman v. Tarver, 87 Tex. 491, 29 S. W. 768. In other words, the corporation having no legal rights against Reno, its creditors could have none. The learned trial court so held and we think properly so.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CASHIN, J.; KNIGHT, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 254

LUCKEHE v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF MARYSVILLE. (Civ. 3103.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 7, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence as to bank's ability to pay certificate of deposit held conclusive in action on certificate delivered by defendant to plaintiff for collection.

In action against bank for failure to use due care in collecting certificate of deposit, finding of trial court as to issuing bank's ability to pay at time certificate was given defendant for collection, based on conflicting testimony, held not to be set aside.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence as to existence of custom in collecting certificate of deposit held not to be set aside.

In action against bank for failure to use due care in collecting certificate of deposit, finding of trial court as to existence of custom in accordance with which collecting bank claims to have acted in making collection, based on conflicting evidence, held not to be set aside.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by C. J. Luckehe against the First National Bank of Marysville, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for appellant.

J. C. Saylor, of Fresno, Charles W. Johnson, of San Francisco, and W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for respondent.

BUCK, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered against the defendant National Bank for the sum of $1,050, with interest, being the amount evidenced by a certain certificate of deposit made and delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff.

Upon a former appeal in this case an opinion was rendered by the Supreme Court (193 Cal. 185, 223 P. 547), wherein the law covering every phase of the case was fully expounded. As was stated by the Supreme Court in regard to the first trial of the case, it may be also said of the second trial that the case was shifted to one of negligence, based, not upon contract arising out of the issuance of the certificate of deposit sued upon, but arising out of negligence based upon the defendant's liability to the plaintiff for its failure to use due care in the collection of a different certificate of deposit, issued to plaintiff by the First National Bank of Gridley. In its amended answer defendant sets up defenses alleging, in effect, first, that plaintiff suffered no injury on account of any alleged negligence in the attempted collection of the certificate of deposit on the Gridley bank, because the bank, at the time the certificate was presented for collection, "was unable to pay the same, or any portion thereof, and did not have sufficient money either on hand or which it could procure to pay said certificate, or any portion thereof, and its refusal to pay the same upon demand * * * was because of its inability so to pay and lack of money for payment thereof," which said inability continued from the time of the presentation of said certificate on December 13, 1920, up to and including the 17th day of December, 1920. And for a second defense it was alleged, in effect, that there was no neglect of duty on the part of defendant for its failure to make the collection, because, in seeking to serve plaintiff, the defendant acted in all respects in accordance with "a general custom or usage in the matter, practice, and manner of making collections by a bank or banking institution of a draft, certificate of deposit, or other paper delivered and received by a bank from the drawer or owner upon and for collection" upon some other bank. The trial court made special findings against each of these defenses, and on this appeal it is defendant's contention that the evidence was insufficient to sustain these findings.

As regards the claimed insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding touching the inability of the Gridley bank to pay its certificate of deposit upon demand, counsel relies upon the testimony of J. R. Craig, who testified that on December 13, 1920, he took the certificate after banking hours over to the First National Bank of Gridley, and "rapped on the door, and they admitted me"; that he saw the cashier, Mr. Charles Serene, and asked for cash on the draft. "I asked for cash on the certificate of deposit, stating our exchanges were closed, and he said they were short. He didn't say he could give it to me, but he said he was short. He did not give me the cash. He assured me that the exchanges in San Francisco banks were sufficient, that he would give me a draft for it. Q. Did he say he could give you the cash there? A. He said he could not; no. He said he was coming over the next morning to get cash from me. * * * He said he was short; he would be over the next morning and get cash to carry on. Q. Did he go over next morning? A. He did. Q. What did he get? He got $1,500 in currency from the Gridley branch of the Rideout bank."

[1] As against the foregoing testimony touching "shortness" of money on the 13th day of December after banking hours, the trial court evidently accepted as substantial evidence of the bank's actual ability to pay in due course the tangible fact that its cashier on the following morning could and did get money to the extent of $1,500 from a rival bank. And there was further testimony received by the trial court tending to show that for four days up to and including the 17th day of December the bank was doing business as usual. Under the well-established rule touching the binding effect of findings made by the trial court on conflicting testimony, or upon conflicting inferences that may be drawn from the same testimony, we do not feel inclined to set aside the finding made by the trial court on the foregoing issues.

[2] And, second, as regards the defense setting up usage and custom: Assuming, but not deciding, that the custom pleaded was a reasonable one, and was such a one "as to fasten an implied knowledge on the parties," an examination of the evidence discloses such a conflict in the testimony of substantial bankers as to preclude this court from setting aside the findings of the trial court. Though bankers P. T. Smith, J. R. Craig, and E. E. Briggs testified, in substance, that the method pursued in attempting to make the collection herein was in accordance with the custom and practice in the locality, bankers Temple Crane and H. B. P. Carden testify that in their experience as bankers in the same locality, though they are each familiar with the customs of banks in making collections similar to the one attempted in the case at bar, they never followed or knew of such a custom.

The foregoing findings of the trial court at the last trial of the case therefore leaves the case, so far as its material facts are concerned, in the same situation as it was when it was submitted to the Supreme Court on the previous appeal. And since the law applicable to the facts as established by the trial court herein was absolutely fixed and settled by the Supreme Court in favor of the respondent herein, the judgment appealed from herein is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 207

PEOPLE v. CHIAPPARI et al. (Cr. 1305.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 5, 1927.)

1. Rape 🔑51(1)—Evidence held to sustain convictions of rape.

Convictions of rape held sustained by evidence, testimony of prosecutrix not being unbelievable.

2. Criminal law 🔑822(13)—In instruction that jury were supreme judges of fact, and that "neither the counsel nor court has anything to say to you about that," quoted words held not error, in view of entire instruction.

In instruction that jury must determine defendants' guilt of either or both of crimes charged and in this respect were the supreme judges in the matters of fact, and that "neither the counsel nor the court has anything to say to you about that," quoted words held not error, in view of further portions of instruction.

3. Criminal law 🔑822(11)—Instruction that defendants, at outset of trial, are presumed to be innocent held not error, in view of entire instruction.

Instruction, "that these defendants at the outset of the trial are presumed to be innocent," held not error, in view of further portion of instruction to effect that presumption of innocence abides throughout the trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Angelo Chiappari and others were convicted of rape, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Albert Mansfield and J. J. Bullock, both of Redwood City, and Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel B. Browne, of San Francisco, for the People.

NOURSE, J. The three defendants were tried jointly upon an information framed in two counts, one charging robbery and the other charging rape. The jury returned a verdict of guilty upon the second count, having failed to agree as to the charge of robbery. Judgments following the verdict were entered in each instance on September 30, 1925, and three separate appeals were taken, based upon one typewritten transcript filed November 6, 1925. These appeals are from the judgment and the order denying a new trial as to each of the three defendants. On June 10, 1926, a brief was filed on behalf of the defendant Chiappari, and, upon request of his counsel, the time was extended to enable him to file briefs for the other defendants, but these briefs have not been filed.

The facts of the case are recited in People v. Piero (Cal. App.) 249 P. 541, and nothing would be served by repeating them here. It should be stated, however, that the defendants Ghio and Piexotto were members of the original party which picked up the prosecutrix on the streets of San Francisco and took her to the Brighton Beach Café in San Mateo county; that the defendant Chiappari joined the party at the cafe and that he, Craib, and the two other defendants formed the party of four who forcibly committed the assault upon the prosecutrix. It should also be stated that after this occurrence the four members of the party returned to the café, left the prosecutrix out on the road, and that some time later, at the request of the proprietor of the café, the defendant Chiappari got in another automobile and with a companion picked up the prosecutrix and returned her to Colma.

[1] On this appeal it is argued on behalf of Chiappari that the testimony of the prosecutrix is confused and unbelievable. To support the argument disconnected excerpts from her testimony are copied from the record, and by this method it is made to appear that this defendant was not present at the time of the assault. This is done by confusing the proof of the use of two automobiles by members of the party and by disconnected references to the "machine" and "car." The story of the prosecutrix is complete and sufficient to support the verdict, but, in addition to this, her story in all material respects was corroborated by other witnesses.

[2] The appellant Chiappari has also advanced the argument that the trial judge erred in his instructions to the jury. Error is made to appear by taking disconnected excerpts from instructions, which place an entirely different meaning upon the instruction as given. The trial judge instructed the jury that, the defendants having pleaded not guilty, it was the duty of the jury to determine whether they were guilty of either or of both of the crimes charged, and that in this respect they were the supreme judges in the matters of fact. In this connection, it was added that:

> "Neither counsel nor the court has anything to say to you about that."

This appellant claims that the language just quoted was error. But it was merely a part of an instruction wherein the trial judge instructed the jury that it was his duty to instruct them upon the law governing the consideration of the case, but that they should not imply from anything said by him that he had any particular views as to what the facts were; that they were charged with the duty to determine the facts; and that this must be done from their own judgment without influence by what they might conceive to be the views of counsel or of the court upon these questions. There was no error in the instructions as given.

[3] Similar criticism is made of the instructions on the subject of the presumption of innocence resting with the defendants. This appellant copies a portion of the instructions reading, "These defendants at the outset of the trial are presumed to be innocent," and from this argues that the jury was left to believe that this presumption applied to the defendants at the outset of the trial only. However, in the same instruction the jury was told that the presumption of innocence abides with the defendants "throughout the trial, and goes with you to your jury room until the evidence convinces you to the contrary and beyond all reasonable doubt."

Upon review of the entire record, we are satisfied that the defendants were all fairly tried and fairly convicted upon evidence which is not subject to legal criticism.

The judgments and the orders denying a new trial as to each of the three defendants are affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

81 Cal. App. 265

ENGELBERG v. SEBASTIANI. (Civ. 3242.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 8, 1927.)

1. New trial 🔑116(2)—Power of trial court to pass on motion for new trial does not expire before notice of entry of judgment is served.

Where it did not appear whether notice of entry of judgment had been served on defendant, it was not shown that power of trial court to pass on motion for new trial had expired.

2. Exceptions, bill of 🔑36(3)—Time within which to prepare bill of exceptions or request transcript begins to run on termination of pending proceeding for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 953a).

Time within which to prepare bill of exceptions, under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, or to request transcript under section 953a, does not begin to run until termination of pending proceeding for new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County.

Action by Louis Engelberg against Sam Sebastiani. Motion to dismiss defendant's appeal from the judgment. Motion denied.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, and Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is a motion to dismiss the defendant's appeal from the judgment herein on the ground that appellant has failed to have prepared and to file a record on appeal within the time required. The facts upon which respondent relies are certified by the clerk of the trial court to be as follows:

Judgment was entered September 28, 1926. Thereafter on the same day the defendant filed his notice of appeal from the judgment and notice of motion for a new trial. The "said motion for a new trial has never been argued nor presented to said superior court, and no order granting or denying a new trial has ever been made or entered in said cause." No request has been made "for a transcript under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure"; "no bill of exceptions has ever been filed, * * * nor has any transcript in said action been prepared or filed under the provisions of said section 953a; * * * no order has been made or entered by said superior court allowing additional time within which to prepare or serve a draft of a proposed bill of exceptions upon said appeal; * * * and * * * no proceedings for a bill of exceptions or transcript, under said section 953a, are pending in said trial court, as appears of record." The clerk's certificate is dated December 13, 1926.

[1, 2] It does not appear whether notice of entry of the judgment has ever been served upon defendant. It has not been made to appear, therefore, that the power of the trial court to pass on the motion for a new trial has expired. Strehlow v. Mothorn, 197 Cal. 112, 239 P. 850. Since it does not appear that the proceeding on motion for a new trial has been terminated, the motion to dismiss must be denied. The time within which to prepare a bill of exceptions, under the provisions of section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or to request a transcript, under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not begin to run until the termination of a pending proceeding for a new trial.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

81 Cal. App. 281

PEOPLE v. FRASER. (Cr. 1397.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 10, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 11, 1927.)

1. False pretenses 🔑38—Where sufficient false representations were proved to show defendant obtained money under false pretenses, it was immaterial that all false representations alleged were not proved.

In prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, conviction would stand though all representations alleged were not proved, where evidence as to some of false representations alleged was sufficient to convince jury that those shown were material in inducing complaining witness to part with his money.

2. Criminal law 🔑1032(7)—Question of variance cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

Question of variance between allegations of information and evidence cannot be presented for first time on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

B. R. Fraser was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley Visel, L. V. Beaulieu, and Henry E. Carter, all of Los Angeles (Albert E. Sherman, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. [1] Defendant was convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses under two counts. He appeals from the judgment of conviction. It is contended that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. Having in mind the rule that it is unnecessary to prove all of the false representations alleged in a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses, provided that enough be proven to convince the jury that those shown were material in inducing the complaining witness to part with his money (People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521), we are satisfied that the evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion reached by the jury on each count. Some of the alleged false representations were not proved, it is true, but the evidence as to others was so complete that we find it unnecessary to consume the time necessary to state the showing actually made.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

[2] It is insisted by appellant that there was a variance between the allegations of the information and the evidence. In each count it was averred that the complaining witness was induced by the misrepresentations of appellant to invest money in a certain business conducted by him, and that the money was agreed to be returned if he became dissatisfied with the business. It is said that the evidence shows only that the complaining witnesses loaned money to appellant for the purposes of his business. If we admit for the sake of argument only that this is the showing made by the record, we are not required to decide whether the variance was a material one. The question of variance was not presented to the trial court, and it cannot be presented for the first time on appeal. People v. Fuski, 49 Cal. App. 4, 192 P. 552; People v. Gonzales, 69 Cal. App. 609, 231 P. 1014.

Other points are made by appellant, but they are so plainly without merit, from the mere statement of them, that we find it unnecessary to discuss them.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

MINNIS v. EQUITABLE LIFE ASSUR. SOC. OF THE UNITED STATES. (Civ. 3127.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 7, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 8, 1927.)

1. Judgment 🔑719—Former judgment conclusive in action between parties involving same questions as to all matters belonging to controversy and within issues.

Former final judgment between same parties to action is conclusive in all subsequent actions involving same questions, not only as to matters actually decided, but as to all matters belonging to subject of controversy and properly within scope of issues which might have been raised and decided.

2. Judgment 🔑720—Adjudication that insured did not die on certain date barred subsequent action on same life policy involving same question.

Adjudication, in previous action on insurance policy, that insured did not die November 2, 1915, and was not dead on August 31, 1916, date of commencement of action, was bar to subsequent action on same policy in which it was alleged that insured died November 2, 1915.

3. Judgment 🔑576(1)—Whether action is barred by previous judgment does not depend on correctness thereof.

Whether action is barred by former judgment does not depend on correctness of judgment, but question is, Did court decide question and is decision final?

4. Judgment 🔑587, 689—Where only difference was that first action was commenced by another administratrix of insured, and in second action presumption of death from seven years' absence was relied on, former judgment barred second action.

Where only difference was that action in which former judgment adjudicating that insured was not dead was commenced by different administratrix, and presumption of death arising from seven years' absence was relied on in present action, actions were same, so that former judgment was bar to present action.

5. Judgment 🔑725(2)—Presumption of insured's death from seven years' absence had no weight in face of judgment within seven years that insured had not died.

Disputable presumption of death from insured's absence for seven years without having been heard from had no weight in face of judgment within seven-year period that insured was not dead.

6. Death 🔑2(2)—Presumption of death from seven years' absence does not arise until expiration of seven years, unless circumstances quicken time (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 26).

Presumption, provided for under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 26, that person not heard from in seven years is dead, does not arise until after expiration of seven years, unless there are circumstances in evidence to quicken time.

7. Judgment 🔑725(2)—That plaintiff fixed date of insured's death did not quicken time of presumption of death from absence of seven years, where previous judgment adjudicated that insured was alive on that date.

Where insured disappeared November 2, 1915, fact that plaintiff fixed that date as date of his death was of no avail to plaintiff in quickening time of presumption of death arising from absence for seven years in face of previous judgment adjudicating that insured was alive at that time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action on a policy of life insurance by Hannah Minnis, administratrix of the estate of Emil Lesser, deceased, against the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Newlin & Ashburn and W. C. Mathes, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 267 P. 538.

Clark & Law, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1,950.40, and judgment was duly entered thereon. From this judgment the defendant, the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, a corporation, prosecutes this appeal.

The record is brought before this court upon a bill of exceptions. The facts are these: On February 12, 1894, the defendant, the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, issued to Emil Lesser a life insurance policy in the sum of $3,000. By the written terms of said policy the insurer (defendant and appellant herein) promised, in consideration of the application for the policy, and the payment of the annual premium of $90 in advance, to pay "to Emil Lesser, his executors, administrators, or assigns. $3,000, upon satisfactory proof of the death of said Emil Lesser." On January 30, 1914, Emil Lesser borrowed from the defendant $987, and executed to defendant a written agreement which provided that repayment be made on February 9, 1915, and by this agreement assigned the policy above mentioned, and all rights thereunder, to defendant as collateral security for said loan. All premium payments on the original policy were made up to and including the premium due on February 9, 1915, but no payments of premium have been made since that date, and no part of the loan of $987, or any interest thereon, has ever been paid.

Emil Lesser disappeared from his home on November 2, 1915, and has not been seen or heard from since that time. On February 9, 1916, the defendant declared that the policy had lapsed for nonpayment of the premium and, under the terms of the policy, the defendant converted said policy into a paid-up policy of $1,764. On April 10, 1916, the defendant was notified that Emil Lesser was dead, and, the policy not being paid, Alice Lesser, the wife of Emil Lesser, was, on June 17, 1916, appointed administratrix of his estate, and on August 31, 1916, commenced an action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles against the defendant to recover the sum of $3,000, the original amount called for in said policy. The complaint in that action alleged, in part, as follows:

> "That thereafter, to wit, and on the 2d day of November, 1915, the said Emil Lesser, the insured, at the city of Venice, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and while said policy was in full force, was accidentally drowned while bathing in the ocean at said city of Venice, county of Los Angeles, state of California."

The answer of the defendant therein alleged in part:

> "Said defendant denies that on the 2d day of November, 1915, or at any other time, said Emil Lesser, or the insured in any policy issued by this defendant, referred to in said complaint, or at the city of Venice or county of Los Angeles, or state of California, or any other place, or while said policy was in full or any force or effect, was accidentally or at all drowned, or was accidentally or at all drowned while bathing in the ocean at the city of Venice or county of Los Angeles, or state of California, or that on the 2d day of November, 1915, Emil Lesser was accidentally or at all drowned at the city of Venice, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, or at any other place. * * * Said defendant denies that said Emil Lesser is dead or that there is any estate of Emil Lesser. * * *"

Therefore the question of fact as to whether or not Emil Lesser died on the 2d day of November, 1915, was squarely put in issue and after a trial of this issue, and other issues involved in the case, extending over a period of five days, in which oral and documentary evidence was offered and received on behalf of the plaintiff, the trial court, on the 15th of March, 1919, made certain findings of fact, among them being the following:

> "That plaintiff has failed to prove the allegations of paragraph III of her complaint by a preponderance of the evidence, and the court, therefore, finds that it is not true that on the 2d day of November, 1915, or at all, the said Emil Lesser was accidentally, or at all, drowned, either at the city of Venice, or elsewhere, or while bathing in the ocean at said city, or while said policy was in full force. * * * The court finds, with reference to the allegation of paragraph VI of the defendant's first defense, that the plaintiff has failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the said Emil Lesser is dead, and the court, therefore, finds that the said Emil Lesser is not dead. * * *"

As conclusions of law from the foregoing facts and other facts found by the court, the court made the following conclusion of law:

> "That the plaintiff shall take nothing by her complaint herein, and that the defendant shall recover of the plaintiff its costs of action herein incurred and to be taxed herein.
>
> "Let judgment be entered accordingly."

Judgment in conformity with the findings was duly entered on the said 15th day of March, 1919, and no motion for a new trial was made, and no appeal taken from said judgment, and the same became final, and is still in full force and effect.

On April 5, 1919, no payments of premium having been made since February 9, 1915, on the policy, and the said loan of $987 remaining unpaid, the defendant insurance company foreclosed the policy and applied the proceeds to the payment of the amounts due. The surrender value of the policy at that time, as contended by defendant, was $1,130.43, and the indebtedness on the loan amounted to $1,142.73.

In November, 1920, Alice Lesser was removed as administratrix of the estate of Emil Lesser, and the plaintiff in this action, Hannah Minnis, was on February 6, 1923, duly and regularly appointed administratrix of the estate of Emil Lesser, deceased, and, after duly qualifying as such administratrix, and on April 12, 1923, commenced the present action, which was tried by the court, sitting with a jury, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,950.40, as above mentioned.

The complaint in the present action alleges in part:

> "That on November 2, 1915, and for many years prior thereto, said Emil Lesser resided in the city of Los Angeles, state of California; that he disappeared upon said day and has not been seen nor heard from since; the plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that the said Emil Lesser died upon said 2d day of November, 1915."

The answer in the present action, like that in the first action, denied the death of Emil Lesser on the 2d day of November, 1915, and in addition thereto set up as a bar and as an estoppel to the present action the findings and judgment in the former action of Alice Lesser, Administratrix of the Estate of Emil Lesser, Deceased, v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, above mentioned. The trial court denied defendant's plea of res judicata, and held that the former judgment was not a bar to the present action.

The principal contention made by the defendant is that the court erred in denying its plea of res judicata, or, to state it in the language of the defendant:

> "The judgment of the superior court for Los Angeles county in the case of Alice Lesser, Administratrix of the Estate of Emil Lesser, Deceased, plaintiff, v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, a Corporation, Defendant, numbered B-41790 on the records of that court, constitutes an absolute bar to the present action."

[1] The rule is well established and has long been adhered to in this state that a former final judgment between the same parties to an action is conclusive in all subsequent actions involving the same questions, not only as to matters actually decided in the former controversy, but as to all matters belonging to the subject of the controversy and properly within the scope of the issues, which also might have been raised and decided; the presumption being that all such issues were presented and decided. Bingham v. Kearney, 136 Cal. 175, 68 P. 597; Rucker v. Langford, 138 Cal. 611, 71 P. 1123; Lamb v. Wahlenmaier, 144 Cal. 91, 77 P. 765, 103 Am. St. Rep. 66; Southern Pacific Co. v. Edmunds, 168 Cal. 415, 143 P. 597; Erving v. James H. Goodman & Co. Bank, 171 Cal. 559, 153 P. 945; Whittier v. Visscher, 189 Cal. 454, 209 P. 23; Estate of Clark, 190 Cal. 360, 212 P. 622.

[2, 3] It seems clear, therefore, from the record before us, that the issue as to whether Emil Lesser died on the 2d day of November, 1915, or at any time prior to the filing of the complaint in the former action on August 31, 1916, was thoroughly litigated in the former action, and decided by the court in that action that he did not die on November 2, 1915, and was not dead on the 31st of August, 1916. It seems also equally clear that the adjudication of that issue was essential to the determination of the former action.

Thus we have it adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction that Emil Lesser did not die on the 2d day of November, 1915, and did not die any time thereafter prior to August 31, 1916, and plaintiff, not having appealed from this former judgment, and allowed it to become final, such judgment is available to the defendant as a defense to any subsequent action against defendant involving the same questions, and this is true no matter how erroneous the former judgment may have been, it is none the less a bar, because the question is not whether the trial court in the former action reached a correct conclusion upon the evidence submitted to it that Emil Lesser did not die on the 2d day of November, 1915, or at any time thereafter prior to August 31, 1916; but the question is, did the court decide the question and is the decision final? Lamb v. Wahlenmaier, supra.

[4] The same parties are parties to the two actions. It is true that Alice Lesser sued as administratrix of the estate of Emil Lesser in the first action, and Hannah Minnis sued as administratrix of the estate of Emil Lesser in the case at bar, but both sued as the personal representative of Emil Lesser, the insured, and for the benefit of the estate of the insured, and the defendant in both cases is the same corporation, the same subject-matter is involved in the two actions, both actions were brought to recover on the same policy of insurance, and the same cause of action is stated in both complaints, the only difference in the two complaints is that in the complaint in the case at bar new evidentiary matter is alleged, to wit:

> "That Emil Lesser had not been seen or heard from for more than seven years."

This amounted to nothing more than an assertion by plaintiff that she had now discovered some new evidence with which to prove that the court's finding in the former action was erroneous, or, to state it another way, the disputable presumption that arises from the unexplained absence of seven years being now available to plaintiff, she seeks to have this presumption, which is evidence, considered to show that Emil Lesser did in fact die on the 2d day of November, 1915, which cannot be done in the face of the former final judgment to the contrary.

[5, 6] The presumption of death that the law deduces from the fact that a person has not been heard from in seven years can be of no assistance to the plaintiff in the case at bar, because plaintiff alleged in the former action that Emil Lesser died on the 2d day of November, 1915, and all of the evidence offered in that case tended to establish death on that date. All of the additional evidence that this plaintiff offered in the present case is this presumption, but here she is confronted with a final judgment in the former action that Emil Lesser did not die on November 2, 1915, or any time prior to August 31, 1916. Therefore in the face of this judgment, this disputable presumption has no weight. Plaintiff has not therefore presented a new cause of action, but only new evidence in the form of a legal presumption for the purpose of proving the same issue presented at the former trial. However, if we take the present action as stating a new cause of action, based upon subdivision 26 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and decide that Emil Lesser is dead, by reason of the fact that he has not been heard from in seven years from November 2, 1915, then, and in that event, the plaintiff's cause of action would not arise until seven years from November 2, 1915, or on November 2, 1922; for it has been repeatedly held that the presumption of death that the law deduces from the unexplained absence of seven years does not arise until the expiration of the seven years, unless there are circumstances in evidence to "quicken" the time. Ashbury v. Sanders, 8 Cal. 62, 68 Am. Dec. 300; Solomon v. Redona, 52 Cal. App. 300, 198 P. 643; Rogers v. Manhattan Life Insurance Co., 138 Cal. 285, 71 P. 348; Benjamin v. District Grand Lodge, 171 Cal. 260, 152 P. 731; Western Grain, etc., Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 135, 159 P. 423; Lesser v. New York Life Insurance Co., 53 Cal. App. 236, 200 P. 22; McCormick v. Woodmen of the World, 57 Cal. App. 568, 207 P. 943.

[7] The only circumstances in evidence in the case at bar that might be said to "quicken" the time is the fact that plaintiff herself has fixed the 2d day of November, 1915, as the date of death, but such circumstance is of no avail to plaintiff, for, as we have already seen, the former judgment adjudicates the fact that Emil Lesser was alive on that date; but, irrespective of this circumstance tending to "quicken" the time of death, the presumption of law can have no other effect than as evidence that Emil Lesser was dead at the expiration of the seven years, to wit, November 2, 1922.

Therefore, if the complaint in the present action be considered as stating a new cause of action, arising since the commencement of the former action, such new cause of action could not have arisen prior to November 2, 1922, and on that date the said policy of insurance was not in force. The policy had lapsed on February 9, 1916, because of nonpayment of premium, was never thereafter revived by payment of any premium whatever, and this same policy was foreclosed by defendant on April 5, 1919, and the proceeds applied toward the payment of the principal and interest due on account of the loan of $987 to Emil Lesser.

We conclude, therefore, from the record before us, including the judgment in the former action, that Emil Lesser did not die at any time while the insurance policy here sued upon was in force, and that the trial court erred in overruling defendant's plea of res judicata.

It follows that we are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 278

COSULICH v. STEMPEL. (Civ. 5557.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 10, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 11, 1927.)

1. Malicious prosecution ⚿1—Malicious prosecution lies only when party has prosecuted judicial proceeding with malice, and without probable cause.

As general rule, action for malicious prosecution will lie only when party has instituted or prosecuted, with malice, and without reasonable or probable cause, some judicial proceeding against another.

2. Malicious prosecution ⚿12—Commissioner's hearing on misconduct of applicant for real estate broker's license was not "judicial proceeding" within rule applicable to malicious prosecution (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 112, §§ 12, 13).

Real estate commissioner's hearing on misconduct and dishonesty of plaintiff applying for real estate broker's license after defendant filed information under oath accusing him of dishonesty and misconduct was not a "judicial proceeding" within rule applicable to malicious prosecution, in view of Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 112, §§ 12, 13.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judicial Proceeding.]

3. Appeal and error ⚿1078(3)—Appellate court will not consider complaint to determine whether plaintiff is entitled to other relief than that argued for.

Where only question argued on appeal was whether acts pleaded were sufficient as basis for suit for malicious prosecution, appellate court would not consider complaint to determine whether stated facts were sufficient to entitle plaintiff to relief under some other theory.

---

★ Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by M. N. Cosulich against R. J. Stempel for damages for malicious prosecution. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Marion Vecki, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edwin L. Forster, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages for malicious prosecution. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment for the defendant followed. Plaintiff has appealed on the judgment roll.

The complaint alleges that on December 4, 1923, plaintiff filed with the real estate commissioner his application for a license as a real estate broker; that on December 18, 1923, defendant maliciously and falsely filed with the real estate commissioner his information under oath accusing plaintiff of dishonesty and misconduct; that said charges were without probable cause, but resulted in delaying the issuance of plaintiff's license; and that on Januray 11, 1924, after a full hearing of said charges upon the merits, the real estate commissioner found in favor of plaintiff, and caused a broker's license to be issued to him.

[1] The appeal presents the single question whether an action for malicious prosecution may be based upon transactions of this kind before the real estate commissioner. The general rule is that the action will lie only when a party has instituted or prosecuted with malice and without reasonable or probable cause some judicial proceeding against another. 16 Cal. Jur. p. 728. There has been a wide difference of opinion as to whether the action will lie when the proceedings instituted are not criminal in their nature (18 R. C. L. p. 13), but the authorities are in accord that they must be judicial proceedings and brought before some judicial tribunal (38 Cor. Jur. p. 387).

[2] By the statute under which the real estate commissioner functions (Deering's General Laws, 1923, Act 112), it is provided that the commissioner may investigate the actions of "any person, * * * engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real estate broker, * * * and shall have the power to temporarily suspend or permanently revoke licenses issued under the provisions of this act." Section 12. For the purpose of this investigation the commissioner is authorized in sections 12 and 13 of the act to issue process, to subpœna witnesses, and to hear and determine the charges against the licensee. Statutes of this nature which confer upon administrative bodies the power to hear and determine controversies incidental to their administrative functions have been held to create a quasi judicial body with jurisdiction to entertain proceedings which, though judicial in their character, are not in conflict, with the constitutional limitations regarding the judicial powers of the state.

It is because of these provisions of the act that the appellant argues that the proceedings instituted against him were judicial proceedings within the rule applicable to malicious prosecution. The difficulty with appellant's position is that his complaint affirmatively shows that he was not a licensed broker under the statute when the acts complained of were done. He had merely applied to the commissioner for a license, and, though the commissioner delayed action because of respondent's affidavit until he satisfied himself that the appellant was a suitable person to be awarded a license, there were no proceedings of a judicial nature either instituted or determined.

[3] We withhold expression of opinion as to whether proceedings for the revocation of a license once issued would come within the rule, because the proceedings pleaded here were not of that character. The only question argued on this appeal is whether the acts pleaded were sufficient as a basis for a suit for malicious prosecution, and for that reason we have not considered the complaint to determine whether it states facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to relief under some other theory. On the case presented we are satisfied that the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

81 Cal. App. 213

BINNEY v. SAN DIMAS LEMON ASS'N.★

(Civ. 4563.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 7, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 8, 1927.)

1. Mortgages ⟜197—Order directing receiver to collect proceeds of fruit already picked from mortgaged premises at time of appointment held void.

Order directing receiver to collect proceeds of fruit already picked from mortgaged premises at time of appointment, under mortgage including rents, issues, and profits, held void, since mortgagee had no lien or right to fruit picked before appointment of receiver.

2. Mortgages ⟜473—One turning over proceeds of fruit from mortgaged premises to receiver, in accordance with court's order, was protected from demand by mortgagor's assignee.

Where court made invalid order directing receiver to collect proceeds of fruit picked from mortgaged premises, and defendant corporation, which sold fruit, turned over proceeds to receiver on demand, defendant's payment to receiver was defense to action by mortgagor's assignee for money had and received.

Conrey, P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by George A. Binney, Jr., against the San Dimas Lemon Association. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clark, Law & Clay, and Clark & Law, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Farrand & Slosson, of Los Angeles (Hugh Ward Lutz, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The salient facts in this appeal appear to be that George A. Binney was the owner of a citrus grove and that he executed and delivered a mortgage thereon, including the "rents, issues and profits," to Edwin O. Kennard and Flora H. Kennard. The indebtedness secured by the mortgage not having been paid, suit was brought to foreclose the mortgage, and somewhat later a receiver in the action was appointed by the court. Between the time that the suit was commenced and the date of the appointment of the receiver the defendants in that action picked fruit from the mortgaged premises and delivered the fruit to San Dimas Lemon Association (the defendant in this action), which fruit was later sold by said association for the sum of $603.99, and which amount, on demand by the receiver, was paid to him. Thereupon George A. Binney assigned to his son, George A. Binney, Jr., all his interest in the proceeds of the sale of the fruit, and George A. Binney, Jr., commenced the instant action against the San Dimas Lemon Association for the money received by it for the fruit. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, and plaintiff has appealed therefrom to this court. It also appears that the receiver in demanding from San Dimas Lemon Association the amount of money received by it for the fruit was acting within the express powers attempted to be conferred upon him by the trial court.

[1] The first question for the consideration of this court involves the validity of the order made by the trial court in directing the receiver to collect the proceeds of the fruit already picked from the mortgaged premises at the time of the appointment of the receiver.

Although the exact question here presented has not been ruled upon by the appellate tribunals of this state, the reports are by no means silent on the point affecting the validity of such an order.

In the early case of Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432, a mortgage which there was being foreclosed, like the one in the instant case, included the rents, issues, and profits, and a receiver who had been appointed by the court harvested and sold a crop which was growing upon the mortgaged premises at the time the receiver took possession. It appearing that at the foreclosure sale a sum was realized insufficient to pay the debt secured by the mortgage, by order of the trial court the money received by the receiver from the sale of such crop was applied to payment of the deficiency. On appeal the court held in effect that, as is stated in the subsequent case of Treat v. Dorman, 100 Cal. 623, 625, 35 P. 86, 87: "Not only the land described in the complaint, but the rents, issues and profits thereof were mortgaged, so that the crop which the receiver took possession of was a part of the mortgaged property."

In the case of Treat v. Dorman, 100 Cal. 623, 35 P. 86, the principle announced in Montgomery v. Merrill, supra, as applied to the action between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, is extended so as to apply as between a mortgagee of the land and a subsequent mortgagee (with notice) of the crops alone. See, also, Locke v. Klunker, 123 Cal. 231, 236, 55 P. 993.

In the case of Simpson v. Ferguson, 112 Cal. 180, 44 P. 484, 53 Am. St. Rep. 201, the controversy was between a mortgagee of the land, together with the rents, issues and profits thereof, and a subsequent mortgagee (without notice) of the growing crop. Touching the point here at issue, in the course of the opinion the following language (in part) was used by the court:

"* * * While it is perfectly true that growing crops may be either personal or real property, according to circumstances, and while, as suggested by respondent, a mortgage of the land gives a lien upon everything that would pass by a grant of the land, which includes crops growing thereon, it is, nevertheless, well established that such lien, so far as the growing crops are concerned, is limited in its effect to the crops growing upon and unsevered from the land at the time of foreclosure. It does not vest the mortgagee with a right to the crops grown intermediate the giving of the mortgage and the foreclosure thereof. Until the latter event, where, as in this state, the mortgage creates no estate in the mortgagee, but confers only a lien upon the property, the mortgagor is entitled to such crops, with the same absolute right and dominion over them as if the mortgage did not exist. This doctrine is thoroughly well settled, with no considerable diversity upon the subject among text-writers or the courts."

---

★ Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

The court then quotes from Jones on Mortgages (5th Ed.) § 670, which includes the following statement:

> "Even if the rents and profits of the mortgaged property are expressly pledged for the security of the mortgage debt, with the right in the mortgagee to take possession upon default, the mortgagee is not entitled to the rents and profits until he takes actual possession, or until possession is taken in his behalf by a receiver."

The court also cites several other authorities and reaches the conclusion, notwithstanding the cases of Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432, and Treat v. Dorman, 100 Cal. 623, 35 P. 86, supra (which, according to the court, are distinguishable), that a mortgage of land, together with its rents, issues and profits, is limited in its effect so far as growing crops are concerned to crops growing upon the land at the time of the foreclosure, and as to crops harvested between the time of the giving of the mortgage and its foreclosure the mortgagor may exercise absolute dominion as if the mortgage did not exist.

In Bank of Woodland v. Christie, 6 Cal. Unrep. 545, 62 P. 400, the plaintiff recovered judgment to foreclose a mortgage on certain land, together with the rents, issues and profits thereof. Either on the same day that judgment was rendered, or on the day following (and before the foreclosure sale took place), the mortgagor sold an undivided one-third of the crop on the land. Thereafter the mortgagee made a motion that a receiver be appointed "to take possession and charge of the crops that were growing on the land mortgaged and ordered to be sold by the judgment in said cause * * * at the time of the foreclosure, for the purpose of subjecting them to the payment of the judgment." The motion was denied. On appeal it was held that the right of the mortgagor to dispose of crops growing on the mortgaged premises was not devested by foreclosure preceedings until sale under the decree.

In the case of Modesto Bank v. Owens, 121 Cal. 223, 53 P. 552, where the controversy was between the owner of a mortgage covering land, together with rents, issues and profits thereof, and the owner of a subsequent mortgage on a crop on the land, it was held that the latter mortgage took precedence, even though taken with notice. With reference to that point, the following appears in the opinion:

> "It is said that Haslacher & Kahn had notice of plaintiff's mortgage, and therefore were not incumbrancers in good faith. The plaintiff's mortgage did not cover the crop, but constituted a lien upon the land only, and therefore it did not matter whether they knew it or not. No amount of notice could make it a chattel mortgage."

And regarding the ruling in Simpson v. Ferguson, 112 Cal. 180, 40 P. 104, 44 P. 484, 53 Am. St. Rep. 201, the court, through Temple, J., said:

> "As I understand Simpson v. Ferguson, supra, it is there held that such a mortgage does not constitute a lien upon the growing crops, even as against the mortgagor."

The rule as announced to the effect that a land mortgage, including rents, issues, and profits, not executed in the form prescribed for chattel mortgages, is ineffectual to give to the mortgagee any lien on or right to crops growing on the land, even after the appointment of a receiver, as against third persons, is recognized in Cowdery v. London, etc., Bank, 139 Cal. 298, 308, 73 P. 196, 96 Am. St. Rep. 115, where authorities are cited. Perhaps the same principle is expressed in Freedman's Saving, etc., Co. v. Shepherd, 127 U. S. 494, 8 S. Ct. 1250, 32 L. Ed. 163, where it is said:

> "* * * Even where the income is expressly pledged as security for the mortgage debt, with the right in the mortgagee to take possession upon the failure of the mortgagor to perform the conditions of the mortgage, the general rule is that the mortgagee is not entitled to the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises until he takes actual possession, or until possession is taken, in his behalf, by a receiver [citing authorities]."

The case of Ahern v. Littl, 90 N. J. Eq. 72, 105 A. 597, was a foreclosure suit in which a receiver was appointed to take the growing crops and also grain already cut but not gathered. It was held that a mortgage which covered the "profits, privileges, and advantages, with the appurtenances to the same belonging," created no lien on either the growing crops or those already cut at the time the receiver was appointed. See, also, the following cases: Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 120 Cal. 614, 52 P. 1006; Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 378, 2 S. Ct. 911, 27 L. Ed. 609; West v. Conant, 100 Cal. 231, 34 P. 705; Freeman v. Campbell, 109 Cal. 360, 42 P. 35; Sexton v. Breese, 135 N. Y. 387, 32 N. E. 133.

Reverting to the two authorities relied upon by respondent herein to sustain the judgment, namely, Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432, and Treat v. Dorman, 100 Cal. 623, 35 P. 86, it will be noted that in the former case the receiver harvested a crop which was growing on the mortgaged premises at the time the receiver was appointed, while in the latter case no claim of priority was made in the trial court by the owner of the subsequent chattel mortgage on the crop, and the decree gave the appellant "everything it asked." Furthermore, with reference thereto, as is stated by the court in the case of Simpson v. Ferguson, 112 Cal. 180, 189, 44 P. 484, 486 (53 Am. St. Rep. 201). "The party's subsequent claim on the appeal to a priority of lien on the crop, and to a right to a different judgment, does not appear to have received very favorable or careful consideration, but apparently the case went off largely upon the theory that appellant had received all it asked in the court below," and the case could not be considered "as binding authority." But whatever view may be taken regarding the point decided in either or both of the cases under consideration, it would appear that if they or either of them may be considered as authority for holding that in the circumstances of the instant case the receiver was legally authorized to demand and receive the proceeds derived from the sale of the fruit taken by the mortgagor from the mortgaged premises prior to the appointment of the receiver, such cases are contrary not only to the general weight of authority, but to cases decided by the Supreme Court of this state.

But in effect it is argued by respondent that, even assuming the exercise by the trial court of jurisdiction which it did not possess and the consequent illegality of the order of the court to which reference has been had, yet that because of the fact that the order was made at least in apparent conformity with the powers of the court, the San Dimas Lemon Association in obeying such order should be protected from civil liability. In answer to such suggestion, appellant cites the following authorities: Staples v. May, 87 Cal. 178, 25 P. 346, California Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Consolidated Piedmont Cable Co., 117 Cal. 237, 49 P. 1, and Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 421, 50 P. 549.

In the case first cited (Staples v. May, 87 Cal. 178, 25 P. 346), the action was brought against a receiver for damages arising out of acts committed by him which were alleged to be beyond the authority conferred upon him by the order of his appointment. The court held that the receiver had not "even color of authority" to do the acts of which complaint was made, and consequently that he was liable for the resultant damage. However, in the course of the opinion, in discussing the effect of the order by the court creating a receivership which in terms might include properties not described by a mortgage which was being foreclosed, the following language appears:

> "As to the terms of the order, if they embraced property not included in either of the securities, the order was to that extent in excess of the jurisdiction of the court and void. But construed with reference to the pleadings upon which they were based, the several orders appointing the receiver and defining his powers and duties did not apply to any property except that against which the foreclosure was sought."

The second case (California Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Consolidated Piedmont Cable Co., 117 Cal. 237, 49 P. 1), was like the first in that it unquestionably appeared that the receiver had exceeded his express authority, and for which acts he was held liable. The third case (Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 421, 50 P. 549), was an appeal from an order appointing a receiver made after judgment, which order gave power to the receiver to take possession of certain property not included in the judgment. In effect the court ruled that the only property of which the receiver could rightfully take possession was that which was in litigation, and "to the extent, therefore, that the order appointing the receiver embraced this [other] property, it was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court and void."

It will be noted that in none of the cases to which reference has been had were the facts analogous to those present in the instant case; nor was any indication given as to what ruling would have been proper were a receiver erroneously acting under express orders of the court. On the other hand, and as countervailing any inference which might arise from the language of the court in any or all of the authorities cited by appellant, respondent has directed attention to the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 396, 24 P. 121, 139 (10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192), where the rights and duties not only of a receiver, but of a stranger to the proceeding as well, are considered. In part, the court spoke as follows:

> "When a receiver holds by a valid appointment containing no directions in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, so long as he acts in pursuance of the orders of the court he cannot ordinarily invade the rights of parties or strangers to the litigation. If he does an injury, he does it by exceeding his authority. In such case the fault is his, and his alone. If he attempts to take property lawfully in the possession of another, and to which he is not entitled, his attempt may be resisted, just as any other trespasser may be resisted, and the person defending his lawful possession is not brought in conflict with the court. If he by any means gains possession of the property claimed by a stranger, the court will either order him to restore it, or if the title is in doubt, permit an action to be brought against him to try the title.

"But when the court has exceeded its jurisdiction in appointing a receiver, or in directing him to take specific property out of the possession of a stranger, the injury that results is directly due to the action of the court; the wrong is in the order of the court, not in the receiver's transgression of the order. In such case it seems clear that the appropriate remedy is in some writ or proceeding which operates upon the court, as such, to restrain its judicial action, and not in the sort of resistance that may be opposed to an ordinary wrongdoer, or in such an action as may be brought against a private person who has committed a trespass. However confident he may be of his right to resist, no prudent man will take the risk of resisting the plain terms of an order of court, and no rule of practice should be laid down which will compel a man in that situation to defend his possession by force in order to avoid the necessity of resorting to an action to recover it. On the contrary, all men should be encouraged to avoid forcible resistance to orders of courts, no matter how plainly in excess of jurisdiction, by firmly upholding and freely administering the remedies provided for the summary correction of such excesses."

The record in the instant case shows that prior to the rendition of judgment in the foreclosure suit the defendant therein assigned to the plaintiff herein all his interest in his claim against the San Dimas Association, and that prior to said assignment the assignee had knowledge of the appointment of the receiver and of all the facts pertinent to the controversy, notwithstanding which he took no appeal, but permitted the judgment to become final; nor did the assignee institute any proceeding in connection with the foreclosure suit to remedy the wrong and the ensuing damage to which he was subjected. His only action in the premises was the commencement of the present litigation. The language of the court in the Havemeyer case is that, "the appropriate remedy is in some writ or proceeding which operates upon the court, as such, to restrain its judicial action, * * *" and may possibly apply not only to the person in possession of the property wrongfully taken by the receiver, but as well to the person claiming to be the lawful owner of such property; at any rate, so far as concerns the person in possession, "however confident he may be of his right to resist" an order of the court, it is his duty to obey; and "no rule of practice should be laid down which will compel a man in that situation to defend his possession by force," or "resist the plain terms of an order of court," especially in view of the fact that the only person having an apparent right to the property in question is unconcerned as to the effect or the consequences of the order.

[2] No authority has been discovered which would indicate that in circumstances such as are here present the duty is thrust upon the person upon whom the demand is made at his own expense and inconvenience to institute appropriate action or proceedings to test the validity of the receiver's order, or to obey it at his peril. If the principle for which appellant contends be correct, no one, will be safe without rigid investigation of the law in complying with any order of court; for example, if money in bank should be levied upon in execution of a judgment, the banker, in order to secure protection from possible civil liability, will be obliged to ascertain the solution of the broad question of whether the court had jurisdiction in the premises, to say nothing of his duty to determine the legality of the various other steps incident to execution. Take another illustration: A receiver for a corporation transacting a considerable volume of business has been appointed by the trial court. Acting under express orders from such court, he demands and collects large sums of money from hundreds of persons owing money to the corporation; likewise under such authority, he commences actions against other persons against whom the corporation has claims—on some of which he recovers judgment, while as to others, judgment is rendered against him. Still other persons, having claims against the corporation, are authorized to sue the receiver thereon, succeeding in some, and failing in others. The receiver finally renders his account, is discharged, and his bond exonerated. Later, it is discovered that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in appointing the receiver and in making the several orders to which reference has been had. Is it the law that each and all of the acts of the receiver are void and must be held for naught? Must the several debtors of the corporation, each of whom has paid his indebtedness, either after demand by the receiver, authorized by the court, or after judgment has regularly been obtained against him, again pay the debt owing by him to the corporation? Is each of the several judgments in the actions brought against the corporation invalid? If the correct answer to each of such queries be "Yes," the human mind will have difficulty in grasping the ultimate effect of such a rule upon the respect which should be accorded courts of justice.

It is clear that if such proposed principle be followed, in every case involving an order to take possession of property supposedly belonging to the defendant, before any person upon whom such order may be served, may safely obey it, he will at least be compelled to determine whether the facts set forth in the complaint state a cause of action, which oftentimes is an exceedingly difficult matter, and frequently involves a question regarding which lawyers, well versed in the law, may differ one from the other. Where no appearance has been made by the defendant, as may occur in a divorce case, and in which matter a receiver may be appointed and an order made on a banking institution to pay money as attorneys' fees or alimony pendente lite, among other things the bank of necessity will be compelled to pass upon the question of whether the defendant has been properly served with process. Then, too, the unsettled and possibly unstable state of the law with reference to the various legal questions involved would have to be taken into consideration. For instance, consider the conditions presented in the instant case: Let it be assumed that the San Dimas Lemon Association was advised that it could obey the order of the court in question only at its peril. Accordingly it investigated the statutes and decisions of the courts of this state with reference to the matter, with the result that it discovered the three authorities heretofore cited herein which indicate that the court had jurisdiction to make the order; also, the other cases to which reference has been had, which point to the opposite conclusion. Which line of cases should the association follow? If the first, and the appellate and the Supreme Court of this state should disagree with the conclusion reached by the association, the result would be a double payment by the association of the amount owing to the mortgagor, to say nothing of costs and attorneys' fees; if the second line of cases were to be followed and the association refuse to obey the order of the trial court, a citation for contempt of court would result, with the probable consequence of a jail commitment (however long) until the order was obeyed. But if it may be assumed that both the appellate and the Supreme Court of this state should decree the legality of the order, the association might still doubt the correctness of the decision; and in view of the possibility of a federal question being involved, the association might wish to secure the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States with reference thereto, which, of course, would involve the necessity of further investigation of the law, especially of the decisions of the last-named court. The confusion and delay which would result from adherence to a rule which would place such burdens on persons situated as was the defendant herein, if not disastrous, would be well-nigh intolerable. An order in effect decreeing the validity of a former order would be subjected to suspicion and criticism for the same reasons as attached to the original order; and so on to the end at least of all things terrestrial. Rather than establish such a rule, the principle should be indulged that courts and their officers are acting lawfully and in the performance of a duty enjoined by law, and that reliance may safely be placed therein by all persons thrown in contact with such institutions of our government.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: YORK, J.

CONREY, P. J. I dissent. I agree with the decision on the first proposition, which is to the effect that the order requiring the receiver to collect from the San Dimas Lemon Association, and ordering that association to pay over to the receiver the money in question, was a void order. I disagree with the second proposition, which runs to the effect that the association, having paid the money to the receiver, may now use the fact of such payment as a defense against the plaintiff's demand in the present action. It may be conceded that if the receiver had been actually seizing physical property and thereby taking it from the custody of the association, the latter would have been justified in submitting to such force, or threatened use of force, and in refraining from any attempt to resist such seizure. That appears to be in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court as stated in Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 397, 24 P. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192.

But I hesitate to accept an extension of the Havemeyer decision so as to cover an instance of voluntary payment of money, where the money so paid over to the receiver belongs or is owing to a third person, and where the order directing the payment of such money is a void order. In Estate of Pusey, 180 Cal. 368, 181 P. 648, the Supreme Court quoted with approval Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342, 348, wherein the court said:

> "A judgment absolutely void may be attacked anywhere, directly or collaterally, whenever it presents itself, either by parties or strangers. It is simply a nullity, and can be neither a basis nor evidence of any right whatever."

A similar question was before this court in Miller v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. App. 1, 217 P. 817. In that case we held that the superior court was without jurisdiction to adjudge the petitioners guilty of contempt by reason of their interference with the enforcement of a void order directing a receiver to take possession of certain property. In Fidelity, etc., Ass'n v. Citizens' T. & S. Bk., 186 Cal. 689, 692, 200 P. 631, 632, the Supreme Court held that a party in possession of property under a claim of right thereto may not be deprived of such property, "except by an order made in a proceeding to which it was a party and in which it had been given an opportunity to be heard." In the present case, the San Dimas Lemon Association was not given any notice or opportunity to be heard before the void order was made. As I construe the pleadings and the findings, the association was not threatened with any actual seizure to be made of cash in its hands. It had collected certain sums of money which it then owed or as agent was under obligation to pay over to George A. Binney. Upon the mere demand of the receiver that in compliance with said order "it pay to him as such receiver all moneys in its hands then owing to said George A. Binney," the association complied with that demand. But since the order was void, since there was no threatened actual seizure, and since the court was without power by contempt proceedings or otherwise to enforce its order, it cannot be said that the payment of the money by the association to the receiver was other than a voluntary act. I do not agree that by such voluntary act the association has been relieved from its obligation to pay the money to Binney or his assignee.

It is my opinion that the judgment should be reversed.

---

81 Cal. App. 204

PACIFIC-SOUTHWEST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. ROSS, Sheriff, et al. (Civ. 5588.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 5, 1927.)

1. Husband and wife ⚷257—Crops raised on land leased by wife alone, with seed and labor furnished by husband, held community property (Civ. Code, § 164).

In action in claim and delivery of crops, evidence held to show that crops raised on land, leased for year by wife alone, with seed and some labor furnished by husband, was community property, even if a rebuttable presumption, is raised by Civ. Code, § 164, that leasehold and produce therefrom were separate property of wife.

2. Husband and wife ⚷267(5)—Crop mortgage, executed by wife alone on community property, held ineffective against sheriff seizing crops under writ issued in suit against husband.

In action in claim and delivery of crops, shown to be community property, crop mortgage, executed to plaintiff by wife alone, was ineffective to enable plaintiff to recover crops from sheriff taking possession under writ of attachment, or execution issued in action by creditor against husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action in claim and delivery by the Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank against James Ross, Sheriff of the County of Santa Barbara, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fred A. Shaeffer, of Santa Maria, for appellant.

A. B. Bigler, of Santa Maria, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. The assignor of the plaintiff herein held a crop mortgage on a quantity of pink beans. This mortgage was executed by Gussie Leal alone, without the signature of her husband, Raul Leal. The defendant, as sheriff, levied upon and took possession of said beans upon a writ of attachment or execution (the record is not clear as to what the writ was), issued in a certain action by the Bank of Italy, a substantial creditor, against Raul Leal, the husband. The sheriff ignored the crop mortgage of plaintiff herein and made no compliance with section 2969, Civil Code. The plaintiff herein, claiming the right of possession under the crop mortgage, brought this action against the sheriff for possession of the beans. The trial court gave judgment for the defendant upon the ground that the beans were community property of the Leals and that, therefore, the crop mortgage executed by the wife alone was ineffective. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The trial proceeded upon the issue of whether the beans were the separate property of the wife or the community property of the spouses.

The evidence, more in detail, follows: Raul A. Leal had for some time farmed the Righetti ranch under a verbal lease from year to year. He had completed his farming operations for the year ending November 1, 1921. He thereafter continued on the ranch as a tenant and cultivated the land for the crop to be planted in the spring of 1922. Leal was indebted to the Union National Bank of San Luis Obispo, the predecessor and assignor of the Bank of Italy, above mentioned, upon a promissory note dated November 21, 1921. In May, 1922, he sought further funds from the bank to carry on his farming operations, but he was refused. He testified that, thereupon, he told the bank officials that he was through; that they could come and get his rig; and that he then turned his horses out to pasture and gave up the ranch. But he continued living on the ranch with his wife, Gussie, as previously. His wife then went to the landowner and procured a written lease from him on May 16, 1922, and four days later, she executed to plaintiff's assignor the crop mortgage upon which the action is based. Thereupon the crop was planted, Mrs. Leal supervising and being assisted with men and horses by her relatives. Raul Leal furnished the bean seed to her without charge. It was a disputed point of evidence as to how much directing and labor was performed by the husband. During the time of planting he was suffering from an injured arm, which partially disabled him. He made the arrangements for sacks and seed. He made a written contract for threshing the beans and even for the sale of the same with his own signature and without his wife's signature, but with her knowledge and consent.

[1, 2] Upon this evidence, and more not recited, the trial court held the produce to be community property of the spouses. We think the decision is well supported by the evidence.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Appellant urges that the one-year lease to Mrs. Leal in her sole name raises a presumption that the leasehold and, therefore, the produce of the same, was separate property, under the provisions of section 164, Civil Code. Respondent argues that the lease does not amount to a conveyance, within the meaning of that section, citing Stafford v. Martinoni, 192 Cal. 724, 221 P. 919. Whether or not the presumption applies to the year lease in this case is a question we need not decide, for it would be, at best, a disputable presumption (Stafford v. Martinoni, supra), and we should still have to hold that the judgment is supported by the evidence, with or without the presumption.

It is ordered, therefore, that the judgment appealed from be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

81 Cal. App. 164

DAVIS v. MONTE et al. (Civ. 3144.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 31, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Error to defendants' prejudice in court's failure to find on material issues raised by pleadings and sustained by evidence is reversible (Code Civ. Proc. § 632).

Error of court to prejudice of defendants in failing to find on certain material issues raised by pleadings and sustained by evidence is reversible, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 632.

2. Chattel mortgages 🔑172(9)—In replevin, issue raised by pleadings as to whether mortgagee and seller of cattle made false representations with intent to deceive buyer and mortgagor held material as respects findings.

In replevin by seller and mortgagee of cattle, issue raised by pleadings as to whether he made false representations to buyer and mortgagor with intent to deceive, which buyer relied on, held material, since fraud may not be alleged generally.

3. Fraud 🔑41—Facts constituting fraud should be alleged with reasonable certainty.

Fraud may not be alleged generally, but ultimate facts constituting it should be specifically alleged with reasonable certainty.

4. Fraud 🔑11(1)—Expression of opinion, if so understood, does not amount to actionable fraud, though false.

Expression of opinion or belief, if so understood and intended, is not representation of fact, and, though false, does not amount to actionable fraud.

5. Fraud 🔑64(1)—Whether representation was understood as expression of opinion is fact question.

Where there is any doubt as to whether representation alleged to constitute fraud was intended and understood as mere expression of opinion, question is one of fact for court or jury.

6. Fraud 🔑11(1)—Statement of opinion, based on alleged facts, is actionable.

Statement of what might otherwise be opinion is statement of fact, and may be basis of actionable fraud, if based on alleged facts.

7. Chattel mortgages 🔑172(9)—In replevin, failure to find as to whether seller mortgagee made representations intending to deceive buyer mortgagor, who relied thereon, held error.

In replevin by seller and mortgagee of cattle, court erred in not making finding as to whether seller made representations, which buyer and mortgagor relied on, with intent to deceive, notwithstanding that he made finding that representations were made as statement of opinion.

8. Sales 🔑52(7)—Evidence held to show that seller of cattle induced buyer to rely on his opinion as to when they would come fresh.

Evidence held sufficient to show that buyer of cattle was by seller's statement as to when they would come fresh induced to rely on seller's special and particular knowledge of them, and relied on seller's opinion as to them.

9. Sales 🔑38(3)—Seller's false statement of opinion may be sufficient ground for relief by rescission.

Under certain circumstances seller's false statement of opinion as to things sold may be sufficient ground for relief by rescission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action of replevin by J. L. Davis against C. Monte and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. B. Stewart, of Brawley, and Charles L. Childers, of El Centro, for appellants.

C. L. Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

BUCK, Justice pro tem. Action in replevin, based upon the provisions of a chattel mortgage given by defendants to plaintiff.

The mortgage in question was given as the sole consideration for the sale by plaintiff to defendants of 18 head of dairy cattle, and covered not only the cattle sold, but also 11 other head owned by the defendants. By way of answer the defendants relied on their cross-complaint, wherein they seek to rescind and set aside the mortgage, so far as it pertains to the 11 head of cattle, upon the ground that the plaintiff procured and brought about the sale through false and fraudulent representations inducing the defendants to purchase the cattle.

The court sat with an advisory jury, as in the case of French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 217 P. 515, and made findings in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants upon the cross-complaint, and entered judgment accordingly in favor of plaintiff. From this judgment defendants appeal.

[1] In substance, the point urged by the defendants is that the court erred to the prejudice of defendants in failing to find upon certain material issues raised by the pleadings and sustained by the evidence. This contention, of course, if sustained, is a valid ground for the reversal of the judgment. Frascona v. L. A. Ry., 48 Cal. App. 135, 191 P. 968. And further, it is not upon the special verdict of the jury, but upon the findings actually made by the court, that the judgment must stand or fall. Holland v. Kelly, 177 Cal. 43, 169 P. 1000; Hunceker v. Lutz, 65 Cal. App. 649, 224 P. 1001; Schooler v. Williamson, 192 Cal. 472, 221 P. 195.

The pleadings in regard to the misrepresentations relied upon, and which it is claimed require responsive findings, are in substance as follows:

"That on or about the 25th day of September, 1921, the defendant C. Monte met the plaintiff, and plaintiff then and there showed to said defendant C. Monte the cows he proposed to sell to defendants; that at that time the plaintiff urged the defendant C. Monte to buy said cows, being certain of the cows described in plaintiff's complaint, telling said defendant that said cows were or had been picked by him, said plaintiff, from a large number of cows which then were or had recently been belonging to him for his own personal ranch or dairy herd, on account of their good quality; that at the same time and place, plaintiff represented to said defendant that he knew when each of the cows so sought to be sold by him to defendants had been bred, and falsely told the defendant C. Monte that each of the cows so sought to be sold by him, 18 in all, with the exception of two cows which he pointed out and one other cow which then had a calf with her, would come fresh within three to six weeks; * * * that each, all, and every of said representations so made by the plaintiff to the defendant C. Monte were false and untrue, and were known to the plaintiff to be false and untrue when so made by him to said defendant, and were made with the purpose and intent to deceive and defraud the defendants and to induce them to purchase said 18 cows from the plaintiff; that said defendant C. Monte believed said representations to be true and relied upon the same, and, so believing and relying upon said representations, agreed to purchase and did purchase said 18 cows from the plaintiff."

And, furthermore:

"That one of the cows so sold by plaintiff to defendants and no more came fresh within six weeks from the time of the consummation of said transaction; that up to the time of the commencement of this action not more than 4 or 5 of said cows so sold by plaintiff to these defendants came fresh."

There was no denial of the allegation as to the failure of the cows to become fresh, but there were specific denials as to the other specific allegations of fraud.

Evidence was taken upon all the foregoing issues, and the following and no other special verdict was returned by the jury in regard to the specifically alleged fraud.

"Q. 1. Did the plaintiff, Davis, in order to induce defendants to purchase the 18 cows of Davis, represent to defendants that such 18 cows had, with a few exceptions, been so bred that they would come fresh within three to six weeks? Answer: Yes.

"Q. 2. Were any statements made by the plaintiff, Davis, to defendant Monte relative to the times when the cows would come fresh, made as statements of fact or of opinion. Answer: Opinion."

Whereupon the court, in its findings of fact and conclusions of law on the foregoing issues of fraud, found as follows:

"The court therefore and in accordance with the said verdict makes and causes to be filed herein its findings of fact and conclusions of law. * * *

"That the plaintiff, Davis, in order to induce defendants to purchase the 18 cows of Davis, represented to defendants that such 18 cows had, with a few exceptions, been so bred that they would become fresh within three to six weeks, but that said representations so made were made as a statement of opinion, and not as a statement of fact, and that the plaintiff committed no fraud in the sale of said cows."

The rule, and the reason therefor, giving litigant the right to have findings upon the material issues raised by the pleadings, has been most clearly and forcibly enunciated by Presiding Justice Finlayson in the case of Frascona v. Los Angeles Ry., supra, as follows:

"Unless findings are waived—and here, as the record shows, they were not—the trial court must give its decision in writing, i. e., it must file written findings of fact. Section 632, Code Civ. Proc. The right to findings is a substantial right, as inviolate, under the statute, as that of trial by jury under the Constitution. Bard v. Kleeb, 1 Wash. 370 (25 P. 467, 27 P. 273). The Code provision requiring written findings of fact is for the benefit of the court and the parties. To the court it gives an opportunity to place upon record, in definite written form, its view of the facts and the law of the case, and to make the case easily reviewable on appeal by exhibiting the exact grounds upon which the judgment rests. To the parties, it furnishes the means, in many instances, of having their cause reviewed without great expense. It also furnishes to the losing party a basis of his motion for a new trial; he is entitled to know the precise facts found by the court before proceeding with his motion for a new trial, in order that he may be able to point out with precision the errors of the court in matters either of fact or law. Bard v. Kleeb, supra; Savings & L. Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 539 (39 P. 922); Polhemus

v. Carpenter, 42 Cal. 385. 'The right to have a material issue presented by the pleadings in a cause determined by a finding of the court is one important to the parties to a suit, and the failure to make such a finding results in prejudicial error entitling the complaining suitor to reversal.' Huntington v. Vavra, 36 Cal. App. 355 (172 P. 168). See, also, Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 704 (154 P. 835).

"While it is not necessary that the findings should follow the precise language of the pleadings, it is essential that they be so drawn that the truth or falsity of every material allegation can be demonstrated therefrom. The purpose of findings 'is to answer the questions put by the pleadings.' Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 93 (44 P. 332). The province of the court is to determine, not to raise, issues."

In connection with the foregoing it must be shown, of course, that the failure on the part of the court to find upon the issue in question resulted in prejudice to the rights of the appellant. Consequently, the cases hold that it must appear that the issue failed to be found upon was a material issue, and that there was evidence in the record which would warrant a finding thereon in favor of the appellant. And it must also appear that the findings would be insufficient to support the judgment if, in addition to the findings actually made, the court had also found favorably to appellants' contentions upon the issues in question. Or, as stated in other words, in the case of Sharp v. Pitman, 166 Cal. 501, 505, 137 P. 234, 236:

> "If the findings which are made are of such a character as to dispose of issues which are sufficient to uphold the judgment, it is not a mistrial or against law to fail or omit to make findings upon other issues, which if made, would not invalidate the judgment." Klokke v. Escailler, 124 Cal. 297, 56 P. 1113; Buell v. Brown, 131 Cal. 158, 63 P. 167; Sharp v. Pitman, 166 Cal. 501, 137 P. 234; Colver v. Scarborough Co., 238 P. (Cal. App.) 1104, at page 1110; Lincoln v. Hoggard, 66 Cal. App. 196, 225 P. 770.

[2, 3] In the case at bar, the issues raised by the pleadings, and upon which there are no findings, are based upon the allegations of the cross-complaint that the statements, both of fact and opinion, made by plaintiff, were made with intent to deceive, and as a matter of fact were relied upon by the defendants and did induce them to make the purchase which was the consideration for the chattel mortgage. One of these representations particularly alleged to have been relied upon by defendants was the representation that plaintiff knew when each of the cows was bred. Fraud may not be alleged generally, but the ultimate facts constituting fraud should be specifically alleged with reasonable certainty. Kent v. Snyder, 30 Cal. 667, 674; 12 Cal. Jur. pp. 800 to 816. Consequently, the finding omitted would have been upon a material issue.

The next question which arises is whether or not the finding actually made in regard to the expression of opinion would be sufficient to sustain the judgment, even though a finding favorable to defendants' contention were made on the issues referred to above touching plaintiff's statement that he knew when the cows were bred and that they would come fresh in from three to six weeks, and were made with intent to deceive, and did deceive and induce defendants to make a purchase.

[4, 5] As stated in the case of French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, at page 585, 217 P. 515, 517, quoting from Stockton v. Hind, 51 Cal. App. 131, 196 P. 122:

> "It is conceded that the general rule is that an expression of opinion or belief, if nothing more, if so understood and intended, is not a representation of fact, and although false, does not amount to actionable fraud. Ordinarily a person has no right to rely upon such statements, and if he does so rely, he cannot treat them as fraudulent, either for the purpose of maintaining an action in damages for deceit, or for the purpose of rescinding the contract. Where there is any doubt as to whether or not a representation was intended and understood as a mere expression of opinion or a statement of fact, the question is one not of law but of fact for the court or jury."

[6] From the above it will be noted that the court held that the party to whom the alleged expression of opinion was made must have understood it to have been a mere opinion, and, so understanding it, should not be permitted to charge the other party with intent to deceive or to claim that he himself was deceived. In the case at bar, however, it will be noted that the court goes no further than to find that the "said representations so made were made as the statement of opinion." But the court does not find that they were received or understood by the defendants as a statement of opinion. Furthermore, if the court had found in favor of defendants' allegation that the plaintiff stated as a fact "that he knew when each of said cows was bred" when he stated they would come fresh in three to six weeks, and had further found in response to plaintiff's allegation that such statements were believed by defendants and relied upon by them, and were made by plaintiff to deceive defendants, and did deceive them, then it is evident the case would be brought within the rule stated in the case of French v. Freeman, supra, as follows:

> "And it is well established that a statement of what might otherwise be an opinion, if based on alleged facts, is a statement of fact and not a statement merely of an opinion. Tracy v. Smith, 175 Cal. 161, 165, 165 P. 535; Brandt v. Krogh, 14 Cal. App. 39, 49, 111 P. 275; Winkler v. Jerrue, 20 Cal. App. 555, 560, 129 P. 804."

The same rule is stated more succinctly in the case of Henry v. Continental Bldg. etc., Ass'n, 156 Cal. 667, at page 680, 105 P. 960, 965, as follows:

> "The rule that mere expressions of opinion cannot constitute actionable fraud is, no doubt, subject to some qualification. A party inducing another to contract in reliance upon estimates or opinions professedly based upon alleged facts known to the party stating them to be nonexistent will not be permitted to escape responsibility by the plea that he was merely declaring his opinion. A statement that the history of the defendant showed that its stock would mature in seven years is clearly a statement of fact, and, if falsely made and relied on, would furnish ground for relief to the party misled by it."

Also, the same rule as laid down in Haserot v. Keller, 67 Cal. App. 659, at page 670, 228 P. 383, 388, would seem to preclude a general finding for plaintiff in this case, if the court had made a finding favorable to defendants' allegation that the plaintiff, with intent to defraud, represented to defendant that he (plaintiff) knew when each of the cows had been bred when he stated that they would come fresh in six weeks, and that the defendants believed and relied upon said statements and were thereby induced to make the purchase. The court states the rule as follows:

> "When one of the parties possesses, or assumes to possess, superior knowledge or special information regarding the subject-matter of the representation, and the other party is so situated that he may reasonably rely upon such supposed superior knowledge or special information, a representation made by the party possessing or assuming to possess such knowledge or information, though it might be regarded as but the expression of an opinion if made by any other person is not excused if it be false."

The rule stated in the foregoing case is also applied in the recent case of J. B. Colt Co. v. Freitas, Third District (Cal.) Court of Appeal, 244 P. 916, at page 919. See, also, Palladine v. Imperial Valley F. L. Ass'n, 65 Cal. App. 727, at page 737, 225 P. 291, 295, where it is held that an opinion may be actionable "if the party expressing the opinion possesses superior knowledge, such as would reasonably justify the conclusion that his opinion carries with it the implied assertion that he knows the facts which justify it, * * * if he knows that he does not honestly entertain the opinion because it is contrary to the facts." In the case at bar the charge is that there was not merely an implied but an express assertion on the part of the plaintiff that he knew the basic and potent fact as to when the cows were actually bred.

In the recent case of Beckley v. Archer, 241 P. 422, also from the same Court of Appeal, it was held that a representation by a seller of dairy cows to a purchaser that all the cows were with calf and would calve within six weeks was a statement such that the jury were justified in finding was merely a statement of opinion. That was a case where fraud was relied upon as a tort resulting in damages giving rise to a suit at law where the jury returned a general verdict against the party relying upon the alleged fraud, and on appeal the verdict was upheld for the reason that, unlike, as alleged in the case at bar, there was nothing in the testimony of either party which shows "or which may reasonably be said to tend to show, that his opinion was expressed with a design to deceive the defendants as to the matter." And, furthermore, in order to sustain the verdict of the jury, the court indicated that there was evidence which would jusify a finding that they did not rely upon the statement of the seller, but relied "rather than upon their own judgment regarding that matter and the jury, it may be assumed, so viewed that phase of the case." And the court accordingly upheld the verdict of the jury upon the ground that "it is elementary that expressions of opinion honestly made are not actionable. Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 77, 141 P. 926. * * *"

In the case at bar it will be noted that material allegations were made which, if found in favor of the defendants herein, would have led to the conclusion that the "expressions of opinion" herein were made not "honestly," but dishonestly.

The representation that the cows would calve in from three to six weeks was manifestly an opinion, just as the bare statement that they had been so bred as to produce that result would be an opinion. But the question put in issue by the pleadings was not merely whether the statement was an opinion, but whether or not it was made to deceive and did deceive; and, furthermore, that question was presented in accordance with law, not only by general allegations to the foregoing effect, but also by special averment that plaintiff, by his own false statement, to wit, that he knew when the cows were bred, assumed to possess special information, which also led the defendant to believe that he, the plaintiff, did, as a matter of fact, possess special and important information regarding the subject-matter of the representation.

[7] It would therefore appear that all the pleadings in the case brought the case within the rules touching representations of opinion laid down in the foregoing authorities. In accordance with the rule requiring findings, the court should have found to the effect that the plaintiff either did or did not state that he knew when the cows were bred, and also have found whether or not the plaintiff intended to deceive the defendant, and whether the defendant was or was not misled and deceived to his injury.

[8] The next question that necessarily arises is whether or not there was evidence in the record which, if believed by the court, could have been the basis of a finding of fact that the plaintiff did represent that he knew when all the cows had been bred, and that this statement, and the statement that the cows would come fresh in three to six weeks, were made with intent to deceive, and were relied upon by defendants and induced them to make the purchase. The evidence, without conflict, shows that both parties understood that defendants were in a situation where it was important and necessary to them that they should be able to obtain milk as early as possible from the cows. There is also the evidence of two witnesses to the effect that when the plaintiff told defendant that the cows would come fresh within three to six weeks, he showed the defendant a book which he had in his hand, which showed when the cows were actually bred to the bull, thereby implying that as the result of that breeding so indicated in the book, they would "come fresh in from three to six weeks," all of which was relied upon and believed by the defendant, whose testimony was as follows:

> "And I said, 'When do you breed cows?' and he says—he pulled a little book just about like this (indicating), and he had the breed in there of every cow. He had the whole 18 cows and he had a different date.
>
> "Q. Did he show you that book? A. He show me that book, and he had it right in his hand—a little book.
>
> "Q. Did you see certain names of cows and numbers of cows in the book? A. Some have cow 4, some have cow different numbers, you know, and one cow fresh certain time, and he said the last cows, the 18 cows, was going to come fresh from three to six weeks; the last one wouldn't stay but six weeks, and if she didn't come fresh at that time he make good. That is the proposition he told me the first time."

And the witness Armstrong likewise testified that the plaintiff stated, in answer to defendant's question, "When do these cows come fresh?" that, "Those cows will come fresh from three to six weeks." And also that he recalled seeing the plaintiff take a book out of his pocket and show Monte a record that he had in regard to these cows. The witness said:

> "He took a book out of his pocket and says, 'Now Monte, I have a record of these cows. I have the breed of them.' This one comes fresh such and such a time, and this one comes fresh such and such a time, and he went down the line about the whole 18 cows, when they would come fresh I didn't see what was in the book. I didn't look at the book."

This testimony was in substance denied by the plaintiff. But, if believed by the court, it would warrant a finding of fact to the effect that defendant was by the statement of plaintiff induced to rely upon plaintiff's special and particular knowledge as to the particular and potent fact of the actual breeding of the cows at a particular time, and at such a particular time as would warrant the defendants in believing and relying upon the opinion expressed by plaintiff that they would come fresh within from three to six weeks. And, further, as regards the testimony touching the falsity of the foregoing statements, if they were made, plaintiff himself is the best witness when he testified as follows:

> "Q. Mr. Davis, did you know at all when these cows would become fresh, the exact dates? A. No, sir; I could not tell.
>
> "Q. Did you have any means of knowing? A. Not a bit in the world except from the appearance of the cows.
>
> "Q. You knew no more about it than Mr. Monte did? A. Not a bit.
>
> "Q. You were on equal terms with him; is that right? A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. So far as the cows coming fresh was concerned, you had no better knowledge than he did? A. Not a bit, except I knew the males had been running with the females, because I had seen the cattle at different times and knew they were kept with them.
>
> "Q. You didn't have charge of these cattle personally before you sold them to Monte? A. No."

As regards all of the foregoing testimony on behalf of the defendants, if it was disbelieved by the court, as it might very well have been, a finding to the contrary should have been made. But, there being no such finding, it becomes apparent that the defendants were deprived of "a substantial right as inviolate under the statute as trial by jury under the Constitution."

[9] It would also seem that in order to sustain this judgment we would be obliged to ignore an established and wholesome principle of equity that under certain circumstances the false statement of an opinion may be a sufficient ground for relief by rescission.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

81 Cal. App. 142

HENRY v. LINGSWEILER. (Civ. 3132, 3133.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 29, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑123—Order granting a nonsuit held appealable.

Order granting a nonsuit, being in legal effect a judgment of nonsuit, is appealable.

2. Appeal and error 🔑15—Appeal from formal judgment of nonsuit is superfluous, where appeal is taken from order granting nonsuit (Code Civ. Proc. § 581).

Appeal from formal judgment of nonsuit, entered upon order granting nonsuit, was unnecessary and superfluous, where an appeal was taken from the order granting the nonsuit, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581.

3. Trial 🔑165—Motion for nonsuit presents question of law for court.

Motion for nonsuit presents a question of law for the court; being tantamount to a demurrer to the evidence or an objection that the proved material facts, admitting them to be true, do not in legal effect operate in favor of plaintiff.

4. Trial 🔑165—On motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case, evidence must be accorded full probative force, even if erroneously admitted.

The evidence on motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case must be taken most strongly against the defendant, and must be accorded the benefit of its full probative force, regardless of whether erroneously admitted.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑706(6)—Negligence of driver of automobile injuring pedestrian crossing street held for jury (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, §§ 12, 20 [a]).

In pedestrian's action for injury sustained when struck by defendant's automobile while crossing street near intersection, in which there was evidence that driver of defendant's car was driving at an excessive rate of speed, in violation of Motor Vehicle Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 406), § 20(a), without warning pedestrian of approach of car, in violation of section 12, the question of driver's negligence was one for the jury.

6. Master and servant 🔑332(1)—Whether daughter driving automobile was acting as owner's agent held for jury.

In action for injuries sustained when struck by defendant's automobile, driven by his stepdaughter, evidence held sufficient, on motion for nonsuit, to require submission to jury of question whether stepdaughter, in driving the car at the time of the accident, was acting as defendant's agent.

7. Trial 🔑165—Court can consider evidence to overcome inference of agency of driver for owner of automobile on motion for new trial but not on motion for nonsuit.

In action for injuries sustained when struck by defendant's automobile, driven by person other than defendant, it is within the legal province and discretion of the trial court, on motion for new trial, to say whether defendant has presented evidence sufficient to overcome the inference of agency, raised by plaintiff's proof of ownership of automobile by defendant and operation by another with knowledge and consent of owner, but, on motion for nonsuit, any proof received tending to overcome such inference is to be disregarded.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑706(7)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian injured by automobile held for jury.

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing street near intersection, question of pedestrian's contributory negligence held for jury.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑705(10)—Pedestrian is required to exercise degree of care required by traffic conditions of thoroughfare.

Pedestrian crossing boulevard was required to exercise that degree of care which the usual traffic conditions of the thoroughfare required.

10. Municipal corporations 🔑705(10)—Pedestrian crossing street near intersection could assume no vehicle would approach from left beyond medial line of intersecting street.

Pedestrian crossing street near intersection had the right to assume that no vehicle would approach him from the left beyond the medial line of the intersecting street.

11. Municipal corporations 🔑706(2)—General allegation of reckless driving held to support proof brakes of automobile were defective (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 14).

Defective condition of brakes of automobile in violation of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 406) § 14, could be proved under allegation that automobile "was being operated in a reckless, negligent, and careless manner, and in violation of the laws of the state of California."

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by E. G. Henry against F. I. Lingsweiler. From an order granting a nonsuit and from a formal judgment of nonsuit, the plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes and Ben S. Beery, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. T. Morrow and A. R. T. Truex, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. [1, 2] There are two appeals upon the same record, viz.: The one from an order granting a nonsuit; and the other from a formal judgment of nonsuit. The appeal from the original order granting the nonsuit was proper and sufficient to authorize a review of the action of the court in the making of said order. In fact the "order" granting the nonsuit amounted in legal effect to a judgment of nonsuit, since it necessarily involved a final and definitive disposition of the case, and such a judgment is, therefore, one from which an appeal may be taken. The appeal secondly taken, viz. from the "formal judgment" of nonsuit, which means a formal judgment subsequently prepared and entered upon the "order" granting the nonsuit, was wholly unnecessary and, indeed, superfluous. Code Civ. Proc. § 581; Brown v. Sterling Furniture Co., 175 Cal. 563, 166 P. 322. However, we will dispose of both appeals as though both were material and requisite to the decision of the case as it appears before us.

The action was by plaintiff against the defendant, for damages for personal injuries suffered by the former by reason of having been struck by the automobile of the latter through the alleged negligent driving of said automobile.

The accident in which plaintiff was injured occurred on one of the highways of the county of Los Angeles, on the 17th day of October, 1922, near the noon hour of that day. The complaint alleges that plaintiff was at the time walking over and across Santa Monica boulevard, near its intersection with Formosa avenue (about 50 feet from the west side of Formosa avenue), in said county, and "was proceeding in a northerly direction, and was beyond the center of said Santa Monica boulevard, to wit, on the second (street) car tracks"; that, as plaintiff was so proceeding an automobile owned by defendant was traveling over and along Santa Monica boulevard in an easterly direction, said automobile being then "so unskillfully, carelessly, recklessly, and negligently managed and operated that it was driven wantonly and willfully into and against plaintiff" while the latter was, as above indicated, at a point on Santa Monica boulevard; that, by reason of so being "run into and against" him, plaintiff was "violently thrown to the ground with great force and violence underneath its (said automobile's) wheels, which ran over his head and body, thereby causing the injuries hereinafter complained of." It is alleged that said automobile, while owned by defendant, was at the time of the accident "being driven by his agent and servant in charge and control thereof, who was then and there acting within the course and scope of her employment, to wit, the driving and operating of said automobile in and about and for the benefit of the business of the defendant." Further it is alleged that, immediately prior to the time of its collision with plaintiff, said automobile was being operated and driven at a rate of about 30 miles per hour, "when the driver's view of the road was obstructed," and that said car was not "slowed down" nor any attempt made to diminish the speed at which it was then being driven as it approached the plaintiff; that no signal or warning was at said time given plaintiff of its approach; that said car, at said time, was not "being operated as near the right-hand curb of Santa Monica boulevard as possible, but, on the contrary, was being driven over and along the left-hand side of said boulevard." The complaint then describes with some particularity the nature of the several injuries thus inflicted upon the body of plaintiff, alleging further that the latter was, by reason of said injuries confined for a long period of time in a hospital undergoing treatment therefor, and that he "has been informed and believes" that the injuries thereby sustained to his head, thighs, and knees will be permanent. The prayer is for damages in the sum of $5,500.

The answer specifically denies the averments of the complaint, states facts negativing the claim that the driver of the machine was, at the time of the accident, operating and driving the car as the agent of defendant, and pleads the defense of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff as the efficient or proximate cause of the personal injuries inflicted upon the last-named because of the mishap.

Plaintiff's case, so far as the proofs were concerned, being closed, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, the motion being based upon three grounds, to wit: (1) That, while the defendant's ownership of the car was admitted, the evidence as produced by plaintiff failed to show that the party driving or operating the machine at the time the accident happened, was, as such driver or operator, the agent of defendant, but that she was then thus using the car for her own purposes; (2) that the evidence wholly failed to show that the injuries received by plaintiff were directly or proximately caused by the negligence of said driver; (3) that, to the contrary, the evidence disclosed that the injuries complained of were proximately caused by plaintiff's own negligence—that is to say, that the accident and resulting damage to plaintiff's person was directly due to contributory negligence on his part.

The court below, in disposing of the motion, based its order on the grounds that the evidence failed to show that the driver of the car was, at the time of driving it and at the time the accident occurred, acting as the agent of defendant, and that the evidence showed that the plaintiff's own negligence proximately contributed to or caused the damage. As to the alleged negligence of the driver of the car, the court in effect stated that, upon that question, the testimony was such as to make the case one for the jury, and that but for the other grounds of the motion and upon which the order granting the same was founded, it would probably feel compelled to deny the motion.

Santa Monica boulevard, on which the accident occurred, is a street in the county of Los Angeles running east and west. In the center thereof is a double street car track, one for the east-bound cars and one for the west-bound cars. Said boulevard is approximately 60 feet in width between the curbs, and the distance from the south curb to the south rail of the east-bound car track is approximately 21 feet 3 inches. The distance between the rails of both the east-bound and west-bound car tracks is 4 feet 9 inches. The distance between the east-bound and west-bound car tracks is approximately 8½ feet, and the distance from the north rail of the west-bound car track to the north curb is approximately 21 feet 3 inches.

The driver of the car that struck plaintiff was a Miss Ethel Buser, the stepdaughter of the defendant. It was admitted that the latter was the owner of the car.

It appears that the plaintiff, on the 17th day of October, 1922, was in the employ of a concern known as the King Vidor Studio, at 7250 Santa Monica boulevard, in the county of Los Angeles; that at or near the noon hour of that day one W. L. Harmon, also employed by said concern, and one L. E. Roberts, were about to start in the latter's automobile to lunch; that plaintiff, also desiring to go to lunch, asked Roberts and Harmon and was given by them permission to ride with them to a restaurant known as Nick's Cafe, located on Santa Monica boulevard, about 80 feet east of Formosa street; that plaintiff took a seat in the rear of the automobile, and that, on leaving the studio grounds, Roberts, who was driving, turned east on Santa Monica boulevard and continued so to travel until he reached the point on said boulevard at which the café named was located, when the plaintiff stated, referring to the café, "This is the place where I eat." He testified:

> "I then got out on the running board, and of course, after getting out, I looked back (to the west) to see if there were any cars approaching which were near enough to be dangerous. I noticed that there were not. I stepped off the running board and threw up my hands and said that I was all right. At the time I got off the running board, the car in which we were driving was almost at a standstill, and was directly north and opposite a car parked on the south side of Santa Monica boulevard, opposite Nick's Café. Our car could not get to the curb at that point because this car was parked next to the curb. After getting off the running board, I started walking across the street to the restaurant and walked to and passed the center of the street; that is, past the center of the space between the east-bound and west-bound car tracks. After crossing the center of that space, I partially turned, considering that I was safe from automobiles coming from the west, and watched the other automobiles coming from the east and going west. How far I went after that I could not tell, as all I was conscious of was a shock and a fright, and I did not know anything more until I became conscious in the hospital 8½ hours later."

On cross-examination, plaintiff stated that the reason he threw his hands "up in the air" as he alighted from the running board of Roberts' machine was because "they (Roberts and Harmon) would take notice and understand that he was all right and clear of the (their) machine." He also stated, on cross-examination, that when he alighted he was not looking in the direction the Roberts machine was going (towards the east), but was "looking back" or "toward the west." Asked by defendant's counsel whether, as he threw his hands up on leaving the Roberts automobile, either Roberts or Harmon cautioned him to "watch out, or look out," plaintiff testified that he was under the impression that one of the parties named had thus warned him, but that the warning was given before he alighted from the car; that, "before I got off (the Roberts car), I looked back west and kept my eyes turned that way, judging the distance of the cars in back, so that I would be in no immediate danger. I walked into the street, and when I got across the center, I partially turned to look toward the east for the cars going that way."

W. L. Harmon, above mentioned as one of the parties in the Roberts car as it was taking plaintiff to the café, testified:

> "As we approached and were approximately 30 feet from the café, which is known as Nick's Café, we were going about 12 or 15 miles an hour. Mr. Henry said, 'Here is where I get out,' or 'Here is where I eat,' or something to that effect, and in doing so he alighted. Mr. Henry got out on the running board of the car, and I told him to be careful. As we passed a car parked by the south curb of Santa Monica boulevard, opposite the café, and had practically stopped, Mr. Henry alighted facing the restaurant. Mr. Henry gave a wave of his hand practically at the same time as he left the machine and stepped on the ground. He started walking across the street at a medium speed, and had gotten practically to the center of the street when an automobile passed between Mr. Henry and us, and soon thereafter an Oldsmobile coupé came along, riding the center of the car tracks, going east. By that time Mr. Henry was on the north side of the street, north of the center a step or two. The Oldsmobile coupé struck Mr. Henry with the right front fender and right front wheel, both wheels passing over his body. I immediately got out of our car and went into the café to get a towel. * * * Mr. Henry was lying on the north side of the center of Santa Monica boulevard."

On cross-examination, Harmon testified:

> "I actually saw the car strike Mr. Henry, and at the time the car struck Mr. Henry he was walking toward the restaurant. He was not standing still. I saw Mr. Henry from the time he left the machine until the machine which passed between him and us, which was going, I should estimate, around 20 miles an hour, obscured my vision. I did not see the Oldsmobile coupé before Mr. Henry had alighted from our machine, but did see it after he had alighted and just before he was struck. I saw the Oldsmobile coupé when Miss Buser, the driver, turned out of her path on the right-hand side of the street and into the center of the street to pass the other car which went between Mr. Henry and ourselves. Mr. Henry had plenty of time to pass in front of the car which later went between him and ourselves and to walk to the north of the center of the road before he was struck. Mr. Henry was walking at a medium speed, and was neither walking fast nor slow. After this car passed between Mr. Henry and ourselves, I saw the Oldsmobile coupé for the first time, and it was then running in the west-bound car track in position to hit Mr. Henry. Its left wheels were in the center of the west-bound car track. The car turned suddenly to the right, just before it struck Mr. Henry, turning right into him. After Mr. Henry left the car, he was looking to the left—that is, to the west—sufficient for protection to himself. I cannot say which way he was looking at the exact time he was struck."

Mrs. Helen Schuyler, sister of Miss Ethel Buser, who was at the time of the collision operating the car that struck plaintiff, was in said car with her sister when the accident happened. Mrs. Schuyler testified:

"On or about the 17th day of October, 1922, about noon, I was driving in the Oldsmobile coupé with my sister. The Oldsmobile coupé was owned by my father, and was being driven from my father's home on Ogden drive toward the city. My sister Ethel Buser was driving the car. I first saw Mr. Henry about two minutes before the car struck him. We turned around one car to get past, and were rather in a hurry, and we were right on him before we realized it. I have driven a car for many years, and would judge that we were driving between 25 and 28 miles an hour. When Mr. Henry was struck, he was about in the middle of the street between the two car tracks. No warning was given, and I could not say whether or not the brakes were applied before Mr. Henry was struck. We had turned out to pass a car, and that brought us to the center of the street. We were just passing the car when the accident happened. We struck Mr. Henry while he was between the car tracks, and, as I remember it, we had turned to the extreme left-hand side of the track, and then turned in to the right. I first saw Mr. Henry when he was getting off the running board. I saw him all the time after he got off the running board, perhaps 15 feet away from me at that time, until he was struck. There was a car parked at the curb, and north of that was the car that Mr. Henry got off, and north of that was the car which came between us and the car which Mr. Henry got off, and we drove around all three cars and ran over Mr. Henry. No signal was given before we went to pass the car which was driving ahead of us.

"Q. By Mr. Hughes: Where were you going, or bound for, at the time of this injury? A. We had some shopping to do, and were going down to pay the telephone bill.

"The Court: The telephone bill? A. The bill my father had given my sister to pay—my mother had given it to her to pay it.

"Mr. Morrow: We move to strike out the testimony unless it is shown that it is in the knowledge of the witness.

"The Court: Did you see your mother give her the bill? A. Yes; I did.

"The Court: Motion denied.

"Q. By Mr. Hughes: Now, were you going any other place—bound any other place, rather? A. We were going to do some shopping for my mother, and also going down town to see an attorney on some business."

On cross-examination, Mrs. Schuyler testified:

"At a point 100 or 150 feet from the scene of the accident, my sister was driving on the right-hand side of Santa Monica boulevard between the east-bound tracks. I mean by that that the left wheels of our car were between the rails of the east-bound car track. Her right wheels would be some distance over to the right of the south rail. The car that we passed at the time the injury occurred had passed us previous to the accident, going at a speed of about 30 miles per hour. I don't know how far from the scene of the injury the car which we were passing when the injury occurred, first passed us. I saw Mr. Henry jump off the automobile, but did not see him throw either arm up. Mr. Henry was walking at a medium speed. I do not remember whether or not he looked in our direction. I did not call my sister's attention to the fact that this man was jumping off that car. Mr. Henry passed in front of the machine ahead of us, but I do not know how far in front of it. I think he went in front of the machine and just had time to get by. Then we hit him soon after he got by. When he started to walk in front of that other machine our machine had started to pass up that machine. He stepped right out from in front of that machine right in the pathway of our machine. I judge he was the length of our machine in front of us when he stepped in front of our machine—or about 10 feet. When we passed the other car, I should judge it was going at about 30 miles an hour, and we turned around to our left. We were going to speed up, as we were in a hurry, and we went around this car to go past it, and the first thing I knew, Mr. Henry was right under the car. As we started to pull over to the left to go around them, I said I was in a hurry, and my sister put on a little more speed. * * * I should judge the car which we passed was not quite in the middle of the track, and when we went around that car, we went way over on the other track—that is, on the west-bound track—to the north of the center of Santa Monica boulevard. We went around rather quickly to pass the other car, and Mr. Henry was right about the middle of the track, and perhaps over a bit, and we ran over him."

Miss Ethel Buser, driver of the car, testified that the automobile was owned by her stepfather; that some time prior to the date of the accident her father, intending to depart for some other place, gave her possession of the car and the key thereto; that her father was not in Los Angeles county on the day of the accident. She stated that she was the only member of the family that drove the automobile, and that when her father delivered to her the possession of the car he said to her that during his absence she should drive her mother about and do any other service in connection with the household affairs; that they were having "a lot of trouble with the telephone, and my mother told me to go in that day (the day of the accident) and report to Mr. Battery of the telephone company that our phone had been out of service for a number of days. And she (referring to her mother) gave the bill to pay and told me to pay the telephone bill, and also a sample of material for a blue dress she was making; and I was to get that that day." The telephone bill, she stated, was her father's bill, and the telephone was at their home, 1409 Ogden drive.

"Q. Well, then, where were you bound at the time of the accident? A. Down to the telephone company. That was my first mission.

"Q. What other missions were you bound upon, if any? A. I had a sample of blue material. My mother was making a gown, and I was to take the material back to her.

"Q. Before your father went away, had that car been used? A. By whom?

"Q. I am asking the question. Had it been in use? A. My father always drove it.

"Q. For what purpose was the car in use before your father went away? A. He always drove it for his own pleasure and for his business. I had never driven the car in my life for my own pleasure.

"Q. State whether or not you ever drove the car before your father went away. A. Yes; I had down to Gardner Junction to do the marketing.

"Q. From whom did you receive directions to drive the car? A. My father."

The above statement comprehends the salient facts brought out by the testimony presented by the plaintiff in support of his complaint. The sole question submitted for decision is, of course, whether the court below was legally authorized upon that testimony to take the case from the jury.

[3, 4] The rules governing the decision of a motion for a nonsuit are well settled and equally well understood. They may, however, with propriety briefly be restated here. "A motion for a nonsuit," says the court in Bush v. Wood, 8 Cal. App. 650, 97 P. 710, "presents a question of law for determination by the court. The motion is tantamount to a demurrer to the evidence, or an objection that, admitting all the proved material facts to be true, said facts do not in legal effect operate in favor of the plaintiff, or, in other words, do not entitle him to the relief asked for by him." And the evidence, on a motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case, must be accorded the benefit of its full probative force, and this is true whether the evidence has been erroneously admitted or not. In re Daly, 15 Cal. App. 329, 331, 114 P. 787. The evidence, on such a motion, must be taken most strongly against the defendant. Goldstone v. Merchants' Ice Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 P. 776.

"Every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the contestants. Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if either of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the contestants. All the evidence in favor of the contestants must be taken as true, and if contradictory evidence has been given it must be disregarded. If there is any substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of the contestants all the facts necessary to make out their case, they are entitled to have the case go to the jury for a verdict on the merits." Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 84 P. 252.

See, also, Estate of Welch, 6 Cal. App. 45, 91 P. 336.

[5] Tested by the foregoing principles, it is clear, from an examination of the testimony herein, that the judgment of nonsuit from which this appeal is prosecuted cannot be upheld. There can be no question that there is evidence which shows that at the time she drove her car into and against the plaintiff, thereby inflicting the injuries upon the latter of which he here complains, Miss Buser was, in driving the car, guilty of gross carelessness. The testimony of her companion riding with her at the time (her own sister) clearly — indeed, unquestionably — supports this statement. She testified, as seen, that she said to her sister (the driver of the car) that she was in a hurry "and my sister put on a little more speed"; that thereupon Miss Buser speeded up the car so that it was then being driven approximately at the rate of 30 miles an hour; that, while the car was being driven at that rate of speed, it was turned to the left or towards the north side of the boulevard, to "go past another car"; and that it was then that their car struck the plaintiff. She further testified, as will be noted, that her sister gave no warning signal of the approach of her car. Thus driving her car, and without sounding any warning, or giving any signal of its approach, on a much used thoroughfare by both motor vehicles and pedestrians, as the evidence indicates was the traffic situation of Santa Monica boulevard in the block in which the accident occurred, constituted, on the part of the driver, not only intrinsic negligence, but negligence per se, or as a matter of law, since the act of commission and the act of omission mentioned were in violation of the express mandates of the statute. See section 20a of the Motor Vehicle Act, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 406) regulating the rate of speed over highways and the degree of care required in the operation of motor vehicles with respect to the right of pedestrians, and section 12 of same act, requiring motor vehicles to be equipped with sufficient warning apparatus, the same to be used for the purpose of giving warning to pedestrians, etc., of the approach of such vehicles. But the trial court itself, having, as shown above, intimated that there was evidence showing or tending to show that the driver of the car was guilty of negligence in its operation at the time the plaintiff was struck, further consideration of that phase of the case may be dispensed with.

[6, 7] This leaves for consideration the principal grounds upon which the court seems to have predicated the order or judgment of nonsuit. The first of these involves the question whether there is evidence showing or sufficiently tending to show that, when the accident occurred, Miss Buser, in the operation of the car, was acting as the agent of and for the defendant. That there was some evidence to that effect there can be no manner of doubt, as must be manifest from the testimony, hereinabove reproduced, of Miss Buser herself. She stated, as will be observed, that she was the only member of the family that could drive an automobile, and that her stepfather (defendant) told her when he left for other parts to drive her mother about and do anything for the household that might be necessary, or words to that effect. She further testified, as will be noted, that when the accident occurred she was on the way to the telephone office to attend to some business for the defendant in connection with the telephone at his (defendant's) home, the phone being out of order, and also to pay his telephone bill. She said that, while she had some other matters to attend to, her "first mission" was to attend to the telephone business for the defendant. There was, it is true, some conflict in the testimony regarding the business that she was first to attend to, Mrs. Schuyler having testified that she was first to take her to her (Mrs. Schuyler's) attorney's office; but, as has been above pointed out, the evidence on a motion for a nonsuit must be construed most strongly in plaintiff's favor, and, so construing the testimony upon the question of agency, it is clear that there was sufficient proof to preclude any right in the court to grant a nonsuit against plaintiff upon the ground that there was not evidence supporting that element of the case as it is presented here. In other words, the testimony of Miss Buser to the effect that her first mission was to attend to the matter of paying her stepfather's telephone bill was sufficient to raise the inference that, when operating the machine at the time of the accident, she was acting as the agent of her stepfather. This "inference would be sufficient prima facie to support the verdict herein in the absence of substantial proof, sufficient to destroy such inference." Ransford v. Ainsworth, 196 Cal. 279, 281, 237 P. 747, 748, and the cases cited therein. In Fahey v. Madden, 56 Cal. App. 593, 206 P. 128, the question of agency in cases of this character was considered by Presiding Justice Finch. Therein it was said:

> "It is conceded that such agency may be inferred from proof of Madden's ownership of the car and Boen's operation thereof with the knowledge and consent of the former."

In that case the appeal was from an order granting defendant Madden's motion for a new trial, the action being for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant; Madden being the owner of the machine, and the defendant Boen the operator of it at the time of the infliction of the injuries complained of. A different situation would, of course, be presented on such an appeal from that presented here. On a motion for a new trial, it is within the legal province and discretion of the trial court to say whether the defendant has presented evidence sufficient to overcome the inference of agency raised by plaintiff's proof of the ownership of the automobile by one party and the operation of the machine by another party with the knowledge and consent of the owner; but, on a motion for a nonsuit, any proof received tending to overcome such inference is to be disregarded. The case of Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 212, 193 P. 255, 14 A. L. R. 1083, contains an interesting discussion of the question as to the circumstances which would impute to the owner of an automobile liability for the negligence of another driving such automobile for the owner upon the theory that the driver was, when the injury occurred, acting as the agent for the owner. That case may be read with profit.

[8-10] The conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff, at the time he received his injuries, was guilty of contributory negligence, or, in other words, that his injuries were proximately caused by his own negligence, is entirely without support. It has often been said that:

> "It is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown." Seller v. Market-Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 271, 72 P. 1006; Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 241, 116 P. 513; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 343, 208 P. 125; Rosenbloom v. Southern Pac. Co., 59 Cal. App. 102, 111, 210 P. 53; Wing v. Western Pac. R. R. Co., 41 Cal. App. 251, 257, 182 P. 969; Carey v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (Cal. App.) 242 P. 97, 99.

As will be noted, from an examination of the testimony of the plaintiff and others, as hereinabove given, the plaintiff, having, as he was crossing the boulevard, looked toward the west and seen that it was safe for him to proceed so far as vehicles traveling that direction were concerned, proceeded until after he had crossed the center of the street or the space between the east-bound and the west-bound car tracks, and thereupon turned his face to the east to see if any car was approaching from that direction; that he saw automobiles proceeding westward from the east, and regulated his movement so as to escape contact with them; that he had proceeded from the point between the east and west bound car tracks but a short distance when he was struck by defendant's machine. Of course, it was the duty of plaintiff to exercise that degree and amount of care in crossing or attempting to cross the boulevard which the usual traffic conditions of that thoroughfare required. And this, there is testimony to show, was what he did. As was said in Towne v. Godeau, 70 Cal. App. 148, 153, 232 P. 1010, 1011, so it is true in the instant case:

> "Having satisfied himself of the absence of danger from that direction [from the west in this case], it was natural for him [plaintiff] to look to the right for east-bound [west-bound here] vehicles. He had the right to assume that no vehicle would approach him from the left beyond the medial line of the intersecting street."

Considering all the testimony, we are satisfied that the question whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing proximately to his injuries was not one of law to be determined by the court, but one which it was the duty of the court to leave to decision by the jury.

[11] The plaintiff objects to a ruling of the court denying him the right to prove, as an element of the negligence of the driver of the automobile which did the damage complained of, that the brakes of said automobile were not in good condition. The witness Harmon, it appears, after the plaintiff was struck down, used the car driven by Miss Buser and which struck plaintiff, in which to take him (plaintiff) to a hospital. Harmon drove the car to the hospital. He stated that he had occasion to use the brakes of the car at that time, and he found them in "very poor condition," explaining that "on one occasion, in turning out from Santa Monica to the north on Gower street to go to the Hollywood Community Hospital," he "practically went over the curb with the front right wheel turning to the left up on the curb." On motion of counsel for the defendant, that testimony was stricken out on the ground it was not within the issues as made by the complaint. The ruling was erroneous. As seen, paragraph V of the complaint alleges that the car that struck plaintiff was, at the time, "being operated in a reckless, negligent, and careless manner, and in violation of the laws of the state of California." Section 14 of the Motor Vehicle Act provides that "all motor vehicles must be provided at all times with adequate brakes kept in good working order." The allegation referred to obviously responds to that provision of the act. It has uniformly been held in this state that in cases of this character proof is admissible under a general allegation of negligence that the operator of the automobile at the time the injury was committed was operating the machine in violation of the statute regulating automotive traffic over the roads and highways of the state. In other words, the cases hold where the negligence is charged in general terms it it sufficient, although the complaint does not state the particular acts constituting the negligence imputed to the defendant in the operation of the automobile.

> "No principle seems to be better settled in this state than that 'negligence may be charged in general terms; that is, what was done being stated, it is sufficient to say it was negligently done, without stating the particular omission which rendered the act negligent.'" Wiley v. Cole, 52 Cal. App. 617, 199 P. 550; Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 99, 27 P. 29; Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663; Bergen v. Tulare County Power Co., 173 Cal. 709, 161 P. 269.

See, also, Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 140 P. 706.

The judgment appealed from in civil No. 3132 and the judgment appealed from in civil No. 3133 are, and each of them is hereby, reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

200 Cal. 410

In re THOMPSON'S ESTATE.

THOMPSON v. WATKINS.

(S. F. 11458.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1927.)

1. Wills 🔑270—Minor legatees, residents of county in which petition for probate of will was filed, must be served with copies of written grounds of opposition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1312).

Minor children who were legatees under will and residents of county in which petition for its probate was filed should have been served with copies of written grounds of opposition to probate of will, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1312.

2. Wills 🔑157—Confidential relationship and opportunity to influence testator are not sufficient to overthrow will, without showing beneficiary's actual participation in making will.

Existence of confidential relationship and opportunity to influence testator by reason of his affection for beneficiary, as evidenced by numerous letters, were not sufficient to overthrow will without showing of actual participation by beneficiary in making of will.

3. Wills 🔑166(4)—Beneficiary's reply of "all right" to testator's statement that he intended to change will was no evidence of her participation in making of will.

Beneficiary's reply of "all right" to testator's statement that he intended to make a change in his will and would mail another will to beneficiary was no evidence of beneficiary's participation in making of will.

4. Wills 🔑82—Unnatural provisions in will made by testator of sound and disposing mind do not destroy its potency as testamentary act.

Unnatural provisions in will do not destroy its potency as testamentary act, if will was freely and voluntarily executed by testator of sound and disposing mind.

5. Wills 🔑166(1)—Jury held not entitled to infer that beneficiary did not narrate all conversation about will and supplement evidence by its imagining.

Jury was not at liberty to decide that beneficiary did not narrate all conversation about will, and that more was said upon that subject, and thus supplement evidence by its own imagining.

6. Wills 🔑297(1)—Testator's statements as to execution of olographic will questioned as forgery held admissible to prove existence of will before testator's death.

Statements of testator to beneficiary and others concerning olographic will questioned as a forgery held admissible to establish existence of document prior to testator's death.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; M. C. Chapman, Judge pro tem.

Proceedings for admission of the will of J. Goodwin Thompson, also known as James Goodwin Thompson, deceased, to probate. Contested by Agenes Boyd Thompson. The superior court refused to admit the will to probate, and Gail Watkins, proponent, appeals. Reversed.

Casper A. Ornbaun and Preston & Duncan, all of San Francisco, and Albert E. Carter, of Oakland, for appellant.

Philip M. Carey, of Oakland, Law T. Freitas, of Stockton, Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco (Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

FINCH, Justice pro tem. The record in this case does not show whether the minor beneficiaries under the will referred to in the following opinion, who were residents of the county in which the proceeding was instituted, were served with a copy of the written grounds of opposition to the probate of the will or that they appeared in the proceeding. The cause was tried by a judge pro tempore, agreed upon in writing by the proponent of the will and the contestant, it not appearing that the said minor beneficiaries were parties to such agreement. An interesting question has arisen as to whether the agreement of only a part of the persons interested in the estate is sufficient to give the judge pro tempore jurisdiction to try the cause. It is not necessary, however, to decide this question, because the judgment must be reversed on other grounds.

Appellant contends that the court was without jurisdiction to render judgment because of failure to serve such minor heirs. This point was not raised in the trial court. If the objection had been made in the trial court, that court doubtless would have made an appropriate order bringing in the minor beneficiaries, and such beneficiaries should be brought in before the retrial of the cause. The following parts of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, written by Mr. Presiding Justice Langdon, are adopted as the opinion of this court:

"This appeal is by the defendant Gail Watkins, who was a beneficiary under a purported will of Dr. J. Goodwin Thompson, which will she produced and offered for probate. The mother of Dr. Thompson, Agnes Boyd Thompson, contested the probating of this will, alleging as grounds for the contest: First, that Dr. Thompson was mentally incompetent at the time of the making of the purported will; second, that it was not entirely written, dated, and signed in the handwriting of the testator; and, third, that if said will were executed by decedent, its execution was procured by fraud and undue influence on the part of Gail Watkins, the proponent of the will.

"During the trial the issue of mental incompetency was withdrawn, testimony directed to that issue was stricken from the record, and the case went to the jury upon the other two grounds of contest.

"* * * The purported will * * * reads as follows:

" 'S. P. Limited No. 2, Sept. 26/23.

" 'This is my last will & testament

" 'My residence and grounds between Webster and Franklin Sts. to go to Gail Watkins also the mortgage on her father's ranch. This is done for services rendered & her close attention to duty. The rest of my property after all debts are paid to go equally to Grace's & Bobs (my sister & bro) children on the youngest becoming of age. If any other proven claimant, the sum of $10.

" 'I hereby appoint Gail Watkins my Guardian. Dr. J. Goodwin Thompson.'

"It is apparent that a judgment declaring the foregoing document not to be the last will and testament of Dr. Thompson and denying the petition to have it admitted to probate affects, adversely, not only the rights of Gail Watkins, but the rights of the nieces and nephews of the testator, the residuary legatees. The petition alleges 'that the names, ages, and residences of the legatees and devisees of said deceased, so far as known to the petitioner, are: Boyd Eubank, aged about 13 years, and Rule Eubank, aged about 11 years, children of Grace Eubank, a sister of said deceased, residing with their mother at 1027 Fifty-Ninth street, Oakland, Cal.,' etc.

[1] "The sister of deceased, Mrs. Grace Eubank, was a witness for the contestant, and stated that she had two minor children and resided in Oakland, Cal. These minor children, being legatees under the will and residents of the county in which the petition for its probate was filed, should have been served with copies of the written grounds of opposition to the probate of the will, under the provisions of section 1312, Code of Civil Procedure. There is no showing in the record of an appointment of a guardian to represent the interests of these minors under the provisions of section 372 and 373, Code of Civil Procedure. * * *

"This case well illustrates the possibilities of injustice being done through the failure to have the interests of minors legally represented. Here the proponent of the will was not a blood relative of the deceased. The will left her only a portion of the estate, the balance to minor nephews and nieces of testator. The aged mother of testator, as his only heir at law, was the contestant. The mother of two of the minors who were legatees under the will and the father of the other two minors, also legatees, sister and brother respectively of decedent, testified for the contestant and assisted to their utmost in overthrowing the will and depriving their minor children of their rights thereunder. These two witnesses were the natural guardians of these children, and their desires and interests seem to have been opposed to the interests of these children. * * *

"As we have indicated, the case went to the jury upon two questions; one was the undue influence exercised upon testator. After the contestant had rested her case, the attorney for the proponent of the will made a motion for a nonsuit as to the issue of undue influence, calling attention to the absence of any evidence in the record that any undue influence had been exerted to cause the making of the will. The testimony was undisputed that proponent had known decedent for several years, during most of which time she assisted him in his office as office nurse. She was engaged to be married to him, according to her testimony, and had drawn no salary for her services in connection with the doctor's business. While he was in New York in 1922 he made and executed a will substantially like the one offered for probate. There is no evidence that Miss Watkins exercised any control over this testamentary act. In September, 1923, Dr. Thompson went to Chicago. Miss Watkins and her sister accompanied him to the train. Both women testified that the doctor stated to Miss Watkins that he was going to mail her another will; that he wished to make a slight change, as he had failed to appoint any one to take charge of his estate in the event of his death. Within a day or two after his departure Miss Watkins received the document in controversy through the mails. It was substantially the same as the prior will, with the addition of the provision for a 'guardian.' It was accompanied by a letter. Both were written upon the stationery of the railroad company. This will was placed by Miss Watkins in the doctor's safe, together with the former will made in New York. During his last illness the doctor asked for the two wills, reread them and tore up the earlier one and handed the other back to Miss Watkins, and she again placed it in the safe.

[2] "True, contestant established the existence of a confidential relationship, and, probably—to present the matter most strongly in her favor—she established the ability on the part of Miss Watkins to influence the doctor by reason of his affection for her, as evidenced by his numerous letters over a period of years. But these elements are not sufficient without a showing of actual participation by the beneficiary in the making of the will. Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 168 P. 561; Estate of Anderson, 185 Cal. 700, at pages 707 et seq., 198 P. 407; Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 541, 217 P. 525; Estate of Wall, 187 Cal. 50, 200 P. 929; Estate of Clark, 170 Cal. 418, 149 P. 828; Estate of Lavinburg, 161 Cal. 536, 119 P. 915.

[3] "The court, in denying the motion for nonsuit, gave as its reason that Miss Watkins was a stranger to the blood of the testator; that she benefited by the will; that a confidential relationship existed between her and the testator, and further said: 'So far as I now recall the testimony, there was some participation by Miss Watkins in the preparation of the will. If I am not mistaken, she discussed with him the question of making a will, on the very day that this will is said to have been executed and, as I recall it, at the Sixteenth Street depot, in this city, when he was about to take a train for Chicago, I believe, or some place in the East. Now that is some evidence of participation. It may be slight.' The evidence referred to has been mentioned heretofore. To be exact, it is as follows: 'He (decedent) said, "I am going to mail another will to you." He said, "I want to make a little change in the other one," and I said, "All right," and he said, "I failed to appoint any one to take charge of my estate in the other will in case of my death."' The sister of Miss Watkins, who was present, gave substantially the same account of this conversation.

[4] "This reply of 'all right' made by Miss Watkins to the doctor's statement that he intended to make a change in his will, we think, was no evidence of participation on her part in the making of the will. The respondent, in response to this attack upon the judgment, argues that the undue influence was shown by circumstantial evidence, instancing what she terms the unnatural provisions of the will; that the testator was not in good health; that a confidential relation existed between the testator and Miss Watkins. While unnatural provisions in a will do not destroy its potency as a testamentary act if the will was freely and voluntarily executed by a testator of sound and disposing mind, it might be pertinent to remark that in this case the provisions of the will do not seem as unnatural as respondent contends. The only heir at law of the doctor was his mother, who was 84 years of age and who had sufficient property for her support during her life. His brothers and sisters were, apparently, of full age and had families of their own. He left the bulk of his estate to their minor children. Gail Watkins had worked with him in accumulating his property during a period of four or five years, and, according to her testimony, had received no salary. His numerous letters to her show his constant thought of her and her welfare. His statements to others indicated his appreciation of what he considered her untiring service in his behalf, and the will itself expresses this idea. According to the testimony of Miss Watkins and of others, she and the doctor were to have been married. In view of all these facts, it does not seem unnatural that the doctor, having no one dependent upon him, should make a modest provision for the support of this woman who was apparently his most confidential and closest associate.

"While it is in evidence that the doctor had some weakness or disease of the heart which caused illness from time to time, there is nothing to indicate that his mind and will were impaired. * * * All the authorities herein cited emphasize the rule that a confidential relationship and opportunity to influence testator are not sufficient to overthrow a will, but that there must be proof of the exercise of that influence to actually overpower the mind and will of the testator at the moment of executing the will.

[5] "Respondent urges that the jury was at liberty to decide that Miss Watkins did not narrate all the conversation about the will and that more was said upon that subject. We know of no rule of law by which a jury may thus supplement the evidence by its own imaginings. Miss Watkins also testified that the doctor had given her a diamond ring on one occasion, and respondent makes much of this, saying that the jury had a right to infer (without any evidence to that effect) 'that she had importuned this gift from him, and if she importuned the diamond ring, * * * she also importuned the execution of a will. * * *' Cases are not to be so manufactured by juries, and the necessity of resorting to inference upon inference against the evidence in the record in order to warrant the submission of this issue to the jury demonstrates the error of the ruling upon this question, and that the motion for nonsuit should have been granted.

"Although the appellant points out that the two special verdicts submitted to the jury were inconsistent, one being that the will was not written, dated, and signed by the testator, and the other being that it was procured by undue influence, it is not necessary to go into that objection, but for the purposes of this appeal we may take the position of the respondent—that if the evidence sustains the verdict upon either issue, the judgment should stand. * * * Conceding that there was some testimony for the contestant upon this [the former] issue which would warrant a finding by the jury in her favor, certain erroneous rulings upon evidence relating to this issue, which must have prejudiced greatly proponent's case, demand a reversal of the judgment, even though it be considered as based on this issue alone.

[6] "The court refused to permit proponent to state the conversation she had with testator upon his return from Chicago, which conversation it is claimed would have shown the existence of the will. She was asked: 'What, if any, conversation did you have with Dr. J. Goodwin Thompson upon his return after you went to the train with him on September 26, 1923, about the will?' This question was objected to, and proponent's attorney stated that its object was to show that the will was in existence and that the doctor saw the will; that it was not an attempt to prove the contents of the will or any of the circumstances of the will. The court refused to admit this testimony, on the ground that it was hearsay.

"During the examination of proponent's sister, the court refused to admit testimony regarding remarks made by testator upon the subject of his will to establish the fact that a will was in existence. These rulings are in direct conflict with the cases of Estate of Thompson, 185 Cal. 763, 767, 198 P. 795; Estate of Sweetman, 185 Cal. 27, 195 P. 918. Whatever doubt may have existed in the past about the application of the rule of these cases where the issue is forgery, is set at rest by the recent case of In re Estate of Morrison, 198 Cal. 1, 242 P. 939, in which our Supreme Court considers most carefully the authorities upon all phases of the general subject and concludes with the adoption of the rule in the case of Hoppe v. Byers, 60 Md. 381, which it summarizes as holding that declarations of a testator that he had made a will and had named therein the proponent thereof as his sole beneficiary were admissible in evidence as tending to show the existence of such a document prior to the death of the decedent. The only real issue between the parties in this action was the genuineness of the purported will —whether or not it was written by the testator. The issue in the Morrison Case was the same as the issue upon which the proponent in this case sought to introduce the excluded testimony, i. e., forgery. The relevancy to that issue of declarations of the testator regarding the disposition of his property is discussed in the case of Adams v. Ristine, 138 Va. 273, 304, 122 S. E. 126, 135 (31 A. L. R. 1413), wherein it is said:

" 'At the request of the contestants, and over the objection of the proponents, the court gave the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that statements of Lewis M. Adams as to how he intended to dispose of his property at his death go only to the question of the probability or improbability of his making the disposition of his property set forth in the alleged will, and does not affect the question of whether said alleged will is in the genuine handwriting of Lewis M. Adams or not."

" 'It is said by counsel for contestants that: "This instruction was intended to tell the jury that if they believed that the alleged will was not in the genuine handwriting of Lewis M. Adams, any statements made by him before his death, as to how he intended to dispose of his property, would not be sufficient to justify a verdict in favor of the proponent of the alleged will."

" 'But the instruction does not express that intention. It says that the statements of the testator as to the intended disposition of his property do not affect the question of whether or not the will was in the handwriting of Lewis M. Adams, when in fact it might have a very serious effect. If the jury thought that the evidence as to the execution of the will left the question in doubt, they would probably give very serious consideration to the statements of the testator as to his intended disposition of his property.

" 'In Samuel v. Hunter's Ex'x, 122 Va. 636, 95 S. E. 399, it is said that: "Such declarations, standing alone, are not admissible as direct evidence to prove or disprove the genuineness of the will; but that in all cases where its genuineness has been assailed by other proper evidence, the declarations are admissible as circumstances, either to strengthen or weaken the assault, according to their inconsistency or their harmony with the existence or terms of the will"—thus showing not only the admissibility of such testimony, but its influence.

" 'The instruction was at least misleading, if not positively erroneous, and it was error to give it.'

"In the instant case, various declarations of the testator bearing upon the genuineness of the will, in addition to those just discussed, were either disallowed, or, if admitted, deprived of their force, so far as the genuineness of the will was concerned, by the instructions of the court.

"There are numerous other objections urged by appellant regarding rulings upon the admissions of evidence of more or less merit and importance, but it is unnecessary to discuss them all."

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

PRESTON and LANGDON, JJ., being disqualified, do not participate in the foregoing opinion.

---

200 Cal. 384

PETER R. GADD, Inc., v. WORKMAN et al., City Councilmen. (S. F. 12183.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1927.)

Municipal corporations ⚷493(1)—Council's denial of appeals from street assessment held not final order exhausting jurisdiction justifying mandamus to compel confirmation of assessment (Improvement Act 1911, § 21, as amended by St. 1923, p. 113, § 1).

Where city council, after hearing, denied appeals of property owners from street assessments, under improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730, as amended) and minutes showed council's intent to further consider validity of assessment before transmitting assessment to board of public works with its official certificate of approval, mandamus to compel council to confirm assessment on the ground that it had exhausted its jurisdiction, and that its decision was so far final, under section 21, as amended by St. 1923, p. 113, § 1, as to require transmission of assessment to board, will be denied.

In Bank.

Application for writ of mandate by Peter R. Gadd, Inc., against Boyle Workman and others, as City Councilmen of the City of Los Angeles, to compel confirmation of assessments for street improvement. Writ denied.

Anderson & Anderson, Joseph H. Call, and Asa V. Call, all of Los Angeles, and Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and James L. Atteridge, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., Herman Mohr, Deputy City Atty., Redwine & Redwine, and Andrew Park, all of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein has applied for a writ of mandate wherein it seeks to compel the respondents, the city council of the city of Los Angeles and the members thereof, to confirm a certain assessment made in the course of a certain street improvement proceeding within what is known as the Adams Street and Smiley Drive improvement district, which improvement had been initiated and thus far carried forward under and in pursuance of the "Improvement Act of 1911" (St. 1911, p. 730) and its subsequent supplementary or amendatory enactments. Said public improvement had been initiated through the adoption by the respondents of an ordinance of intention on the 15th day of May, 1925, and had proceeded thereunder up to the time when the assessment therefor had been filed with the city clerk and the notice to property owners required by said original and amendatory acts had been given by said official, fixing the 12th day of July, 1926, as the time when property owners would be heard before said city council upon their appeals from said assessment and objections to the confirmation thereof. The regularity of the proceedings thus far taken in the course of the progress of said improvement and in the levy of said assessment is not an issue in the proceeding before us, since the petitioner herein is here insisting that the respondents, by their action in denying the appeals of the property owners at the hearing upon said last-named date, have thereby confirmed said assessment, and hence of necessity the regularity of the proceedings upon which it was predicated. The respondents are not here making any contention as to the irregularity of the proceedings upon which said assessment was based, but only that the regularity and legality of said assessment has not yet been finally determined. The sole question presented upon the hearing herein relates to the action of said city council taken upon the hearing before it upon said last-named date with respect to the objections and appeals of the property owners then presented and to the finality of its action in that regard.

Section 21 of the Improvement Act of 1911, as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 113, § 1), provides for the making and filing with the city clerk by the street superintendent or city engineer of his assessment made in the course of the improvement in question, and provides for giving notice of the filing of such assessment by said official to all interested parties in order that those who feel themselves aggrieved by the burden of said assessment or by any errors or informalities in the proceeding upon which the same has been based may appeal to the city council by briefly stating in writing the grounds of their said appeal. At the time fixed in said notice for the hearing or hearings upon such appeals said section provides that the city council shall proceed to hear and determine the same. Said section further provides that—

> "When no appeal is taken or when the orders and determinations of the council upon appeal have been complied with, and the council is satisfied with the correctness of the assessment, thereupon the street superintendent shall attach thereto a warrant bearing date of said order of said city council."

Pursuant to the provisions of said act said city council proceeded to hold the meeting provided for in said notice and to hear the appeals and objections of the property owners then or theretotofore presented and filed. There were a large number of such appeals, wherein many and various reasons were presented by the respective property owners objecting to such assessment. The president of the city council instructed the clerk to proceed with the reading of these separate appeals, and as each appeal was read a hearing was had thereon, and after each of such hearings a formal motion was made by one or other of the members of said city council that said appeal be denied, which motion was in each case adopted. The hearing upon these numerous and separate appeals occupied the morning session of the city council, and also, after a brief recess, a considerable portion of the afternoon session of that body. The minutes of the meeting of the city council upon this occasion show that after each and all of said appeals had been separately heard, and after a formal motion had been made in each case denying the same, and "after a full and fair opportunity had been given to all persons desiring to be heard, the president stated that the matter was now before the council for its consideration." Thereupon, as the minutes show, the inspector of public works "was asked to address the council on the matter under consideration." The assistant city attorney also addressed the council and "a general discussion was thereupon entered into by all members of the council, and at the conclusion of the discussion Mr. Randall moved, seconded by Mr. Sparks, that action on the confirmation of assessment for the improvement of Adams between Thirteenth avenue and Moynier lane, and portions of other streets, as contemplated by ordinance of intention No. 51862

N. S. be deferred until the meeting of the council to be held Tuesday, July 27, 1926, at the hour of 10:30 a. m., which motion was adopted by the following vote." The said meeting of the council then adjourned. At the meeting of the council held on July 27, 1926, as its minutes show, the further hearing in confirmation of assessment was continued until August 3, 1926, at which latter meeting counsel for the petitioner herein appeared and presented a written demand for the confirmation of the assessment, whereupon a motion was made and carried that further consideration upon the hearing and confirmation of said assessment be continued until August 10, 1926. The petition for a writ of mandate herein was filed in this court on August 2, 1926.

It is the contention of the petitioner that the city council of Los Angeles by its action in formally moving and carrying a motion to deny each and every one of the appeals presented to and heard before it upon the 12th day of July, 1926, has so far fulfilled the requirements of section 21 of the Improvement Act and its amendments above referred to as to have completely exercised its jurisdiction in that regard, and that, having done so, its determination of said appeals was so far final as to require the transmission of said assessment by said official body to the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles, together with a certificate showing its aforesaid action taken in the premises in the way of the denial by it of each and all of said appeals, and that such action on its part, being administrative in character, may be compelled by the mandate of this court.

We are unable to agree with this contention, both for the reason that by the terms of section 21 of said Improvement Act as amended in 1923 and as above quoted the city council as a prerequisite to its final determination as to the validity and correctness of the assessment must be satisfied therewith whether or not appeals have been taken, and hence of necessity must be entitled to hold the matter of the approval of such assessment under investigation and consideration until it shall have been so satisfied, and for the further reason that the undisputed record embraced in the official minutes of the city council discloses that at and in the course of its meeting upon the above date, and as an immediate part of its consideration of the very matter then before it, the council did determine, notwithstanding its action upon the appeals which were then presented and heard, to give such further consideration to the matter of the validity and correctness of said assessment as might lead to a later determination of its satisfaction with the same and to the propriety of transmitting to the board of public works said assessment with the official certificate of its approval thereof. The minutes of the city council when read as a whole clearly point to this and to no other conclusion. The cases cited by the petitioner as supporting its contention as to the finality of the action of the city council in the denial of the appeals presented before it do not support its present insistence as to the finality of the action of the council in denying said appeals, since in each of the cases cited it is made to appear that the action of the official body upon said appeals and upon the validity of the assessment in each case was completed at the time and meeting at which such action was taken, and that it was some later attempt to reassume a jurisdiction which had been thus completely exercised which led to the proceedings and ruling in each of said cases. In the instant case, however, we are clearly of the opinion that the jurisdiction with which the city council was invested by the terms of section 21 of the Improvement Act above quoted had not been fully exercised when this proceeding was instituted, and, so far as the record herein discloses, has not yet been so exercised.

It follows necessarily that the petition for a writ of mandate herein must be denied, and it is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

---

200 Cal. 400

In re MORGAN'S ESTATE. (S. F. 12092.)★

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1927. Rehearing Denied March 10, 1927.)

1. Wills ⚷133—Where signing of olographic will is not in customary place, it must be established upon face of instrument that it is complete.

Where signature of testator in olographic will is not in customary place at end of instrument, it must be established upon face of offered instrument that it is complete and executed document.

2. Wills ⚷133—Olographic will beginning, "Last will and testament of Ynez Morgan," but not signed at end, held complete and executed.

Olographic will beginning, "Last will and testament of Ynez Morgan," and stating, "I, Ynez Morgan, hereby will," but not signed at end of instrument, held to show on face as whole that it was a complete and executed document.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Application by Mrs. A. A. Prior for the probate of the will of Ynez Morgan, deceased. From an order admitting the will to probate, Harry D. Morgan, contestant, appeals. Affirmed.

★Rehearing denied.

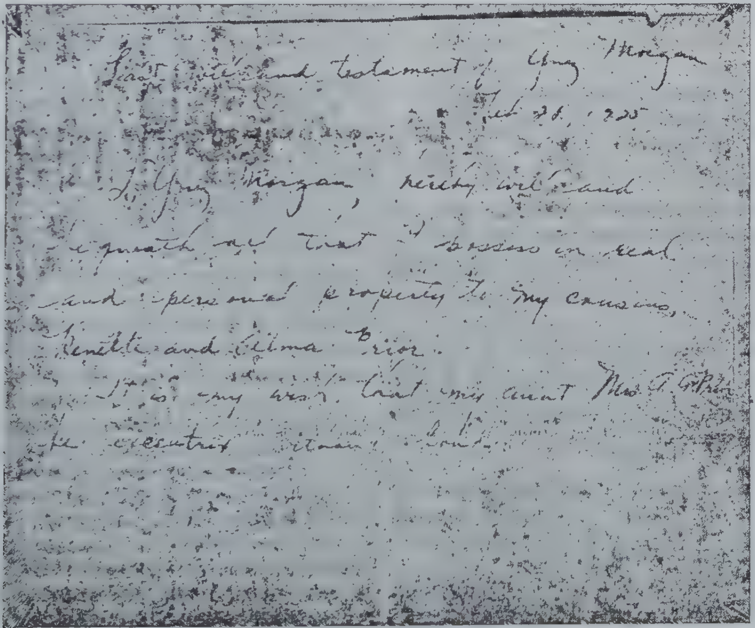
Sapiro & Hayes, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Norman E. Malcolm, of Palo Alto, for proponent and respondent.

Egerton D. Lakin, of Palo Alto, for guardian of minor, legatees, and respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Ynez Morgan died leaving an instrument testamentary in character. After a contest, the probate court found it to be a valid olographic will, entirely written, dated and signed by the testatrix, and made its order admitting the document to probate as the last will and testament of the decedent. From that order this appeal is taken.

The purported will, made ten months prior to the death of the decedent, was found in her writing desk among her papers. No signature appears at the end of the document, which is entirely in the handwriting of the decedent. The name, Ynez Morgan, appears twice in the instrument, and the only question before the court on this appeal is whether or not the decedent, by writing her name in either, or both, of said places, thereby "signed" the will. A photostatic copy of the document is here reproduced:



Last will and testament of Ynez Morgan

Feb 21, 1925

I, Ynez Morgan, hereby will and bequeath all that I possess in real and personal property to my cousins, Lenette and Elma Prior.

It is my wish that my aunt Mrs. T. G. Prior be executrix without bond.

[1] This court has, upon a number of occasions very recently, been called upon to consider the nature of the evidence permissible and sufficient to establish the due execution of an olographic will, where the signing thereof by the testator is not in the customary place at the end of the instrument. The conclusion reached and adhered to in the decisions is that it must be established upon the face of the offered instrument that it is a complete and executed document; that notwithstanding that the usual place of signing, and so of evidencing due execution and completeness, is at the end of the instrument, the signature of a testator found elsewhere than at the end may be, if circumstances warrant it, a signature of execution, but that the only evidence which will warrant this conclusion must be found in and on the instrument itself. Estate of McMahon, 174 Cal. 423, 163 P. 669, L. R. A. 1917D, 778. As stated in another case:

> "The true rule, as we conceive it to be, is that, wherever placed, the fact that it was intended as an executing signature must satisfactorily appear on the face of the document itself. If it is at the end of the document, the universal custom of mankind forces the conclusion that it was appended as an execution, if nothing to the contrary appears. If placed elsewhere, it is for the court to say, from an inspection of the whole document, its language as well as its form, and the relative position of its parts, whether or not there is a positive and satisfactory inference from the document itself that the signature was so placed with the intent that it should there serve as a token of execution. If such inference thus appears, the execution may be considered as proven by such signature."

Estate of Manchester, 174 Cal. 417, 421, 163 P. 358, 360 (L. R. A. 1917D, 629, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 227).

See, also, Estate of Streeton, 183 Cal. 284, 288, 191 P. 16; Estate of Bernard, 197 Cal. 36, 38, 239 P. 404; Estate of Devlin, 198 Cal. 721, 247 P. 577.

[2] The will here in question makes complete disposition of the property of the decedent and designates the person who shall have charge of the administration of her estate. It in all respects appears to be a completed document, which removes it from one of the objections raised in Estate of Bernard, supra, and other cases. If the words, "Last will and testament of Ynez Morgan," appeared at the end of the will, all doubt that the signature was intended to be and was adopted as the final executing signature in authentication of and in execution of the document as a completed testamentary act would be removed. Looking at the instrument as a whole, we are of the view that, by the use of these words in the beginning of the instrument, it was the intention of the testatrix to thereby execute the document as a will.

So recently has this court discussed this question and reviewed the authorities that nothing further need be added. We are satisfied that the finding of the probate court to the effect that the testatrix duly authenticated and executed the instrument as her last will and testament is sustained by the inferences arising from an inspection of the document itself.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.

---

200 Cal. 452

CALIFORNIA NAT. BANK OF SACRAMENTO v. EL DORADO LIME & MINERALS CO. et al. (Sac. 3854.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑956(2)—Exceptions, bill of 🔑43(1)—Relief from default in preparing and filing bill of exceptions is within trial court's sound discretion, which will not be disturbed unless clearly abused (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Motions under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for relief from default in preparation, service and filing of bill of exceptions, are addressed to trial court's sound discretion, exercise of which will not be disturbed by appellate court, in absence of clear showing of abuse.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1129—Court is more disposed to affirm order when result compels hearing on merits, which law favors, than when default is allowed to stand.

It is the policy of the law to favor, whereever possible, a hearing on the merits, and appellate court is much more disposed to affirm an order when result is to compel such hearing than when a default is allowed to stand.

3. Exceptions, bill of 🔑40(1)—Statute authorizing extension of time to prepare and serve bill of exceptions must be read with statute limiting extended time allowable without respondent's consent (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 1054).

Provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 650, authorizing preparation and service of draft of bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of entry of order denying motion for new trial, "or such further time as the court * * * may allow," does not authorize court to grant indefinite extension of time, but must be read in connection with section 1054, prohibiting extension for more than 30 days without adverse party's consent.

4. Exceptions, bill of 🔑40(2)—Relief from default in preparing and filing bill of exceptions, in reliance on void orders extending time, held improperly denied (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 1054).

Appellants, having relied in good faith on void orders extending time for preparing and filing bill of exceptions beyond period authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, and being apparently unable to complete and present bill within statutory period and authorized extensions thereof, their motion under section 473, for relief from default therein, was improperly denied.

5. Exceptions, bill of 🔑40(2)—Mistake of law is ground for relief from default in preparing and filing bill of exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Mistake of law may be availed of in support of motion for relief, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, from default in preparing and filing bill of exceptions.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by the California National Bank of Sacramento against the El Dorado Lime & Minerals Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying defendants' motion for relief from a default in the preparation, service, and filing of a proposed bill of exceptions, they appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Thos. B. Leeper, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Devlin & Devlin, Hinsdale & Pigott and T. A. Farrell, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by certain of the above-named defendants from an order of the superior court of the county of Sacramento denying a motion for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure from a default in the preparation, service, and filing of a proposed bill of exceptions to be used on an appeal from the judgment entered in the above-entitled action.

The judgment herein was entered on May 20, 1925. An order denying a motion for new trial was made on July 1, 1925, and notice thereof served on the appellants on July 3, 1925. Thereafter, and on application, the trial court granted to the appellants certain extensions of time within which they might serve and present their proposed bill of exceptions. When read together, the several orders of the court below extended the appellants' time approximately three months from the last day prescribed by statute (section 650, Code Civ. Proc.) for the preparation and service of a proposed bill of exceptions. On October 6, 1925, the proposed bill was served on the respondent, together with a notice of motion for relief from default in said service. The respondent had previously indorsed a reservation of all objections to service of the proposed bill upon a copy of the last order extending time to the appellants.

A reading of the record and the briefs herein discloses that the appellants' delay in the service of the proposed bill of exceptions is traceable to their reliance upon the orders of the court below extending time therefor and to an asserted "physically impossible" task of completing the proposed bill within the statutory period.

[1, 2] The rule of law is well settled that motions for relief from default under the remedial provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and an appellate court will not, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse in the exercise thereof, disturb the action of the court below. It is the policy of the law to favor, wherever possible, a hearing on the merits. Waybright v. Anderson, 253 P. 148. Moreover, an appellate court is much more disposed to affirm an order when the result is to compel a hearing upon the merits than it is when the default is allowed to stand. O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 P. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105.

[3] Counsel for the appellants herein undoubtedly proceeded under the erroneous theory that the trial court's jurisdiction and power to grant extensions of time for the preparation and service of a proposed bill of exceptions was without statutory limitation. Section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, expressly declares that the court below may not, without the consent of the adverse party, extend time for more than 30 days for the performance of certain acts. It has been repeatedly held by this court that the provision in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that the draft of a bill may be prepared and served within 10 days after notice of entry of an order denying a motion for new trial "or such further time as the court in which the action is pending, or a judge thereof, may allow," does not authorize the court to grant an indefinite extension of time for the preparation and service of the draft, but is to be read in connection with the restriction contained in said section 1054 upon the amount of time which may be allowed by the court. Cameron v. Arcata R. R. Co., 129 Cal. 279, 61 P. 955.

[4, 5] The record herein is such as to indicate that the trial court was inclined to deny the appellants' motion to set aside the default solely, for the reason that said default was the result of a mistake of law upon the part of appellants' counsel; the lower court being of the opinion that it was not "within the power of the court to relieve against the situation that has been so created." In so concluding, the trial court cannot be said to have exercised that discretion vested in it by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. While it was not within the power of the trial court to grant to the appellants herein, without the consent of the adverse party, an extension of time in excess of 30 days for the preparation and service of their proposed bill of exceptions (section 1054, Code Civ. Proc.), nevertheless, having exceeded its jurisdiction by extending the time therefor beyond the statutory limitation and the appellants having in good faith relied on such void orders extending time, the case would seem to fairly come within the remedial provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The authorities indicate that a mistake of law may be availed of in support of a motion for relief under said Code section, for the provisions thereof are broad enough to include such mistakes within their scope. Waite v. So. Pac. Co., 192 Cal. 467, 471, 221 P. 204. In view of the appellants' reliance on the trial court's orders extending time for the preparation and service of the proposed bill and the apparent inability to complete and present the same within the statutory period and authorized extensions thereof, we are of the opinion that a case is presented which would require the lower court, in the sound exercise of its discretion, to grant the relief prayed for. This being so, the appellants' motion to be relieved from default in the preparation and service of their proposed bill of exceptions was improperly denied by the court below.

For the foregoing reasons, the order appealed from is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the trial court, with directions to grant the relief sought by the appellants herein.

200 Cal. 335

DICKEY v. WALROND et al. (S. F. 11304.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1927.
Rehearing Denied with Modification,
March 1, 1927.)

1. Descent and distribution 🔑6—Provision of statute, when applicable, designates, not only takers of decedent's property, but proportion in which they take (Civ. Code, §§ 1334, 1386).

Civ. Code, § 1334, where legitimately applicable, makes section 1386 applicable, not only for the designation and description of the takers of property of a decedent, but also for the purpose of fixing the proportions in which each shall take.

2. Descent and distribution 🔑1, 21—"Heirs" means persons entitled or appointed by law to succeed to estate not disposed of by will.

The word "heirs" means persons entitled to succeed to another's property on his death in case of intestacy, or persons appointed by law to succeed to an estate not disposed of by will.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Heirs.]

3. Descent and distribution 🔑52(3)—Husband is "heir" of wife.

Husband, under law of California, is an heir of his deceased wife.

4. Descent and distribution 🔑6—Statute held to designate, in every case, persons meeting description of heirs or heirs at law (Civ. Code, § 1386).

Civ. Code, § 1386, must be resorted to in every case for a designation of persons who meet the description, or who take as heirs or heirs at law of a decedent.

5. Wills 🔑529—Where testamentary disposition is to heirs of any person, provision of statute designating persons meeting such description also controls proportion in which they shall take (Civ. Code, §§ 1334, 1386).

Under Civ. Code, § 1334, providing that a testamentary disposition to heirs of any person, without words of qualification, vests the property in those who would be entitled to it, "according to the provisions of the title on succession, in this Code," resort must be had, in every instance, to section 1386 to determine, not only persons meeting description of heirs, but also the proportions in which they are entitled to take.

6. Wills 🔑435—Wills are construed more liberally than grants or contracts.

Wills are to receive a more liberal construction than grants or contracts.

7. Wills 🔑495—Bequest to "heirs at law" of testator's widow, if she died within life of trust, held direct, and controlled by particular statutes as affecting right of husband by remarriage of testator's widow (Civ. Code, §§ 778, 779, 1334, 1335, 1386).

Where will gave property to trustees to hold until testator's two minor sons should reach age of 21 years, and provided that thereafter testator's wife should take an estate in fee in an undivided one-half of the property, and each son an undivided one-fourth, with further provision that, if testator's wife died during continuance of trust, the undivided part that would have gone to her should go to her "heirs at law," and where testator's widow, after remarrying, died during life of trust, held words "heirs at law" were used as words of donation, not of limitation, such that the bequest was direct to heirs at law of widow within meaning of Civ. Code, § 1335, and controlled by sections 1334 and 1386 rather than by sections 778 and 779, as affecting right of surviving husband to take as heir at law of widow.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Heirs at Law.]

8. Wills 🔑634(8)—Testator's widow to whom is devised estate in fee in one-half of trust property after life of trust, held not possessed of vested estate.

Where will created trust to continue until testator's youngest son attained age of 21 years, and provided that testator's widow should then take estate in fee in an undivided one-half of the property, but that if she died during life of trust her interest should go to her heirs at law, held widow dying during continuance of trust was not possessed of a vested estate with remainder over to her heirs at law.

9. Wills 🔑608(3)—Under rule in Shelley's Case, ancestor taking estate of freehold, limited by way of remainder to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class, is entitled to whole estate.

Under rule in Shelley's Case, when person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of an interest of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession, from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate.

10. Wills 🔑608(1)—If vested and remainder estates are not both legal or equitable, rule in Shelley's Case does not apply.

For rule in Shelley's Case to be applicable, the vested and remainder estates must both be legal or both be equitable.

Shenk, J., and Waste, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Frank Fletcher Dickey against E. A. Walrond and another as surviving trustees named in decree of final distribution in the matter of the estate of W. J. Dickey, deceased, and others. From a judgment of the superior court, affirmed by the District Court of Appeals, defendant Frank P. Roberts appeals. Reversed.

Walter H. Linforth and Edwin V. McKenzie, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harding & Monroe and A. E. Shaw, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal by defendant F. P. Roberts from judgment of the superior court of Fresno county in an action to quiet title to an interest under the will and decree of distribution in the estate of W. J. Dickey, deceased.

The testator, W. J. Dickey, left surviving him his wife, Marchisi Josephine Dickey; two minor sons, William James Dickey, Jr., and Robert Bernard Dickey; also Frank Fletcher Dickey, plaintiff, the son of his wife by a former marriage.

His will provided for certain specific bequests; then that the balance of the property should pass to three executors, as trustees, to be by them held until the two minor sons should reach the age of 21 years; that thereupon the estate in fee should pass as follows: An undivided one-half to his wife and an undivided one-fourth to each son, qualified however, by the following language to wit:

> "In the event of the death of my said wife during the life of this trust, then the undivided one-half part that would otherwise have gone to her shall go to her heirs at law."

The language of the will was carried into the decree of distribution.

After the death of the testator, his widow intermarried with defendant Frank P. Roberts, and thereafter, on January 28, 1923, she died, leaving a last will and testament. The two sons of the trustor were living, and still minors; her own son, Frank Fletcher Dickey, and her husband, Frank P. Roberts, also survived her. Frank Fletcher Dickey thereupon commenced this action to quiet title, including as defendants in his complaint the surviving trustees, Frank P. Roberts, individually and as executor of the last will and testament of Marchisi Roberts, deceased, and said two minor sons.

The trial court made a finding as follows:

> "That as heirs of the said Marchisi Roberts, deceased, the said plaintiff and the defendants, Robert Bernard Dickey, William James Dickey and Frank P. Roberts are the owners subject to the trust hereinafter mentioned in equal shares of the undivided one-half of the property of said W. J. Dickey, deceased. * * *"

Being dissatisfied with the portion so decreed to him, Frank P. Roberts took this appeal under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, claiming that the court erred in applying the rule of per capita distribution, and that it should have applied the rule of per stirpes distribution under section 1386 of the Civil Code.

The disposition of said appeal is controlled and determined by the proper interpretation of section 1334 of the Civil Code as explained by section 1335 thereof, when construed in the light of section 1386, and also sections 778 and 779. The relevant portions of these sections are as follows:

> Section 1334: "A testamentary disposition to 'heirs' * * * of any person, without other words of qualification, and when the terms are used as words of donation, and not of limitation, vests the property in those who would be entitled to succeed to the property of such person, according to the provisions of the title on succession, in this Code."
>
> Section 1335: "The terms mentioned in the last section are used as words of donation, and not of limitation, when the property is given to the person so designated, directly, and not as a qualification of an estate given to the ancestor of such person."
>
> Section 1386: "When any person having title to any estate not otherwise limited by marriage contract, dies without disposing thereof by will, it is succeeded to and must be distributed, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Code and the Code of Civil Procedure, * * * in the following manner. * * *"
>
> Section 778: "A remainder may be limited on a contingency which, in case it should happen, will operate to bridge or determine the precedent estate; and every such remainder is to be deemed a conditional limitation."
>
> Section 779: "When a remainder is limited to the heirs, or heirs of the body, of a person to whom a life estate in the same property is given, the persons who, on the termination of the life estate, are the successors or heirs of the body of the owner for life, are entitled to take by virtue of the remainder so limited to them, and not as mere successors of the owner for life."

Appellant contends that section 1334 above quoted meets and disposes of the question by requiring full application of section 1386, both as to names of takers under the will and as to the proportion in which each heir shall take. On the other hand, respondent contends that section 1334, by reason of sections 778 and 779, is wholly inapplicable under the facts of the present case, and that section 1386 may be resorted to only for the names or description of the class of individuals who are to take, and that, when said class is ascertained, they necessarily take per capita and not per stirpes.

[1] We entertain no doubt that, in a case where section 1334 legitimately applies, the section makes applicable section 1386, not only for the designation and description of the takers, but also for the purpose of fixing the proportions in which each shall take. This construction is forced upon us by reason of its connection with other sections in the same chapter, and also by the provisions of said section itself, for it provides that, if there are qualifying words, or if the words are words of limitation and not of donation, the property does not vest according to the provisions of the title on succession. This means that in some cases the property will vest under the statute, and in other cases it will not so vest. The query at once arises as to what the difference is between the case where the property does vest and the case where the property does not vest according to the law of succession.

[2-4] "The word 'heirs' * * * means the persons who would be entitled to succeed at his death to his estate in case of intestacy, by virtue of our statutes relative to succession." Estate of Wilson, 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581. See, also, Ginochio v. San Francisco, 194 Cal. 159, 167, 228 P. 428. "The 'heirs' of a person are those whom the law appoints to succeed to his estate in case he dies without disposing of it by will." Hochstein v. Berghauser, 123 Cal. 681, 687, 56 P. 547, 549. See, also, to the same effect, Estate of Watt, 179 Cal. 20, 175 P. 415. The husband under our law is, of course, an heir of his deceased wife. In re Dobbel, 104 Cal. 432, 38 P. 87, 43 Am. St. Rep. 123; Hochstein v. Berghauser, 123 Cal. 681, 687, 688, 56 P. 547. These authorities must be interpreted as meaning that section 1386 is the source in every case for a designation of the persons who meet the description of heirs.

[5] Therefore, since we must resort to section 1386 in every case for the designation of persons who take as heirs at law of a decedent, it must follow that the words, "vests the property * * * according to the provisions of the title on succession, in this Code," mean more than a mere designation or description; otherwise these words must be construed as surplusage. But section 1386 contains only two ingredients, to wit, "designation" and "proportions;" if it means more than mere designation, it must include proportions. In other words, it is impossible to give any meaning to the said phrase if it does not mean that the estate shall vest in the persons designated in the proportions declared in said statute.

Then, too, this question was fairly before the court in the Estate of Watt, supra, where it was said:

> "Under section 1327 of the Civil Code, 'Technical words in a will are to be taken in their technical sense, unless the context clearly indicates a contrary intention. * * *' It is further provided by section 1334 of the same Code that 'a testamentary disposition to "heirs," "relations," "nearest relations," "representatives," "legal representatives," or "personal representatives," or "family," "issue," "descendants," "nearest" or "next of kin" of any person, without other words of qualification, and when the terms are used as words of donation, and not of limitation, vests the property in those who would be entitled to succeed to the property of such person, according to the provisions of the title on succession, in this Code.' Both sections are directly applicable here. The word 'heirs' is a technical term, and is used to designate 'the persons who would by the statute succeed to the real estate (or, in California, estate of any kind) in case of intestacy.' Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen (Mass.) 446, 480. 'The "heirs" of a person,' said this court in Hochstein v. Berghauser, 123 Cal. 681, 687, 56 P. 547, 549, 'are those whom the law appoints to succeed to his estate in case he dies without disposing of it by will.' * * *
>
> "In the will of Mrs. Watts there are no qualifying terms to limit or explain the ordinary meaning of the word 'heirs.' The testatrix says simply that she gives the residue to her heirs. The further provision that it is 'to be distributed to them according to law' only serves to strengthen the conclusion that she was directing that the property should go just as it would have gone under the statute of descent in the absence of any testamentary disposition."

This meaning was emphasized in the second appeal (186 Cal. 102, 109, 198 P. 1036, 1039), where this court again said:

> "By the will of Lydia M. Watts, as has been seen, her property was to go to her heirs. In the former decision in this estate it was expressly held that this meant that it should go to her heirs as they were defined in subdivision 8 aforesaid in the same manner as if she had died intestate. We have no disposition now to revise that opinion, and hold that it goes in some other proportions, especially in view of the precise language of the Code just quoted."

It is not a just comment on the decisions in the Estate of Watts, supra, to say that the phrase "and to be distributed according to law" qualifies the words "to my heirs," for the court expressly held that said phrase but emphasized and made clear the meaning of the preceding one. See, also, Estate of Page, 181 Cal. 537, 538, 539, 185 P. 383. It should also be noted that the courts of practically all of the other states are in accord with this holding, and there is like unanimity among the text-writers.

The case of De Laurencel v. De Boom, 67 Cal. 362, 7 P. 758, is cited as being opposed to the above views. We find nothing in that case that would justify such a claim. There is no conflict between De Laurencel v. De Boom, and the Estate of Watts. The "heirs" mentioned in the De Laurencel will were determined by subdivision 5 of section 1386 of the Civil Code. Descent by the terms of this subdivision, it has been held in estate of Nigro, 172 Cal. 474, 479, 156 P. 1019, should be per capita, and not by right of representation.

[6] The other cases relied upon by respondent are Burke v. Modern Woodmen of America, 2 Cal. App. 611, 84 P. 275, and Cooper v. Wilder, 111 Cal. 191, 43 P. 591, 52 Am. St. Rep. 163, but these cases are not subject in any sense to the provisions of the chapter of the Civil Code upon the interpretation of wills, and, indeed, wills are to receive a more liberal construction than grants or contracts. These cases, too, are earlier expressions of the court without any reference to section 1334, and cannot, therefore, be held to control our action in the case now before us.

[7] Having thus concluded that section

1334 controls in cases where the word "heirs" is unqualified, and is a word of donation as distinguished from a word of limitation, we now pass to an examination of the will before us to ascertain its meaning in the use of the term "heirs at law." In other words, we are to ascertain whether the words "heirs at law," as used in the will before us, are to be construed as words of donation or of limitation; there being no words of qualification in the will.

Section 1335 above quoted furnishes the key to this solution by providing that such words are words of donation and not of limitation, "when the property is given to the person so designated, directly, and not as a qualification of an estate given to the ancestor of such person." At this juncture, we are met by the contention of respondent that, in every case where the rule in Shelley's Case would have applied, the words must be considered words of limitation and not of donation, and thereby exclude the application of section 1334. In other words, in a case where the rule in Shelley's Case would apply, had it not been abrogated, the words "heirs at law" are words of limitation, and, since the abrogation of the rule, are to be held as words of purchase. Therefore, by virtue of such decisions as Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 301, 37 P. 1049, the words must be held to designate a class only, and, so designating, the class take equally and not per stirpes.

This contention brings us face to face with the question: Was there by this will a vested life estate in the widow, Marchisi Dickey Roberts, with a remainder over to her heirs at law? If so, the words are words of limitation and not of purchase, and the said heirs at law are the designation of a class.

[8] We are unable to place any construction upon said testament that would give to the widow a vested estate, with a remainder over to her heirs at law. The devise was an express trust for a definite period of years, to wit, until the youngest son of the testator should reach the age of 21 years. The trust estate was not measured by the life of either the widow or any of the children. It was measured solely by a definite term of years. Indeed, in this very case the trust continued after the death of the widow, and the full measure of the right of the widow during the life of the trust was to compel the performance by the trustees of their duties thereunder, and to secure for herself a portion of the income thereof provided for her in the will. She was in no sense a life tenant. The most that her estate could be during the life of the trust was an equitable one for the period thereof, and perhaps for such less time as she might live.

In Hunt v. Hunt, 124 Mich. 502, 83 N. W. 371, the court had before it a clause in a will reading as follows:

> "I do hereby will, devise, and bequeath, to my executors, hereinafter named, and to the survivor of them, my farm * * * in which Mrs. Henry Hunt, widow, has a life estate, in trust, however, for the following purpose, viz.: To sell and dispose of the same as soon as convenient after the death of Mrs. Henry Hunt and the termination of said life estate, and invest the proceeds * * * and pay over, as fast as received, the income and interest thereof, equally, to my two sons, Charles James Hunt and Joseph Nathan Hunt, share and share alike, as long as they shall live; and, upon the death of either of them, to pay over one-half of the same to his heirs, devisees, or legatees, including principal and interest."

In disposing of the contention of Charles Hunt that by reason of the death of his brother the trust had terminated and was subject to cancellation, the court said:

> "The mistake of Charles lies in his assumption that he is a life tenant, with the devise over to his heirs. There is no life estate created by the will. The absolute title is vested in the trustees, and they alone have the right of possession. Upon them alone is the legal duty to pay the taxes and to protect and care for the property. The interests of Charles and Joseph as cestuis que trustent have none of the attributes of a life tenancy. The trustees alone are charged with the control of the property. * * * They cannot surrender the trust to their cestuis que trustent. They can only surrender it to their successors duly appointed by the chancery court. The only right Charles and Joseph can enforce against the trustees is the payment to them of the income and the faithful performance of the trust. This was all the testatrix intended they should have. There is no legal objection to such a trust. Upon Charles and Joseph she conferred the right to direct a testamentary disposition of the property upon the termination of the trust by their deaths. If they chose not to make such disposition, then the trustees under the will were directed to pay the fund or to deed the land over to the heirs of each. If there were no trust, and the devise were to Charles and Joseph for life, with the remainder over to their heirs, then undoubtedly they would take an allodial estate, under Fraser v. Chene [2 Mich. 81] supra."

It will be noted that the trust provisions in this will are much stronger than the provisions of the will before us. In that case the trust endured during the life of the beneficiaries, while in the case before us it exists only for a term of years. We then conclude that during the life of the trust the widow had only a claim upon the income, and no legal estate in the corpus thereof. See Estate of Shaw, 198 Cal. 352, 246 P. 48.

What was her estate, if any, after the death of her husband, independent of the trust provisions? Plainly it was a fee if she survived the termination of the trust period, and nothing if she did not. In other words, it was an estate on condition precedent as provided in sections 709 and 1346 of our Civil Code. See, also, Estate of Glann, 177 Cal. 347, 350, 352, 170 P. 833.

In the last cited case the court was construing a will which contained the following provision:

> "Fifth. If my said wife and all my children and their children shall die before the death of both of my said brothers Peter and Vincent then it is my will that all my property shall go to my said two brothers Peter and Vincent for their lives and upon their death the same shall go to and vest in my other brothers and sisters in equal shares and as to any brother or sister who is now dead or who may die before the death of the said Peter and Vincent, it is my will that his or her share shall go to his or her heirs."

Speaking of this provision the court said:

> "That the death of the wife and issue before the death of the brothers Peter and Vincent was a condition precedent applying to the entire disposition in the fifth clause to such brothers, with remainder to the other brothers and sisters and heirs, seems too plain for argument. * * *"

Here it is perfectly plain that, with reference to the trust estate, the widow had what is known as a contingent remainder, and so did her heirs at law. Hunt v. Lawton (Cal. App.) 245 P. 803. But, as between themselves, it is impossible to say under the terms of this will that the widow took a life estate with a remainder over to her heirs at law. The estate given the wife and the estate given the children, if either of them took effect, would be a fee. If the fee vested in the wife, the heirs at law were excluded. In other words, both the estate of the wife and the estate of the heirs at law are estates in fee on conditions precedent, and neither of them can be said to be a remainder interest upon a vested estate granted to the other. Their rights are in the alternative. The widow either takes it all, or nothing, and the heirs at law take the whole estate, or nothing.

We therefore have no hesitancy in concluding that the bequest in said will to the heirs at law of Marchisi Dickey Roberts was a direct bequest within the meaning of section 1335 of the Civil Code, and was not in any sense a qualification of an estate given to her.

In this connection respondent also invokes the provisions of section 778 of the Civil Code above quoted. Manifestly that section is inapplicable to the facts in this case, for, as we have found, no estate of any kind vested in Marchisi Dickey Roberts as between her heirs at law and herself. There is in such case no precedent estate which could be abridged or determined by the happening of any contingency. See Civ. Code, § 769; also, Gray v. Union Trust Co., 171 Cal. 638, 642, 154 P. 306.

[9] The fact that the widow had an equitable estate during the life of the trust cannot be held to support a legal estate in remainder predicated thereon so as to make such a set of facts as would have brought into operation the rule in Shelley's Case. That rule, briefly defined, is as follows:

> "When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of an interest of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession, from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." 1 Preston on Estates, §§ 263–419; 4 Kent's Comm., (14th Ed.) marg. pp. 215, 216.

[10] One of the cardinal requirements of that rule was that the vested and remainder estates must both be legal or both be equitable, and, if the two estates did not so conform, it could not be held applicable. "But, if the estate limited to the ancestor be merely an equitable or trust estate, and the subsequent limitation to his heirs carries the legal estate, the two estates will not incorporate into an estate of inheritance in the ancestor, as would have been the case under the rule in Shelley's Case, if they had been of one quality, that is, both legal and both equitable estates; and the limitation to the heirs will operate as a contingent remainder." 4 Kent's Comm. (14th Ed.) marg. p. 211.

"By his deed the grantor gave the legal estate in his property to the trustees named in his deed, and created for himself an equitable life estate, with a contingent remainder to his right heirs, upon his dying leaving no children, or descendants, or widow living at the time of his death; or, in case of his leaving no children so living, and leaving a widow surviving him, then, after providing the equitable life estate for himself, he gave an equitable life estate to such widow, and remainder to his right heirs. As the preceding life estate in the grantor was an equitable estate, and the remainder to the heirs a legal estate, this limitation is not within the rule in Shelley's Case, and the limitation over to the heirs was good as a contingent remainder. Mercer v. Hopkins, 88 Md. 309, 310, 41 A. 156, and cases there cited; 4 Kent, Comm. marg. pp. 210, 211." Mercer v. Safe-Deposit & Trust Co., 91 Md. 102, 45 A. 865.

In Howard v. Trustees, 88 Md. 309, 310, 41 A. 156, 158, we have this language:

> "Some of the appellants earnestly contend that under the rule in Shelley's Case this life estate becomes an absolute estate, and some of them deny this proposition with quite as much earnestness. We may as well dispose of this question here. It is well settled that, in order to coalesce and form one absolute estate under this rule, the two estates must be of the same quality—both must be equitable or both legal. Ware v. Richardson, 3 Md. 505 [56 Am. Dec. 762]; Handy v. McKim, 64 Md. 569, 4 A. 125. In order to make this rule apply to the devisees under consideration, it would be necessary to cast aside the express language used by the testator by which he declared that the legal estate should be held by the trustees in trust for the life tenant, and from the expiration of the equitable life tenancy in trust for the period of 20 years, when the estate was to vest absolutely in the children or descendants of such life tenant, if any, and, in default of any such issue living at that time, then in the persons who should answer to the description of heirs at law of such life tenant. Here we have the equitable life estate, and a subsequent fee simple or absolute estate. Under such circumstances it is settled the rule in Shelley's Case cannot be invoked."

We thus conclude that the bequest in the will before us was as to the heirs at law of Marchisi Dickey Roberts words of donation and not of limitation. In other words, that they took thereunder, not by virtue of their relationship to her, but as a "designation of persons to take originally in their own right." 1 Preston on Estates, 264.

It is not necessary here to pause to consider the reasons which may have prompted the Legislature in the enactment of section 1334, nor to furnish reasons why wills should be in a class to themselves when questions like this are up for determination. This section doubtless serves to settle many questions which otherwise would be unsettled, and, indeed, announces many rules which are in derogation of the common-law rules governing estates. It may also be noted in passing that reference has been made recently to section 1334, making its provisions applicable without any particular consideration having been given as to whether the words were to be considered words of donation or words of limitation. See Estate of Trickett, 197 Cal. 20, 239 P. 406.

Learned counsel with much earnestness have urged upon the court the harshness of a rule which would give to the surviving husband of his former widow, a greater portion of a decedent's estate than that received by his own children. But the fault, if any, is to be found in section 1386, and not in section 1334. Indeed, cases are easily supposable in which the rule contended for by respondent would create equal harshness; for example, a bequest to the heirs at law of a person, said heirs being two sisters and the children of a deceased sister or brother, say six in number. Under the rule contended for by respondent, the surviving sisters, instead of getting one-third each, would each get only one-eighth, so we must concede there was the proper modicum of wisdom in the enactment of this statute.

These conclusions make necessary a reversal of the judgment of the court below, and it is so ordered, with instructions to said court to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

SHENK, J. I dissent. Under the terms of the will in question the estate that vested in the heirs of the widow was, in my opinion, a contingent remainder, with an equitable life estate in the widow. Such being the case, section 1334 of the Civil Code, and Estate of Watts, 179 Cal. 20, 175 P. 415, have no application. On the other hand, section 779 of the same Code, and Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 P. 1049, would compel distribution per capita to the heirs of the widow. I think the superior court was right, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

I concur: WASTE, C. J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Petition for rehearing denied.

SHENK, J., and WASTE, C. J., dissent from that portion of the order denying a petition for a rehearing.

200 Cal. 456

KNOCK et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(S. F. 12126.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Master and servant ⚷405(4)—Finding employee's death from acute dilatation of heart was due to previous diseased condition precipitated by high altitude, held sustained by evidence (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917).

In proceedings under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831), finding of Industrial Accident Commission that death of employee by acute dilatation of the heart was due to previous condition precipitated by situation in higher altitude than customary held proper, under evidence, where compensation was claimed because ranch company employing deceased sent him to high altitude to look over certain peat lands.

2. Master and servant ⚷376(2)—Death of employee from heart disease precipitated by high altitude and overexertion held compensable.

Death of ranch manager employed by ranch company due to dilatation of heart "precipitated" or accelerated by employee's situation in high altitude held compensable, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831), where employee was at high altitude inspecting certain peat lands in course of his employment under circumstances causing overexertion on account of rough contour of country.

3. Master and servant ⚷416—Findings in compensation case must be construed with undisputed evidence.

Findings in compensation case must be read and understood in connection with undisputed evidence in case.

4. Master and servant ⚷376(2)—Injury from exposure of employee having weak heart to high altitude, when directly accompanied by overexertion, is compensable.

Though exposure to high altitude of a weak heart does not constitute industrial injury, when such exposure is directly attended with overexertion on part of employee, injury resulting therefrom is industrial injury compensable, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831).

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Carrie M. Knock and others against the Montezuma Ranch Company, Inc., employer, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Corporation, insurer, for the death of Malcolm A. Knock, employee. From an award of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation, petitioners bring certiorari. Award annulled, and application remanded for further proceedings.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for petitioners.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondent United States Fidelity & Guaranty Corporation.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

RICHARDS, J. This is a petition for a writ of review wherein the petitioners seek to have reviewed and annulled a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission. The petitioners were refused an award in their favor upon their application for such award against Montezuma Ranch Company, Inc., and its insurance carrier, United States Fidelity & Guaranty Corporation; the former of these having been the employer of one Malcolm A. Knock, deceased, at the time of his death, and who was alleged to have come to his death through injuries received while such employee of said corporation and in the course of his employment.

The undisputed evidence presented before the commission at the time of the hearing upon said application showed that said Malcolm A. Knock had for several years prior to the time of his death been an employee of the Montezuma Ranch Company, Inc.; the principal place of his employment and activities thereunder being upon the properties of said corporation at Collinsville, along the lower reaches of the Sacramento river. During the month of June, 1924, he was required by his employer to go to McArthur, Cal., for the purpose of inspecting certain peat lands in that region in order to gain information as to the best methods of handling such lands in the interest and for the benefit of his employer. Mr. Knock, with a companion, reached McArthur on the afternoon of June 27, 1924, and proceeded immediately to make the investigation of the lands in question. The elevation of McArthur and of the region traversed by Mr. Knock in the course of such investigation is about 3,300 feet above sea level, and the investigation which he was there to make required that he and his companions should walk over the peat lands in question for a distance of some miles. The walking was difficult and laborious at times over rough country and at others wading through mud and water which frequently came over the tops of their high leather boots, or requiring them to jump over small sloughs, or travel lands trodden with cattle tracks and trails, or walk along levees built of peat and volcanic ash material upon which it was difficult to maintain a footing. The party walked rapidly at first, but after going some distance it was observed that Mr. Knock was lagging behind and that he complained of feeling unwell. The party returned to the place where the night was to be spent and where Mr. Knock, still complaining of feeling unwell, retired early, but spent a bad night, and early the next morning left by automobile for Klamath Falls, upon reaching which a doctor was sent for, who undertook to minister to Mr. Knock, and who advised that he be taken to a lower altitude. After another night, during which his condition grew much worse, the party left the following morning to take the train at Ashland, but on the way Mr. Knock died in the automobile, and his body was shipped from Ashland to his home for burial; no autopsy being held.

Upon the hearing before the commission it was further shown in evidence that prior to taking said trip Mr. Knock had been to all appearances an unusually healthy and active man and that if he was afflicted with any heart trouble prior thereto that fact was unknown to himself, his friends, and his family. Upon the hearing before the commission the only evidence bearing upon the existence of any previous disorder of that nature consisted in reports received from two physicians, resident in Honolulu, who had examined Mr. Knock several years previously, one of whom, whose examination was casual, thought he had been consulted as to some heart condition, but could give no details; and the other of whom, whose examination was thorough, stated that there were no indications of any heart affection at that time. The only other evidence upon that subject was that of Dr. Johnson, whose report upon the case of Mr. Knock as it came under his observation at Klamath Falls was submitted; of Dr. Lund, who had known the deceased personally and intimately for years, but who had never been consulted by him professionally, and who, after reading the report of Dr. Johnson, gave it as his opinion that the deceased had died from acute dilatation of the heart, probably caused by his overexertion at a high altitude, but that there may have been some previous heart trouble of which the deceased was not conscious, and, which the overstrain had brought out; of Dr. Walker, who had known the deceased in his lifetime, but had never attended him professionally, but who also, after reading Dr. Johnson's report, together with a statement of the agreed facts attending the presence of the deceased at McArthur and his sudden attack of heart illness there, gave it as his opinion that the cause of the latter's death was acute dilatation of the heart as the result of the high altitude and of his overexertion; of Dr. Kilgore, a medical expert appointed by the commission, who, upon such report of Dr. Johnson and the statement of agreed facts, gave it as his opinion that the deceased must have been affected with a previous heart affection, with respect to which the altitude or exertion, or both together, may possibly have acted as the last straw to precipitate his collapse a few days, weeks, or months sooner than would otherwise have happened. Upon the foregoing state of the record the commission made and filed its findings and decision, as follows:

"Findings of Fact.

"(1) Malcolm A. Knock was employed as a ranch manager on and about June 27, 1924, at Collinsville, Cal., by defendant Montezuma Ranch Company, Inc. At said time said employer's insurance carrier was United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, and both employer and employee were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 [St. 1917, p. 831]. (2) The said employee died on June 29, 1924; his death being caused by acute dilatation of the heart. (3) Said heart condition was due to a previous diseased condition being precipitated by the employee's situation in a higher altitude than that to which he had long been accustomed, but such situation and precipitation did not constitute an injury arising out of the employment. Exposure to a high altitude of a weakened heart does not constitute an industrial injury.

"Award.

"It is ordered that the applicants take nothing herein."

A petition for rehearing was presented before the commission and was granted, wherein Dr. Kilgore was called as a witness and repeated in substance the statements made in his former report. Dr. Harbaugh, assistant medical director of the Industrial Accident Commission, was also called and examined, after the submission to him of the same matters upon which the evidence of Dr. Kilgore had been predicated. He testified that, in his opinion, the cause of Mr. Knock's death was acute dilatation of the heart; that in his opinion the previous condition of the heart of the deceased could not have been normal, even though he was unaware of any existing heart trouble, and that it was his opinion that in view of such previous condition the overexertion of the deceased was the direct and precipitating factor in causing his death. Upon resubmission a further rehearing was denied. Whereupon the petitioners herein applied to this court for a writ of review.

[1-3] We are of the opinion that the commission, upon the undisputed evidence presented before it, as above set forth, was correct in its findings that the death of said decedent was caused by acute dilatation of the heart, and that "said heart condition was due to a previous diseased condition being precipitated by the employee's situation in a higher altitude than that to which he had long been accustomed"; but we are also of the opinion that the commission was in error in its conclusion that "such situation and precipitation did not constitute an injury arising out of the employment." The further statement of the commission that "exposure to a high altitude of a weakened heart does not constitute an industrial injury" must be read and understood in connection with the undisputed evidence in the case, which shows that such exposure was connected with a marked degree of overexertion at such high altitude, and that such overexertion was immediately attendant upon the employment and occupation in which the decedent was engaged at the time of his attack with said heart trouble. The term "precipitation" employed by the commission in its foregoing findings is a term of well-known signification, meaning the act of precipitating or "to hasten the occurrence of" an event; "the causing to happen or come to a crisis suddenly, unexpectedly or too soon." Webster's New International Dictionary, subject, "Precipitation." In other words, to precipitate is to accelerate a casualty. The foregoing finding of the commission to the effect that the death of the decedent was precipitated by his situation in a higher altitude than that to which he had long been accustomed must therefore be read in the light of the foregoing definition, and also in the light of the undisputed evidence in the case, and when so read the case, in our opinion, is brought directly within the principle declared by this court in the case of G. L. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 587, 594, 200 P. 17, 20, wherein this court said:

> "If the disability, although arising from a chronic heart trouble, was brought on by any strain or excitement incident to the employment, the industrial liability still exists. Acceleration or aggravation of a pre-existing disease is an injury in the occupation causing such acceleration. [Citing cases.] It can hardly be doubted under this rule that, if decedent's incapacity to drive his truck was caused by a heart attack brought on by exertion or sudden shock or excitement incident to his employment on the highway, recovery could be had."

The cases from other jurisdictions which have similar statutes relating to industrial injuries are in full accord with the foregoing views. The case of Patrick v. J. B. Ham Co., 119 Me. 510, 111 A. 912, 13 A. L. R. 427, is an illuminating case, wherein the applicant was stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage while lifting some bags of corn, and wherein it was shown that the decedent prior to the occurrence of his injury was suffering from diseased arteries, predisposing him to cerebral hemorrhage. The Supreme Court of Maine in such a case, and after much citation of authority, held that the fact that the employee was suffering from diseased arteries, predisposing him to cerebral hemorrhage, was of no consequence in the case, and that the fact that he might or would have died in a week or a year from cerebral hemorrhage was immaterial in view of the fact that his actual stroke occurred while he was directly engaged in the overexertion which his immediate employment required. The case of Peoria Co. v. Industrial Acc. Board, 279 Ill. 352, 116 N. E. 651, is also much in point, the court in that case holding, after a review of many cases both in this country and in England, that "even where a workman dies from a pre-existing disease, if the disease is aggravated or accelerated under certain circumstances which can be said to be accidental, his death results from injury by accident," and is therefore compensable—citing 1 Bradbury on Workmen's Compensation, 385; Elliott, Workmen's Compensation (7th Ed.) 9, and cited cases.

It is urged, however, on behalf of the respondents, that the further finding of the commission that "said situation and precipitation did not constitute an injury arising out of the employment" is a finding of ultimate fact and as such is sufficient to sustain its conclusion that the resultant death of the decedent did not constitute an industrial injury and that the applicants were not entitled to an award. If the foregoing finding of the commission is to be held to be a finding of ultimate fact, it cannot be sustained in view of the undisputed evidence in the case as above set forth; and, if the foregoing finding of the commission is to be construed as being a conclusion of law, it cannot be sustained under the foregoing authorities.

[4] The statement of the commission that "exposure to a high altitude of a weakened heart does not constitute an industrial injury" may be conceded to be true; but when such exposure is directly attended with an overexertion on the part of the employee, which the undisputed evidence shows and which the findings when reasonably interpreted disclose, the case is taken out of the rule, and becomes an industrial injury.

It follows from the foregoing that the conclusion and award of the commission "that the applicants take nothing herein" was erroneous and that its decision to that effect must be and the same is hereby annulled. The application for an award is remanded to the commission for further proceedings in accord with the views expressed in this opinion.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

200 Cal. 419

KENNY v. CHRISTIANSON et al.

(Sac. 3954.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1927.)

1. Factors 🔑53—Purchaser of used car from factor, authorized to make sale, held entitled to possession as against former owner, though agent embezzled purchase price.

In action of claim and delivery for recovery of automobile which owner left with factor, giving him authority to sell, defendant who purchased car from agent and paid him therefor held entitled to retain possession despite factor's embezzlement of purchase price.

2. Replevin 🔑12(1)—Defendant claiming right of possession prior to action was not required to prove claim under title distinct from plaintiff's.

Where pleadings in action of claim and delivery to recover automobile raised issue of right to possession, evidence of defendant as to claim of ownership and right to possession held admissible, although not claimed under source of title opposite to plaintiff's, as defendant was not bound by allegation of his ownership and right of possession to show distinct source of title.

3. Factors 🔑66—Finding that former owner delivered automobile to agent for sale held sustained by evidence in former owner's action against purchaser from agent (Civ. Code, § 2026).

In action to recover possession of automobile by former owner, who had turned it over to agent to be sold at stipulated price, against purchaser of automobile, agent having embezzled purchase price, finding that automobile was delivered to agent with instruction to sell held sustained by evidence, though owner undertook to limit agent's authority to merely finding purchaser; agent being factor, under Civ. Code, § 2026.

4. Factors 🔑1—Dealer in used cars who took possession of automobile for purpose of sale held factor (Civ. Code, § 2026).

Person engaged in business of dealer in and seller of used cars at fixed place of business, who took possession of car for owner with agreement to make sale at stipulated price, held factor, under Civ. Code, § 2026, defining factor as agent who in pursuit of independent calling is employed by another to sell property and vested with possession or control thereof or authorized to receive payment therefor.

5. Factors 🔑56—Factor embezzling purchase price of car left with him for sale was nevertheless former owner's agent with respect to purchaser.

Factor who took possession of owner's automobile for purpose of making sale continued to act as agent at time of sale thereof with respect to relations between former owner and purchaser, despite wrongful act in embezzling purchase price.

6. Records 🔑9½, New, vol. 12A Key-No. Series—Purchaser of automobile could claim possession, though no certificate of registration and ownership had been issued (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. [e], as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7).

In action by former owner to recover possession of automobile left with factor and sold to defendant, defendant could assert ownership and right to possession, though certificate of registration and ownership provided for by Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. (e), as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, which was required by act as prerequisite to passing title to automobile, had never been issued to him.

7. Estoppel 🔑110—Estoppel of former owner to rely on Motor Vehicle Act to defeat purchaser's claim to automobile held not barred by purchaser's failure to plead estoppel, where plaintiff's claim asserted under act was merely secondary (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. [e], as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7).

In action for recovery of possession of automobile by former owner against purchaser from factor, purchaser could deny former owner's right to rely upon Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. (e), as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7, providing title shall not be deemed to pass until certificate issues, though purchaser had not pleaded estoppel, where former owner failed to plead Motor Vehicle Act and relied thereon only after main contentions had failed.

8. Estoppel 🔑110—Estoppel need be pleaded only where sole reliance for recovery is based upon claim plaintiff is estopped to assert.

Rules that defense of equitable estoppel must be pleaded applies only where plaintiff bases his sole reliance for recovery upon claim of title which he is estopped to urge.

9. Pleading 🔑79—Defendant need not anticipate contentions of plaintiff not pleaded, which may be asserted when main reliance for recovery has failed.

Defendant is not required by his pleadings to anticipate contentions which plaintiff may seek to rely on when main reliance for right of recovery has failed and which do not appear upon face of complaint.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by A. Kenny against Morris Christianson and another for the recovery of an automobile. From a judgment of the superior court in defendants' favor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John R. Connelly, of Sacramento, for appellant.

William A. Sitton and Elliott, Atkinson & Sitton, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the trial court in favor of the defendant Morris Christianson in an action instituted by the plaintiff for the recovery of the possession of an automobile, or, in the alternative, for the recovery of $600 in case delivery cannot be had. The complaint was in the usual form employed in actions for claim and delivery, wherein the plaintiff alleged that on June 29, 1925, she was and ever since has been and now is the owner and entitled to the possession of said automobile, describing the same, and that on or about August 22, 1925, the defendant had wrongfully taken and since retained said automobile from the possession of the plaintiff, notwithstanding her demand for the return to her of the possession thereof. The defendant in his answer denied, for want of information or belief, that the plaintiff was the owner or entitled to the possession of said personal property, and denied that he had ever taken wrongful possession of the same, or that his detention thereof was unlawful, but on the contrary alleged that from a time prior to the commencement of the action and ever since said time he had been and continued to be the owner of and entitled to the possession thereof.

The cause went to trial before the court upon the issues thus presented, and upon the conclusion of the trial the court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, in the course of which the court found that the plaintiff on or about July 23, 1925, was the owner and in possession of said car, but that on or about said date she had delivered the same to one Pat E. Patterson in the city of Sacramento, where said Patterson was then and there engaged in the business of selling secondhand or used cars, and had instructed Patterson to sell said automobile, and that said car had thereupon been placed upon the premises used by Patterson in the conduct of his business, and, with other cars of said Patterson, was offered and exposed for sale; that the defendant Christianson, while said car was thus in the possession of Patterson and was being, under his said authority and at his said place of business, offered and exposed for sale, had purchased the said automobile from Patterson on the 22d day of August, 1925, and had thereupon fully paid to him the purchase price thereof, and that thereupon Patterson delivered to said purchaser said car, and that Christianson had ever since continued to be the owner and in rightful possession of the same. The court also in its findings expressly negatived the averments of the plaintiff's complaint to the effect that Christianson's possession and detention of said personal property was wrongful. As a conclusion of law the court found that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief in said action. From the judgment accordingly entered the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The first contention of the plaintiff is that the trial court was in error in permitting the defendant to introduce certain evidence in support of his claim of ownership and of the right to possession of said car. This contention is based upon the appellant's assertion that, since the defendant by the form of his pleading asserted title to said personal property derived from some source in opposition to and contrary to the source of plaintiff's title, and since the evidence offered by him failed to show such derivation, the court was in error in permitting him to introduce the same. This contention is utterly without merit. The defendant's asserted ownership and right of possession of said machine being alleged by him to exist from a time prior to the commencement of said action, he was entitled to show any source of his said title, whether derived from the plaintiff or not. The pleadings, while simple and brief, were in the usual form of the pleadings and denials in action for the recovery of the possession of personal property, and the issue presented thereby was as to which of the parties to the action was entitled to the possession of such property at the time of the commencement of the action; and the trial court was therefore justified in considering any proof which bore upon this issue.

[3] Appellant's next contention is that the finding of the trial court to the effect that the plaintiff had delivered the possession of said property to Pat E. Patterson with instruction to sell the same was not supported by the evidence. The most that can be said of this contention is that the evidence upon that subject is conflicting. When the automobile was delivered to Patterson by the plaintiff or her agent he signed and delivered to the agent of the plaintiff, who delivered the same to her, a receipt which showed that he had "received of Kenny Collection Agency one Cadillac tour to be sold for $600 net." The evidence further showed that subsequently to the issuance of said receipt the plaintiff had, through her duly authorized agents, reduced the price to $450. The evidence further showed that at the time of the delivery of said car to Patterson he was engaged in the business of a dealer in and seller of used cars at a fixed place of business, and was in fact a factor within the definition of that term as set forth in section 2026 of the Civil Code.

[4, 5] While it is true that the plaintiff, through her testimony and that of her agent, undertook to limit the authority of Patterson to that of merely finding a purchaser for the car, the evidence on the whole, we think, sufficiently discloses that Patterson was so far invested with the possession and control over the car and with authority to sell the same for the designated price as to be entitled as such factor to deliver possession of the car to such purchaser as would pay the same, and to execute a bill of sale to such purchaser. These several acts Patterson did in his capacity as such factor and as the plaintiff's agent, but the evidence shows that, having done so, he absconded without having paid over to the plaintiff the amount received by him from Christianson for the purchase price in full of said car. In so doing, however, he continued to be the agent of the plaintiff, and for his wrongful act in the embezzlement of the purchase price of the car the defendant Christianson was in no wise responsible. This case as to the foregoing aspects of it would seem to come squarely within the decision in the case of Carter v. Rowley, 59 Cal. App. 486, 211 P. 267, wherein in a well-reasoned opinion that court held that the purchaser of an automobile under circumstances much similar to those herein presented was entitled to retain or recover the possession of the personal property thus acquired.

[6] Plaintiff's next contention is that the defendant was not entitled to assert his ownership and right of possession of said automobile in this action for the reason that the evidence disclosed that there had never been issued to him the certificate of registration and ownership provided for in section 45, subd. (e) of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 402), which section provides for the issuance by the motor vehicle department of such certificate of ownership and registration upon every transfer of title or of an interest in a motor vehicle, and further provides that until such certificates are issued "delivery of such vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title thereto shall be deemed not to have passed and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose." The scope and meaning of this provision of the Motor Vehicle Act was before this court in the case of Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435, wherein this court held that while a compliance with said section and subdivision was essential to complete the transfer of title to the motor vehicle sought to be transferred and delivered to a purchaser, the failure of the transferee of the ownership of such car to procure the registration certificate required by the terms of said act did not render his right to the possession thereof so incomplete as to make the assertion thereof unavailing to him in an action against him by the vendor of the automobile thus actually sold and delivered to a purchaser in good faith and for a full consideration. In so deciding this court referred with approval to the case of Boles v. Stiles, 188 Cal. 304, 204 P. 848, wherein this court held that where an owner of an automobile had by his own act and agreement placed another in the immediate and exclusive possession thereof, he was not in position thereafter, in an action for claim and delivery, to invoke the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act above referred to. A similar ruling was made by the appellate court in the case of Chucovich v. S. F. Securities Corp., 60 Cal. App. 700, 214 P. 263, that court basing its ruling upon the decision in the case of Boles v. Stiles, supra. In the face of these authorities we are constrained to hold that the plaintiff was not entitled to rely upon the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act in question to sustain her own title or to defeat the defendant's right of possession based upon the foregoing transaction.

[7, 8] The appellant makes the final contention that the defendant's claim that the plaintiff is not entitled to rely upon the aforesaid provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act to defeat the defendant's claim is a defense based upon estoppel, and that the defendant was not entitled to the benefit of such defense because of his failure to plead such estoppel. In making this contention plaintiff relies upon the familiar rule that the defense of an equitable estoppel is one which must be pleaded. This rule, however, has only application to cases wherein the plaintiff bases his sole reliance for his recovery in said action upon a claim of title which he is estopped to urge.

[9] Where, however, a plaintiff, as in this case, bases her alleged right to recovery in the first instance upon the original claim of ownership of the property in question and upon her contention that the person through whom the defendant acquired title to said property had no authority from her to dispose of the same, the defendant is not required in his pleadings to anticipate such other contentions as the plaintiff may seek to rely upon when her main reliance for her right of recovery has failed her, and which do not appear upon the face of her complaint. In such cases the defendant may await the assertion by the plaintiff in her proof of such additional foundation for her right of recovery and may then oppose the same with his evidence of an equitable estoppel.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

200 Cal. 434

MOTT v. CLINE. (Sac. 3727.)★

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1927. Rehearing Denied March 17, 1927.)

1. Aliens 🔑6(1)—Assignee's right to specific performance under option to purchase agricultural land held not impaired by fact that assignor was Chinese subject incapable of acquiring real estate (Const. 1879, art. 2, § 1; St. 1913, p. 206; Alien Land Act 1920).

In action for specific performance by assignee of option for purchase of leased premises, assignee's rights were not impaired by fact that lease and option were originally given to subject of China, barred from holding agricultural land under Const. 1879, art. 2, § 1, making Chinese ineligible as electors and alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206, Alien Land Act 1920 [St. 1921, p. *l*xxxiii]), where assignment was made before escheat proceedings were instituted, as purpose of alien land laws is not to confiscate property, but to prevent aliens incapable of becoming citizens from holding land.

2. Aliens 🔑13—Treaty with China, giving Chinese subjects privileges of most favored nation, did not prevent application of alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206; Alien Land Act 1920; Const. 1879, art. 2, § 1).

Alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206, and Alien Land Act 1920 [St. 1921, p. *l*xxxiii]) barring aliens, ineligible to citizenship under Const. 1879, art. 2, § 1, from acquiring real property, held not in violation of articles 2 and 3 of existing treaty between the United States and China (22 Stat. 826), providing Chinese subjects now in the United States shall be accorded privileges of most favored nation, as treaty followed California constitutional provision excluding Chinese as citizens, and was not intended to give Chinese subjects right to acquire agricultural land.

3. Treaties 🔑7—Treaties must be construed with respect to existing situation, difficulties sought to be corrected, and supplemental treaties.

Treaties must be construed with respect to situation existing at time of ratification, difficulties sought to be corrected as shown by treaty, and modifications agreed on in supplemental treaties.

4. Aliens 🔑13—China, by consenting to ineligibility of subjects to become citizens, conceded right of United States to fix their status as to acquisition of agricultural lands.

By consenting to ineligibility of its subjects to become citizens under treaty between China and United States proclaimed in 1881 (22 Stat. 826) and treaty of 1894 (28 Stat. 1210), prohibiting Chinese immigration for 10 years, China conceded right of United States to define or fix status of its subjects as to acquisition of agricultural lands, despite use of "most favored nation" clause with regard to privileges and immunities of Chinese subjects.

5. Aliens 🔑12(4)—Right of alien to lease and occupy buildings for trade does not include right to hold title to land for agricultural purposes.

Right of alien to carry on trade or lease, and occupy houses, warehouses, or shops, or to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, does not include right to own or lease, or have title to land for agricultural purposes.

6. Aliens 🔑10—Alien land laws, prohibiting persons ineligible to citizenship from acquiring land, held within states' police power (St. 1913, p. 206; Alien Land Act 1920; Const. 1879, art. 2, § 1).

Alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206, Alien Land Act 1920 [St. 1921, p. *l*xxxiii]) held not in conflict with federal or state Constitutions, being lawful exercise of states' police power to prevent ownership of land of state by aliens who cannot become citizens under Const. 1879, art. 2, § 1.

7. Aliens 🔑10—Chinese subject, holding lease, could not enforce option therein to purchase real estate, though lease was executed prior to adoption of alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206; Alien Land Act 1920, §§ 2, 7).

Ten-year lease, executed to Chinese subject with option to purchase land at any time during life of lease, though executed immediately prior to alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206), could not give lessee right to compel specific performance under option, in view of Alien Land Act 1920, §§ 2, 7 (St. 1921, pp. *l*xxxiii, *l*xxxiv), providing any real property hereafter acquired in fee in violation of provisions of act by any alien ineligible to citizenship should escheat to state; statute being intended to prevent acquisition of fee in lands, regardless of preexisting contracts.

8. Aliens 🔑10—Whether alien land acts prevented acquisition of fee under pre-existing contracts depends upon legislative intent as related to police power (St. 1913, p. 206; Alien Land Act 1920).

Whether alien land laws (St. 1913, p. 206, Alien Land Act 1920 [St. 1921, p. *l*xxxiii]) prevented acquisition by aliens of fee in lands under pre-existing contracts or options, depends on legislative intent, and on whether objects sought to be attained are within police power.

9. Constitutional law 🔑81—Police power cannot be barred or suspended by contract or irrepealable law.

Police power, being in its nature continuous, cannot be barred or suspended by contract or irrepealable law, or bartered away by express contract.

10. Constitutional law 🔑117—Contracts are made subject to exercise of state's police power.

It is presumed that parties contract in contemplation of right of state to exercise its police power, which right cannot be nullified by making contracts inconsistent with enforcement of such power.

★Rehearing denied

11. Aliens 🔑6(1)—Owner of agricultural land and Chinese lessee taking option were charged with notice of existing and imminent laws regarding alien ownership of land (St. 1913, p. 206).

Owner and Chinese subject, leasing agricultural land and giving option thereon immediately prior to adoption of alien land law (St. 1913, p. 206), were charged with notice of state's police power and with notice of steps likely to be taken with regard to alien ownership of land.

12. Conspiracy 🔑28—Assignment by Chinese subject of option to purchase agricultural land to eligible person held not conspiracy to effect transfer of land in violation of alien land law (Alien Land Act 1920, § 10).

Chinese subject, who took lease to agricultural land for 10-year period, with option during life of lease did not violate Alien Land Act 1920, § 10 (St. 1921, p. lxxxv), making it crime to conspire to effect transfer of real property, resulting in acquisition of title by aliens not eligible to citizenship, by assignment of lease and option to assignee eligible to hold land.

13. Aliens 🔑6(2)—Transfer, made in violation of alien land law, is defeasible as to state only (Alien Land Act 1920).

Transfer made in violation of Alien Land Act 1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii), prohibiting acquisition of land by aliens incapable of citizenship, is defeasible as to state only by proceeding by Attorney General or district attorney to have property escheated.

14. Aliens 🔑6(1)—Alien whose title to land is defeasible by state may nevertheless convey good title to eligible person before power of escheat is exercised (Alien Land Act 1920, § 7).

Where title to real property is defeasible by reason of owner's status as alien incapable of citizenship, owner may nevertheless convey good title to person eligible to hold property, providing power of state in escheat proceeding under Alien Land Act 1920, § 7 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiv), has not been invoked.

15. Vendor and purchaser 🔑214(2)—In suit for specific performance by assignee of option, option held assignable, where no relation of personal trust or confidence was involved (Civ. Code, § 1044).

In suit for specific performance by assignee, exercising option within time allowed, option, though accompanying 10-year lease of premises, held assignable, independent of lease, where severable, and where no features of personal trust or confidence were reposed in any of original parties, and only payment of money was required, in view of Civ. Code, § 1044, providing property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided; option not being made nonassignable by any Code provision.

16. Specific performance 🔑97(1)—Assignee of option contained in lease could not require specific performance without tender of rent due under lease to time of offer, in addition to stipulated purchase price (Civ. Code, § 1935).

In suit for specific performance by assignee of person holding option ~~in~~ connection with lease of premises for 10-year period, tender of purchase price stated in option without proportionate amount of rent for 4-month period, bringing rent up to date to time of tender, held insufficient under Civ. Code, § 1935, providing that, when hiring is terminated before time originally agreed on, hirer must pay proportion for such use as he has actually made; failure to tender rent with offer to purchase being complete bar to demand of specific performance of option.

17. Specific performance 🔑119—Assignee of option, seeking specific performance, was required to prove owner waived insufficient amount of tender.

In action for specific performance, where tender by assignee of amount required under option contained in lease was insufficient, because no offer was made to pay rental up to date of tender, lessor's waiver of insufficiency of tender by failure to object was not shown, in absence of any evidence of such waiver, as burden is on party asserting waiver to introduce evidence of facts constituting it.

18. Specific performance 🔑101—Where insufficiency of tender was waived, assignee of option could nevertheless have specific performance on payment of total amount due.

Where insufficiency of tender under option contained in lease was waived by lessor, assignee of option who made tender could have decree of specific performance directing conveyance on payment of stipulated purchase price, together with proportionate amount of rent due of which he failed to make tender.

19. Specific performance 🔑131—Where insufficiency of tender was not waived, judgment for specific performance erroneously awarded assignee of option could not be modified to include total amount due, after time for exercising option had expired.

Where, in action for specific performance by assignee of option contained in lease, lessor did not waive insufficiency of tender, not including proportionate amount of rent due, and where period allowed for its exercise had expired, no relief could be given for modification of judgment to include amount of rent which should have been tendered, as such holding would extend right to compel specific performance of option beyond termination time agreed to.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action for specific performance by R. B. Mott against J. W. Cline. On hearing after judgment in the District Court of Appeal, Third District, reversing the judgment of the superior court in plaintiff's favor. Judgment of the superior court reversed.

Conley, Conley & Conley, of Fresno, Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, Lindsay & Conley, of Fresno, Harry I. Maxim, and John J. Coghlan, both of Madera, and A. B. Bianchi, Manson & Allan and Albert H. Elliot, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ, for appellant.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, John L. McVey, of Oakland, Edwin V. McKenzie, of San Francisco, and Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Haynes, all of Stockton, amici curiæ, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This action was brought by the assignee of a lessee who was also the holder of an option against the owner, and lessor of the let premises to compel specific performance of the option provision contained in the lease providing for the purchase by said lessee of the demised premises at any time during the term of the lease. Said assignee, who relies solely upon the assignment of the option to purchase, made a tender between rent days of the purchase price as agreed upon by the owner and lessee, and demanded the execution and delivery to him of a deed of the demised lands. The owner and lessor refused to comply with the demand to convey. The answer raised the question of the sufficiency of the tender. Judgment went for the plaintiff (assignee), hence this appeal.

The lands in suit are agricultural lands, and are situate in the county of Madera, this state. On January 13, 1913, appellant, owner and lessor of said lands, entered into a written contract of lease with Ah Chue, a person of Mongolian blood, and a subject of the empire of China, and alleged to be within the inhibitory provisions of Statutes 1913, p. 206, and other subsequent alien land acts, all of which were adopted subsequent to the execution of the lease contract containing the option to purchase, the assignability of which is challenged.

The term of said lease was for a period of 10 years, commencing February 1, 1914, almost one year after its execution, at an annual rental of $200 for the first 2 years, and $250 a year for the remainder of the term, payments to be made on the 20th day of December of each year, commencing with December 20, 1914. By the provisions of said lease all improvements placed on the demised premises by either party were to belong to the lessor, and, if the lessee should be in default at any time in the payment of rent or in the performance of any other covenant of the lease, the lessor reserved the right to terminate the lease and retake possession of the premises. The option provision is contained in the following paragraph of the lease:

> "And the said party of the first part, his heirs and assigns, does hereby covenant and agree that the said party of the second part, or his legal representatives, paying the rental herein provided for, and keeping and performing the several covenants herein provided for, shall at all times during the full term of this lease have, hold, and fully enjoy the said premises with its appurtenances without let or hinderance of or by the said party of the first part, his heirs or assigns, or any other person whomsoever. First party agrees to sell said premises at any time during the term hereof to said second party for the sum of $4,100."

The lessee, on February 1, 1914, went into possession, and cleared some 30 acres of land during his tenancy, and paid all installments of rent, except the installment payable on December 20, 1923, which was not due at the time the complaint was filed, to wit, June 18, 1923. On May 26, 1923, said Ah Chue executed the following instrument:

> "I, Ah Chue, * * * do hereby sell, assign, transfer, set over, grant, bargain, sell, convey and confirm unto R. B. Mott * * * all of my right and option to purchase said real property set forth in said lease wherein it is provided that the said J. W. Cline 'agrees to sell said premises at any time during the term' of said lease 'for the sum of $4,100.' It is intended hereby to subrogate the said R. B. Mott to every interest which I have in said option included in said lease and to grant and assign the said option to the said R. B. Mott."

No claim is made that the leasehold was assigned, and no attempt was made to put respondent in possession as a subtenant. The lessee, in fact, continued in possession of the premises under the lease. By a separate paper Mott and Ah Chue agreed as follows:

> "I will, as soon as delivery of a conveyance thereof is made by the said Cline, endeavor to sell said property at a profit and in the event of a sale will pay over to you [Ah Chue] one-half of my profit on such sale. It is understood that you are to consent to a cancellation of your lease of such property to any such purchaser, should such purchaser desire such cancellation. * * * All expenses to be paid by R. B. Mott."

On May 28, 1923, Mott served notice upon appellant, Cline, of the assignment of said option, and made a tender to him of the sum of $4,100, and demanded a conveyance of said premises. The grounds of Cline's refusal, if any were stated, do not appear in the record. The points that the rentals were not fair and reasonable, and that $4,100 was not the fair and reasonable market value of the lands at the time the lease and contract were executed, are not tenable. It was stipulated at the trial that $6,700 was then the fair market value of the premises.

[1] The lease contract was executed before the passage of any of the inhibitory alien land acts subsequently adopted by this state, and before there was any law interdicting the ownership of land or any interest therein by any class of aliens. The alienage of Ah Chue was put in issue by the answer, and it is the contention of appellant that the option provision is in violation of the 1913 act, supra, and the initiative Alien Land Act of 1920 (Stats. 1921, p. lxxxiii), enacted pursuant to the police power of the state, and is therefore void. This being so, it is further argued, the option was neither assignable by Ah Chue nor enforceable against him. It is further contended that the lease contract is not severable or divisible on equitable grounds, and to so hold would tend to impair the rights of the lessor to the rentals reserved, as the title would be transferred out of the lessor. It is also made grounds of complaint that Ah Chue occupied the premises for a period of about 4 months immediately prior to the assignment of the option, for which period he paid no rent to the lessor, and none has since been paid or tendered for such occupancy by him or any one in his behalf. His occupancy seems to have continued undisturbed after the execution of the assignment. Aside from the assignability of the option, the sufficiency of the tender, and a few questions of pleading, the case is one hinging largely upon the application of the police power of the state and the construction to be given the statutes germane to the subject.

Laws affecting the status of aliens in California are not of recent origin. Long prior to the adoption of laws declaring certain races ineligible to own real property in this state, the Constitution provided that no native of China was eligible to citizenship. By article 2, § 1, of the Constitution of 1879, it was provided that every native male citizen of the United States who should have acquired the right of citizenship by virtue of the treaty of Querataro, and every male naturalized citizen thereof who should have become such 90 days prior to any election, of the age of 21 years, and who should have resided within the state, county, and precinct for the period of time therein prescribed, should be entitled to vote at all elections held therein, provided further that "no native of China, * * * shall ever exercise the privileges of an elector." The above provision prescribing ineligibility has never been removed from our Constitution. By the Statutes of 1913 it is provided that all aliens eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States may acquire, possess, enjoy, transmit, and inherit real property, or any interest therein, in this state in the same manner and to the same extent as citizens of the United States, except as otherwise provided. It is further provided that all aliens not eligible to citizenship may acquire, possess, enjoy, and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this state in the manner, and to the extent, and for the purposes, prescribed by any treaty then existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise, and, in addition thereto, lease lands in this state for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding 3 years. If in any probate proceeding it should appear that any heir or devisee is barred by reason of the provisions of the act to take real property which said heir or devisee would have been entitled to take but for the provision of said act, the court, instead of ordering distribution of such real property to said heir or devisee, shall order a sale thereof, and the proceeds thereof shall be distributed to said heir or devisee in lieu of said real property. Any real property thereafter acquired in fee in violation of the provisions of the act shall escheat to the state of California upon a proceeding instituted by the Attorney General as by the act provided. The provisions of the act do not apply to any real property acquired after its passage in the enforcement of any lien or in the satisfaction of any lien existing upon said real property at the time of the adoption of the statute so long as such real property remains the property of the alien acquiring the same by the enforcement of his lien. Any leasehold or other interest in real property less than the fee acquired in violation of the provisions of the act shall escheat to the state. It was but a short time before the act of 1913 became a law that the lease contract was executed. In fact, it was executed during a time when there was much public discussion in the state as to the wisdom of the passage of alien land laws. The term of the lease did not commence until some months after the Act of 1913 became effective.

[2] The applicability of the alien land laws to subjects of China is challenged by respondent herein. We have not been cited to, nor have we found, any state or federal decision construing the alien land laws with respect to the treaty with China. It is contended that while the alien land laws of the state do not violate any treaty agreement between the United States and the empire of Japan, a different situation exists as to subjects of China by force of the language used in the treaty agreement with the power; it being different in phraseology from the treaty agreement with Japan. It is argued that, by the provisions of articles 2 and 3 of the existing treaty between the two nations, proclaimed October 5, 1881 (22 U. S. Stats. at L., p. 826), subjects of China cannot be brought within the inhibitory provisions of the alien land laws of the state without effecting a violation of our treaty agreement. This argument is based mainly upon the clauses of said articles 2 and 3, which according to Chinese subjects, as therein classified, the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to "the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation." Said articles in their order read:

"Article II.

"Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants or from curiosity, * * * and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation. (Italics supplied.)

"Article III.

"If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty." (Italics supplied.)

[3] A supplemental treaty concerning commercial intercourse and judicial procedure was ratified July 19, 1881 (22 Stat. 828), by the two nations, but it guarantees no rights to the subjects of China to own or occupy real property. The riotous conditions that existed in some of the states of the Pacific slope as a protest against Chinese immigration, which was pouring into this state and other coast states in menacing numbers are matters of state history, and were considerations inseparably connected with our treaty agreements with China, and were the motive of much subsequent legislation. Years prior to the ratification of said treaty the people of the state of California adopted a new Constitution (1879), in which it was provided that no native of China could ever thereafter become an elector of this state. The adoption of statutes withholding from the Chinese rights and privileges granted to the subjects of other nations followed. Conflicts involving violence to the person were not infrequent. As residents of this state they were in disfavor. Their testimony in the earlier years of our statehood was not receivable in courts of justice in certain trials and proceedings. It was claimed by their government that they were denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the federal and state Constitutions. At the time the treaty of 1881 was adopted, they were not generally engaged in agricultural pursuits, and were not landholders, but mainly contract laborers, who had been brought into this country originally by the builders of the great transcontinental railroads to be used as laborers in the construction of said railroads. They settled in districts which became greatly overpopulated, and later engaged in the laundry business or mercantile pursuits. It was not until later that they engaged in the vegetable and garden truck business, or had any contact with the soil as producers for themselves, and there was no threatened menace by reason of their ownership of or dominion over the agricultural lands of the state until a much later period. The proclamation and preamble of the treaty very clearly show that it was meant as a purely immigration and labor treaty, and it must be construed with respect to the situation that existed at the time it was ratified and the difficulties sought to be corrected as shown by the treaty itself and by modifications that were agreed upon in supplemental treaties. The proclamation declares it to be a treaty for the modification of existing treaties between the two nations "by providing for the future regulation of Chinese immigration into the United States." The preamble, which is declaratory of the motive and object of the treaty, provides:

"Whereas the Government of the United States, because of the constantly increasing immigration of Chinese laborers to the territory of the United States, and the embarrassments consequent upon such immigration, now desires to negotiate a modification of the existing treaties," etc.

At this time Chinese subjects were expressly forever denied the privileges of citizenship, and, as they claimed, the equal protection of the laws. The rights, privileges, and immunities accorded them by treaty were such only as were specified by the treaty, to wit, personal security and protection in their property rights against spoliation. The treaty is no more than it purports to be, and, aside from extending certain privileges and immunities to students, travelers, and other persons who were temporarily within our territory, was intended primarily for the protection of alien Chinese laborers. No rights as to the acquirement, enjoyment, or occupancy of agricultural lands were granted by the treaty. That subject was not germane to the purposes of the treaty. The subsequent exclusion of Chinese immigration into this country was foreshadowed by the proclamation of the treaty, and eligibility as owners of the soil finds not the slightest guaranty in either the spirit or language of the treaty. Any other conclusion would be repugnant to the conditions that were terminated by the treaty agreement.

[4, 5] In 1894, "in view of the antagonism and much deprecated and serious disorders to which the presence of Chinese laborers has given rise in certain parts of the United States," the governments of China and the United States, by a convention covenant (28 U. S. Stats. at L., p. 1210), agreed upon articles whereby it was provided that the coming, except under conditions not affecting the decision of the question before us, of Chinese to the United States should be absolutely prohibited for a period of 10 years, and said agreement should continue for another like period, unless either government should at the expiration of the first 10-year period give formal notice to the other of its termination. Said articles further provided that Chinese then in the United States under the treaty of 1881 "shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens." No right to acquire real property is conferred thereby. By consenting to the ineligibility of its subjects to become citizens, China also conceded the right of the United States to define or fix the status of its subjects as to the acquisition of agricultural lands. The "most favored nation" clause is not used in a sense materially different from the language used in our treaty with Japan, entered into in 1911 (37 Stat. 1504), which treaty has been construed as not giving to the subjects of that empire any right to own or lease agricultural land. The right to carry on trade or to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops, or to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, or to do anything necessary for trade, cannot be said to include the right to own or lease, or to have any title to, or interest in, land for agricultural purposes. Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U. S. 197, 44 S. Ct. 15, 68 L. Ed. 255, and cases therein cited; Webb v. O'Brien, 263 U. S. 313, 44 S. Ct. 112, 68 L. Ed. 318; Porterfield v. Webb, 195 Cal. 71, 231 P. 554. It may well be said here, as was said in Webb v. O'Brien, supra, construing the treaty with Japan:

> "The treaty gives no permission to enjoy, use or have the benefit of land for agricultural purposes. The privileges granted by the act are carefully limited to those prescribed in the treaty. The act as a whole evidences legislative intention that ineligible aliens shall not be permitted to have or enjoy any privilege in respect of the use or the benefit of land for agricultural purposes. And this view is supported by the circumstances and negotiations leading up to the making of the treaty."

In addition, it may be said that the interpretation which we have given the treaty has for many years been acquiesced in by the nation affected thereby.

The alien land acts are not repugnant to any article of the federal or state Constitutions, and do not impinge upon the treaty agreements existing between this nation and China.

[6] We have set forth at some length the history of our treaty agreements and our commercial, industrial and political relations with China and her subjects, together with the constitutional and statutory regulations bearing upon those subjects, to show that there is no substantial ground upon which a claim may be based that it was the intention of either the state or federal governments to grant to native-born subjects of China the right of acquiring the title to agricultural lands. The spirit and scheme of our state and federal regulations are repugnant to such a claim.

[7, 8] We now come to a consideration of the question whether or not the alien land acts are retroactive so far as the option is concerned. This question depends largely upon the legislative intent, and upon whether or not the objects sought to be attained are within the police power of the state. There is no direct language upon this point, but there is general language which necessarily implies an intention to prevent an executory contract from ripening into a fee simple. Section 2 of the act of 1920 provides:

> "All aliens other than those mentioned in section one of this act may acquire, possess, enjoy and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this state, in the manner and to the extent and for the purpose prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise."

Section 7 provides:

> "Any real property hereafter acquired in fee in violation of the provisions of this act by any alien mentioned in section two of this act, * * * shall escheat to, and become and remain the property of the State of California. * * *" (Italics supplied.)

The treaty confers no right to acquire a fee in agricultural lands. An assumption of rights not granted by the treaty is a violation of the act. It was the purpose of the act to cut off instanter the right to thereafter acquire the fee. It is not to be presumed from a consideration of the evil to be remedied that the state so tied its hands as to be utterly helpless and unable to protect itself against the passing of large and fertile acreages of land into the hands of ineligible aliens, who, in anticipation of adverse legislation, should contract with respect to the exercise of an option to purchase said lands. If this were so, the fee of the state's best lands could have been acquired by the persons proscribed between the day the act was introduced in the Legislature and the day on which it became effective. Surely sovereignty is not so impotent as to be unable to protect itself from a menacing situation.

[9, 10] "The police power, being in its nature a continuous one, must ever be reposed somewhere, and cannot be barred or suspended by contract or irrepealable law. It cannot be bartered away even by express contract." 5 Cal. Jur. 689; Laurel Hill Cemetery v. San Francisco, 152 Cal. 464, 93 P. 70, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 14 Ann. Cas. 1080. It is to be presumed that parties contract in contemplation of the inherent right of the state to exercise unhampered the police power that the sovereign always reserves to itself for the protection of peace, safety, health, and morals. Its effect cannot be nullified in advance by making contracts inconsistent with its enforcement. Freund, Police Power, § 556; 5 Cal. Jur. 778; Louisville & Nashville R. R. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 265, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671; Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Ry. Co. v. Schubert, 224 U. S. 603, 32 S. Ct. 589, 56 L. Ed. 911; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 26 S. Ct. 127, 50 L. Ed. 274; Pinney & Boyle Co. v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp., 168 Cal. 12, 141 P. 620, L. R. A. 1915C, 282, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 471; Kentucky Traction & Terminal Co. v. Murray, 176 Ky. 593, 195 S. W. 1119; Raymond Lumber Co. v. Raymond L. & W. Co., 92 Wash. 330, 159 P. 133, L. R. A. 1917C, 574; Massillon Savings & Loan Co. v. Imperial Finance Co., 114 Ohio St. 523, 151 N. E. 645; Shrader v. Steubenville, East Liverpool, etc., Co., 84 W. Va. 1, 99 S. E. 207.

[11, 12] Both Cline, the owner of the land, and Ah Chue, the optionee, entered into the contract, charged not only with notice of what the state had the right to do in the exercise of the police power, but also with notice of what it had done by constitutional and statutory laws affecting ineligible persons, and what in all probability it was most likely to do under a situation that was becoming acute as to alien ownership of land.

It has been firmly settled by the decisions of both federal and state courts (Webb v. O'Brien, supra; Terrace v. Thompson, supra; Porterfield v. Webb, supra, and many others to the same effect) that the adoption of the alien land acts was a lawful exercise of the police power. In fact, it is the exercise of that power in its highest and truest sense. The ownership of the soil by persons morally bound by obligations of citizenship is vital to the political existence of a state. It directly affects its welfare and safety. In Terrace v. Thompson, supra, the following observation is quoted approvingly:

> "It is obvious that one who is not a citizen and cannot become one lacks an interest in, and the power to effectually work for the welfare of, the state, and, so lacking, the state may rightfully deny him the right to own and lease real estate within its boundaries. If one incapable of citizenship may lease or own real estate, it is within the realm of possibility that every foot of land within the state might pass to the ownership or possession of noncitizens." Terrace v. Thompson (D. C.) 274 F. 841, 849. It is further declared by the high authority last cited that "the allegiance of the farmers to the state directly affects its strength."
>
> "At common law, aliens, though not permitted to take land by operation of law, may take by the act of the parties; but they have no capacity to hold against the state, and the land so taken may be escheated to the state." Webb v. O'Brien, supra; Doe v. Robertson, 11 Wheat. 332, 6 L. Ed. 488; Suwa v. Johnson, 54 Cal. App. 119, 203 P. 414.

It is appellant's view that the option provision has been rendered void by section 10 of the act of 1920, which makes it a crime punishable as a misdemeanor or felony to conspire to effect a transfer of real property or an interest therein in violation of the law. This is the only act that is made a public offense and penalized by imprisonment or fine or by both. In re Akado, 188 Cal. 739, 207 P. 245. The exaction imposed for all other violations of the act inhibiting transfers is that the conveyance is rendered void as to the state, and the real property escheats to the state upon action brought by the Attorney General or district attorney of the county in which the violation occurs. Cockrill v. People, 268 U. S. 258, 45 S. Ct. 490, 69 L. Ed. 944. Our statute follows the common law as to the escheat proceedings. It cannot be said that Ah Chue violated any provision of the conspiracy section.

The acts are designed to keep agricultural lands in the control of citizens or such persons as are eligible to citizenship under the state and federal laws. The option agreement was entered into at a time when there was, and for a number of years prior thereto had been, a very general public demand for the adoption of laws rendering persons ineligible to citizenship incapable of owning, leasing, or occupying agricultural lands within this state. The act of 1913 was introduced in the Legislature as a proposed law about the same day the lease containing the option was signed. It became a law within a few months thereafter, and before the 10-year term, as stipulated in the lease, commenced. Ah Chue occupied the lands 9 years and 4 months before making an assignment of the option. Within this period the initiative act of 1920 was adopted. Had the assignment of the option been made to an ineligible person, we would hold that the assignment violated the act of 1920, and consequently a court of equity would not compel specific performance of an act forbidden by law. Likewise we are of the opinion that the ineligible alien could not have compelled a conveyance to himself. Ales v. Epstein, 283 Mo. 434, 222 S. W. 1012; Case v. Kelly, 133 U. S. 21, 10 S. Ct. 216, 33 L. Ed. 513; Suwa v. Johnson, supra. The policy of the state forbade it. But here we have quite a different question presented. The ineligible person is not attempting to transfer any right or interest whatsoever to another who is likewise ineligible. The diverted stream is turned back into its legitimate channel. Respondent Mott, who is Ah Chue's assignee, is a person eligible to exercise all the rights and privileges of citizenship. As a matter of fact, the assignment is in furtherance of the purposes of the law. The fact that Ah Chue may receive a portion of the proceeds of the transaction is not at all material to the question. All of the alien land laws that have been passed provide that, if an ineligible alien is an heir or devisee under a will, the real property may not be distributed to him, but it must be sold and the proceeds distributed to such ineligible alien. The law does not mean to confiscate property, but to escheat it to the state in cases of violations of the acts in a proceeding brought for that purpose.

[13, 14] It was held in Suwa v. Johnson, supra, supported by a citation of authority from almost every jurisdiction of the nation, that under statutes forbidding ownership of land by aliens an alien grantee takes a defeasible estate free from attack by any one except the government in escheat proceedings. See, also, Estate of Yano, 188 Cal. 645, 650, 206 P. 995; In re Akado, 188 Cal. 739, 742, 207 P. 245; Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 603, 3 L. Ed. 453; Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208, 25 L. Ed. 603. It is a governmental affair, a transfer made in violation of the act being defeasible as to the state only. It is quite well settled that, in case title to real property is defeasible by reason of the alienage of the owner, and said owner, before the power of the state is invoked in an escheat proceeding, conveys the property to a person eligible to hold it, as Mott unquestionably is, the infirmity of title is removed. Manuel v. Wulff, 152 U. S. 505, 14 S. Ct. 651, 38 L. Ed. 532; State ex rel. Atkinson v. World Real Estate Commercial Co., 46 Wash. 104, 89 P. 471; Oregon Mortgage Co., Ltd., v. Carstens, 16 Wash. 165, 47 P. 421, 35 L. R. A. 841; 2 C. J. 1053.

A case quite in point is State ex rel. Atkinson, Attorney General, v. World Real Estate Commercial Co. et al., supra. There an ineligible alien conveyed real property to the World Real Estate Commercial Company in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the state of Washington. The court, in passing upon an objection similar to the one made here, held that an alien holding lands in that state by purchase under a defeasible title, subject to attack on the part of the state, might by deed transfer a good title to a third person entitled to receive and hold it, provided no proceeding had theretofore been taken by the state for the purpose of declaring a forfeiture or escheat. Numerous other cases are to the same effect.

[15] It is next contended that the option was nonassignable. Inasmuch as the contract contains no features of personal trust or confidence reposed in any of the parties, and requires nothing more than a mere routine of paying money, it is assignable. 25 Cal. Jur. 509; 5 C. J. 852; Prichard v. Kimball, 190 Cal. 757, 214 P. 863. The option provision is clearly severable from all other provisions of the lease, and no injury could possibly come to the owner and lessor by receiving the cash purchase, price, to wit, $4,100, from the optionee's assignee, rather than from the optionee. No features of trust or confidence, as pointed out in Prichard v. Kimball, supra, exist in the instant case. Under the laws of this state, "property of any kind may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by this article [article 2 of div. 2, pt. 4, tit. 4, c. 1, Civil Code]." Civ. Code. § 1044. The assignability of an option in the exercise of a general property right is not made an exception to the general rule by any Code provision.

[16] But we are of the opinion that respondent cannot prevail because of his failure to make a proper and seasonable tender. It is admitted that the only tender made by respondent was the amount stated in the option, to wit, $4,100. In other words, no proportionate amount of rent was tendered by either the lessee or his assignee for the use of the premises for a period of about 4 months, or one-third of the year 1923. "When the hiring of a thing is terminated before the time originally agreed upon, the hirer must pay the due proportion of the hire for such use as he has actually made of the thing, unless such use is merely nominal, and of no benefit to him." Civ. Code, § 1935. That the section of the Code above cited has direct application to the instant case, there can be no doubt. Diepenbrock v. Luiz, 159 Cal. 716, 115 P. 743, L. R. A. 1915C, 234, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1084. Resolving all other controverted questions of law in favor of respondent, the failure to tender a proportionate amount of rent for the use made of the premises by the lessee for a period of about 4 months prior to the offer to purchase furnishes a complete bar and answer to his demand for specific performance of the option provision. Section 1935, Civil Code, is an innovation upon the common-law rule, which was to the effect that rent will not be apportioned in case of the termination of the lease before the rent is due. A number of the states of the Union have, however, adopted statutes similar to ours with reference to the apportionment of rent.

[17-19] Respondent further contends that appellant, Cline, by a failure to object to the insufficient amount of the tender, must be deemed to have waived any objection he might have made on that ground. Section 2076, Code Civ. Proc.; section 1501, Civ. Code. An examination of the record, however, does not show that respondent sought to introduce any evidence of such waiver. The record is silent as to what actually took place when the insufficient tender was made. The burden is on the party asserting a waiver to introduce evidence of the facts constituting it (25 Cal. Jur. 932; 40 Cyc. 269), and respondent did not meet this burden. If Cline, in fact, waived the insufficiency of the tender, respondent had the right to seek from a court of equity a decree of specific performance directing a conveyance to him upon payment of the stipulated purchase price and the proportionate amount of rent due. Bradford v. Fidelity Savings & Loan Society, 177 Cal. 247, 170 P. 404; Hixson v. Hovey, 18

Cal. App. 230, 122 P. 1097; Colton v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 137 Cal. 376, 70 P. 225; Shermaster v. California Building, etc., Co., 40 Cal. App. 661, 181 P. 409. If Cline did not waive the insufficiency of the tender, respondent lost all rights under the option, and cannot be given the relief sought by a modification of the judgment of the trial court or in any other manner. The offer by its very terms was to continue only during the life of the lease, and, since the insufficient tender of $4,100, in the absence of circumstances establishing a waiver, did not constitute an acceptance, the effect of holding that respondent now has the right to compel specific performance would be to extend the option beyond the time when it was to terminate by the express agreement of the parties.

Questions going to the sufficiency of the evidence and the findings and questions of pleading, more or less of a technical character, may easily be overcome by amendment and production of evidence.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

---

200 Cal. 318

CRAWFORD v. IMPERIAL IRR. DIST. et al. (L. A. 9149.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1927.)

1. Contracts ⟹126—Employment of one to appear before congressional committees to present arguments supporting certain bill held not void as against public policy.

Employment of one to appear on behalf of irrigation district before various committees of Congress having under consideration the Swing-Johnson bill to present facts and arguments in support of such bill, though contract to influence legislation, held not void as against public policy, since such employment is valid, unless personal, secret, or sinister influence on legislators is used.

2. Evidence ⟹60—Parties to contract which may be performed legally will not be presumed to intend illegal performance.

There is universal presumption of law that, where contract can be performed legally, it will not be presumed that parties intended to perform it in illegal manner.

3. Waters and water courses ⟹224—Irrigation district is not "municipal corporation."

Irrigation district is not strictly a "municipal corporation."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Municipal Corporation.]

4. Waters and water courses ⟹228—Irrigation district derives powers from statutes.

Irrigation district derives powers from statute under which it is created and acts, and from such other statutes as may have been enacted, granting it additional powers or limiting those already granted.

5. Waters and water courses ⟹228—Irrigation district held authorized to employ one to present arguments supporting bill before congressional committees (Irrigation District Act 1915, § 1; Irrigation District Act 1897, §§ 15 [as amended by St. 1919, p. 660, § 1], 15b, 15c [as added by St. 1917, P. 758, §§ 8, 9], 61).

Imperial irrigation district held authorized to employ one to appear before various committees of Congress having under consideration Swing-Johnson bill to present arguments supporting it, in view of Irrigation District Act of 1915, § 1 (St. 1915, p. 1), and Irrigation District Act of 1897, §§ 15 (as amended by St. 1919, p. 660, § 1), 15b, 15c (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, §§ 8, 9), notwithstanding section 61, since Swing-Johnson bill or similar legislation was necessary to provide water for district, and prevent destruction of property therein.

6. Waters and water courses ⟹228—Power of board of directors of irrigation district implies power to do all things required for district's purposes.

Power of board of directors to carry on business of irrigation district implies power to do all things required for that purpose, and in the exercise thereof board has authority to perform all lawful acts necessary to accomplish purposes.

7. Trial ⟹388(4)—Findings of fact are unnecessary, where case is submitted on agreed statement of facts.

Where case is submitted on agreed statement of facts without any other evidence, findings of fact are unnecessary, and if made may be disregarded.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; C. W. Guerin, Judge.

Suit by D. R. Crawford against the Imperial Irrigation District and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed with directions.

Chas. L. Childers, of El Centro, and A. C. Finney, of Brawley, amici curiæ.

A. L. Cowell, of Stockton, P. H. Griffin, of Modesto, H. J. Hankins, of San Francisco, Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., W. B. Mathews and Clarence S. Hill, all of Los Angeles, and T. P. Wittschen and Markell C. Baer, both of Oakland, for appellants.

C. L. Brown and Harry W. Horton, both of El Centro, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The Imperial irrigation district, one of the defendants herein, is an irrigation district organized and existing under and by virtue of the California Irrigation District Act, approved March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 254), and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. The plaintiff is an elector and taxpayer of said district, and the defendants Mark Rose, Earl C. Pound, Ira Aten, C. W. Brockman, and W. O. Blair constitute the board of directors of said district, and the defendant F. H. McIver is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting treasurer of said district. On October 23, 1925, at a regular meeting of said board of directors the following resolution was adopted by said board:

> "Resolved that Imperial irrigation district employ B. F. Fly at a salary of $250.00 per month and one-half of his actual and necessary expenses to appear on behalf of this district before the various committees of Congress of the United States having under consideration the Swing-Johnson bill, to present facts and arguments in support of said bill; said employment to commence on the 1st day of December, 1925."

Thereafter the said B. F. Fly, referred to in said resolution, accepted said employment and agreed to perform the services required of him by said resolution in consideration of the payment to him of the salary and expenses provided for therein.

This action was instituted by plaintiff as an elector and taxpayer of said district to enjoin the defendant from auditing, allowing, or ordering paid any claim or demand for salary or expenses of the said B. F. Fly for services rendered pursuant to the terms of said resolution. The trial court held that said employment was illegal, and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the prayer of his complaint. From the judgment in favor of plaintiff, the defendants, other than defendant C. W. Brockman, have appealed. The contention of plaintiff, the respondent herein, is that the contract of employment of the said B. F. Fly by the Imperial irrigation district is illegal and void for two reasons: First, it is a contract to influence legislation, and it is against public policy and for that reason void; and, secondly, the defendant the Imperial irrigation district is without any authority to expend the funds of said district for the purposes designated in said resolution, even if the contract were not void as being against public policy.

[1] Considering the first point made by the respondent against the validity of the contract employing Mr. Fly, it is evident from the terms of the resolution that the purpose of employing him was to secure favorable action on the part of the Congress of the United States in behalf of the Swing-Johnson bill mentioned in said resolution and then pending before Congress. Appellants make no claim that this was not the object and purpose of the district in the employment of Mr. Fly. They do contend, however, that, notwithstanding that this was the object and purpose of said contract, yet, as by the terms of the resolution he is simply to appear before the committees of Congress having said bill under consideration and to present to said committees facts and arguments in support of said bill, such employment is perfectly proper, and is not against good morals or contrary to public policy. A contract somewhat similar to the one here involved was before the Supreme Court in the case of Foltz v. Cogswell, 86 Cal. 542, 25 P. 60. In that action the plaintiff sought to recover for services rendered by her in the preparation of a certain bill to be presented to the Legislature of the state of California "and in making arguments before the various committees of that body, in order that the justice and merits of defendant's demand for the passage of the bill might be fully understood." This court after quoting from the case of Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335 [99 Am. Dec. 384], used the following language:

> "In the latter case, the court draws a distinction between the use of personal, or any secret or sinister, influence upon legislators, by one who seeks the passage of an act which it holds to be contrary to public policy, and the open advocacy of the same before the Legislature or any committee thereof in open session."

This court held, in the case of Foltz v. Cogswell, supra, that plaintiff was entitled to recover for the services performed in drawing said bill and advocating its passage before the various committees of the state Legislature. In the case of Bergen v. Frisbie, 125 Cal. 168, 57 P. 784, the defendant, being the owner of timber land entries, employed the plaintiff as an attorney to influence the official action of the Secretary of the Interior favorably to the issuance of patents upon such entries, without any stipulation for the use of improper means or methods. This court held:

> "We have carefully scanned the face of this contract, and find nothing whatever there to justify a judicial declaration that it is against good morals. There was no secrecy, no deception, no fraud, no corruption. * * * The means and manner to be employed are the all-important factors in marking the validity or invalidity of the contract. We see no one of its provisions that stamp it void as against public policy and good morals. Neither do we find anything in the evidence indicating any act done by the plaintiffs that to any degree could be construed improper. The employment of persons to influence legislation, or to influence decisions of the land department, or even the decisions of judicial tribunals, in a proper way, is not against sound public policy, * * *. The means and methods to be used must be improper, or else such employment is perfectly legitimate in the eyes of the law."

The case of Schweppe v. Sandberg, 50 Cal. App. 507, 195 P. 454, involved the legality of a contract entered into by the defendant employing the plaintiff to present certain arguments before the state highway commission for the purpose of inducing the commission to so locate a proposed highway so as to pass through the defendant's lands. In holding that the contract was not illegal or against public policy or good morals the District Court of Appeal expressed itself as follows:

> "That the owner of property lying within a region through which it is proposed to construct a public highway, the precise route of which has not yet been determined upon by the public officials who are charged with the duty of selecting the same, may not honestly and in good faith present before such officials facts and arguments with relation to the merits of a particular route which, if selected, will run to or through his property, no one will for a moment question, and it follows necessarily that what such property owner may in good faith do in person in that regard he may do through another, and he may for that purpose select an attorney or agent to act as his representative in presenting the merits of the particular location of said highway which he desires to have selected, and, hence, of course, he may agree to pay his attorney, agent, or representative a stipulated regard for the performance of such services. There is nothing illegal or immoral or against public policy in such a transaction or service."

The only California case relied upon by respondent as laying down a different doctrine than enunciated in the foregoing authorities is the case of County of Colusa v. Welch, 122 Cal. 428, 55 P. 243. This case was one brought through the district attorney of Colusa county to restrain the county treasurer of said county from paying the sum of $1,000 upon a warrant issued by the county auditor in favor of one B. S. Sprague. The county of Colusa was interested in the defeat of a certain bill pending before the state Legislature, and so it was alleged in the complaint in said action:

> "That, if the sum of $1,000 'was agreed to be paid to said Sprague, it was to secure, by means of personal solicitation, and by means of private interview with members of the Legislature of California, and by means of lobbying, the defeat of said Senate bill.'"

A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the trial court. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and held that the complaint stated a good cause of action. The decision of the court upon this phase of the case was predicated upon those allegations of the complaint wherein it was alleged that Sprague was employed to secure the defeat of the bill by means of lobbying as well as by other means. Lobbying has a definite meaning in this state, and it is made a crime both by the Constitution and statutes of this state. Const. art. 4, § 35; Pen. Code, § 89. The court in this case cites with approval the following statement from Cooley on Constitutional Limitations:

> "The law also seeks to cast its protection around legislative sessions, and to shield them against corrupt and improper influences, by making void all contracts which have for their object to influence legislation in any other manner than by such open and public presentation of facts, arguments, and appeals to reason as are recognized as proper and legitimate with all public bodies. While counsel may be properly employed to present the reasons in favor of any public measure to the body authorized to pass upon it, or to any of its committees empowered to collect facts and hear arguments, and parties interested may lawfully contract to pay for this service, yet to secretly approach the members of such a body with a view to influence their action at a time and in a manner that do not allow the presentation of opposite views, is improper and unfair to the opposing interest; and a contract to pay for this irregular and improper service would not be enforced by the law."

We are, therefore, unable to find anything in the case of County of Colusa v. Welch, supra, opposed to the rule laid down in the other California cases cited above. They hold, and it must be accepted as the law in this state, as summarized in 6 Cal. Juris, p. 126:

> "The employment of persons to influence legislation, or to influence decisions of the Land Department, or even the decisions of judicial tribunals, in a proper way, is not against sound public policy. A distinction is drawn between the use of personal, or any secret or sinister, influence upon legislators, by one who seeks the passage of an act, which is contrary to public policy, and the open advocacy of the same. It is generally agreed that the appearance of a representative of an interested party before a public body to urge the adoption of a particular measure or policy is neither illegal nor improper when the means employed are open and have for their purpose the presentation of the merits of the advocated matter."

[2] Turning now to the resolution of the irrigation district employing Mr. Fly, we find nothing therein which in any way contemplates the use by Mr. Fly of any improper or illegal means to secure the passage of the legislation desired by the district. The resolution plainly states that Mr. Fly is employed to appear on behalf of the district before the various committees of Congress of the United States having under consideration the Swing-Johnson bill and to present facts and arguments in support of said bill. His services are limited by the terms of the resolution to appearances before the various congressional committees having the bill under consideration and to the presentation before said committees of facts and arguments in support of said bill. "It is the universal presumption of law that, where a contract can be performed legally, it will not be presumed that the parties intended to perform it in an illegal manner." Fites v. Marsh, 171 Cal. 487, 153 P. 926. The very nature of the services to be performed under the resolution renders it practically impossible to perform them in any other way than in open advocacy of the bill, as the facts and arguments in support of the bill are to be presented before various congressional committees. These hearings as a rule, as we understand the procedure before them, are generally held in open and public sessions of the committees, where not only the members of the committee and the parties interested in the pending matters, but the public itself, are free to attend. Services of this nature, as we have already seen, have been held in this state, without exception, to be not against public policy or good morals, but lawful and legal. The contention, therefore, that the contract of the district employing Mr. Fly to represent said district before the various congressional committees having in charge the Swing-Johnson bill was void as being against public policy and good morals cannot be sustained.

[3-5] The other question presented upon this appeal involves the power and authority of the Imperial irrigation district to enter into the contract employing Mr. Fly and to pay for his services from the funds of such district, even if such contract is not against public policy. The position taken by respondent is that, as the purpose of such contract is to employ Mr. Fly to influence legislation, the district has no power to use the funds of said district for such purpose. Respondent contends that an irrigation district is a municipal corporation and that the rule is well established that a municipal corporation has no authority to make an expenditure of public funds for the purpose of influencing legislation. While there is language to be found in some of the decisions of this state which might be taken as holding that an irrigation district is a municipal corporation (People v. Cardiff Irr. Dist., 51 Cal. App. 307, 312, 197 P. 384), we think that the great weight of authority is to the effect that an irrigation district is not strictly a municipal corporation (Huck v. Rathjen, 66 Cal. App. 84, 225 P. 33; Whiteman v. Irrigation District, 60 Cal. App. 234, 243, 212 P. 706; Turlock Irr. Dist. v. White, 186 Cal. 183, 198 P. 1060, 17 A. L. R. 72). In the Turlock Case the court said, page 187 (198 P. 1062):

> "The nature of an irrigation district has been a matter of judicial investigation and interpretation, and it has been held that such a corporation is not a municipal corporation, but a 'public corporation for municipal purposes.'" (Citing authorities.) "As to swamp land, drainage, levee, and reclamation districts, similar to irrigation districts, it has been held that they were not municipal corporations." (Citing authorities.)

In Bettencourt v. Industrial Acc. Com., 175 Cal. 559, it was held on page 561 (166 P. 323, 324), that:

> "But reclamation districts organized as was this petitioner possess no political nor governmental powers, are not organized for political or governmental purposes, and are therefore not public corporations at all. Indeed, they are not in strictness corporations, public or private, but governmental mandatories or agents vested with limited powers to accomplish limited and specific work."

It is not necessary for our purposes to determine the strict legal status of an irrigation district, but it is evident from the decisions of this state, only a few of which have been referred to above, that an irrigation district is not strictly speaking a municipal corporation. This circumstance only becomes important when we come to examine certain authorities relied upon by the parties hereto which will be later referred to.

An irrigation district, like any other public or private corporation, derives its powers from the statute under which it is created and acts, and from such other statutes as may have been enacted by the Legislature granting it additional powers or limiting those already granted. These powers are as different from those exercised by a strictly municipal corporation as the purposes of an irrigation district differ from those of a city or county or other strictly municipal corporation. We must therefore consult the statutes of the state in the first instance, at least, to determine the extent of the powers which may be legally exercised by an irrigation district. The extent of these powers is found in the main in those sections of the statutes defining the powers of boards of directors of such districts. The principal provisions of the statutes affecting the powers of boards of directors are contained in the following sections of the statutes of our state:

Section 15 of the California Irrigation District Act of 1897 (as amended by St. 1919, p. 660, § 1), under which the Imperial irrigation district was organized and is now operating, provides:

> "The board of directors shall have the power and it shall be their duty to manage and conduct the business and affairs of the district; make and execute all necessary contracts; employ and appoint such agents, officers, and employees as may be required, and prescribe their duties. * * * Said board shall also have the right to acquire, by purchase, lease, contract, condemnation, or other legal means, all lands, and waters, and water rights, and other property necessary for the construction, use, supply, maintenance, repair and improvements of said canal, or canals, and works, whether in this or in other states or in a foreign nation, including canals, and works constructed and being constructed by private owners, lands for reservoirs for the storage of needful waters, and all necessary appurtenances, and also where necessary or convenient to said ends to acquire and hold the stock of other corporations domestic or foreign owning waters, canals, waterworks, franchises, concessions or rights. Said board may enter into, and do any acts necessary or proper for the performance of, any agreements with the United States, or any state, county, district of any kind, public or private corporation, association, firm or individual, or any > number of them, for the joint acquisition, construction, leasing, ownership, disposition, use, management, maintenance, repair or operation of any rights, works or other property of a kind which might lawfully be acquired or owned by the irrigation district, and may acquire the right to store water in any reservoirs or to carry water through any canal, ditch, or conduit not owned or controlled by the district. * * *"

Section 15b (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 8) of said act further provides that:

> "The board of directors of any irrigation district may also construct the necessary dams, reservoirs, and works for the collection of water for said district, and do any and every lawful act necessary to be done, that sufficient water may be furnished to each landowner in said district for irrigation and domestic purposes. * * *"

Section 15c (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 9) provides, among other things, that:

> "Said board shall have power generally to perform all such acts as shall be necessary to fully carry out the purposes of this act."

In addition to these sections of the Irrigation District Act, section 1 of the Act of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1) provides:

> "The board of directors of irrigation districts having an area of more than five hundred thousand acres may expend such sums as may to them seem necessary for the protection of the canal system of such district or of lands within such districts from damage by flood and from the overflow of rivers and may contribute funds for that purpose to be expended by or jointly with the government of the United States of America, or other governments or persons benefited by the same protective work or works. The board of directors of any such irrigation district may also do all things necessary to insure such irrigation system and the lands within such district from any such damage by flood or overflow without first receiving a petition of landowners or freeholders for holding an election to authorize such expenditure."

This act has been held to be constitutional and applicable to the Imperial irrigation district. Wores v. Imperial Irrigation Dist., 193 Cal. 609, 227 P. 181.

To briefly epitomize the terms of these sections of the statutes, we find that the board of directors of an irrigation district is given power generally to manage the affairs of the district; to execute all necessary contracts; to employ and appoint all agents, officers, and employees, and define their duties; to acquire water rights, canals, maintain waterworks, whether in this or any other state or in a foreign nation; to enter into any agreement with the United States or any state or other corporation, public or private or individual, for the joint acquisition, construction, maintenance, or operation of any rights or works that might be lawfully owned by an irrigation district; to do any and all lawful acts necessary to be done that sufficient water may be furnished to the inhabitants of the district for irrigation and domestic purposes and to perform all acts that shall be necessary to fully carry out the purposes of the act under which said district was formed. In addition to these powers conferred generally upon irrigation districts, the board of directors of the Imperial irrigation district, under the Act of 1915, may expend such funds of the district as they may deem necessary for the protection of the canal system and the lands of the district from damage by flood or the overflow of rivers, and may contribute funds to be expended for that purpose by or jointly with the government of the United States of America or other governments or persons benefited by such protection work. From these provisions of the statutes we are impressed with two outstanding features of this legislation: First, that the prime object and purpose of such an organization is to provide water for the use of its inhabitants and landowners for irrigation and domestic purposes; and, secondly, the broad and comprehensive nature of the powers conferred upon the board of directors in order to enable them to accomplish this purpose. We also might emphasize another feature which stands out prominently in this legislation, and which, in our opinion, is important in the determination of the question now under consideration. This is the minute particularity and the definiteness with which the Legislature has given the board of directors power to contract with the United States government as well as with individuals and other public and private corporations for the purposes of acquiring water rights and constructing and operating waterworks and expressly authorizing the district to contribute funds of the district for the purpose of construction of works to be erected by the United States, or jointly by the United States and the district, for the purpose of protecting the canal system and lands of the district from river overflow.

In order to perform these duties and execute the powers thus given to the board of directors of the irrigation district, it is apparent that it may be necessary for the board to adopt some means of bringing to the attention of the United States government or other governments with which the district may wish to enter into contracts, the subject-matter of the proposed contracts. It also seems apparent to us that occasions may arise when it will be absolutely necessary in the best interests of the district that it be represented in person before the proper boards or instrumentalities of these governments in order that the claims of the district as to the matters before these boards may be understood by the officials charged with the consideration of such matters. In bringing about the execution of a contract with the United States government, such as securing rights of way over the public domain for a canal system or the right to take water from a stream under government control and jurisdiction, it may be necessary for the applicant to be represented, either in person or by a duly appointed agent before the Department of the Interior or some board or committee having charge of such matters, and perhaps before Congress itself, when the matters require congressional action, in order to properly present the interest of said district. We think there is no question if the Imperial irrigation district found it necessary to secure a right of way over the public domain for its canal system, and this right could only be had by the district making a proper showing before the Department of the Interior, that the board of directors would have the power to send a representative before such department for the purpose of properly presenting such matter before said department. And, if the project, which the board of directors finds is necessary in order to carry out some of its prescribed duties, requires congressional action before the same may be performed by the district, then we can see little or no difference in sending a representative to present the facts bearing upon the subject of the proposed legislation before the proper committees having the same under consideration than in sending such a representative before the Department of the Interior to present a matter there pending in which the district is interested. To withhold such authority in either case would be to cripple unnecessarily the power of the district to accomplish the purposes of its formation, and might seriously hamper the district in its efforts to secure the very contracts which the statute expressly authorizes it to make and execute with the United States government.

The Swing-Johnson bill authorizes the construction of a dam in the Colorado river at a point in or near Boulder Canyon, and also the construction of a canal from the Laguna Dam in said river to the lands of the Imperial irrigation district. The dam and canal are to be built according to the terms of said bill by the United States government, and the former is to be paid for by revenues to be derived from the leasing of power privileges incident thereto and the latter by the lands to be benefited thereby. This case was submitted in its entirety upon an agreed statement of facts. This statement recites at some length the problems of the Imperial irrigation district and its efforts to secure an adequate water supply for the use of its inhabitants for irrigation and domestic purposes, and protection of the district from the flood waters of the Colorado river. It is not necessary to enter into the details of this lengthy statement of facts. A portion of paragraph XIV of the agreed statement reads as follows:

> "It is necessary that said Swing-Johnson bill, or similar legislation by the Congress of the United States, be enacted in order that water may be furnished to the landowners within the boundaries of Imperial irrigation district for irrigation and domestic use, and that it is necessary that said Swing-Johnson bill or similar legislation be passed by the Congress of the United States to prevent the destruction of the properties of the said district and the inhabitants thereof from floods of the Colorado river; * * * that said Swing-Johnson bill is designed primarily for the relief and benefit and protection of the Imperial irrigation district."

From another portion of the agreed statement of facts it appears that the only source from which said district can secure an adequate or, for that matter, any supply of water is the Colorado river, and, furthermore, due to the fact that said district is situated from 100 to 300 feet below the river bed of said river, it is seriously menaced by having its lands overflowed and destroyed by the flood waters of said river. In fact, it is expressly stipulated as to the flood menace that:

> "Within a period of from 10 to 20 years the basin where the river now flows will be entirely filled with silt and sediment, and that in that event there will be no place for the river to flow except into the Imperial Valley and onto the lands within the Imperial irrigation district, and that the river will so flow into said district and completely inundate and destroy the same and the property values therein and drive the inhabitants therefrom if adequate means are not promptly provided to thoroughly regulate the river, desilt the water, and control the floods by means of one or more great storage reservoirs in the upper reaches of the river."

The district is not financially able to construct said dam and canal, and, if it were able, it has no authority from the United States or the states in which said dam would necessarily have to be located to build said dam. From these facts it appears that the only means whereby said district can hope to obtain a supply of water for irrigation and domestic purposes and to secure protection from destruction of the lands therein by the flood waters of the Colorado river is through a contract with the United States government. It is the object and purpose of the Swing-Johnson bill to enable the government to enter into such a contract with the district. The purpose of employing Mr. Fly and sending him to Washington is to enable the district, through him, to present the facts bearing upon the subject-matter of the proposed legislation before the committees in Congress having this bill under consideration. We think it is plainly within the powers of the board of directors of said district to furnish to Congress all the information in its possession which might tend in any manner to enlighten the members of that body upon the pending bill, and, if in the judgment of the board of directors this can best be done by having a representative of the district appear personally before the committees of Congress, then in our opinion said board of directors is authorized to employ and send to Congress such a representative.

We do not think this conclusion is contrary to any of the authorities cited by the respondent and the amici curiæ in this action. The cases mainly relied upon by them as announcing a different doctrine are County of Colusa v. Welch, 122 Cal. 428, 55 P. 243; Valentine v. Robertson (C. C. A.) 300 F. 521, and State ex rel. Rice v. Bell, 124 Wash. 647, 215 P. 326. In the first two of these three cases the right of a strictly municipal corporation to employ a representative to appear before a legislative body to influence legislation in which the municipality had only an indirect interest was involved. In each case it was decided that no such authority was given to the governing body of such municipality and that public funds could not be expended for such purpose. In the case of State ex rel. Rice v. Bell, supra, the Supreme Court of the state of Washington decided that an irrigation district known as the Quincy Valley irrigation district, organized under the laws of that state, had no authority to pay the expenses of its engineer in attending the Western States Irrigation Congress, held at San Francisco, for the purpose of interesting said Irrigation Congress in a bill then pending before the Congress of the United States known as the Jones bill, the passage of which it was thought would be of great benefit to said irrigation district. The court held that the district had no authority to expend public funds to pay the expenses of said engineer in attending said Congress. The Jones bill, so called, was not a measure affecting directly the Quincy Valley irrigation district, but was a bill applying generally to any irrigation district authorized to issue bonds, and providing a plan whereby the interest on bonds issued under certain conditions might be guaranteed by the United States government. It is obvious that the conditions under which the engineer of this irrigation district was employed differ materially from those surrounding the employment of Mr. Fly by the Imperial irrigation district. It is to be further noted that all the authorities relied upon by the court in that decision were cases in which the right of a strictly municipal corporation to make expenditures of public funds was involved. In other words, the Supreme Court of Washington applied the rule applicable to strictly municipal corporations to irrigation districts and accordingly held that the latter were without power to make expenditures of public money for the purposes shown by the facts of said case. This, as we have already seen, we have declined to do, for the reason, as we view the subject, irrigation districts, at least in this state, in certain respects, and particularly in regard to their power to provide the necessary water for the use of lands within the district and to protect them from flood waters, are clothed with most extensive powers, sufficient, we believe, at least to authorize a contract of the charter herein under consideration. For this reason we are unable to accept as an authority in the present action the case from the Supreme Court of the state of Washington.

Neither do we find anything in section 61 of the California Irrigation District Act of 1897 which would lead to a conclusion contrary to that which we have expressed above. This section provides:

> "The board of directors or other officers of the district, shall have no power to incur any debt or liability whatever, either by issuing bonds or otherwise, in excess of the express provisions of this act; and any debt or liability incurred in excess of such express provisions shall be and remain absolutely void. * * *"

[6] We think that we have already shown that the employment of Mr. Fly was within the express provisions of the Irrigation Act. It is true that there are no express words to be found in the statute authorizing the board to employ a person to attend upon the sessions of Congress in the interest of legislation affecting the district. In like manner there is no express provisions of the statute authorizing the board of directors to rent a building in which to carry on the business of the district, but the board is by the terms of the statute authorized to "manage and conduct the business and affairs of the district." The power to carry on the business of the district implies the power to do all things required for that purpose, and this would include the renting of a building in which to transact the business of the district, and a debt or liability incurred for the reasonable rental of a building for such purposes would not be in excess of the express provisions of the act. For like reason it has been held that the board of supervisors, under their general powers to supervise the official conduct of all county officers, may employ an expert to examine the books of said officers (Harris v. Gibbins, 114 Cal. 418, 46 P. 292), and the state board of examiners, under the law as it then existed, defining its powers, which did not include any express authority to employ an expert, might under its general powers appoint such an employee to assist said board in the performance of its duties (Lewis v. Colgan, 115 Cal. 529, 47 P. 357).

> "A public officer or board has not only the powers expressly enumerated by law, but also those implied powers which are necessary to the exercise of the powers expressly granted. * * *" 21 Cal. Jur. 874.

So the power to acquire lands and water rights, construct canals and reservoirs, build levees, and otherwise protect property from flood water, and to enter into contracts with private individuals and public corporations and with the several states and the national government, is given to the board of directors of an irrigation district by the express provisions of the act. In the exercise of this power the board of directors have authority to perform all lawful acts necessary to be done in order to accomplish any or all of these purposes. All of these acts, therefore, would be within the express provisions of the act, and any liability incurred by the district in the performance of any of said acts would be a legal claim against the district and entitled to be paid from the funds of said district. Such a liability could not in any way be held to be void as incurred in excess of the express provisions of the act. There is nothing, therefore, to be found in the provisions of said section 61 which affects the legality of the Fly contract.

[7] The judgment is reversed. As the case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts without any other evidence whatever, findings of fact were unnecessary. 24 Cal. Jur. 953. The only question, therefore, before the court, was as to what was the law applicable to those facts. Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 P. 364; McMenomy v. White, 115 Cal. 339, 47 P. 109. Any findings of facts made by the court under these circumstances may be disregarded. The trial court is therefore directed to enter a judgment in favor of the defendants, denying plaintiff the relief sought by the complaint herein.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

SHENK, J., being disqualified, did not participate in the decision.

---

200 Cal. 425

HARTWIG et ux. v. CENTRAL-GAITHER UNION SCHOOL DIST. et al.

(Sac. 3768.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1927.)

1. Boundaries 🔑3(9)—Rule that description by acreage is secondary to description by boundaries held inapplicable to conveyance of quarter section, less lot deeded to school district (Civ. Code, § 1069).

Rule that description of property conveyed by acreage is secondary to description by boundaries held inapplicable to deed conveying quarter section, "containing 160 acres, less one acre and 106 square rods deeded * * * to Gaither school district," especially in view of Civ. Code, § 1069, requiring interpretation of reservation in favor of grantor; grant not being of entire quarter section, but of quarter section less portion more particularly described by reference to previous conveyance.

2. Deeds 🔑93—Intent of parties to unambiguous deed must be gathered from instrument and language thereof.

Intent of parties to unambiguous deed must be gathered from the instrument itself and language used therein.

3. Deeds 🔑140—Neither successors of grantee of quarter section, less lot conveyed to school district, nor district, which had ceased to use it for prescribed purposes, had any interest therein.

Neither successors to title of grantee in deed of quarter section, less lot theretofore conveyed to school district for educational purposes only, nor such district, which had ceased to use lot for school purposes, had any right, title, or interest in such lot.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by C. H. Hartwig and wife against the Central-Gaither Union School District and the trustees thereof. From the judgment rendered, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. H. Hewitt and Lloyd E. Hewitt, both of Yuba City, for appellants.

Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in an action to quiet title to certain real property in Sutter county, California. The judgment decreed that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants had any right, title, or interest in the land in controversy.

On August 4, 1873, the land involved here, as a part of a larger tract, was the property of James W. Gaither, and on that date he and his wife, by good and sufficient deed, granted to the trustees of the Gaither school district a lot consisting of one acre and 106 square rods, situated in the northwest quarter of section 32, township 14 north of range 3 east, Mount Diablo meridian, and running south 19 rods; thence east 14 rods; thence north 19 rods and thence west 14 rods to the place of beginning. This deed contained the condition that said premises should be used for educational purposes only, and that when they ceased to be so used they should revert to the grantors thereof, their heirs and assigns.

According to the stipulation of the parties as to facts and the findings of the trial court, about a year after the execution of the deed above mentioned, Gaither and his wife granted and conveyed to Bethel Way "the northwest quarter of section 32, township 14 north, range 3 east, Mount Diablo meridian in Sutter county California, containing 160 acres, less one acre and 106 square rods deeded by said James W. Gaither and M. E. Gaither, his wife, in the year 1873 to Gaither school district, said lot being the northwest corner of the above parcel of land."

There were no further conveyances from the Gaithers and plaintiffs, by mesne conveyances, have succeeded to all right, title, and interest of Bethel Way under the aforementioned deed to him by the Gaithers in 1873. In the meantime, as found by the trial court, the land granted to the school district had ceased to be used for school purposes for more than three years prior to the bringing of this action. The "school land" had reverted, therefore (Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 631, 66 P. 10) and the question presented by the record is whether that reversionary interest remained in the heirs of Gaither, who were not parties to this action, or whether it passed by deed made in 1873 from the Gaithers to Bethel Way and from Bethel Way, through successive transfers, to the present plaintiffs. The problem is determined by the language which we have quoted from said deed given by the Gaithers to Way.

[1, 2] Appellants contend that this instrument grants the entire quarter section and that the excepting clause is, in effect, meaningless, because it is at variance with the grant of the quarter section. This argument proceeds upon the theory that the exception is an attempt to describe the property by acreage and that such description is secondary to a description by boundaries. We think this rule of construction has no application to the facts of this case. The grant was not of the entire quarter section, but of the quarter section, less one acre, more or less, which was more particularly described by reference to a previous conveyance. There is no ambiguity about the deed from the Gaithers to Way, and the intent of the parties must be gathered from the instrument itself and the language used therein. It is pertinent to inquire here, as was done in the opinion upon a closely similar state of facts (Seligman v. Carr, 8 Cal. App. 572, 97 P. 324):

> "Why was the excepting clause inserted if not to reserve some interest in the grantors or to take some interest out of the operation of the deed?"

In the case last mentioned, it was said, in considering a closely analogous state of facts:

> "In whom is vested the reversionary interest in the 2 acres conveyed to the school district, which is designated as the school land? The court found that a two-thirds interest belongs to plaintiffs and that one-third is vested in defendant Webb. The court decided that in view of the exception or reservation in the deed of William and John to Samuel Frey, of January 30, 1884, they conveyed to Samuel only an undivided half of their interest in that part of the 20-acre tract that was not conveyed to the school district; that the school land was excepted from the operation of the deed and hence when Samuel Frey, in November, 1884, conveyed to Carr, his deed conveyed no greater reversionary interest in the school land than he reserved when he deeded to the school district, which was one-third, and this the court awarded to defendant Webb."

Our conclusion in the instant case, as well as the conclusion of the court in Seligman v. Carr, supra, is fortified by section 1069, Civil Code, which provides that a reservation in a grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor.

[3] It appears from the undisputed facts that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants have any right, title, or interest in the land to which title was sought to be quieted, and the judgment and decree appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.

---

200 Cal. 796

HARTWIG et ux. v. PROPER. (Sac. 3825.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1927.)

1. Boundaries 🔑3(9)—Rule that description by acreage is secondary to description by boundaries held inapplicable to conveyance of quarter section, less lot deeded to school district (Civ. Code, § 1069).

Rule that description of property conveyed by acreage is secondary to description by boundaries held inapplicable to deed conveying quarter section "containing 160 acres, less one acre and 106 square rods deeded * * * to Gaither school district," especially in view of Civ. Code, § 1069, requiring interpretation of reservation in favor of grantor; grant not being of entire quarter section, but of quarter section less portion more particularly described by reference to previous conveyance.

2. Deeds 🔑93—Intent of parties to unambiguous deed must be gathered from instrument and language thereof.

Intent of parties to unambiguous deed must be gathered from the instrument itself and language used therein.

3. Deeds 🔑140—Heirs of grantors of quarter section, less lot conveyed to school district, which had ceased to use it for prescribed purposes, held owners of lot in fee.

Heirs of grantors in deed of quarter section, less lot theretofore conveyed for educational purposes to school district, which had ceased to use it for such purposes, held owners thereof in fee, subject to grantors' administrator's right of possession for administration.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by C. H. Hartwig and wife against E. E. Proper, as administrator of the estates of James W. Gaither and M. E. Gaither, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. H. Hewitt, and Lloyd E. Hewitt, both of Yuba City, for appellants.

Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in an action to quiet title to certain real property in Sutter county, California, which judgment decreed that the plaintiffs have no right, title, or interest in said land and that the heirs of James W. Gaither and of M. E. Gaither are the owners of the same in fee, subject to the right of possession, for the purposes of administration, of the defendant, E. E. Proper, as administrator of the estate of James W. Gaither, deceased, and of M. E. Gaither, deceased, and that said administrator is now entitled to the possession of said property.

The facts are undisputed, and the appeal presents the single question of the construction of a deed.

On August 4, 1873, the land involved here, as a part of a larger tract, was the property of James W. Gaither, and on that date he and his wife, by good and sufficient deed, granted to the trustees of the Gaither school district a lot consisting of one acre and 106 square rods, situated in the northwest quarter of section 32, township 14 north of range 3 east, Mount Diablo meridian, and running south 19 rods; thence east 14 rods; thence north 19 rods, and thence west 14 rods to the place of beginning. This deed contained the condition that said premises should be used for educational purposes only, and that when they ceased to be so used they should revert to the grantors thereof, their heirs and assigns.

[1-3] According to the stipulation of the parties as to facts and the findings of the trial court, about a year after the execution of the deed above mentioned, Gaither and his wife granted and conveyed to Bethel Way "the northwest quarter of section 32, township 14 north, range 3 east, Mount Diablo meridian in Sutter county, California, containing 160 acres, less one acre and 106 square rods deeded by said James W. Gaither and M. E. Gaither, his wife, in 1873 to Gaither school district, said lot being the northwest corner of the above parcel of land."

There were no further conveyances from the Gaithers, and the plaintiffs, by mesne conveyances, have succeeded to all right, title, and interest of Bethel Way under the aforementioned deed to him made by Gaithers in 1873. In the meantime, as found by the trial court, the land granted to the school district had ceased to be used for school purposes for more than three years prior to the bringing of this action. The "school land" had reverted, therefore (Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 631, 66 P. 10), and the question presented by the record is whether that reversionary interest remained in the heirs of Gaither or whether it passed by deed made in 1873 from Gaithers to Bethel Way and from Bethel Way, through successive transfers, to the present plaintiffs. The problem is determined by the language which we have quoted from said deed given by Gaithers to Way.

This identical question was presented by the record in the companion case to this one (Hartwig et al. v. Central-Gaither Union School District et al., Sac. 3768, of the records of this court, 253 P. 733), which was brought by the present plaintiffs to quiet title to this same land against the school district, and in which action this court has this day determined the effect of the deed from the Gaithers to Bethel Way. Both cases were submitted to this court, by stipulation, upon the same points and authorities, and the decision of the one, necessarily, concludes the other.

Upon the authority of Hartwig et al. v. Central-Gaither Union School District et al., supra, and for the reasons therein stated, the judgment appealed from in this action is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.

81 Cal. App. 226

PEOPLE v. BROWN et al. (Cr. 1294; 3013.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 7, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 8, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑419, 420(10)—Admitting hearsay evidence of deceased's statements, showing discord with defendants in furtherance of alleged conspiracy against him, held reversible error.

In murder trial, admission of hearsay testimony as to deceased's statements, showing gross unpleasantness and discord between him and defendants in furtherance of alleged conspiracy to harass and discourage him until he abandoned ranch properties and his life insurance to one defendant, held reversible error.

2. Witnesses 🔑380(5)—Competent purpose must be shown to admit evidence of inconsistent statements by witness sought to be impeached by party calling him (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052).

While party may impeach his own witness, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052, by proving statements made by him at other times inconsistent with his present testimony, a competent purpose must first appear to avoid exclusion of impeaching testimony as hearsay, or on ground that one calling witness vouches for his veracity, and it is not permissible to call a witness merely to impeach him.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Witnesses 🔑380(5)—Witness may be impeached by party producing him only when evidence injured cause of such party (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052).

It is only when evidence produced has resulted in injury to cause of party producing witness that he may be impeached by such party, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052, by showing that he made statements at other times inconsistent with his present testimony.

4. Criminal law 🔑692—Defendants held not to have waived objection to impeachment of people's witness by demand that district attorney be sworn and testify as to conversation with such witness (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052).

Defendants held not to have waived rule that witness may be impeached by party producing him, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052, only when his testimony injured cause of such party, by demanding that district attorney be sworn and testify as to alleged conversation with people's witness in his office; such request being merely legitimate precaution against unsworn statements as to incompetent matters.

5. Criminal law 🔑475—Testimony as to direction from which blood emanated, and relative positions of certain markings, by experts investigating nearly two months after alleged homicide, held inadmissible.

In murder trial, chemist's and crime investigator's testimony as to direction from which blood on premises and deceased's wearing apparel emanated, and relative positions of certain markings, held inadmissible, where effort was made to remove all blood spots immediately after injury, and they did not investigate until nearly two months afterward.

6. Criminal law 🔑471—Expert cannot express opinion as to conclusions from matters of common observation and experience.

One skilled in art, trade, or science, and having knowledge of matters not within grasp of men of average intelligence, education, and experience, may express opinion on state of facts within his specialty and involved in inquiry, but not as to conclusions from matters of common observation and experience.

7. Homicide 🔑166(11)—Decedent's will held inadmissible to show motive for homicide, in absence of showing that defendants knew of it.

In murder trial, decedent's will, executed over 10 years before death, held inadmissible to show motive, in absence of evidence that defendants had any knowledge of its existence.

8. Homicide 🔑166(11)—Evidence of defendant's mistreatment of deceased's sister and acts indicating criminal design to secure their property held admissible in murder trial.

In murder trial, testimony as to defendant's gross mistreatment of deceased's sister, attempt to injure her by inserting phonograph needles in quinine capsules prescribed for her, and other acts tending to show premeditated design to carry out felonious scheme to secure deceased's, as well as his sister's, property, held admissible.

9. Criminal law 🔑723(1)—Special prosecutor's argument that reflections were cast on him as representative of grand jury held misconduct.

In murder trial, special prosecutor's statements in argument that any reflections cast on him by defendants were cast on him as representative of grand jury, not as individual, held misconduct; grand jury not being concerned with employment of prosecuting attorneys, nor obtaining of convictions.

10. Criminal law 🔑719(1)—Special prosecutor's argument that former superior court judge had refused to defend defendants held improper.

In murder trial, special prosecutor's argument that former judge of superior court of county had refused to defend defendants held improper, as not supported by evidence, and asserting in effect that person referred to believed defendants guilty.

11. Criminal law 🔑720½—Argument that coroner's jury did not give absolutely clean bill of health, and that "we know that these particular people * * * are guilty," held improper.

In murder trial, argument of people's counsel that there must have been something in testimony that did not convey innocence to coroner's jury because they did not absolutely give defendants a clean bill of health, and that "we know that these particular people * * * are guilty of murder," held improper as not supported by evidence, commenting on verdict of coroner's jury, and predicating statement of ultimate fact on counsel's private opinion.

12. Criminal law 🔑721(5)—Argument that only contradiction of charge was argument of counsel paid by defendants "to do * * * what they were scared to do with evidence" held improper comment on their failure to testify (Pen. Code, § 1323).

In murder trial, argument of people's counsel that defendants had remained silent at certain times, had loaned undying strength to charge by weakness of their efforts to deny certain accusations, and contradicted it only by argument of counsel paid by them "to do with an argument what they were scared to do with evidence," held improper comment on their failure to testify, in violation of Pen. Code, § 1323.

13. Criminal law 🔑723(1)—Counsel's argument that jurors should prepare to take law into their own hands, but for his presence, held prejudicial misconduct.

In murder trial, it was prejudicial misconduct for counsel to suggest that jurors take law into their own hands by statement that they had better prepare to do so but for his presence.

---

14. Criminal law 🔑659, 723(1)—Special prosecutor's inflammatory argument, followed by applause and cheers, held prejudicial misconduct.

Special prosecutor's argument, consisting of extended inflammatory attack upon defendants and their counsel, and followed by applause and cheers from audience, held prejudicial misconduct.

15. Criminal law 🔑659, 730(1)—Denial of motion to clear courtroom because of applause and cheers, and refusal to caution jury and admonish counsel after improper argument, held prejudicial error.

Trial court's denial of motion to clear courtroom because of applause and cheers at conclusion of special prosecutor's argument, and statement, when assignments of prejudicial statements therein as misconduct were attempted, that "the court will deem that you have excepted to * * * and assigned every statement as misconduct," and "requested the court to instruct the jury, and that the court has refused to do so," held prejudicial error; court's duty being to caution jury and admonish counsel when objection was first interposed, and to prevent repetition of such infractions of rules.

16. Indictment and information 🔑10—Indictment by grand jury visiting place of homicide, where defendant and other witnesses demonstrated and explained position of body, etc., held invalid (Pen. Code, §§ 906, 919, 925).

Grand jury's visit, without court order, to place of alleged homicide, where defendant and other witnesses demonstrated and explained position of body, location of blood spots, etc., in violation of Pen. Code, §§ 906, 919, 925, held to invalidate indictment as against contention that they did not convene as grand jury nor swear witnesses, but visited premises merely for inspection, and were not in session when evidence was offered.

17. Grand jury 🔑39—Unauthorized person may attend grand jury session only as witness during taking of his testimony (Pen. Code, § 925).

Only capacity in which person, not authorized by Pen. Code, § 925, may be called before or attend on grand jury session, is that of witness during actual taking of his own testimony.

18. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)—Court must comply with mandatory statutory requirements as to grand jurors and grounds for setting aside indictment, regardless of wisdom (Pen. Code, §§ 906, 919, 925).

It is court's duty to comply with mandatory requirements of Pen. Code, §§ 906, 919, 925, as to grand jurors, and statutory provisions as to grounds on which indictment shall be set aside, without regard to wisdom thereof.

19. Grand jury 🔑33—Grand jury cannot voluntarily inspect premises and examine witnesses without court order.

Grand jury cannot voluntarily make inspection of premises and examine witnesses without court order.

On Denial of Hearing by Supreme Court.

20. Witnesses 🔑380(5)—Testimony offered by district attorney that people's witness said he saw deceased staggering out of defendant's house, to impeach his testimony that he only saw three automobiles in yard, held properly admitted.

In murder prosecution, testimony that people's witness said he saw deceased staggering out of back door of defendant's residence, "like a chicken with his head cut off," held properly admitted, when offered by district attorney in impeachment of his testimony that he saw nothing except three automobiles in yard when he passed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Jennie Laura Brown, John H. Tipton, and Fred Mills were convicted of second degree murder, and they appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Crosby, Naus & Crosby, of Oakland, and George L. Reimbold, of Hanford, for appellants Brown and Tipton.

J. C. C. Russell, of Hanford, for appellant Mills.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman and John L. Flynn, Dep. Attys. Gen., and William R. McKay, Dist. Atty., of Hanford, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellants and one Robert McCammish were jointly charged by indictment with having on the 14th day of December, 1924, in the county of Kings, willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, killed and murdered one Lee Camp. Appellants were convicted of murder in the second degree, and McCammish was acquitted. Motions for new trial were denied, and the respective appeals from the judgments and rulings upon such motions are presented together. All of the parties adopt as substantially correct the statement of facts set forth in the briefs of appellants Brown and Tipton.

From such statement, and from a careful perusal of the voluminous record in this case, it appears that the whole controversy revolved around the question as to whether or not Jennie Laura Brown instigated and conspired with her codefendants to perpetrate the alleged murder of Lee Camp. It is admitted that the latter received an injury, either through accident, or a felonious assault, from which he died within a few hours thereafter. It was the theory of the prosecution that Camp was struck on the head with a cogwheel which lay near a windmill tower on the premises of Mrs. Brown, whereas, the defendants insisted that he fell from the tower, striking his head on the wheel. The evidence in this respect is wholly circumstantial. None of the defendants testified at the trial, and no one other than the three appellants appears to have been upon the ground at the time of the occurrence in question. W. Stanton Brown, the husband of appellant Jennie Laura Brown, testified that he was ill and in bed, and that his wife was in the room with him, until some one called her from downstairs to "come quick"; that he heard a voice on the telephone, summoning a doctor to "come to the Brown ranch immediately, an accident"; and that within a few minutes he "heard two people crying" on the floor below.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Tipton testified before the coroner's jury that he and Camp were preparing to remove a large windmill fan from the tower; that the witness had gone to a shed, and was gathering up some ropes; that he returned to the tower within about 20 minutes, whereupon he discovered Camp lying "kind of on his side" on a brick pavement at the base of the tower, and saw that Camp had been injured. This witness further swore, however, that he did not know that the man had been on the tankhouse; that he "didn't see him at all, or didn't see him fall or never heard him"; that Mills soon drove up in his automobile, and was told to telephone for a doctor, soon after which a Chinese employee named Lee Gum appeared on the scene. McCammish appears to have been visiting a neighbor at the time. Shortly thereafter a doctor arrived, followed by an ambulance, and Camp was removed to a hospital, where he died that afternoon.

Autopsies which were performed on the following day and six weeks later showed that the crown of the head was intact, but that the upper part of the occipital bone and the lower part of the two parietal bones "were a mass of small pieces," and that portions of the skull had penetrated the brain. About twenty "peculiar shaped marks," apparently such as would result from contact with the cogs on the wheel mentioned, and of a bluish color, appeared on the posterior area of the scalp. There was a small blue scar on the right temple, and a bruise on the left hip, but no other blemish was found on the body.

It appears that the deceased was 11 years of age when, in 1901, he and his sister, Pearl Camp, were taken by the Browns to rear and educate, and that he had continued to reside with them until the date of his death. He received an interest in certain real property near the Brown ranch, title to which he conveyed to Mrs. Brown, and carried life insurance of approximately $80,000, of which the latter was named as beneficiary, and she had agreed to at least assist in paying the premiums thereon, which amounted to $2,700 to $3,000 per annum. McCammish was a relative of Mrs. Brown, and had lived on the same ranch for a period of 17 years; Tipton was her uncle, and, at Camp's suggestion, had been employed to assist in managing the ranch properties during the 4 months next preceding the latter's demise. Mills had known Stanton Brown for many years, had nursed him in his illness, and continued to visit him.

[1] It was contended on behalf of the people at the time of the trial that the defendant Jennie Laura Brown had conceived and progressively forwarded a scheme and design to poison the minds of Tipton, McCammish, and Mills against Camp, and conspired with them to harass and discourage him until he should abandon the ranch properties and his life insurance to her. In attempting to prove the existence of gross unpleasantness and discord among said parties in furtherance of such conspiracy and design, several witnesses were called by the district attorney, who were permitted to testify to many hearsay statements of the deceased and others. Strenuous objections to each question propounded to such witnesses were interposed, upon the grounds that it called for irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial, and hearsay testimony which did not tend to prove any issue in the case. The defendants moved to strike out each such answer, upon the same grounds. All of the objections so made were overruled by the trial court, and the motions to strike were denied. These rulings are here assigned as prejudicial error. The testimony of this character covers an extensive field in the record, and we need only to detail a few excerpts therefrom.

The people's witness Theresa Lindauer, testified that 7 months before he was injured Lee Camp visited her, and that he asked, "If I knew anything about how he could cash in on his insurance in order to get the money ahead, as he didn't have very much on hand, and I told him to go take a note; I did not know anything about it; and then he told me that he would not be able to leave the place just then on account of the condition in which his land and his money was tied up, and, if he left now, he would not have anything"; that in July, 5 months before Camp died, "he told me about the trouble he was having at home"; "he came out and told me that his relations at home were quite unbearable, and that his clothes at this time had been taken away from him, and had been hidden so that he would not be able to go out at any time"; "and then he told me also that he didn't think he would be able to stand it very much longer, as the day before he had gotten a tongue lashing, the worst he had ever gotten in his life before."

The witness Alfred Brown testified, "Lee told Frank Marciel he didn't want to go home any more, because he was having lots of trouble." Lambert swore that "he stated that he had been the goat on the ranch for 3 years, and that he had tried to get a settlement with them the year before, but that they wanted to sell out to him or either sell the property and divide the money"; and People's witness Roberts testified: "He said there had been another row up at the breakfast table over the drawing up of the 3-year lease, between himself and Uncle Johnnie (Tipton); and Mr. Camp stated that, if Uncle Johnnie didn't keep out of his business he was going to knock his damned head off. He didn't know what he was around there for, anyhow."

The foregoing and much other such testimony constituted the only evidence of the fact to which they related, and we are unable to find elsewhere in the record any evidence from which the jury would have been justified in concluding that there existed a common understanding among the defendants which was intended to accomplish purposes detrimental to Lee Camp. That such was the object of offering it is not questioned, and the district attorney elaborated upon the strifes mentioned in his closing argument to the jury. He there said, in part:

> "Now, then, unless they are going to tell you that they think the testimony of Lee Camp is to be disbelieved, for the purpose for which it was introduced, namely, as to the conditions on that farm, unless they are going to put him in the same category that they have put every other citizen who has had anything to do with this case, that they are perjurers, you have got to accept that as the truth and the fact, and therefore, on this particular morning, at this particular time, if you please, isn't it very significant that that was the time when the final crisis was coming between Mrs. Brown and Lee Camp? That was the final moment when the mission of Tipton upon that farm was going to be called into play, as to whether her interests, Mrs. Brown's, was to be subserved, or whether Lee Camp was to get out."

Judgments have repeatedly been reversed in this and about every other jurisdiction in this country wherein hearsay testimony of the character above noted has been introduced. In People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494, 20 P. 56, our Supreme Court, quoting with approval from People v. Carlton, 57 Cal. 84, 40 Am. Rep. 112, said:

> "'This testimony was not a part of the res gestæ, and was not admissible under the authorities to which reference has been made, nor upon any theory or principle of the law with which we are acquainted. From it injury might readily have resulted to the defendant, for it might have been, and probably was, argued therefrom that deceased intended to resort to the courts rather than to force for redress, and therefore did not commence the rencounter in which he lost his life.' * * * Such declarations depend for their force upon the veracity of the deceased, or the party who has been assaulted, are highly prejudicial (State v. Pomeroy, 25 Kan. 350), and are regarded as being so grievously injurious that in one case it was held the judgment should be reversed, although no objection was made to the evidence when offered. People v. Williams, 3 Abb. App. [Dec. (N. Y.)] 600. There is no analogy between such statements and dying declarations; for the latter, being made in view of immediate death, have all the sanction and solemnity of testimony given under oath before the court and jury. * * *
>
> "But it is claimed by counsel for respondent that these declarations were admissible in evidence to prove conspiracy, and the court seems to have allowed them for that and no other purpose; that is to say, the main fact which they are supposed to explain is the alleged conspiracy, and not the killing. In other words, it is admitted by counsel for respondent, as we understand the matter, that if there was no question of conspiracy in the case, a declaration by deceased that Irwin was making preparations to kill him, and would kill him unless he left the country, would be inadmissible. This must be admitted. Such a declaration is on a par with the one referred to in People v. Carlton, supra, and, as said there, 'not admissible upon any theory or principle of the law with which we are acquainted.'"

In People v. Gress, 107 Cal. 461, 40 P. 752, a witness was permitted to testify that the deceased had told the witness of domestic difficulties which he was experiencing on account of the attentions of the defendant to decedent's wife; that the deceased had said:

> "'I am in trouble. * * * I want to save my boy, and that's my hurry for coming here.'"

In reversing a judgment of conviction in that case it was said:

> "This evidence was clearly hearsay, and was wholly inadmissible upon any possible theory of the case, or upon any principle or rule of evidence known to the law. It is no less hearsay because the declarations were those of the deceased, since proof of such declarations are only admissible when made in extremis—dying declarations, having reference to the circumstances of the death, or when they constitute a part of the res gestæ. People v. Carkhuff, 24 Cal. 642. In this case they were neither."

To the same effect are People v. Landis, 139 Cal. 426, 73 P. 153, and People v. Driggs, 12 Cal. App. 240, 108 P. 62, 64. From the foregoing the inevitable conclusion is that the admission of the declarations in question constituted reversible error.

The respondent cites many authorities from other jurisdictions, but, were they even persuasive, we should be compelled to recognize and follow the rule uniformly denounced in all analogous decisions in this state.

People v. Wright, 167 Cal. 1, 138 P. 349, cited by respondent, upheld the admission of extrajudicial statements of a woman as to her condition of pregnancy in a prosecution for murder by abortion. Such evidence was not there offered to show motive on the part of the defendant, but to establish a condition necessary to proof of the commission of the offense. Rogers v. Manhattan Insurance Co., 138 Cal. 285, 71 P. 348, held that proof of suicide would obviate the necessity for waiting 7 years to establish liability upon a policy of insurance in cases otherwise falling within the requirements of subdivision 26, section 1963, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Neither of these cases is in point.

A witness called by the people was asked to "tell us what you saw at that time when you came by" the Brown residence, to which he replied that he saw nothing except three automobiles standing in the yard. The district attorney then propounded the following question:

> "Isn't it a fact, Mr. Garcia, that about 3 or 4 days after Mr. Camp died that you were over in Bettencourt's barber shop, here on Doughty street, in the city of Hanford, and you told Mr. Bettencourt and his father there that on the morning of December 14, 1924, when you came by Mr. Brown's ranch early in the morning, that you saw Lee Camp staggering out of the back door like a chicken with his head cut off?"

Strenuous objections were at once interposed by the defendants, upon the grounds that such questions and line of examination were but an attempt to impeach the people's own witness; that no proper foundation had been laid; that the prosecution had not shown that they were taken by surprise; that the witness had given no testimony contrary to any statement embodied in the question; that it called for hearsay testimony; and that it was incompetent and immaterial. Thereupon the district attorney was sworn, and testified that Garcia had promised to come into court and "tell the truth" as to a statement which he had made to the barber. The witness was then recalled, and, over the same objections, swore that he had previously been examined by the district attorney for a period of 3 hours, during which the latter "talked to him kind of rough"; that he had informed the district attorney at that time that all he saw was three machines in the yard; that a person passing the Brown ranch could see "just the front door"; "you can't see the back door." Bettencourt and two other witnesses were then called by the people, and each, over the objections by defendants upon all the grounds heretofore recited, testified that Garcia had made the statements embraced in the question quoted above. Bettencourt added to his answers the following:

> "I says, 'like a drunk man?' He says, 'No, worse than that. Like a chicken with the head cut off.'"

Appellants insist that the testimony of these witnesses was hearsay; that it did not tend to contradict any testimony given by Garcia from the stand; and that it was inadmissible for any purpose. The respondent relies upon sections 2049 and 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and cases construing them.

[2] Said sections merely provide that, under proper conditions, a party may impeach his own witness by showing that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony. While, standing alone, it was perhaps not seriously prejudicial to the rights of the defendants, we think it was error to have received this testimony. The rule which permits one to impeach his own witness in the manner specified by the Code sections just mentioned is subject to certain qualifications. It must be remembered that ordinarily one who calls a witness to the stand vouches for his veracity. Again, proof that the witness has made statements out of court is generally refused admission, because it is hearsay. In order to avoid exclusion upon these, and no doubt other, considerations, it must first appear that some competent purpose is to be subserved. To put a witness on the stand merely to impeach him is not permissible. People v. Crespi, 115 Cal. 50, 46 P. 863. The only object which will justify impeaching a witness by showing that he has made other statements different from those given upon the trial is to detract from his credibility, in order that other testimony given by him may carry less weight with the jury (People v. Godwin, 123 Cal. 374, 55 P. 1059), for the impeaching statements cannot be considered for the purpose of establishing the truth of the declarations themselves. Thiele v. Newman, 116 Cal. 571, 48 P. 713; People v. Mitchell, 94 Cal. 550, 29 P. 1106. In the instant case, it is true that, if Garcia made the statements attributed to him at the barber shop, it might be assumed that they were inconsistent with his testimony to the effect that he saw nothing except the machines as he was passing the house from which Camp was supposed to have emerged. But this was the only testimony which Garcia gave. To permit his impeachment could accomplish no purpose, except to show that he was not worthy of belief. Proof that he made the declarations attributed to him at the barber shop could not be considered by the jury in determining whether or not such statements were true, and therefore the impeachment should not have been permitted.

[3] Garcia, as a witness, testified that he "saw nothing except three machines." Now, if he be impeached, the net result is to prove that this statement is not to be believed, and that he did not see the machines. The people's case was no better off to have the jury conclude that Garcia did not see three machines than to have his statement that he did see them accepted as true. It is only when the evidence produced has resulted in injury to the cause of the party producing the witness that sections 2049 and 2052 may be made the bases of impeachment of the witness giving it. People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384; People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 P. 314; People v. Mitchell, supra; People v. Godwin, supra.

[4] It is argued by the respondent that this rule was waived by the defendants. It appears that, during argument as to the admissibility of such evidence, the district attorney remarked that Garcia had been in his office, and proceeded to detail the circumstances. One of the counsel for defendants demanded that the district attorney be sworn and take the stand, which he did, but objections were immediately interposed to his stating any of his alleged conversation with Garcia, and repeated comprehensive objections were continuously interjected to each question propounded to the district attorney while testifying. We think the request of the defendants amounted to nothing more than a legitimate precaution against the district attorney making unsworn statements as to matters which were objectionable as being incompetent. If constrained to state what occurred, and apparently indicating that he would do so, it was but proper that he be sworn and testify as any other witness, and subject to the same rules of evidence and objections by his adversaries.

[5] Two experts, a chemist and a crime investigator, were called as witnesses for the defendants, and each testified to the results of his inspection. The chemist swore that certain spots on the premises and on the wearing apparel of the deceased consisted of human blood. When asked during his direct examination as to the direction from which the blood appeared to have emanated, objections on behalf of the people upon the ground that the questions did not call for expert testimony, and that, if given, it would invade the province of the jury, were sustained. The other witness testified to measurements and relative locations and conditions. He then volunteered the statement that certain markings which he discovered "all lay on a single parabolic line with respect to their position above one another," according to his computations and experiments, which statement was stricken out on motion of the district attorney.

It is contended that these rulings were prejudicially erroneous, and in violation of the constitutional rights of the defendants to be heard. We think such contention is untenable. It appears that almost immediately after the injury received by Camp the Chinese laborer heretofore mentioned carefully scrubbed the wheel, bricks, and concrete walk, in an endeavor to remove all blood spots, and to "clean up everything." The two experts did not investigate until nearly 2 months thereafter, when conditions obviously were not, in many respects, the same as those existing at the time of the commission of the alleged offense. At all events, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the knowledge of a chemist as to the probable position of a person from whose wounds blood may have flowed is more certain or reliable than that of the jury having before it all of the facts and circumstances. Nor should the jury be required to accept as an expert opinion the conclusion of an investigator upon matters which may not have borne the same appearance or relationship in February as that existing in December, and as to which his problematical guess could be no more authentic than their own.

[6] It is well settled that an expert will not be permitted to express his opinion as to conclusions from matters of common observation and experience. A person skilled in art, trade, or science, and having knowledge in relation to matters which are not within the grasp of men of average intelligence, education, and experience, may express an opinion only on a state of facts within his specialty and involved in the inquiry. People v. Heacock, 10 Cal. App. 450, 102 P. 543; People v. Willis, 70 Cal. App. 465, 474, 233 P. 812.

[7] It is next insisted by appellants that the admission of Lee Camp's will in evidence constituted error. The respondent concedes that it was offered and received over the objection of the defendants as evidence tending to support the element of motive for the commission of the alleged murder. It appears, however, that the will had been executed more than 10 years prior to December 14, 1924, and, so far as we are able to discern from the record, neither of the defendants had any knowledge of its existence. Assuming, therefore, from the defendants' viewpoint, that no will existed, it is impossible upon any theory that any act of theirs could have been influenced thereby. Appellants' objections to the introduction of this document should have been sustained.

[8] Appellants complain that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of Pearl Camp, sister of the deceased, as to facts asserted to constitute another crime. The witness swore that during her girlhood Mrs. Brown had grossly mistreated her, compelled her to do manual labor on the ranch, and had attempted to injure her by inserting phonograph needles in capsules of quinine which had been prescribed for her. It was the theory of the prosecution that the defendant Brown had for a period of years conducted a campaign of merciless persecution against the Camp children, for the purpose of causing estrangement between them, and it in fact appears that they had not spoken to each other for some time previously to the injury and death of Lee Camp. It was claimed that Mrs. Brown planned, by alienating the affections of Pearl Camp for her brother, to curtail or terminate his outside source of advice and counsel, and thus to control his actions. The incident of the phonograph needles is but one of numerous acts related by the witness, and offered as tending to establish criminal design of a premeditated character in carrying out the felonious scheme to secure Camp's property, as well as that of his sister. We think, therefore, that the testimony in controversy was properly admitted.

[9] A special prosecutor for the people during his closing argument made numerous statements which the defendants assigned as misconduct, and requested that the jury be admonished to disregard, which the trial court declined to do. We quote excerpts therefrom, as follows:

Stating that the defendants had reflected upon counsel for the people during the trial as being unfair, the special prosecutor continued:

> " * * * But whenever they cast any reflection upon me or my presence here, they are not casting it nor any part of it upon me as an individual, but they are casting it upon me as a representative of the state of California, as a representative of the citizens of Kings county, as a representative of the grand jury of this county, if you please."

A grand jury is not concerned with the employment of prosecuting attorneys, nor with the obtaining of convictions, and there is no reason that this grand jury should have interested itself in the case beyond its investigation in disregard of any possible defenses which the defendants might have had. Their opinions, derived from a consideration of but one side of the issues, amounted to no more than a conclusion that the case should be fairly tried by twelve peers of the defendants, upon all of the evidence, and it is neither in consonance with legal principles nor true in fact that the district attorney appears as spokesman for the original body before a trial jury.

[10] It was argued, further:

> "There is a man who was former judge of the superior court of this county that was asked to defend them for a nice big fat sum, and that man wouldn't do it because he couldn't look the citizens of this county in the eye and do it like a man—Judge Short of this county, and these are the defendants. * * * Judge Short's first term of office began in November, 1898, and he served continuously thereafter until the first Monday of January, 1907. He then retired for one term, and again was elected. * * * He served as judge, in all, twenty years, one month and a half."

At the outset it is observed that there is no evidence of this nature in the record. Whether by such statements counsel calculated that the jury should conclude from a political and popular view of the situation that an acquittal would not be tolerated, or that one of their eminent leaders had decided that the defendants were guilty, he did not say. It remains that such argument was unjustifiable upon any ground. The jurors must of necessity have respected and valued the opinion of a learned and distinguished jurist, and doubtless so no less because he was not then on the bench. Considering the entire record, the assertion, in effect, that he believed the defendants to be guilty of the heinous crime charged against them may well have constituted a determining factor in convincing these jurors of their guilt. Since Judge Short was not of counsel for the prosecution, it was impossible for the defendants by examination of the jurors to determine as to whether or not he may have then represented some or all of them, or whether his views would tend to influence them one way or the other. The argument was therefore in this respect improper, and we cannot say that it was not prejudicial.

[11] Again, counsel said:

> "There must have been something in that testimony that did not convey innocence to that coroner's jury, for the reason that they didn't absolutely give them a clean bill of health. * * * We know that these particular people on that ranch at that time are guilty of murder. We know that they struck this man."

There is no evidence in the record upon which such statements could legitimately be founded. For aught that appears that coroner's jury may have believed that Lee Camp's death was the result of an accident. In any event, they were not required to find the defendants not guilty as a condition precedent to any action of a future petit jury. Counsel produced no eyewitness to the occurrence, and was not authorized to comment upon the verdict of the coroner's jury, nor to predicate a statement of the ultimate fact upon his private opinion. People v. Edgar, 34 Cal. App. 459, 467, 167 P. 891.

[12] Counsel's argument bristled with prejudicial insinuations, or worse, concerning the failure of the defendants to testify. He said, in part:

> "At certain times and places the defendants have made certain statements which had been introduced here. At other times they have remained silent. Now then, they have brought in before you Stant Brown, knowing that he was known personally to a number of you, * * * and he, the poor invalid that has been lying up there, and the least apt to know about the facts of the case, * * * he did not know half as much about the case as other people did. * * * If your wife was accused, wouldn't you feel that you were not the proper party, that you weren't the best evidence; and so I say to you, gentlemen, that by the weakness of their efforts to deny certain accusations they have loaned an undying strength to our charge. * * * The only possible contradiction that you have to it is an argument of counsel paid by these defendants, to do with an argument what they were scared to do with evidence. And I want to say to you that any time I call you a liar and I tell you wherein you are a liar, instead of you denying it, you get somebody else to argue for you, the logical deduction is that there is something wrong."

And, referring to Mrs. Brown's answer to one question before the coroner's jury:

> "That is the only sentence, if you please, that she ever gave; the only instance she ever gave was the testimony to the coroner."

And, finally:

> "You have the witnesses to this crime, and you know the way your criminal affairs have been handled in the past, and it is time that somebody was brought in that they do dislike, that does things they dislike, because if they didn't you had better go home tonight and build a wall around your house, and prepare to take the law in your own hands, and give yourselves and your family your own protection."

That the defendants may have elected to stand mute was not a subject for argument to the jury, nor one which they could under any consideration be permitted to consider. As to whether the jurors might or might not under given circumstances deem themselves proper witnesses was a question wholly foreign to a determination of the issues before them. We are unable to conceive of any view which the jury could have taken of the argument last quoted other than that it was intended to suggest that, had the defendants dared to do so, they would have testified. Such is often not the reason for one declining to take the stand when charged with a public offense, and every person's inviolable right to remain silent, for any reason whatever, or for no reason, without subjecting himself to comment of counsel or consideration of that fact by the jury, ever has been and is to-day, safeguarded by the courts of last resort in all jurisdictions. Pen. Code, § 1323; People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 6, 84 P. 463; People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522, 528; People v. Keko, 27 Cal. App. 351, 352, 149 P. 1003; People v. Lemperle, 94 Cal. 45, 48, 29 P. 709; People v. Edgar, supra.

[13] It was also prejudicial misconduct for counsel to suggest that the jurors take the law into their own hands. Hemphill v. Texas, 72 Tex. Cr. R. 638, 165 S. W. 462, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914; State v. Hess, 240 Mo. 147, 144 S. W. 489; Ferguson v. State, 49 Ind. 33; Parker v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 526, 67 S. W. 121; Turner v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 206.

[14] The argument of this special prosecutor consisted of an extended inflammatory attack upon the defendants and their counsel, and it appears that his discourse was followed by "applause and cheers from the audience." The record is permeated by significant exhibitions of appeal, invective, and demands for conviction which could have and doubtless did arouse the passion and prejudice of the jury no less than that of the others listening. It is impossible to say that it appears of record, or could have been characterized by the jury, as a plea for a fair and impartial verdict. We are unable to ignore the fact that, if the ingeniously sweeping statements and accusations of counsel without proof, his charge that the defendants dared not produce better evidence, and that but for his presence the jury might as well resort to unlawful individual action—if these combined lacked damaging influence and coercion, the deficiency was supplied by "applause and cheers," reinforced by the weight of the rulings of the trial court thereon.

[15] Exceptions were taken to certain of such remarks, whereupon it was stipulated, and the court ordered, that, to avoid repeated interruption, any desired assignments for misconduct should not be deemed to have been waived, and might be stated at the close of the argument. When counsel for the people had concluded, the defendants accordingly excepted to the "applause and cheers," and moved that the courtroom be cleared, which motion was denied. Assignments of the alleged prejudicial statements of counsel as misconduct were then attempted to be made, when the trial court interrupted, saying:

> "Mr. Covert, that will be deemed. The court will deem that you have excepted to every statement, and that you have assigned every statement as misconduct on the part of the district attorney, and that the court—and that you have requested the court to instruct the jury—and that the court has refused to do so."

The colloquy closed as follows:

> "Mr. Covert: That is entirely satisfactory.
> "The Court: All right, and that is all for the defendants."

While it could not be said that counsel's entire argument was improper, and constituted misconduct, the defendants were not allowed to designate and except to the portions which were obviously prejudicial, and the entire harangue remained with the jury, unqualified, and stamped with the approval of the trial court.

We do not think any admonition by the court below could have disabused the minds of the jury of the damaging thrusts of the prosecutor which so patently savored of animosity and personal venom. But it lay within the power and the duty of the court to caution the jury, and to admonish counsel, when objection was first interposed, and to prevent a repetition of such infractions of the most elementary rules of judicial procedure and decorum. The action of counsel for the prosecution was beyond doubt damaging misconduct, and the rulings of the trial court constituted prejudicial error.

[16] On February 19, 1924, the grand jury which returned the indictment in this case were in session at the courthouse, and appellant Tipton, who had been sworn, testified before them. At the close of the day the foreman announced an adjournment until the following morning, and instructed Tipton to return at 10 o'clock a. m. On the morning of the 20th the inquisitorial body met at the courthouse, but did not enter their juryroom. It appears that they entered automobiles and proceeded to the premises of appellants, and that Tipton and other witnesses were present, and took part in demonstrating and explaining to the grand jurors the position in which Camp had been found, the locations of blood spots, ropes, and other paraphernalia.

Prior to the trial motions were made to set aside the indictment upon the ground that "a third person was present during the session of the grand jury, when the charge embraced in the indictment was under consideration, other than the persons provided by section 925 of the Penal Code."

The respondent denied that the grand jury "convened" at said premises, or that they held a "session" at that time. It is here insisted that the grand jury drove to the ranch in their respective automobiles; that they divided into groups, inspected the premises, and individually gathered a "general aspect" of surrounding conditions for the purpose of acquiring a "mental picture" of the situation. The foreman of the grand jury and appellant Tipton testified, and affidavits of others, including five of the grand jurors, were introduced upon the motion to set aside the indictment.

From such evidence it appears that the grand jurors all assembled at the tankhouse in question, and that one Fields, a detective for an insurance company, was placed on the ground in approximately the position in which Camp lay when found; that appellants Tipton and Mills took part in the demonstration; and that witnesses Cronin and Hallinan and two Chinamen were present. Tipton swore that he was questioned by certain grand jurors and others; that he was directed to obtain the rope, and the block and tackle, and to "come around there at that particular tankhouse where this demonstration was going on. * * * Mr. Fields was the man doing the demonstrating. * * * He was lying on the ground, and I was to place his body in the position, as near as I could remember, as that which Mr. Camp's body was found at the time I found him, * * * and I placed, as near as I could, his carcass, as near as I could remember as to where it should be. * * * Fields argued with me about objects supposed to have been present when Camp was killed; asked me who moved the rope from the tankhouse; I asked him if he was a member of the grand jury, and he said 'No.' I told him, 'It looks to me as if you have got far enough.' He then hauled off as though he was going to take a punch at me." The foregoing testimony was corroborated by Hallinan, Mills and Cronin. The latter averred that Fields actively participated in the examination of witnesses, demonstrated his theory as to how the murder was committed, argued with members of the jury, and disposed his body and other objects upon the ground, and that Tipton was examined for a period of about 15 minutes. Mills swore that he also was examined to considerable length, and that he was required by grand jurors to assist in the demonstration; that some jurymen asked about the blood spots, and "then I showed them as near as I could the blood spots, where they were, and showed them under the bench that is there, where the blood spots were on the house about five or six feet away, and are still there." This witness also testified that he had previously been sworn by the grand jury.

The evidence adduced upon the hearing of the motion to set aside the indictment is voluminous, but we deem it unnecessary for the purpose of considering the point here presented to quote it extensively. None of the grand jurors deny the fact that witnesses were questioned, or that the jurors were all present. The demonstrations are admitted to have been made as we have recited. Some of the statements of appellants' witnesses are evaded by the foreman and other grand jurors, but none denied. It was testified by them that they were not acquainted with Hallinan or Cronin, and, therefore, that they could not say whether they saw them or not. The crux of the situation, however, arises by strenuous insistence of the grand jurors, statements of the trial court, and argument in the briefs upon appeal, that the jurors did not convene as a grand jury, nor swear any witnesses at the ranch; that they visited the premises merely for the purpose of inspection, and were not "in session" when the evidence mentioned was offered.

The Penal Code requires that a grand jury must retire to a private room to inquire into alleged offenses (Pen. Code, § 906); that they can receive no other evidence than such as is given by witnesses produced and sworn before them, or furnished by legal documentary evidence, or by deposition (Pen. Code, § 919); and that no person other than counsel for the people, a stenographic reporter, witness, and interpreter shall be present during the session of the grand jury, "and no person must be permitted to be present during the expression of their opinions, or giving their votes upon any matter before them. Pen. Code, § 925.

Our attention is called to no authority in this or any other jurisdiction which by even remote analogy can be said to have sanctioned proceedings of a grand jury such as are outlined in the record before us. In State v. Johnson, 116 La. 856, 41 So. 117, it was held that to merely visit the scene of a homicide in charge of a deputy sheriff and the district attorney, without an order of court therefor, was not improper. But such ruling was expressly founded upon statutes requiring grand jurors to act upon facts within their own knowledge, and "from which it also follows that they do not require the permission of the court to investigate crime, but are bound to take the initiative and determine for themselves the character of the evidence, or the sufficiency of the facts, necessary to their findings." In Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 P. 961, the Supreme Court of Colorado held that, while cases might arise wherein such inspection would greatly assist them, "such proceedings being unusual and extraordinary must, unless otherwise provided by statute, first have the sanction of the court. And as a matter of course there must be a careful compliance with the limitations and regulations prescribed in the order." It must at once be conceded that the grand jury of whose proceedings complaint is made in the instant case acted, not only without an order of court, but in contravention of the provisions of the Penal Code. The statutes of this state do not vest in grand juries the broad powers of investigation and discretion indicated by the Louisiana case above cited. The Penal Code is mandatory in its safeguards of such secret inquisitorial bodies. And, further, it cannot be said that the grand jury here involved visited the premises in question in charge of a deputy sheriff and district attorney, or merely for the purpose of inspection. The mere fact that apparently as an afterthought they now seek to escape criticism by asserting that they were not "in session" at the Brown ranch, and that they swore no witnesses, cannot alter the record, nor is the legal effect of their conduct within their province to decide. They adjourned on the 19th of February, to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. on the 20th. They did not enter their juryroom, as formerly intended and agreed, but all proceeded to the premises of their own volition, where they received much evidence. At least seven other persons were present during the proceedings, two of whom were witnesses who had theretofore been sworn, and had testified before the grand jury. To permit such bodies, surrounded as they are by the statutory restrictions which we have indicated, to arbitrarily rule themselves "in session" and not "in session," and to receive evidence in the same case in both capacities, would be to hold that the provisions of the statute are directory only, and that by some power peculiar to themselves they might at will deprive courts of the power to afford the public any of the benefits provided by the Legislature.

[17, 18] As was said in People v. Bright, 157 Cal. 663, 667, 109 P. 33, 35, the only capacity in which an unauthorized person may be called before or attend upon the grand jury session is that "of witness during the actual taking of his own testimony." And the Supreme Court concluded by announcing the rule as follows:

> "We may question the wisdom of some of our statutory provisions relative to grand jurors and the grounds upon which an indictment shall be set aside, but it is our duty to comply with their mandatory requirements. * * *"

The consensus of all authority with which we are familiar is in complete harmony with this rule. In State v. Wetzel, 75 W. Va. 7, 83 S. E. 68, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1074, it appeared that a grand jury adjourned to other premises, where four persons not witnesses discussed certain facts whereupon they returned to their juryroom. It was there said:

> "The law holds inviolate the secrecy of proceedings before the grand jury. * * * Quoting from the opinion of Judge Bynum, in Lewis v. Board of Commissioners, 74 N. C. 199: 'None but witnesses have any business before them. * * * The examination of witnesses is conducted by them, without the advice or interference of others. Their findings must be their own, uninfluenced by the promptings or suggestions of others, or the opportunity thereof.'"

Many other authorities are quoted with approval in State v. Wetzel, supra, wherein all informal appearances before grand juries, and unauthorized participation in their inquiries, are condemned. In State v. Fasset, 16 Conn. 457, it was said:

> "It is the peculiar policy of the law, in the furtherance of justice, that this preliminary inquiry should be conducted in secret."

[19] The trial court, in its ruling sustaining the indictment herein, stated, in part:

> "They certainly did get information there, there is no question about that. But that is equally true of trial juries. If you want to take the analogy of trial juries going out to view premises. They certainly get information there. That is their object in going out there."

This point was discussed in Wyatt v. People, supra, in the following language:

> "Some analogy may be said to exist in this regard between the action of grand and petit jurors, though the larger powers and greater independence of the former render this analogy imperfect. Inspection by the latter during the progress of trials, under proper circumstances and limitations, is now frequently permitted in civil cases, and the authority therefor is often declared by statute. But we are strongly of the opinion that the grand jury has no more right to visit premises for the purpose of official inspection upon its own motion than the petit jury."

It would not for an instant be contended that even a petit jury could voluntarily and without an order of court make an inspection of premises and examine witnesses in a case before it, and under the authority last cited there is much less justification for such action by a grand jury. We think, therefore, that the order denying the motion to set aside the indictment should have been granted.

Many other points are presented, but they involve questions which either because of what has been said become unimportant, or may not be expected to again arise in the event of another trial.

The judgments and orders appealed from are reversed, with directions to the trial court to set aside the indictment.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [20] The petition for hearing is denied. In denying the same, however, we withhold our approval from that portion of the decision of the district court of appeal wherein it was held that the trial court was in error in admitting certain evidence offered by the prosecution to impeach the witness Garcia. In our opinion such evidence was properly admitted, and the appellate court was in error in holding to the contrary. In all other respects, however, we are in accord with the decision of the district court of appeal.

---

81 Cal. App. 267

PRICE v. MANUEL. (Civ. 3194.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 8, 1927. Rehearing Denied March 10, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 8, 1927.)

Payment 🔑80—Money paid held not recoverable, where certainly owed, though payor claimed credit on note and payee claimed money was consideration for contract.

Where money was actually owed and paid, it was not recoverable, although the parties differed as to its application; one claiming it was to be credited on a promissory note, and the other that it was consideration for entering into a contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action by John L. Price against Walter Manuel. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry C. McPike, of Oakland, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the "defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $2,550 * * * for so much money had and received by said defendant to and for plaintiff's use," and that the plaintiff had demanded payment thereof, but that the defendant refused to make such payment. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint. The trial court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, and, upon the verdict so returned, judgment was entered in favor of defendant for his costs of suit. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

In September, 1921, the parties entered into an agreement, by the terms of which the defendant, as party of the first part, agreed to sell an apartment house to the plaintiff for $180,000, payment of $50,000 to be made January 2, 1922, and $130,000 a year later, interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum to be paid on the $130,000 from October 1, 1921. The agreement contained the following paragraph:

> "It is further agreed that, upon and in the event of the consummation of said sale, to wit, on the 2d day of January, 1922, the party of the second part shall be regarded as if he had been the tenant of said Como Apartments from the 1st day of October, 1921, to the 1st day of January, 1922, for the following purposes, to wit: The party of the first part shall pay the net income he has received from said property from October 1, 1921, to January 1, 1922, to said party of the second part; and said party of the second part shall pay to said party of the first part the sum of $4,500, of which sum the sum of $1,950 shall be regarded as rent paid for said premises from October 1, 1921, to January 1, 1922, but nevertheless shall then be applied in payment of interest on said note for $130,000 accruing from October 1, 1921, to January 1, 1922, and the remainder of said sum, to wit, $2,550, shall be the consideration paid by the party of the second part to the party of the first part for entering into this agreement."

Plaintiff sought to recover on the theory that the provision in the agreement that "$2,550 shall be the consideration paid by the party of the second part to the party of the first part for entering into this agreement" was inserted therein by fraud or mistake, and that the real agreement between the parties was that such sum was to be applied as payment upon the principal. Plaintiff testified that he did not know that the agreement contained that provision at the time of its execution. He further testified as follows:

> "I understood when I entered into the agreement with Mr. Manuel that he was to receive $4,500 out of the income for the last three months of the year 1921. He was to receive $4,500 for three months, $650 to be interest on the $130,000 a month, and $850 to be credited on my note as principal. * * * I was to have all the net proceeds of the Como over the $4,500. * * * My agreement was that the $2,550 should be credited on the note."

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Plaintiff received the income from the property for the last three months of 1921 amounting to nearly $6,000. Plaintiff's testimony to the effect that the written contract does not express the true agreement between the parties was contradicted by that of the plaintiff.

According to the plaintiff's own testimony and theory of the case, he is not entitled to recover in this action. If he is entitled to any relief it is to be given credit on his promissory note in accordance with his version of the agreement. In a note in L. R. A. 1916F, 538, it is said:

> "No case has been found in which a debtor has recovered back from his creditor money he has paid him, which at the time of payment was the money of the debtor, was justly due from the debtor to the creditor, and was paid and received in their individual capacities."

No such case has been cited by appellant herein. Appellant relies on Gregory v. Clabrough's Executors, 129 Cal. 475, 62 P. 72. That case involved a payment by a mortgagor to his mortgagee of money to which the latter was not entitled; the payment being made under a mutual mistake of law. The mortgagor was not given credit on the mortgage note or in the subsequent foreclosure suit, which resulted in a judgment for the full amount of the debt, without any deduction on account of such payment. The decision in that case, therefore, is not in point.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

---

81 Cal. App. 312

PEOPLE v. SHAW et al. (Cr. 931.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 14, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑1071—Appeal is ineffectual and will be dismissed, where application for transcript does not state grounds of appeal (Pen. Code, § 1247).

Under Pen. Code, § 1247, appeal is ineffectual and must be dismissed, where application for transcript neither states nor attempts to state the grounds of appeal; it not being aided by anything stated in the notice of appeal.

2. Criminal law 🔑1131(2)—Court will of own motion dismiss appeal, where it has not jurisdiction.

Court will of its own motion dismiss appeal, in absence of motion or suggestion by respondent, where, by reason of failure of appellant to take proper steps, it is without jurisdiction to consider the appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Ralph Shaw and John Trowbridge were charged with, and on trial Trowbridge was convicted of, manslaughter and violation of statute as to stopping automobile and rendering assistance after accident, and he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Fred J. Harris and M. F. Shelley, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The appellant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter and also of the offense of failing to stop and render assistance, after have run down and killed a boy riding on a bicycle, on one of the public highways of the county of Sacramento, state of California, on or about the 9th day of January, 1926. His appeal is prosecuted from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

On the 25th day of March, 1926, after an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial had been made and entered, the defendant filed a notice of appeal, which, omitting the title, is in the following words and figures:

> "You and each of you will please take notice, and notice is hereby given you, that the appellant above named, John Trowbridge, appeals to the Third District Court of Appeal in and for the state of California from the judgment of the above-entitled court made and entered on the 25th day of March, 1926, denying his motion for a new trial; that the said appeal will be and is taken on all the records, papers, and files now or hereafter on file, relative to said action with the clerk of the above-entitled court.
>
> "Dated: March 25, 1926.
>
> "Fred J. Harris,
> "M. F. Shelley,
> "Attorneys for Defendant."

On the same day appellant filed his application for a transcript of the phonographic reporter's notes, which application, omitting the title, is in the following words and figures:

> "You and each of you will please take notice, and notice is hereby given you, that John Trowbridge, the defendant and appellant above named, having heretofore taken an appeal to the Third District Court of Appeal in and for the state of California from the judgment and order of the above-entitled court denying his motion for a new trial made and entered on the 25th day of March, 1926, demands a full and complete transcription of phonographic and/or stenographic notes made of all the matters and things pertaining to the above-entitled criminal matters and numbers in the above-entitled court, on the 18th, 19th, and 22d days of March, 1926, or any other dates: the same being necessary for appellant in order to prosecute and properly present his case before the Third District Court of Appeal in and for the state of California.

"Dated: March 25, 1926.

"John Trowbridge,
"Defendant and Appellant."

[1] The transcript was prepared and certified to this court, covering some 541 pages, and we are now asked to examine said transcript and determine therefrom whether or not the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict in finding the defendant guilty of manslaughter. This, however, would be of no avail to the appellant because we have, for reasons herein about to be stated, no jurisdiction to interfere with the order or judgment of the trial court. Section 1247 of the Penal Code provides:

> Upon the taking of an appeal, the appellant "must, within five days, file with the clerk and present an application to the trial court, stating in general terms the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which the appellant relies, and designate what portions of the phonographic reporter's notes it will be necessary to have transcribed to fairly present the points relied upon. If such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed and the judgment or order may be enforced as if no appeal had been taken."

This subdivision of section 1247 of the Penal Code has been construed by the District Court of Appeal a number of times, and it has been uniformly held that a statement of the grounds upon which the appeal is based must be set forth in the application, and that since the amendment to this section in 1911 such provision is mandatory. In the case of Rhodes v. Sargent, 17 Cal. App. 54, 118 P. 727, this matter came before the court upon mandamus proceedings; an order having been made directing the judge of the trial court to show cause why he should not be required to certify to the correctness of the transcript prepared in that case. Upon the hearing it appeared that the grounds for the appeal were not stated and the court in that case held the language of the section mandatory and denied the application for the writ. In People v. All, 38 Cal. App. 544, 176 P. 883, the question of the failure of the appellant to comply with the subdivision of section 1247 which we have quoted was again before the court. The court there said:

> "The Attorney General objects to any consideration of these appeals for the reason that the record does not show that an application stating the grounds of the appeal was filed by the defendant as required by section 1247 of the Penal Code. This objection was called to the attention of defendant's attorney by the service upon him of respondent's brief more than a month prior to the submission of the case in this court. No suggestion has been made that the record is incomplete, and we therefore assume that appellant failed to comply with the requirements of said section 1247, by neglecting to file the application required by that section. The filing of such application is mandatory. The section itself declares that, 'if such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed and the judgment or order may be enforced as if no appeal had been taken' "—citing authorities to the same effect.

In the case of People v. Sanders, 60 Cal. App. 742, 214 P. 246, the proceeding was before the court upon a suggestion of diminution of record, and in considering such question the court, upon its own investigation of the record, discovered that the application for a transcript of the testimony failed to state the grounds of the appeal, or any of the points relied upon as made mandatory by the section and following which the cases which we have cited were referred to, and concluded its opinion as follows:

> "It also appears that there has been no effectual appeal from the final judgment of conviction because of appellant's failure to specify in any way the grounds of such appeal. The appeal from the final judgment is dismissed."

In the case of People v. Flaherty, 61 Cal. App. 775, 215 P. 699, it is also held:

> "An appeal in a criminal case is wholly ineffectual and must be dismissed where the application required to be filed under section 1247 of the Penal Code fails to state the grounds of appeal."

In People v. Hill, 248 P. 714, this court had before it a question identical with the one here being considered. The application in that case was no more wanting in jurisdictional requisites than is the case at bar. This court there said:

> "It is clear that no attempt was made in the application to state the grounds of the appeal or the points upon which the appellant relies. It has been held uniformly that the provisions of section 1247 are mandatory and that failure to comply substantially therewith is fatal"—citing the cases which we have heretofore referred to.

[2] An examination of the application in the case at bar shows that there was no attempt whatever made to set forth the grounds of the appeal, nor is the application aided by anything contained in the notice of appeal. No motion was made to dismiss this appeal, nor has any suggestion been made by respondent that this court is without jurisdiction to consider the same, but this is fully answered by an excerpt taken from the case of Bienenfeld v. Fresno Milling Co., 82 Cal. 425, 22 P. 1113:

> "Not having jurisdiction of the appeal, we must dismiss it. The only embarrassment we experience in arriving at this determination is caused by the omission of respondent to raise the point. But we cannot proceed further in a case after discovering that we have no jurisdiction, whether the point is raised by counsel or not."

In 2 California Jurisprudence, p. 496, § 240, the rule applicable is thus stated:

> "If the appellate court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, it will dismiss the appeal even though the point has not been raised by the respondent, since it is wholly without authority to proceed in such a case."

In 7 Ruling Case Law, p. 1043, § 75, it is said:

> "A court will recognize want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter even if no objection is made, and therefore whenever a want of jurisdiction is suggested, by the court's examination of the case or otherwise, it is the duty of the court to consider it, for if the court is without jurisdiction it is powerless to act in the case. As heretofore shown, the jurisdiction of a court over the subject-matter of a cause of action must be conferred by law, and it cannot under any circumstances be conferred on a court, as such, by the consent of the parties."

It follows from what has been said that the appeal in this case must be and the same is hereby dismissed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 210

HAYES v. O'MARR. (Civ. 4547.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1927.)

1. Limitation of actions 🔑25(3)—Cause of action on note held governed by four-year statute.

Where defendant executed promissory note July 1, 1913, payable in one year from date, cause of action on note held barred four years after July 2, 1914, notwithstanding payments of interest, last of which was December 1, 1921.

2. Limitation of actions 🔑151(2)—Promise to pay outlawed note created new obligation, and was itself basis of action.

When new promise or acknowledgment of indebtedness was made after cause of action on note was barred by statute of limitations, new promise created a new obligation, and was itself basis of action.

3. Limitation of actions 🔑193—Plaintiff, suing upon conditional promise to pay outlawed note, must plead and prove that condition came into being.

Plaintiff, suing on defendant's promise to pay outlawed note, when defendant would sell some property, must plead and prove that defendant had sold property before he could recover on new promise.

4. Limitation of actions 🔑149(2)—Law cannot imply unqualified promise to pay outlawed note, where promise was clearly qualified.

Law cannot imply an unqualified promise to pay outlawed note, where promise was clearly qualified by statement that he would pay as soon as he sold some property.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action on a promise to pay an outlawed note by Jerry Hayes against John O'Marr. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Treadwell, Tompkins & Clark, of San Diego, for appellant.

W. C. Wilde, of San Diego, for respondent.

YORK, J. The only point involved on this appeal is as to whether the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The appeal, which comes here on the judgment roll alone, is from a judgment in favor of defendant. The action is based upon an alleged breach of contract to pay money. It appears that the defendant and his wife, Kate O'Marr, executed a promissory note in favor of plaintiff on July 1, 1913, for $1,000, payable in one year from date. Interest was paid up to December 1, 1921. It does not appear in what manner interest was paid until the last payment was made, which was on December 8, 1921. This payment, it may be assumed, was made by check, signed by the defendant, since the letter written and signed by defendant at that time says: "You will find hear inclosed my check for interest."

[1, 2] The cause of action on said note was barred four years after July 2, 1914. It is settled that, when the new promise or acknowledgment of indebtedness is made after the bar of the statute, the new promise creates a new obligation, and is itself the basis of the action. Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 P. 40. This action must therefore be considered as based upon a new contract. The check, which is assumed to have been signed by the defendant, was accompanied by the statement that defendant could not pay the note then. The letter, as set out in the findings, said:

> "San Diego, Calif., Dec. 8, 1921.
>
> "Mr. Jerry Hayes—Dear Sir: I reseaved a letter from Mr. Frank T. Hook asking me to pay note $1,000.00 and Interest $64.17. I cant pay note now untill I sell som property. I havnt sold the hous I bilt last winter when you was hear. I am in hopes to sell befor spring you will find hear inclosed my check for interest hope it will be sadisfactory.
>
> "Yours very truly,
> [Signed] John O'Marr."

[3, 4] There is no claim by plaintiff that defendant ever sold the property. Where such a promise is made, there must be pleading and proof that the condition has come into being, on which the promise was made. Van Buskirk v. Kuhns, 164 Cal. 472, 475, 476, 129 P. 587, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 932; Snyder v. Dederichs, 39 Cal. App. 628, 179 P. 535. In the case of Clunin v. First Federal Trust Co., 189 Cal. at page 253, 207 P. 1011, it was said:

> "It is clear from all these decisions that no writing is sufficient as an acknowledgment under section 360, unless it contains some reference to a debt, which, either of itself or with the aid of permissible evidence of extrinsic facts in explanation, amounts to an admission that there is a debt existing to the creditor to whom the writing is sent which the debtor is liable to pay and willing to pay."

Also, see Searles v. Gonzalez, 191 Cal. at page 430, 216 P. 1004, 28 A. L. R. 78, where the court said:

> "It is well established that the Code section does not prescribe any form in which an acknowledgment or promise sufficient to lift the ban of the statute of limitations shall be made. It is sufficient if it shows the writer treats the indebtedness as subsisting and one which the debtor is liable and willing to pay. From this acknowledgment the law implies the promise to pay."

But the law cannot imply an unqualified promise where the promise is clearly qualified by a statement relating to facts which are to exist before the promise will become direct and positive.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 356

CARL v. EADE. (Civ. 4802.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 15, 1927.)

1. Contracts 🔑303(4)—One preventing performance of some act, on which obligation depends, cannot set up nonperformance as defense to action on obligation.

Ordinarily, one who voluntarily prevents the performance of some act, on which an obligation depends, will be precluded from setting up such nonperformance as a defense in an action on that obligation.

2. Brokers 🔑75—Vendor, accepting quitclaim deed from insolvent purchaser in satisfaction of trust deed, held liable to broker for commission payable out of money due from purchaser.

Where vendor of real estate, after agreeing to pay broker balance of commission due out of payment due from purchaser under trust deed, on insolvency of purchaser accepted a quitclaim deed from him and filed a satisfaction and release of the trust deed, held vendor, in legal effect, prevented purchaser from complying with terms of his contract and was accordingly liable to broker for commission.

3. Brokers 🔑86(1)—In action for realty broker's commission, payable out of payment due from purchaser, finding that defendant, without consent of broker, accepted reconveyance from purchaser held warranted.

In real estate broker's action for commission payable out of money due from purchaser under trust deed, finding that defendant, without consent, connivance, or collusion of broker, had entered into an agreement with the insolvent purchaser to accept reconveyance in satisfaction with the trust deed held warranted where defendant did not deny the reconveyance, but only that the purchaser was not thereby prevented from making payment out of which commission was payable.

4. Interest 🔑44—Broker held entitled to interest on recovery of commission from time when due (Civ. Code, § 3287).

Real estate broker held entitled, under Civ. Code, § 3287, to interest on commission recovered from time when commission became due.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Ida May Carl, executrix of the last will and testament of Fred W. Carl, deceased, against George Eade, to recover broker's commission on sale of real estate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gilbert F. Wyvell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George M. Pierson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. It appears that one Fred W. Carl, as a real estate agent, sold for defendant certain premises at a price of $18,000; that the terms of sale were $2,000 cash and other property, the assumption by the purchaser of a mortgage on the property amounting to $6,000, and a note and trust deed back to the seller for the sum of $10,000, of which amount $1,000, was made payable on the 1st day of January, 1922. The commission to be paid by defendant to said Carl for making the sale was the sum of $900, of which amount $170 was paid in cash and the agreement for the payment of the balance was represented by the following memorandum, signed by the defendant:

> "I hereby agree to pay to Fred W. Carl the sum of $730 in full of commission on the sale of the property at 1717 N. Van Ness Ave., Hollywood, Cal., the same to be paid out of the $1,000 payment to be made to me by the purchaser on January 1, 1922."

The evidence disclosed the further facts that, before the 1st day of January, 1922, the purchaser became insolvent; that the $1,000 mentioned in the foregoing agreement was not paid on January 1, 1922, but that two days later defendant entered into an agreement with the purchaser of the property to accept from him, in the name of a daughter of defendant, a quitclaim deed to the property; and that some time thereafter defendant filed a full satisfaction and release of said trust deed. Because of the fact that the purchaser of the property failed to pay the $1,000 which became due on January 1, 1922, defendant refused to pay the balance of the commission in accordance with the provisions of the agreement hereinbefore set forth. On such facts judgment was ordered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant has appealed therefrom to this court.

[1] The ordinary rule is that one who voluntarily prevents the performance of some act, upon which an obligation depends, will be precluded from setting up such nonperformance as a defense.

In volume 13, page 647, of Corpus Juris, the principle is laid down that "a party to a contract cannot take advantage of his own act or omission to escape liability thereon"; and in the same volume, at page 648, it is stated that "where he prevents the fulfillment of a condition precedent or its performance by the adverse party, he cannot rely on such condition to defeat his liability."

The case of Wolf v. Marsh, 54 Cal. 228, was an action on an instrument in writing by which the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money on the "understanding" that if certain coal mines yielded no profits to the promisor, then the obligation was null and void. In deciding the point the court said:

> "Before the mines had yielded any profits to the defendant, he sold and conveyed his interest in them to a stranger. By so doing he voluntarily put it out of his power ever to realize any profits from the mines. However great the yield of profits from them might be after that, they could yield none to him. And the principle is elementary, that 'if one voluntarily puts it out of his power to do what he has agreed, he breaks his contract, and is immediately liable to be sued therefor, without demand, even though the time specified for performance has not expired.' Bishop on Cont. § 690."

In the similar case of Poirier v. Gravel, 88 Cal. 79, 25 P. 962, an identical conclusion was reached by the court.

In the case of Long v. Saufley, 79 Cal. 260, 21 P. 757, it appears that the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money if the plaintiff would point out property out of which a judgment against a third person could be collected. The plaintiff pointed out the required property, but the defendant chose to compromise his claim rather than attempt to make the collection out of the property in question, and accepted a lesser sum than was due on the judgment. It was held that the plaintiff could recover the amount of money which was promised to him by the defendant.

In the case of Bagley v. Cohen, 121 Cal. 604, 53 P. 1117, the defendant promised to pay a certain sum of money out of the profits realized from his business. Shortly thereafter the maker of the note sold his business. It was held that his liability became fixed when he voluntary put it out of his power to make any profit out of his business. To the same effect are Love v. Mabury, 59 Cal. 484; Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176, 28 P. 222; Carter v. Rhodes, 135 Cal. 46, 66 P. 985.

[2] It is apparent that on the failure of the purchaser of the property here in question to pay the $1,000 due on January 1, 1922, defendant might have "foreclosed" on his deed of trust, which course would have involved a considerable delay and some expense. However, defendant chose the cheaper and shorter method of regaining possession of the property as hereinbefore indicated. Whether by "foreclosing" on the trust deed defendant would have been relieved from his obligation to pay to plaintiff the balance due on the commission for the sale of the property is a question not before this court. We think it clear, however, that notwithstanding the insolvency of the purchaser, in legal effect, defendant by his action prevented the purchaser from complying with the terms of his contract, and, accordingly, that the principal announced in the cases heretofore cited will apply. Defendant's liability follows as a matter of course.

[3] Appellant complains that the court erred in making a finding, in substance, that, without the consent, connivance, or collusion of Fred W. Carl (the agent), defendant entered into the agreement with the purchaser to reconvey to defendant the property to which reference has been had. The issue presented by the complaint in the action of whether the conveyance was made with the "consent, connivance, or collusion" of Fred W. Carl was not denied in the answer of defendant; the only matter in that respect contained in the answer being that it was denied that:

> "Defendant entered into any agreement with said purchaser by virtue of which the purchaser did not make or has not made said payment of $1,000 or any part thereof."

In such circumstances, the trial court was justified in making the finding to which exception is taken by appellant.

[4] It is also suggested by appellant that the trial court erred in its conclusion that plaintiff was entitled to interest from January 1, 1922, on the amount due him as balance of his commission. No authority is cited by appellant to sustain such position. On the contrary, section 3287 of the Civil Code provides that:

> "Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day. * * * "

No prejudicial error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 387

JAHNKE v. JAHNKE (TITLE INS. & TRUST CO., Intervener).
(Civ. 3176.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Fixtures 🔑35(3)—Whether tavern fixtures supplied by lessee became part of realty held fact question (Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, 663).

In dispute as to whether tavern fixtures supplied by lessee became part of realty, question whether articles involved were so affixed to building as to become part thereof, within Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, 663, was one of fact to be determined by trial court.

2. Fixtures 🔑14—Generally, intent of parties is controlling in ascertaining whether property supplied by lessee becomes part of realty.

As general rule, intent of parties is controlling criterion in ascertaining whether property supplied by lessee is permanently attached to land or retains its identity as personalty; character of annexation being subsidiarily employed to test such intention.

3. Fixtures 🔑35(2)—Evidence held to show that tavern windows, basement floor, Viking ship, grill room woodwork, plaster of paris boats, window reflectors, range hood, and looking glasses supplied by lessee were personalty (Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, 663).

Evidence held to show that windows and window insets put in tavern by lessee, hard wood floor in basement, Viking ship, woodwork in grill room, plaster of paris boats, reflectors for windows, galvanized iron range hood, and looking glasses were not affixed to building so as to become part thereof, and constitute part of realty belonging to lessor's grantee, under Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, 663.

4. Fixtures 🔑35(2)—Evidence held to show that tavern floor put in by lessee became part of realty.

Evidence held to show that hard wood floor in grill room of tavern, although put in by lessee, became part of realty, where floor was lagged and sleepers were lagged to floor, and to move flooring it would be necessary to leave bolt seat.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Conflict in testimony is for trial court's determination.

Conflict in testimony is for determination of trial court rather than appellate court.

6. Trial 🔑397(5)—In determining right to property put in tavern by lessee, finding that it was "personal property," "trade fixtures," or "fixtures" held unnecessary, in view of finding that appellant was not owner.

In determining whether property put in tavern by lessee had become part of realty, finding that property was "personal property," "trade fixtures," or "fixtures" held unnecessary, where there was finding that appellant was not owner of property involved, since if findings, taken together, are such that court can say ultimate facts necessarily result therefrom, they are sufficient.

7. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)—Trial court's findings must be liberally construed to support judgment, and reconciled to prevent conflict on material issues if possible.

Findings made by trial court must be given liberal construction in support of judgment, and are, if possible, to be reconciled to prevent any conflict on material issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Magdelene Jahnke, as executrix of the estate of Adolph Jahnke, deceased, against Carl Jahnke, in which the Title Insurance & Trust Company intervened. From the judgment, intervener appeals. Affirmed, as modified.

Lester W. Roth and Louis M. Lissner, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Warren L. Williams and Seymour S. Silverton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the intervener, Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation.

The facts are these: On March 15, 1915, one M. Lissner executed a lease to Adolph Jahnke for certain real property situate at 524 South Spring street in the city of Los Angeles, known as "Jahnke's Tavern," for a period of approximately seven years; said lease expiring on March 31, 1922. Immediately after the execution of the lease, the said lessee, Adolph Jahnke, proceeded to fit up, alter, and remodel the leased premises (Jahnke's Tavern) for the purpose of conducting a restaurant and café business therein, and installed therein certain property which forms the subject-matter of this action.

On June 7, 1917, the said M. Lissner and the other owners of the building conveyed the "Lissner building," of which "Jahnke's Tavern" was a part, to the said Title Insurance & Trust Company, the intervener and appellant in this action. Prior to the expiration of said lease the said Adolph Jahnke sold the said "Jahnke's Tavern" and assigned the lease and all rights thereunder to the defendant, Carl Jahnke, and one George Kohn, and on or about March 13, 1922, Kohn sold all his interest to the said Carl Jahnke. On March 13, 1922, and before the expiration of the lease, a chattel mortgage was executed by Carl Jahnke to the said Adolph Jahnke. Said chattel mortgage was given as security for 15 $1,000 promissory notes, and said mortgage included certain property in the said "Jahnke Tavern," and included the property claimed by said intervener, Title Insurance & Trust Company.

The said Adolph Jahnke died testate in the city of Los Angeles on the 18th day of March, 1923, and thereafter his will was duly admitted to probate, and on the 25th of April, 1923, letters testamentary were issued to Magdelene Jahnke, the plaintiff in this action.

None of the notes or any interest thereon were paid, and on the 21st of June, 1923, the said Magdelene Jahnke, as executrix of the estate of Adolph Jahnke, brought this action to foreclose said chattel mortgage. On the 16th of July, 1923, said Title Insurance & Trust Company intervened in said action and filed their complaint in intervention against the plaintiff herein, claiming to own certain property located in the said "'Jahnke Tavern," a portion of which is included within said chattel mortgage. A trial was had before the court sitting without a jury, and the court found that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment, and that the said chattel mortgage be foreclosed as to the following chattels enumerated therein, and located at 524 South Spring street in the city of Los Angeles, in what is known as the "Jahnke Tavern," to wit, 16 windows and window insets; two hard wood floors, one in basement and one in grill room; Viking ship; woodwork in grill room; two plaster of paris boats; 16 reflectors for windows; one galvanized iron range hood; all looking glasses.

From this portion of the judgment the intervener appeals. Title Insurance & Trust Company were declared to be the owners of certain other personal property described in the mortgage.

The said defendant, Carl Jahnke, remained in possession of the premises known as "Jahnke Tavern" as a month to month tenant, until on or about the 28th of June, 1923, and about said time he was halted in his attempt to remove said property heretofore mentioned by an injunction from the intervener.

The appellant, Title Insurance & Trust Company, urges a number of grounds for a reversal of that part of the judgment appealed from. The principal contention of appellant is that the above-enumerated articles must be classed as either "fixtures" or "trade fixtures." It seems to us, however, that we must first determine whether the articles of property involved are fixtures or mere personal property, for, unless said articles are affixed to the realty, the question of fixtures, or trade fixtures, becomes immaterial.

Section 658 of the Civil Code provides: "Real or immovable property consists of: 1. Land; 2. That which is affixed to land; 3. That which is incidental or appurtenant to land; 4. That which is immovable by law." Section 663 of the same Code provides: "Every kind of property that is not real is personal." Therefore the articles in question in this case were personalty unless they were affixed to the land, for it is only in that sense that they can be brought within the above classification of real property.

Section 660 of the Civil Code also provides:

> "A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws."

It has been held that this section is simply a rule for general guidance, concerning itself more with ultimate than probative facts. Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 557, 204 P. 19.

[1] Whether the articles involved in this case were so affixed to the building as to become a part thereof and thereby become realty was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court upon the evidence presented. Gosliner v. Briones, supra; Pennybecker v. McDougal, 48 Cal. 160; Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 377, 27 P. 750, 13 L. R. A. 680.

[2] As a general rule, the intent of the parties is a controlling criterion in ascertaining whether property is permanently attached to the land or retains its identity as personalty; the character of the annexation to the land or other realty and the use made of the property are important considerations, but in most cases are subsidiarily employed for the purpose of testing the intention of the parties. Hendy v. Dinkerhoff, 57 Cal. 3, 40 Am. Rep. 107; Lavenson v. Standard Soap Co., 80 Cal. 245, 22 P. 184, 13 Am. St. Rep. 147; Jordan v. Myres, 126 Cal. 565, 58 P. 1061; Western, etc., Tel. Co. v. Modesto Irr. Co., 149 Cal. 662, 87 P. 190, 9 Ann. Cas. 1190; Dutton v. Ensley, 21 Ind. App. 46, 51 N. E. 380, 69 Am. St. Rep. 340; Gosliner v. Briones, supra.

[3, 4] In the case at bar the trial court found by implication at least that the articles of property here involved were not affixed to the building so as to become a part thereof, and thereby constitute a part of the realty, and the findings of the court in this regard seem amply supported by the evidence.

Arthur S. Heineman, a witness called by the intervener, testified, in substance, as follows:

> "That he drew the plans and specifications for the fixtures in controversy; that he received all of his instructions concerning the drawing of the blue prints and work from Mr. A. Jahnke; and that his agreement concerning the matter was with him; that the window framing and the structural partitions in the walls could be removed by drawing the tacks; that that would leave an unfinished wall; that when the window is taken out, the wall is seen through the frameway; that the sash and glasses removed by taking out the bolts and turning the fastenings; that he had about twelve conferences with Mr. Jahnke before the plans were drawn; that Mr. A. Jahnke instructed him to install the things down there in such a manner that they could be removed; that the superwainscoting in the west end of the basement is of sycamore and is attached to the hard wood floor resting on the sleepers; that it was nailed to the floor or toe nailed, and was put up in sections and not constructed on the premises; that there is running from the wainscoting a balustrade or rail, about 3 feet high and about 12 feet long, running east and running to another short balustrade or block against which it rests; that they were brought into the establishment by Mr. Cedarquist and set up; that no part of them was made on the premises; that he installed the flooring on the main floor or in the grill room; and that his recollection is that this floor was lagged and that the sleepers were lagged to the floor, and to move the flooring it would be necessary to unscrew that bolt and leave a bolt seat there; that there is nothing that would injure the cement flooring other than to make a little hole with an iron nut in it; that he installed the plaster boats; that they are light troughs and hang by straps from the rafters and are supported by means of wrought iron straps and the straps are screwed by means of bolts into the floor beams; that the straps are not attached to the bolts in any way, and the boats could be removed by being slipped out from the straps; that the fixtures were built in the basement and grill room and were built especially for restaurant and café purposes; that the fixtures could be taken out and put in another place of similar dimensions or a place of different dimensions; that the panels and walls could all be taken out and put in another place on a floor with modifications; that at the time the wainscoting was installed it was figured at about $1 a foot but that it was worth about $3 at that time; that he thought it could be taken out and used elsewhere at a profit."

The witness N. H. Cedarquist testified as follows:

"I put in the panels in the tavern. They were fabricated at the factory and assembled in the grill room. They can be taken out by removing them, and they can be removed without breaking them. We can remove the panel and take it right out through the doors. You do not have to take any of the walls out. The hard wood flooring in the upstairs grill, as far as I can remember, was nailed to sleepers which were laid on the cement floor. The sleepers were not tied into the wall. All the stuff can be taken out and put in another building. I constructed the windows on the west end and on the south side of the basement, and the frames and the sash in the frames were made at the factory complete. The frames were then shoved right into the openings which were made on the job previously. The frame is in there loose, and that applies to the windows all the way around. The windows could be taken out and used in any other place under the same conditions. I do a lot of work fixing windows for stores and offices and banks, and the specifications generally provide that they can be put in and taken out and moved elsewhere. I made the Viking ship. It was built at the factory and brought up, and it was built so it could be stuck right over the end of structure of the stairway leading downstairs. The Viking ship was constructed on the platform of that stairway on a frame set up against a cement. The sashes down stairs, I believe, could be taken out by pulling them out; there are no nails, tacks, or screws there anywhere. It is not even tacked to the wooden structure. I would say they would be sold at $3 a foot. We often use fixtures that are built specially for one place in a place of different dimensions. The staff work could be removed without removing the panels, but the panels could not be removed without removing the staff work. If the Viking ship was held in place by an expansion bolt, the bolt would not be imbedded in the cement. The socket would be imbedded in the cement, and the bolt would be in the railing. By removing the bolt, the socket would be left in the cement. The sash is held by a loose pin butt, the same as these lights are here above, with hooks, or either with springs. A loose pin butt is where you pull a peg and take the sash out."

Carl Jahnke, the defendant, testified that he was in the tavern while the panel in the grill room was being done, and that said panel work was nailed on the skeleton and primed and tar paper used to preserve the wood from moisture, and that the said paneling was not nailed to the wall. He further testified as follows:

"The Viking ship was brought down all intact and put up against this reinforced concrete base in a kind of toggleboard, I would call it. It has since been removed from the place where it used to be. The hard wood flooring in the basement was laid on 2x4, and the hard wood is nailed on the 2x4, and the 2x4 is just raised on the concrete. They are not nailed to the building in any way. The other floor in the west end of the basement is laid practically the same way. The floor at the west end was laid on sleepers of 2x4 and was toe nailed—it was not nailed in any way to the building, and the sleepers were not attached to the concrete or the building. The plaster of paris boats are hung with four chains, and the chains have got a little plug that is screwed into the ceiling, and the chain is attached to the plug and connected onto the hook that is on the side of the boat. The boats could be removed by being lifted off the screws. The window reflectors in the windows have mirrors in them. They hang down on a piece of wire from a gas or water pipe from that fake wall, and you get the effect of sunshine in the windows. There were about 16 of them altogether."

[5] There is other testimony to the same effect, and also testimony to the effect that negotiations were carried on between the appellant and Carl Jahnke looking to the execution of a new lease, but a new lease was never actually executed, and that was the reason given by Carl Jahnke for continuing in the premises after the expiration of the original lease. There is also some conflict in the testimony given, but that was for the trial court's determination, and there is ample evidence in the record to support the trial court's conclusion that the articles never became affixed to the building so as to become a part of the realty.

[6, 7] Appellant also contends that the trial court failed to find on material and vital issues of the case, because it did not find whether the property in question was "personal property," "trade fixtures," or "fixtures." There is no merit in this contention. The court did find, however, that appellant and intervener was not the owner of the property involved. Ths finding is adverse to appellant and is a sufficient finding on the material and vital issue of the case. The trial court did not, in express language, find that the property in question had not become a part of the realty, but in view of the foregoing finding that said property was not the property of appellant a specific finding whether it was mere personal property, or fixtures, was, in the instant case, entirely unnecessary. The general rule is this: If the findings, taken together, are such that the court can say the ultimate facts necessarily result therefrom, they are sufficient. Tower v. Wilson, 45 Cal. App. 123, 188 P. 87; Breyfogle v. Tighe, 58 Cal. App. 304, 208 P. 1008. Moreover, the findings made by the trial court must be given a liberal construction in support of the judgment and are, if possible, to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict upon material issues. Price v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 169 Cal. 800, 147 P. 1175, and cases therein cited.

Therefore, giving the findings in the case at bar a liberal construction, it necessarily results therefrom that the property involved herein did not become a part of the building in which it was installed, and therefore did not become a part of the realty, but retained the character of personal property.

It is also contended by appellant that the court found that appellant and intervener was the owner of one hard wood floor in the grill room, and that the plaintiff and respondent was the owner of one hard wood floor in the basement, but that the judgment provided that the two hard wood floors, one in the basement and one in the grill room, be awarded to plaintiff and respondent. An examination of the record convinces us that this contention must be sustained. The hard wood floor in the grill room should, under the findings, have been awarded to the appellant and intervener herein. This is manifestly an inadvertence, and the judgment should be modified by awarding the hard wood floor in the grill room to the appellant and intervener herein.

The judgment is modified by striking from paragraph 4 thereof, "2 hard wood floors, one in basement, one in grill room," and inserting in lieu thereof, "one hard wood floor in basement," and by inserting at the end of paragraph 5, "one hard wood floor in grill room." As so modified, the judgment is affirmed, the appellant to recover costs of appeal.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

---

81 Cal. App. 360

SNODGRASS v. SNODGRASS (two cases).
(Civ. 5433.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 17, 1927.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

On conflicting evidence, findings supported by evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Account stated 🔑18(2)—Payment 🔑63(3)—Payment for services rendered and on account stated may be proved under general denial.

In action on common counts for services rendered and on account stated, payment may be proved by defendant under answer denying allegations of complaint, and need not be specially alleged.

3. New trial 🔑89—Plaintiff suing for services rendered and on account stated held not entitled to new trial on ground of surprise because of proof of payment not pleaded.

In action on common counts for services rendered and on account stated, in which defendant interposed general denied, plaintiff was not entitled to new trial on ground of surprise because of defendant's proof of payment, where plaintiff made no claim that he was misled by any affirmative act or statement of defendant, but only because defendant made no suggestion he would rely on payment as defense.

4. Appeal and error 🔑237(2)—Motion for continuance on ground of surprise is necessary to make point available on appeal.

Party who claims to have been surprised by evidence adduced by his adversary must move for continuance in order to avail himself of that point on appeal.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Actions by David E. Snodgrass against Harold G. Snodgrass, consolidated for trial. Judgments for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph J. Geary, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. Appeals from the judgments entered for defendant in two actions brought by appellant to recover for services alleged to have been rendered to defendant at his request.

The cause of action in each complaint was stated in the form of two common counts, one for the value of services rendered, and the other upon an account stated; it being alleged in each count that the claim was unpaid. The actions, numbered 150686 and 150687 respectively, as shown by the register of actions in the trial court, were by stipulation of the parties tried together, and the appeals are presented on the same transcript.

The allegations of the complaint, which were denied, were found to be untrue, and appellant contends that the findings on the issues in the first case are not sustained by the evidence.

[1] While the testimony in that case was conflicting on the questions whether services were rendered and an account stated as alleged, the record discloses sufficient evidence to support the findings of the court on these decisive issues, and its conclusions cannot be disturbed. Del Monte Ranch Dairy Co. v. Bernardo, 174 Cal. 757, 164 P. 628; City of San Diego v. Hall, 180 Cal. 165, 179 P. 889.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial in the second action designated as grounds thereof those provided by section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure with the exception of the second subdivision thereof, and stated that the motion would be made upon affidavits and upon the minutes of the court. Appellant contends that his affidavits supporting the motion on the grounds of surprise and conduct on the part of his adversary by which it was alleged that he was prevented from having a fair trial, not having been met by counter affidavits, the denial of the motion was erroneous.

As stated, the allegation that services were rendered was denied. It appears, however, from the testimony of defendant and his witness that services were rendered for the agreed compensation alleged; but, according to this testimony, appellant was paid at the time of their performance. It appears from the affidavits mentioned that defendant and his witness testified that appellant received from the former a check in the sum of $500, which was the amount claimed in the action, as compensation for the services alleged; that appellant then owed respondent and his witness sums aggregating the amount of the check, which upon its receipt appellant then paid by its indorsement and redelivery. This testimony, by which appellant alleged that he was surprised, was denied by him at the trial, and he alleged in his affidavit that the check mentioned was not received in payment of the claim, or as part of the transaction involved in the action; that he was not indebted, as testified by defendant and his witness; that this, with further testimony by the latter that at the time the loans were made to appellant he was in necessitous circumstances, was wholly untrue; that he is now able to show by the record of a certain bank that at the times mentioned he had on deposit therein sums equal to the amount claimed to have been loaned, his affidavit in the latter respect being supported by that of an officer of the bank mentioned. He urges further that, in negotiations looking to a settlement of the action, which were had before the trial, no suggestion was made by defendant that the claim had been paid; that from this and the fact that payment was not affirmatively pleaded as a defense he was surprised by the testimony mentioned; and that he was not prepared to meet such testimony at the time of the trial.

[2] No motion for a continuance was made, and it is not contended that the evidence as to the condition of appellant's bank account was not readily available. While it has been held that the negative allegation of nonpayment in actions of this character need not be proved (Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 P. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127; Janeway & Carpender v. Long Beach Paper & Paint Co., 190 Cal. 150, 211 P. 6), under an answer denying the allegation payment may be shown (Wetmore v. San Francisco, 44 Cal. 294; Mickle v. Heinlen, 92 Cal. 596, 28 P. 784; Bank of Shasta v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 604, 34 P. 337; County of Mendocino v. Johnson, 125 Cal. 337, 340, 58 P. 5; Brooks v. Ardizzone, 9 Cal. App. 215, 98 P. 393). It is not contended that in the course of the negotiations mentioned appellant was misled by any affirmative act or statement by defendant, but by the fact alone that the latter made no suggestion that he would rely upon payment as a defense to the action.

[3, 4] In view of the issue made by the pleadings and the rule mentioned above, we are of the opinion that it cannot reasonably be urged that either plaintiff or his attorney were misled by defendant's silence, or that surprise in a legal sense can be predicated thereon. As stated, no application for a continuance was made, nor are adequate reasons shown for a failure to do so. It is the general rule that a party who claims to have been surprised by the evidence adduced by his adversary must move for a continuance, or he will not be permitted to avail himself of that point on appeal. Doyle v. Sturla, 38 Cal. 456; Heath v. Scott, 65 Cal. 548, 552, 4 P. 557; Bailey v. Richardson, 66 Cal. 416, 5 P. 910. The circumstances shown do not in our opinion bring the case within the exception stated in Delmas v. Martin, 39 Cal. 555, and we are satisfied that the motion was properly denied.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

81 Cal. App. 317

NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ZEALAND, Limited, v. FINN, Sheriff. (Civ. 3198.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 14, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1927.)

1. Shipping 🔑106(5) — Bank's lien on shipment held not lost, though its correspondent, as garnishee in action against shipper, delivered check representing proceeds of shipment to sheriff (Code Civ. Proc. § 544).

Where San Francisco correspondent of New Zealand bank, which had discounted draft against shipment of copra, as garnishee in action against shipper, delivered check representing proceeds of shipment to sheriff, together with a letter notifying him that New Zealand bank claimed title as against shipper, held, lien or title of New Zealand bank was not thereby irrevocably lost, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 544.

2. Shipping 🔑106(5)—Bank's surrender of bill of lading to shipper's factor who guaranteed to remit proceeds of shipment held not to destroy its lien for amount of discounted draft (Civ. Code, §§ 2026–2030, 2369).

Where New Zealand bank discounted draft against shipment of copra, and, after consignee's rejection of shipment, authorized its San Francisco correspondent to deliver papers to shipper's factor, who guaranteed to remit proceeds less expenses, and where factor gave San Francisco bank check for proceeds which was garnished as property of shipper, held, New Zealand bank's surrender of bill of lading and other papers to shipper's factor did not destroy its lien, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 2026–2030, 2369.

3. Factors 🔑11—Relation of principal and factor is fiduciary, and requires factor to scrupulously account to principal.

The relation of principal and factor is of a fiduciary character, and carries with it the elements of a trust, requiring the factor to scrupulously account to his principal.

4. Factors 🔑11—Factor is both bailee and sales agent bound by contract with principal.

A factor is both a bailee and a sales agent, and is bound by his contract with his principal.

5. Factors 🔑18, 31—Factor cannot set up adverse claim to property or its proceeds.

A factor cannot set up an adverse claim to the property or its proceeds, as against his principal.

6. Factors 🔑64—As against one having notice, principal can follow funds or property delivered to factor to sell.

Principal can follow the funds or property delivered to factor to sell, as against any one having notice of facts.

7. Factors 🔑65—Factor with knowledge of owner's agreement to devote proceeds first to repayment of advances by bank is bound accordingly.

Where owner of goods indebted to bank for advances for purchase price causes goods to be shipped to his factor under agreement, of which factor has knowledge, that proceeds are to be applied to bank's advances, factor receiving goods with knowledge of that understanding is bound to act accordingly, and, until bank is paid, cannot apply any of proceeds toward prior obligations of owner.

8. Shipping 🔑106(5)—Lien of New Zealand bank discounting draft against shipment of copra held not lost when shipment was resold by shipper's factor after having been rejected by consignee.

Where New Zealand bank discounted draft against shipment of copra, and, after consignee's rejection thereof, authorized its San Francisco correspondent holding draft with bill of lading attached to deliver bill of lading to shipper's factor, who agreed to remit to it proceeds of resale, held, resale by factor did not destroy lien of New Zealand bank on shipment or proceeds which were garnished in hands of San Francisco bank in action against shipper.

9. Shipping 🔑106(5)—Lien of bank releasing bill of lading against shipment on agreement of shipper's factor to remit proceeds held to attach to proceeds, though agreement did not expressly so provide.

Where New Zealand bank discounted draft against shipment of copra, and, after consignee's rejection thereof, authorized its San Francisco correspondent to deliver bill of lading to shipper's factor, who guaranteed in writing to remit proceeds less expenses to San Francisco bank, held, lien of New Zealand bank attached to proceeds of shipment, notwithstanding written guaranty of factor did not specifically so provide; the use of particular words being unnecessary.

10. Banks and banking 🔑156, 159—Bank, receiving check or bill of exchange for collection, does not take title, and relation resulting is only that of principal and agent.

If a check or bill of exchange is taken by bank for collection only, bank does not take title, but acts merely as collection agent, and relation resulting is not that of debtor and creditor, but that of principal and agent.

11. Shipping 🔑106(5)—Evidence held to sustain finding that bank discounted draft, rather than took it for collection only.

Evidence held to sustain finding that New Zealand bank discounted, rather than took for collection, draft against shipment of copra, which was not overcome by fact that bank sent draft to its San Francisco correspondent "for collection" only.

12. Garnishment 🔑200—Third party claim to garnished check held sufficient, though not served until after sheriff had made return on writ (Code Civ. Proc. § 689).

Third party claim against sheriff in possession of garnished check held sufficient, though not served until after sheriff had made return on writ of garnishment; there being nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 689, requiring claim to be served at any particular period of time.

13. Sheriffs and constables 🔑130—That third party claimant of garnished property might have intervened in original action is no defense to his action against sheriff for conversion.

That third party claiming garnished property might have intervened in original action is no bar to the maintenance of an action by such party against sheriff for conversion of garnished property after notice of claim.

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

14. Sheriffs and constables 🔑128—Third party claimant of garnished property held not estopped by statutory provisions from maintaining action for conversion thereof (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 710½–713½).

Third party claimant of garnished property is not estopped by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 710½–713½, from maintaining action for conversion of such property.

15. Sheriffs and constables 🔑137(1) — It is sufficient allegation of service of third party claim to garnished property if instrument is set forth according to legal tenor or effect.

In action by third party claimant of garnished property for conversion thereof, it is generally a sufficient allegation of service of third party claim to set forth instrument according to legal tenor or effect thereof.

16. Pleading 🔑403(4)—Defect in allegation of service of third party claim to garnished property held cured by answer.

In action by third party claimant of garnished property for conversion thereof, any defect in allegation of service of third party claim held cured by answer.

17. Sheriffs and constables 🔑128—New Zealand bank held entitled to sue sheriff for conversion of check garnished while in hands of its San Francisco correspondent (Civ. Code, §§ 1818, 1878).

Where New Zealand bank discounted draft against shipment of copra, and, after rejection of shipment by consignee, authorized its San Francisco correspondent to deliver bill of lading to shipper's factor, who guaranteed to remit the proceeds of resale less expenses, and where checks representing such proceeds in hands of San Francisco bank were garnished as property of shipper, held, relation between New Zealand and San Francisco bank was that of principal and agent, and not debtor and creditor, and New Zealand bank had right to sue sheriff for conversion of check after notice of its claim; Civ. Code, §§ 1818, 1878, being inapplicable.

18. Payment 🔑21—Receipt of check does not of itself discharge indebtedness, which remains until check is honored or accepted in discharge.

Creditor's receipt of check does not of itself discharge indebtedness for which check was issued, but such indebtedness remains until check is honored or in some way accepted in discharge of obligation.

19. Trover and conversion 🔑16—General or special ownership of property converted is sufficient to support action.

To enable one to recover for conversion of personal property, he must have general or special ownership therein at time of tort, though legal title is not necessary.

20. Trover and conversion 🔑16—Actual possession of chattel at time of conversion will sustain trover, except as to owner or one claiming under him.

Actual possession of chattel at time of its conversion will sustain trover, except as to true owner or one claiming under him, even though title be conceded to be in a third person.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, against Thomas F. Finn, as Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Andrews and A. E. Shaw, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gavin McNab, Nat Schmulowitz, and A. D. Duncan, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff for the value of a certain check alleged to have been converted by the defendant. Plaintiff had judgment in the sum of $17,884.48, from which judgment the defendant appeals.

In September, 1920, the plaintiff was a national bank organized and existing under an act of the General Assembly of New Zealand and will hereafter be referred to as the "New Zealand Bank." At the same time and prior thereto, John Burns & Co., Limited, was a corporation organized and existing under a general act of the same Assembly and will hereafter be known as "Burns." At the same time, the Fiji Planters' Co-operative Association, Limited, of Savu Savu, Fiji Islands, were planters and shippers of copra, and will hereafter be referred to as the "Fiji Planters." During the same period of time the firm of Geo. Wills & Sons, Limited, was a corporation maintained under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, doing business at San Francisco, Cal., and will hereafter be known as "Wills."

In September, 1920, the Fiji Planters offered Burns a shipment of copra; Burns arranged through Wills to charter a vessel in San Francisco to load the copra, and Wills chartered the schooner Narwhal. Burns accepted the offer of the Fiji Planters and opened a letter of credit in favor of the Fiji Planters with the New Zealand Bank for £20,000 to cover the cargo of copra. The copra was to be shipped to Wills and Wills was to resell the copra. Burns advised Wills to sell the copra. On October 12, 1920, Wills, in its own name, entered into a contract with John Rothchild & Co. of San Francisco for the sale of the copra to the latter at 7½ cents per pound. The contract was made for shipment of the copra in October, November, and December, 1920. The copra was not shipped until the early part of January, 1921. The contract provided for payment as follows: Net cash against seller's sight draft with attached documents, consisting of bill of lading, invoices, etc. Thus no one could get title or possession of the copra other than the owner and holder of the sight draft until the draft should be paid. Rothchild neither paid the draft nor received the goods. The cargo was rejected by Rothchild on the ground that the shipment was not made at the time limited in the contract. When the copra arrived in San Francisco in 1921, the price had declined so that when the copra was finally disposed of it only brought gross 3½ cents a pound. Burns was an old and large customer of the New Zealand Bank and was at the times mentioned indebted to the bank in the sum of £200,000. On February 1, 1921, Burns delivered to the New Zealand Bank a general letter of hypothecation, the latter clause of which reads:

> "This letter shall not affect or detract from the bank's general lien according to the law of banker and customer, over all property or any securities in your custody not specifically charged by this letter belonging to us."

This general letter of hypothecation authorized the bank to take possession and to proceed at once and without notice to sell at its absolute discretion, and in such manner and at such times as should be thought fit, all or any part of the goods represented by any shipping documents held by the bank, and apply the net proceeds thereof in payment of all bills, etc., and in liquidation of any debts or liabilities of Burns to the New Zealand Bank. The bank was handed by Burns the bill of lading, invoices, and insurance policies. On February 7 the New Zealand Bank credited the general account of Burns with £20,000 to meet the draft Burns was paying on account of the Fiji Planters. The account of Burns was thus credited with the full amount of the draft of Burns on Wills, drawn by Burns on account of the shipment of copra. The course of business between Burns and the New Zealand Bank was such that, if a bill was drawn in connection with the sale of goods, and documents accompanied the bill of exchange, and the New Zealand Bank discounted the same or made an allowance on the same, an invoice, bill of lading, and insurance policy invariably accompanied the bill of exchange. The bill of lading was indorsed:

> "John Burns & Co., Limited, Robt. Burns, Managing Director, as agents for the Fiji Planters' Co-operative Association, Limited."

This was a general indorsement according to custom so that the bill of lading could be negotiated by delivery.

The New Zealand Bank sent to the Canadian Bank of San Francisco for "collection and credit" through the London office of the New Zealand Bank the draft for £20,000 drawn by Burns on Wills, which it had obtained as herein stated. On March 24, 1921, the Canadian Bank received the letter from the New Zealand Bank inclosing draft, the invoices, custom certificates, insurance policy, and bill of lading for the copra, accompanied by the following letter:

> "Auckland, 9th February, 1921. For favor of collection and credit through our London office I enclose herewith our remittance—BB 777 John Burns & Co., Limited, £20,000 at sight, dated 8th February, 1921. The draft is supported by invoice, custom certificate, insurance policy for £50,000 and bill of lading for 589 tons 12 cwt. of copra per Barq Narwhal. £50,000 the balance of insurance is covered by consignee's instructions—Second of exchange will reach you by later mail, together with duplicate documents. Kindly advise date of payment direct to this office and to our London office."

The Narwhal reached San Francisco April 14, 1921. Rothchild inspected the captain's log-book, found the date of loading, rejected the cargo, and refused to pay therefor. This led to considerable correspondence by cable and otherwise between the Bank of New Zealand, the Canadian Bank, the Canadian Bank with Wills, relative to the sale of the copra. Wills also cabled Burns.

So far as pertinent, the cablegrams and letters are as follows: On April 20, 1921, the Canadian Bank, to which all the papers relating to the cargo had been forwarded by the New Zealand Bank, cabled the New Zealand Bank as follows:

> "Your 777 drawee states documents should be surrendered unconditionally as buyers reject cargo. Wills says cannot act unless given free hand. Instruct."

At the same time Wills cabled Burns:

> "Bank will only release on impossible conditions. Imperative you should arrange surrender documents unconditionally immediately. Otherwise we cannot proceed in accordance with contract."

On April 20 Burns cabled Wills:

> "What unreasonable guarantee do bank want? We have asked Miller to see you. Give him full particulars."

On April 22 the New Zealand Bank cabled the Canadian Bank as follows:

> "Do not surrender documents unconditionally. Burns instructs Wills must give a guarantee that all proceeds copra up to £20,000 sterling handed over to you towards the payment of draft."

On April 22 Wills cabled Burns again:

> "Bank demand guarantee payment total proceed twenty thousand pounds. Cannot agree to. We are prepared to pay them proceeds after deducting all charges and expenses."

On April 22 Mr. Mitchell for the Canadian Bank wrote Wills as follows:

> "San Francisco, Cal., April 23, 1921 (should be April 22, 1921). Re Draft Burns & Co., on Yourselves £20,000. Referring to the draft we have received from the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, Auckland, for £20,000 against shipping documents per Narwhal we beg to advise that we have to-day received the following cable in regard thereto: 'Our 777 do not surrender documents unconditionally. Burns instructs Wills must give a guaranty, that all proceeds copra up to £20,000 sterling handed over to you towards the payment draft Burns have telegraphed G. J. Miller to watch their interests. Will probably interview you.' In this connection we understand that you will give us a guaranty to hand us the proceeds of the copra less freight, commission, insurance, arbitration fees, and allowances, which may be made by the arbitration, legal, and handling charges, and we would be obliged if you would kindly confirm this understanding in order that we can submit it to the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, Auckland, by cable."

On the same day Wills wrote the Canadian Bank, in reply thereto, the following letter:

"We have to acknowledge your letter of today's date, which advises us of the cable you have received from the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, Auckland, in connection with the draft on the cargo of copra per the Narwhal. As advised you on the telephone, we cannot agree to the stipulation made by the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, whereby we guarantee to remit you the proceeds for the copra of £20,000. Mr. G. J. Miller has called on us and we have explained the situation to him thoroughly in the same manner as we have done with your good selves, and we beg to advise you that we are ready to comply with the last paragraph of your letter, to give you a guaranty to hand you the proceeds of the copra less charges as set forth in yours under reply. As you will readily understand, any expenses in connection with the cargo of the Narwhal must be for account of Messrs. John Burns & Co., Limited."

Following which the Canadian Bank on April 26th wrote Wills as follows:

"Referring to our letter of 23d April and yours dated 22d April, re draft of John Burns & Co., Limited, on your good selves for £20,000, we beg to hand you herewith shipping documents covering cargo of copra in bulk, per schooner Narwhal and in consideration thereof would you be good enough to give us a guaranty to hand us the proceeds of this copra less freight, commission, insurance, arbitration fees and allowances, legal and handling charges."

On April 27, 1921, Wills replied as follows:

"In reply to yours of even date, we have to acknowledge receipt of the documents for the cargo of copra in bulk per the schooner Narwhal and we hereby guarantee to hand you the proceeds of the sale of this copra, less freight, commissions, insurance, arbitration fees and allowances, legal and handling charges," in connection with the cargo, sent Wills, etc.

All the documents relating to the cargo were thus placed in the hands of Wills authorizing him to proceed with the sale thereof by the plaintiffs and turn over the proceeds to the Canadian Bank for the benefit of plaintiffs. Wills proceeded with the sale, paid all the bills, expenses, charges, commissions, etc., and rendered a statement to the Canadian Bank thereof showing the net proceeds of the cargo to be the sum of $17,888.48, and at the same time delivered to the Canadian Bank a check or bill of exchange in the following words:

"Voucher No. ——. In full settlement of undermentioned bills. Proceeds from Narwhal copra Due John Burns Co., Limited, Net 17888.48 George Wells & Sons, Limited, 230 California street, San Francisco, Cal. Aug. 16, 1922. Pay to the order of Canadian Bank of Commerce $17,888.48 (seventeen thousand eight hundred eighty-eight dollars forty-eight) for George Wills & Sons, Limited, A. H. Anderson. To the British American Bank, 11–3 San Francisco, Cal., John Baxter."

Immediately thereafter the defendant in this action, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, under a writ of attachment, issued in an action begun by Wills against Burns, served upon the Canadian Bank a notice of garnishment, under and by which the defendant purported to garnishee all moneys and credits in the hands, or under the control of the Canadian Bank belonging to Burns. To this notice of garnishment the Canadian Bank made reply that it had no funds or credits belonging to Burns. Thereafter the check herein referred to was accepted by the British-American Bank, but never cashed by the Canadian Bank or credit therefor given to the plaintiff, the New Zealand Bank. Thereafter, and on or about the 21st day of November, 1922, the New Zealand Bank served a notice upon and filed with the defendant a third party claim, notifying the defendant that the plaintiff, the New Zealand Bank, claimed the check and the proceeds represented thereby. Subsequently the check referred to was indorsed by the Canadian Bank, and on or about the 28th day of December, 1922, delivered to the custody of the sheriff, accompanied by a letter of that date referring to the garnishment served upon the Canadian Bank on the 16th day of August, 1922, and, among other things, stated:

"That the Canadian Bank of Commerce received the said check and the funds represented by said check for the account of the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, and for your information you are advised that the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited, claims to be the owner of and entitled to the possession of the said check and the funds represented by said check. The Canadian Bank of Commerce does not care to assume the responsibility of determining who is the owner of the said check or who is entitled to the proceeds represented by said check, and it is therefore accordingly placing the said check in your possession and under your control, pursuant to the levy of the writ above mentioned, but with the express reservation and understanding that in so doing the Canadian Bank of Commerce of San Francisco refuses to recognize that the said check and the funds represented thereby, or any part thereof, belong to John Burns & Co., Limited."

The third party claim of the plaintiff was again served upon the defendant and the defendant required of and obtained of Wills an indemnity bond. Wills, having obtained judgment against Burns, took out an execution, acting under which, the check referred to was cashed and the money represented thereby turned over to Wills on account of its judgment against Burns. Thereupon this action was begun by the plaintiff against the defendant for the conversion of said check and for the recovery of the sum of $17,888.48, the value thereof.

The trial court found that on the 16th day of August, 1922, the check or bill of exchange was delivered to the Canadian Bank of Commerce by the drawer thereof for the account of the National Bank of New Zealand and that the plaintiff was the person beneficially interested in said check, and entitled to the moneys represented thereby, and that the British American Bank on that date stamped upon the face of said check or bill of exchange its certificate of acceptance; that the check was not voluntarily delivered by the Canadian Bank to the sheriff, but was delivered to the sheriff in pursuance of the garnishment; and that the defendant was notified that the check and the funds represented thereby belonged to the New Zealand Bank. The trial court also found that the defendant wrongfully converted said check and likewise wrongfully applied the proceeds thereof in satisfaction of the judgment held by Wills against Burns. The court further found that, while the bill of exchange was made payable to the Canadian Bank, the Canadian Bank represented the Bank of New Zealand for the purpose of collecting the check and the proceeds represented thereby; that the Bank of New Zealand was the owner of said bill of exchange and the only one entitled to receive the proceeds. The court further found that the defendant wrongfully refused to deliver said personal property or the proceeds thereof to the plaintiff, and, as a conclusion of law, the court determined from the facts found that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment in the sum prayed for, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff in the sum hereinabove mentioned.

Upon this appeal the defendant sets forth nine distinct allegations of error upon the part of the trial court, on every one of which defendant insists the judgment of the trial court should be reversed: (1) When the Canadian Bank delivered the indorsed check to the sheriff, respondent irrevocably lost any lien or title it had to the check or bill of exchange; (2) that, when respondent surrendered the bill of lading and other papers relative to the shipment of the cargo of copra to Wills, it lost its lien, if any, upon the copra and the proceeds to be derived therefrom; (3) that, if respondent retained any lien when the bill of lading was delivered to Wills, it was lost when Wills sold the copra to the El Dorado Oil Works; (4) that the draft on Wills was taken for collection only and was not discounted by the New Zealand Bank; (5) that no third party claim was served upon the appellant after his reception of the indorsed check; (6) that the third party claim served by respondent did not comply with section 689, Code of Civil Procedure; (7) that plaintiff's complaint does not allege service of third party claim, and therefore fails to state a cause of action; (8) that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment; (9) and that plaintiff had no title to the check nor right to possession thereof and cannot maintain this action of trover.

[1] We will consider these assignments of error in the order above set forth. By reference to the letter dated December 28, 1922, it will be noticed that the Canadian Bank of Commerce did not surrender the check as the property of Burns, nor without giving to the defendant notification of the fact that it had not received said check as the property of Burns. There is nothing in the transcript which indicates that the New Zealand Bank authorized the Canadian Bank to deliver the check or bill of exchange to the defendant. The transcript does show that the same attorneys acted for the Canadian Bank who appeared in behalf of the plaintiff in this action. Whatever action the Canadian Bank may have taken with relation to the check, its liability, if any, is fixed by the garnishment. As stated in Marshall v. Wentz, 28 Cal. App. 540, 153 P. 244:

> "The liability of the garnishee is fixed by the service upon him and as of the date of the service and continues until one of two things happens: (1) the discharge of the attachment; or (2) the satisfaction of the judgment."

Section 544, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that in all cases where the garnishment is served upon any person whose property or credits are alleged to belong to the debtor named in the action, said party shall be liable to the plaintiff for the amount of such credits, etc., unless the same be delivered to the sheriff. The fact of whether the garnishee properly or improperly delivers property or credits alleged to belong to the judgment debtor does not, in any manner, affect the right or title of the true owner of the property or credits in the event that the garnishee has mistaken the true ownership, but the statute does provide for notifying the sheriff of the true ownership of the property or credits by a third party considering himself the owner thereof and the one ultimately entitled thereto, or to the proceeds thereof. It may be otherwise stated in this language: That the action of the garnishee in replying that he has no property or credits belonging to the debtor named in the attachment action or not delivering property under garnishment process to the sheriff has no determinative effect upon the title or ownership of the property or credits denied to be held, admitted to be held, or delivered to the sheriff. In 37 C. J. p. 336, § 57, it is said:

> "As a general rule a common-law or other lien dependent upon possession is waived or lost by a lienholder voluntarily and unconditionally parting with possession or control of the property to which it attaches; and such lien cannot be restored thereafter by resumption of possession. But the lien is not waived or destroyed, except as to third parties, where there is an intention to preserve the lien, the lienholder only conditionally parting with the property, as where by special agreement he allows the owner to take the property into his possession without prejudice to the lien, or where he delivers it to an agent, servant, or trustee to hold for his benefit and subject to his lien. Nor is the lien lost where the property is taken from his possession without his consent by force or fraud, and where the property is taken from him involuntarily, as by a replevin suit, he may upon regaining possession sue to foreclose the lien. Where possession is not essential to the existence of the lien, the general rule does not apply."

In section 393, Bowers on the Law of Conversion, the text-writer thus states the rule:

> "The pledgee has a special property or interest in the chattel pledged, entitling him to the possession of it until the obligation secured is satisfied, not only as against the pledgor, but as against all the world—except the true owner in case the pledge has been wrongfully made. He is consequently entitled to maintain any action for the protection of his possession and special interest, not only against the pledgor—if he wrongfully retains possession—but against third persons who interfere with the same without right. Thus, where a third person, without authority, secured the property and returned it to the pledgor, he was held liable to the pledgee in trover. And the same liability was imposed upon an officer who took the property under an attachment even though the writ was regular on its face"—citing a number of authorities.

In the case of Einstein v. Dunn, 61 App. Div. 195, 70 N. Y. S. 520, subsequently affirmed by the court of appeals, it was held:

> "Where plaintiff acquired title to property stored in a warehouse by a transfer of the warehouse receipt and the issuance of a new one in his name, the delivery of the goods by the warehouseman to the sheriff on replevin process will not defeat a recovery against the sheriff for conversion, as a voluntary surrender by plaintiff, as the surrender was made by the warehouseman knowing and acknowledging plaintiff's right."

In the case at bar the delivery of the check or bill of exchange was made to the sheriff, not only with the knowledge brought home to the sheriff, but under the express statement and explicit declaration that the check and the proceeds thereof belonged to the plaintiff in this action. The case of Finch v. Finch, 12 Cal. App. 274, 107 P. 594, 598, decided by this court, does not present circumstances identical with those which we are considering, and hence is not in point. In that case the garnishee, following a refusal to disclose to the sheriff property in his possession upon a prior garnishment, subsequently turned over to the sheriff, under an execution later in date and subsequent in right, property in his possession belonging to the judgment debtor, which property was applied in satisfaction of the latter judgment, and it was held that the garnishee could not relieve himself from liability in any such manner, nor could the garnishee make his election as to the creditor whom he would favor by his reply to the garnishment. Nor does the case of Latta v. Tutton, 122 Cal. 279, 54 P. 844, 68 Am. St. Rep. 30, and Gault v. Wiens, 32 Cal. App. 1, 161 P. 996, bear upon the questions decisive of the issues at bar. In the Latta Case the substance of the decision is to the effect that a pledgee of property surrendering the same cannot acquire title thereto based upon a void judicial sale; and in the Gault Case it was held that, where a bank holding notes as collateral security surrendered them to the sheriff to be sold on execution to satisfy a judgment obtained against the pledgor, its lien as pledgee on such notes was thereby lost, and that the purchaser of such notes at the execution sale acquired only the right, title, and interest of the pledgor and took the same subject to all equities which might have been pleaded in an action thereon brought by the pledgor.

The record which we have heretofore cited amply entitled the trial court to find that the Canadian Bank, in surrendering the check or bill of exchange to the sheriff, was acting in its own behalf and not in the scope of its agency for the New Zealand Bank, irrespective of whether the Canadian Bank did or did not act voluntarily. That the action of the Canadian Bank, whether voluntary or involuntary, in this particular, or whether acting without or under compulsion of order of court, is outside the issues to be decided in this case and does not affect plaintiff's title, appears when the rule set forth in 28 C. J. p. 303, § 455, is applied, to wit:

> "The garnishee being a mere stakeholder, it is well settled that he may relieve himself of liability by payment of the amount owing by him, or delivery of the property of defendant in his possession, to the officer serving the writ. But the garnishee is not compelled to make such payment or delivery; this being a matter of privilege with him. However, under some statutes the court may require the garnishee to turn over to the court, or to the sheriff of like officer. * * * An order of court for a garnishee to pay money attached into court decides nothing with regard to the right of claimants to the money."

And, as stated in section 64, p. 340, 37 C. J.: Where a lienor is wrongfully deprived of or disturbed in the possession of the property, he may maintain trover and conversion for its value. In this particular we may call attention to the findings of the court that the Canadian Bank of Commerce indorsed the check or bill of exchange at the suggestion and request of the defendant and delivered said check or bill of exchange into possession and under the control of the defendant pursuant to the levy, notice of attachment, etc. As a summary of the law relative to appellant's first alleged error, it may be stated that the act of the Canadian Bank delivering the bill of exchange or check into the custody of the sheriff, without the direction so to do by the New Zealand Bank, could not convert the ownership of the New Zealand Bank and its right of possession to the bill of exchange, and the proceeds thereof, into property belonging to Burns. This being true, whether the Canadian Bank should have proceeded according to the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the determination of conflicting claims, or, as said in volume 4, § 132, California Jurisprudence, 249, becomes wholly immaterial, as the liability or nonliability of the Canadian Bank does not affect the rights of any of the other parties to this action.

[2] Did the surrender of the bill of lading and other paper relating to the shipment of copra to Wills for the purpose of making sale thereof affect the lien of the plaintiff upon the cargo, or its rights to the proceeds arising from the sale thereof? Sections 2026 to 2030 of the Civil Code fixes the powers and liabilities of Wills as a factor in this case. It is there provided that a factor must obey the instructions of his principal. In this case the principal was the New Zealand Bank, acting through its agent, the Canadian Bank of San Francisco. It is the duty of the factor to sell the goods and account to his principal for the proceeds, and under section 2369, Civil Code, the factor has the ostensible authority to deal with the property of his principal as his own in making sale of the property for the principal. We have thus a case of the delivery of the bill of lading and other writings authorizing the sale of the cargo of copra by a factor and not by the pledgor of the cargo. Even had the redelivery been made to the pledgor, it does not necessarily follow that the lien of the pledgee, if any, would thereby be extinguished. In Palmtag v. Doutrick, 59 Cal. 154, 43 Am. Rep. 245, it is said, quoting from the opinion on page 159:

> "As a general rule, it is, no doubt, true that the delivery back of the possession of the thing pledged with the consent of the pledgee terminates the bailment and his lien. Homes v. Crane, 2 Pick. [Mass.] 607; Jarvis v. Rodgers, 15 Mass. 389; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 60 [601, 94 Am. Dec. 770]. But if the pledgor recover possession of the pledged property wrongfully, without the consent of the pledgee, the pledge is still valid. Walcott v. Keith, 2 Foster [N. H.] 196. And if it is delivered back to the pledgor in a new character, as a special bailee or agent, the pledgee will still be entitled to the pledge, not only against the owner but against third persons, for under such circumstances the possession is perfectly consistent with the existence of the original right of the pledgee. Macomber v. Parker, 14 Pick. [Mass.] 497; Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. [N. C.] 140, 141; Hays v. Riddle, 1 Sand. Sup. Ct. [N. Y.] 252."

The holding in the Palmtag Case was that the lien had not been lost.

Again, as said in 25 C. J. § 149, p. 416:

> "As in other agencies, the factor holds the goods of his principal and their proceeds when sold in the character of a trustee, and in the absence of statutes which furnish protection to persons dealing with factors, if the factor wrongfully dispose of the goods or proceeds, the principal may follow and recover them whenever he can trace them as distinct from those of the factor, into whosoever hands they may come, except a bona fide purchaser for value. * * *"

If the goods cannot be had their proceeds may be recovered.

[3-7] As said in section 2030, Civil Code, supra, the factor cannot relieve himself of responsibility for the remittance of the proceeds of a sale made by him without the consent of his principal. The relation of principal and factor is of a fiduciary character and carries with it the elements of a trust, requiring the factor to scrupulously account to his principal. 25 C. J. 342, § 5 et seq. A factor is both a bailee and a sales agent and is bound by his contract with his principal. Blackorby v. Friend, 134 Minn. 1, 158 N. W. 708, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1199; Cordell v. Hall (C. C.) 34 F. 866; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 12 S. Ct. 154, 35 L. Ed. 956. Nor can a factor set up an adverse claim to the property or to its proceeds as against his principal. See cases cited. Also Britton v. Ferrin, 171 N. Y. 235, 63 N. E. 954. Likewise, the principal can follow the funds or property delivered to a factor to sell as against any one having notice. Keys Comm. Co. v. Beatty, 42 Okl. 721, 142 P. 1102; Cable v. Iowa State Svgs. Bank, 197 Iowa, 393, 194 N. W. 957, 197 N. W. 434, 31 A. L. R. 748. Likewise, if an owner of goods, who is indebted to a bank for advances for the purchase price, causes the goods to be shipped to his factor under an agreement between the owner and the bank, of which the factor has knowledge, that the proceeds are to be applied to payment of the bank's advances, the factor receiving the goods with knowledge of that understanding is bound to act accordingly, and, until the bank is paid, cannot apply any of the proceeds toward prior obligations of the owner to the factor. Citizens' Bank v. Adams (C. C.) 84 F. 268; Cordell v. Hall (C. C.) 34 F. 866.

In support of its second assignment of error, appellant cites the case of Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601, 94 Am. Dec. 770, to the point that a pledgee parting with possession of the pledge loses his lien. This case, however, while so holding, goes further and approves the principle that, when the proceeds of the pledged property are redelivered, the lien reattaches thereto. It appears from the Davis Case that when Templeton, having a lien evidenced by warehouse receipts, transferred the warehouse receipts to the plaintiff, retaining, however, his debt against Thompson, the pledgor, the transfer of the warehouse receipts was made to the plaintiff under an agreement that the plaintiff should hold the same as security for his own debt and also under an agreement to pay Templeton; the agreement being with the knowledge and consent of the owner or pledgor, as subsequently ratified by him. The court, in considering the loss and re-establishment of the lien, treated the question in this manner:

> "After surrendering the receipts to the plaintiff, and taking from him a written guaranty of the debt, he lost his lien on the goods. But did the plaintiff acquire a new lien, not only for the security of his own debt, but as an indemnity against the liability which he incurred to Templeton? This must depend upon the fact whether Thompson consented to the transaction when it was made, or ratified it afterward. Nothing could be plainer than that the plaintiff acquired a valid lien, provided it was mutually agreed between himself, Templeton, and Thompson that the plaintiff should guaranty the debt to Templeton, and should hold the goods for his indemnity and as a security for his own debt."

It was then held that the lien attached to the proceeds and plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole sum thereof. In the case at bar, all the parties connected with the transaction, including Burns, the original consignor, were cognizant of and consented to the arrangements hereinbefore referred to relative to the disposal of the cargo of copra and the application of the proceeds thereof. Referring again to 35 C. J. p. 370, § 58, we find:

> "Unless there is an agreement express or implied giving the factor the right to appropriate the proceeds of a sale to his own use and subject to the lien of the factor for commissions, advances, etc., the proceeds of goods sold by him belong to the principal and the factor is liable and bound to account to him therefor."

And, further:

> "If the factor has agreed to apply the proceeds in a particular manner, it is his duty so to do."

And, as stated in the section referred to, this applies to drafts drawn in favor of third persons and bills of exchange evidencing the proceeds.

[8] Assignment of error No. 3 that the plaintiff lost its lien, if any, to the cargo of copra and the proceeds, by reason of the sale thereof, is so closely connected with assignment No. 2 that the authorities which we have cited and are about to consider determine the holding which should be had concerning both of them. As supporting assignment No. 3, appellant cites the case of Maier v. Freeman, 112 Cal. 8, 44 P. 357, 53 Am. St. Rep. 151. The facts, however, in that case show it to be distinguishable from the one at bar. In the Maier Case, the mortgagee of sheep under a chattel mortgage authorized the mortgagor to make sale of the sheep; the mortgagor agreeing to deposit the proceeds in the bank to the credit of the mortgagee. It was held that the lien upon the sheep was extinguished by the sale and was not transferred to the proceeds in the hands of the mortgagor, but such proceeds were the property of the mortgagor until collected and paid over to the mortgagee, and therefore subject to attachment. Had the cargo of copra in this case been turned over to Burns and Burns had made sale thereof, then, and in that case, the unpaid proceeds in the possession of the purchaser from Burns would have been subject to attachment. We have, however, this state of circumstances: The merchandise was turned over to a factor for sale by the New Zealand Bank acting through the Canadian Bank, the proceeds collected by the factor in the way of a check and delivered to the Canadian Bank in the form of a check or bill of exchange, and thus the proceeds were in the possession of plaintiff through its agent at the time of the service of the garnishment process.

The contention of appellant in this particular is explicitly answered by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 P. 69, 70. There a certain James Brown owned a herd of cattle upon which third parties held a chattel mortgage. Brown sold these cattle to the defendant; the sale being evidenced by a contract in writing. To this contract was appended a written statement to the effect that the cattle were mortgaged to these third parties (naming them) to secure the payment of an indebtedness owing to them by Brown, and it was further stated by the complaint that they approved and consented to such sale, provided the money derived therefrom was paid to them, the mortgagees. After the sale and before the money was actually paid over, the plaintiff, as a creditor of Brown, garnished the money in the hands of Hauser. It was held that the garnishment was ineffective and the mortgagees were entitled to the money. In so holding, the court said:

> "There is no question in this case as to the lien of the mortgages attaching to the proceeds of the sale of the cattle. Neither is the conclusion to which we have arrived opposed to the decision in Maier v. Freeman, 112 Cal. 8 [44 P. 357], 53 Am. St. Rep. 151. The facts of the two cases are widely variant. In that case the sheep had not been sold at the time the agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee was made; and, in addition to that important fact, there, the mortgagor was to receive the proceeds of the sale of the sheep. Here neither of these controlling circumstances is presented. In order to constitute an equitable assignment of a debt, no express words to that effect are necessary."

Burns was not to receive the proceeds of the sale of the copra; he was not handling or making the sale. The sale was made by a factor recognizing the title of the plaintiff, and under the agreement to turn over the proceeds to the plaintiff's agent, the Canadian Bank. The McIntyre Case was affirmed in the case of Williams v. Corker, 144 Cal. 468, 77 P. 1004, where the circumstances were similar to the facts of the instant case and the inapplicability of the case of Maier v. Freeman was pointed out. In the principal case cited by the appellant, to wit, Utah-Idaho Live Stock L. Co. v. Blackfoot City Bank (D. C.) 290 F. 588, in support of assignment No. 3, the court, after setting forth many cases where mortgagees have surrendered their liens, makes the following observations:

> "It is not intended to suggest that the plaintiff could not have made an agreement with Robison that he should receive the proceeds of the sale and hold the same for plaintiff, or that such an agreement would not have been valid against attaching creditors, or against the defendant bank, with the notice it had before it applied the credit to the payment of the notes. But any finding that consent to the sale was coupled with a condition that the money should become the plaintiff's property, or should be subject to the lien of its mortgage, and that Robison was to be its agent or trustee to receive and pay the money over to the plaintiff, would have to rest upon nothing more substantial than surmise and conjecture."

[9] This language shows that there was no agreement in that case, as there is in this, that the proceeds were to be delivered or that the plaintiff was to receive the same in payment of the debt which it held against the mortgagor. It does not appear in the written instrument which we have hereinbefore set forth that there was in so many words a statement that the lien of the plaintiff on the copra should attach to the proceeds, but, as we have here shown, it is not necessary to use any particular form of words to evidence such an intention or purpose. When the bill of lading and other papers necessary to be turned over to the factor to transmit title to the purchaser from the factor upon the written agreement that the proceeds thereof were to be paid by the factor to the Canadian Bank, the agent of the plaintiff, it evidenced a purpose that the lien should reattach to the proceeds just as clearly and distinctly as if the writing had contained words such as:

> "It is hereby understood and agreed that the lien of the plaintiff on the cargo shall attach to the proceeds when paid over by Wills, the factor, to the Canadian Bank, the agent of the plaintiff."

All the parties to the transaction knew and understood that the proceeds arising from the sale of the cargo of copra were to be and were paid over to the Canadian Bank for the uses and purposes and benefit of the plaintiff. The memorandum or writing by Wills upon the bill of exchange or draft to the effect that it was the proceeds of the shipment of copra made by Burns was ineffective to change the true intent and purpose of the transaction and the payment over of the proceeds, and the trial court was correct in disregarding any such patent attempt to lay the foundation for the service of a writ of attachment or garnishee process, under the claim that the ownership of the proceeds vested in Burns.

[10, 11] Appellant's fourth assignment of error that the bill of exchange was taken by the New Zealand Bank from Burns for collection only is based, apparently, upon the assertion that the weight of the testimony is contrary to the findings of the court. The law seems to be well settled that, if a check or bill of exchange is taken for collection only by a bank, the bank does not take title, but acts merely as a collection agent, and that the property in the check or draft remains in the depositary, and that the relation arising from the transaction is not that of debtor and creditor, but that of principal and agent 3 R. C. L. 633. It is sufficient to say that the record discloses sufficient testimony, if believed by the trial court, to warrant the holding that the New Zealand Bank discounted the draft drawn by Burns, and the fact that it was sent to its agent, the Canadian Bank in San Francisco, for collection, does not contravene the statement of witness that the check was discounted. It would only go to the effect that the Canadian Bank did not rediscount the draft, but simply accepted the same and acted therein in relation thereto as the collection agent of its principal, the National Bank of New Zealand. Under this state of the record, we do not deem it necessary to extend the length of this opinion by quoting the testimony bearing upon this assignment set forth in the respondent's brief in support of the findings of the trial court.

[12] Assignments 5 and 6 will be considered together: That no third party claim was served and that the third party claim, as served, did not comply with section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That no third party claim was served is based upon the fact that the third party claim, as amended, was not served until after the sheriff had made return on the writ of garnishment. Section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifies that, if the property levied on is claimed by a third person by a written claim verified by his oath, or that of his agent, and is served upon the sheriff, the sheriff is not bound to keep the property unless the plaintiff, or the person in whose favor the writ of execution runs, on demand, indemnifies the sheriff against such claim by an undertaking, etc.

There is nothing in the section requiring that the third party claim be served at any particular period of time after the attachment or garnishment, from which it would seem to follow that such claim may be made at any time before the sheriff has converted the property by sale, or by other means has subjected it to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demands; that is, the third party will not be allowed to sleep upon his rights until the sheriff has placed himself in a position where it is impossible for him to deliver the property to the third party claimant or obtain an indemnity bond from the attaching creditor saving him harmless from the claims of third parties. The fact that the check was turned over after the sheriff made return upon the attachment does not release the attachment or garnishment. In the case at bar the sheriff acted upon the third party claim and demanded and obtained from the attaching creditor a bond of indemnity. This court has held in the case of Brinkley-Douglas F. Co. v. Silman, 33 Cal. App. 643, 166 P. 371, that when the sheriff does not object to the sufficiency of the notice and claim of the third party, but demands of the creditor that an indemnity bond be given, and an undertaking is given without objection on the part of the creditor, the sheriff waives any question as to the sufficiency of the notice or demand, citing Dubois v. Spink, 114 Cal. 289, 46 P. 95; Kellogg v. Burr, 126 Cal. 38, 58 P. 306. No objection was made by the defendant in this case either to the sufficiency of the notice or of the claim made by the third party. No objection was made by the creditor and the sheriff obtained his bond of indemnity. Whether the bond is or is not a nullity is not a matter that can be determined in this action nor is it a question which can in any wise affect the determination of this cause.

Section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been so amended since some of the decisions based thereon have been rendered as to make statements therein inapplicable touching the question of the sufficiency of the third party claim relative to a statement of the title upon which the claim of the third party is founded. All that needs to be set forth now is the right to the possession of the property in question, which follows as a necessary consequence of a statement of the ownership by the third party of the attached or garnished property, nothing to the contrary appearing, because the right to possession follows the statement of ownership. The trial court having upon sufficient evidence found that the notice to the sheriff stated that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to possession of the $17,888.48, represented by the check, and that demand was made for the release of the check and the moneys represented thereby, it may here be further said that the record shows that the demand and notice were made and served prior to the time of the subjection of the check or the proceeds in payment of the judgment held by Wills in his attachment suit.

The answer of the defendant does not deny the service of a written claim verified by an agent of the plaintiff being made and served upon the defendant. It only denies that no further or other notice or affidavit was served upon the defendant other than as set forth in Exhibit A, attached to the defendant's amended answer. The notice thus referred to states, in substance, being addressed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, to wit: You are notified that certain moneys heretofore, to wit, on the 16th day of August, 1922, attached by you by service and deposit of a writ of attachment upon the Canadian Bank of Commerce, San Francisco, Cal., are claimed by the National Bank of New Zealand, Limited. You are notified to order the release of said property and moneys to the National Bank of New Zealand; that the value of the same is $17,888.48. The affidavit is to the effect that the Bank of New Zealand is the owner and entitled to the possession of $17,888.48, represented by the check drawn by respondent Wills, dated August 16, 1922, made payable in favor of the Canadian Bank of Commerce and drawn upon the British American Bank of San Francisco; that the moneys represented by the said check have been garnished or attached by writ of attachment, etc., under an attachment requiring the defendant to attach the property of John Burns & Co., Limited; that John Burns & Co., Limited, has no interest of any kind or character whatsoever in or to the said sum of money. This exhibit calls attention to the check in question, sufficiently identifies the same to put the sheriff upon notice, and while the claim to the check and the claim to the money, or the value thereof, may not be as clearly and distinctly segregated or specified as might be possible, yet we think the language is sufficiently definite to carry home to the sheriff the ownership and claim of the respondent and sufficient to entitle him to act thereon, and having acted thereon, without objection as to the sufficiency of the same, to put him upon notice and obtain an indemnity bond, as herein stated, we think the cases which we have cited now preclude the urging of the insufficiency thereof as a defense to this action.

[13, 14] That a third party may intervene in the original action, as set forth in 5 California Jurisprudence, 184, § 19, is in no sense a bar to the maintenance by such third party of an action for conversion. Nor do the provisions of section 710½ to and including section 713½ of the Code of Civil Procedure estop the plaintiff in this action from maintaining an action sounding in trover. Our attention is called to the case of Arena v. Bank of Italy, 194 Cal. 195, 228 P. 441, as establishing the insufficiency of a third party claim in this case, and therefore the inability of the plaintiff to maintain this action. It is sufficient, however, to state that the facts in the Arena Case are readily distinguishable from the circumstances which we have here-inbefore set forth. The Bank of Italy did not claim to be the owner of the property in question, but simply set forth the assignment of the property to the claimants, as security for the payment of a promissory note. The assignment showed on its face that it was not good as against creditors and the third party claim founded thereon likewise exhibited the insufficiency of the claim. The property in question consisted of a number of barrels of olives, cases of tomato puree, tomato oil, etc. The facts set forth in the claim showed that the merchandise had been pledged to the bank to secure a certain indebtedness due to the bank; that the bank, pursuant to certain agreements between itself and the owner of the merchandise, had permitted him to take and have possession of said merchandise, to remove the same from the warehouse wherein the merchandise had been stored pursuant to the pledge, and to take the same to his own premises on Front street in order to sell and dispose of the same; that the mortgagee or pledgee agreed to take the goods and hold the same for the benefit of the bank and sell the same for its account, etc. This case does not limit in any particular or overrule anything which is said in the McIntyre Case, supra, or the case of Williams v. Corker, supra, nor does it purport to restrict the holding in Kellogg v. Burr, Brinkley Douglas F. Co. v. Silman, supra. It is more in line with the case of Maier v. Freeman, 112 Cal. 8, 44 P. 357, 53 Am. St. Rep. 151, holding that, when the property comes into the possession of the mortgagor, it is subject to attachment. Thus the Arena Case, upon its face, refutes the claim of the third party.

[15, 16] As to the seventh assignment of error that the complaint did not sufficiently allege the service of a third party claim, we may state that it is generally held to be sufficient to set forth the instrument according to the legal tenor or effect thereof. 21 Cal. Jur. 45; Smith v. Jaccard, 20 Cal. App. 280, 128 P. 1023, 1026; Zucco v. Farullo, 37 Cal. App. 562, 174 P. 929. But there is a further and sufficient reason why this assignment is untenable. The defendant sets forth the instrument in hæc verba, states this was the kind of notice and claim served upon the defendant, and, having supplied the alleged insufficiency in the complaint, no cause of objection now exists. 21 Cal. Jur. 278; Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 413, 50 P. 546.

In support of the allegation that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment assigned as the eighth reason why reversal should be had herein, nothing further is set forth in the briefs than the questions which we have herein been considering, which we deem a sufficient answer to the eighth assignment without restatement.

[17] Finally, the appellant insists that the plaintiff, having neither title nor right to possession of the check, was not in a position to maintain this action. This position is assumed on the theory that the relation of debtor and creditor existed between the Canadian Bank and the New Zealand Bank and not one of principal and agent. In this particular we may call attention to the fact that the appellant, in his opening brief, strongly argues that the relation between the Canadian Bank and the respondent was that of principal and agent and that, therefore, the New Zealand Bank, having voluntarily, through its agent, delivered the check to the defendant, could not maintain any action for the conversion of the check, or of its proceeds, irrespective of the ownership of the property. To show that what is here stated correctly indicates the theory of the case adopted by the appellant in the first instance, we quote the following from his opening brief:

> "The relation between respondent and the Canadian Bank was that of principal and agent. As far as respondent is concerned, the Canadian Bank was merely acting as its agent for collection. Such being the case, the Canadian Bank had no authority to accept anything but money from Wills. Instead of money, the Canadian Bank accepted from Wills a check which it had certified. This was not a completion of its agency to collect and not until completion of collection can it be said that the proceeds had come into the possession of the respondent."

In support of this position appellant cites the cases of Henderson v. O'Conor, 106 Cal. 391, 39 P. 786; Luckehe v. First Nat. Bank, 193 Cal. 184, 223 P. 547. The latter case is cited to the effect that—

> "Until the proceeds come into the possession of respondent, it could obtain no lien thereon, nor could it exercise any right of set-off. The check never having been cashed, the act of agency of the Canadian Bank was never completed, and hence the proceeds never came into the legal possession of respondent. No lien on the proceeds, therefore, was ever vested in respondent after the delivery of the check by Wills to the Canadian Bank, whether by virtue of a statute creating a general banker's lien or by virtue of any general letter of hypothecation. Hence respondent never obtained any interest therein upon which it could predicate a third party claim."

This position assumed by the appellant is sufficiently answered by the California cases which we have heretofore cited in relation to the disposition of pledged property by the pledgee through a third person or factor with the understanding entered into by all parties interested that the proceeds of the pledged property should be turned over to the pledgee. As if in answer to the argument presented in the opening brief, the reply brief of appellant sets forth that the relation between the Canadian Bank and the Bank of New Zealand was at all times that of debtor and creditor; that the Canadian Bank simply occupied the position of a debtor of the New Zealand Bank, was the absolute owner of the check, owing the New Zealand Bank, if anything, simply the money, the value of the check, and therefore the respondent possessed no title to any of the property in question enabling it to maintain this action.

We may here state the record shows that the Canadian Bank never cashed the check which it received and never deposited to the credit of the New Zealand Bank in its account any funds represented by the check; that, in so far as any act is shown to have been taken or performed by the Canadian Bank in relation to charging itself either with the check or with any funds represented thereby, it assumed and acted only in the capacity of a collection agent, receiving property for the benefit of its principal. Appellant calls attention to section 1818 and section 1878 of the Civil Code. These sections, however, are inapplicable because these sections refer to the relation that arises between a depositor and depositary; in other words, had Wills been turning over his own property to the New Zealand Bank in the way of bills of exchange, or checks, as a customer ordinarily makes a deposit in the bank, then, and in that case, the sections would have full force and effect. The fact that the principal, the New Zealand Bank, had directed its collection agent, the Canadian Bank, to transmit the proceeds of the sale of the copra to what appears to be the parent bank with which the plaintiff was and is connected, does not alter the relationship existing at the date of the levy of the garnishment referred to herein. Again, if the relation of debtor and creditor eo instante arose between the Canadian Bank and the Bank of New Zealand, when Wills handed the check or bill of exchange representing the proceeds of the cargo of copra to the Canadian Bank, then, and in that case, there was nothing in the possession of the Canadian Bank belonging to Burns, and the conclusion is inescapable that the defendant has converted property and applied property not belonging to Burns to the uses and purposes of Wills in his attachment suit against Burns. This, however, would not entitle the respondent to maintain this action unless it had the ownership therein. We think the facts in this case distinguish it from the principal cases relied upon by the appellant in support of its second assumed position, to wit, Midway, etc., Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 25 Cal. App. 366, 143 P. 800, and Plumas County Bank v. Rideout, 165 Cal. 126, 131 P. 360, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552. In both of these cases the transactions establish that the relationship of debtor and creditor had been established; the record kept by the parties interested showing clearly that such was the case, and that the usual course of banking in the handling of the checks and transferring funds giving rise to that relation had been followed.

[18] In the case at bar the Canadian Bank had never assumed the relation of debtor to the respondent, nor had the respondent by any of its acts ever charged the Canadian Bank as a debtor upon its books, but had all the time treated it as a principal would treat an agent, save and except that it was dealing with a corporate entity designated a bank instead of with an individual. This sufficiently appears by the written testimony in this case hereinbefore set forth. In this particular the language of the learned trial judge appears to us most pertinent:

> "As an evidence of the specific amount of this indebtedness and as conditional payment thereof, Wills & Sons issued its check drawn on its banker, or, in other words, issued an order on a banking institution which owed Wills & Sons the amount of the check. The receipt of the check by the Canadian Bank did not of itself discharge the original indebtedness for which the check was issued. That indebtedness remained until the check should be honored or in some way accepted in discharge of the obligation. Comptoir D'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 P. 28; Utah Const. Co. v. W. P. R. Co., 174 Cal. 156, 166, 167, 162 P. 631; South S. F. P. & P. Co. v. Jacobsen, 183 Cal. 131, 134, 190 P. 628; Light v Stevens, 8 Cal. App. 74, 77, 103 P. 361; Goodman v. Williamson, 45 Cal. App. 664, 666, 188 P. 291. Hence delivery of the check did not at the time extinguish the obligation between Wills & Sons and the National Bank of New Zealand. Nor could Wills & Sons, by inscribing any memorandum on the check, transfer the ownership of the credit from the National Bank of New Zealand to John Burns & Co.
>
> "The check, though payable to, and placed in the possession of, the Canadian Bank of Commerce, represented a liquidated claim of the National Bank of New Zealand against Wills & Sons. And when Wills & Sons attached the check or the credit represented thereby, the status of affairs was little different from what it would have been if Wills & Sons had assigned to some one for collection its claim against Burns & Co., and then had had that assignee attach, as property of Burns & Co., the net proceeds of the sale of the copra in the hands of Wills & Sons really owing to the National Bank of New Zealand.
>
> "The Canadian Bank represented the National Bank of New Zealand as an agent to collect the indebtedness; and the mere fact that the Canadian Bank received, and at the time of the levy held, a check as conditional payment, cannot alter the ownership of the National Bank of New Zealand in the credit represented by the check, or prevent that bank, as the real beneficial owner, from having recourse to an action of conversion to recover the value of its property."

As was said by Lord Ellenborough in Stephens v. Elwall, 4 Maule & S. 259:

> "A person is guilty of conversion who intermeddles with my property and disposes of it; and it is no answer that he acted under the authority of another who had himself no authority to dispose of it."

Agreeing with appellant, as set forth in his opening brief, that the Canadian Bank at the time of its reception from Wills of the check or bill of exchange representing the proceeds of the cargo of copra guaranteed by Wills to be turned over pursuant to the direction of the New Zealand Bank, through its representative, the Canadian Bank, is correct, and that all the circumstances supported this conclusion, it is only necessary to cite a few authorities to confirm the right of respondent to maintain this action.

[19, 20] In section 19, p. 1043, of volume 24 Cal. Jur. the text-writer sets forth the general rule as to the right to maintain trover in the following language:

> "To enable one to recover for the conversion of personal property, he must have had a general or special ownership of the property at the time of the tort. Legal title is not necessary; any special valuable interest in the property accompanied with the right of possession is sufficient. Actual possession of a chattel at the time of its conversion will sustain trover, except as to the true owner or one claiming under him, even though the title be conceded to be in a third person. So also one who has a present right to possession may maintain the action. Manifestly, however, one cannot maintain the action where he had neither possession, right of possession, nor any title in the property claimed at the time of the conversion."

In 28 Am. & Eng. Cyc. of Law (Second Edition) p. 661, we find the following:

> "An agent may be guilty of the conversion of chattels intrusted to him by his principal so as to render him liable in trover to the principal, or the action may be maintained by the principal against third persons who wrongfully acquire the property from the agent. Unless the principal is entitled to possession of the chattels as against the agent, he cannot, of course, as against the latter, maintain trover therefor; but a wrongdoer who takes the chattels from a factor cannot set up the lien of the factor in defense to an action of trover against him by the principal."

There is also another principle which applies to this proceeding and gives the respondent a right of action: The fact that the check or bill of exchange was not applied by the Canadian Bank to the uses and purposes of the respondent as theretofore directed. This principle is stated in section 440 of the Law of Conversion by Bowers, to wit:

> "From the cases cited it is gathered that a general owner of a chattel cannot maintain trover therefor during the continuance of a definite term for which he has parted with possession; but where a bailee, during the term of the bailment, has put the chattel to a different use from that for which it was bailed, the owner thereupon becomes entitled to immediate possession * * * and may maintain trover for its conversion."

The control of the Canadian Bank, as the agent of the respondent and the special property of the Canadian Bank, if any, in and to the check or bill of exchange, was for the express purpose of applying the proceeds of the sale of the copra to the discharge of the indebtedness of Burns to the New Zealand Bank, evidenced and created by the bill of exchange theretofore discounted by the New Zealand Bank at the inception of the transaction out of which this controversy arises, and, when the check or bill of exchange evidencing the proceeds arising from the sale of the cargo of copra was placed in the possession of the defendant, it was in contravention of the rights of the respondent, and gave rise to an immediate cause of action on the part of the plaintiff herein. That the Canadian Bank may have rendered itself liable by turning the check or bill of exchange over to the defendant does not militate against either the ownership of the proceeds of the sale of the copra, or the right of the respondent to maintain this action. As to the cargo of copra, the rule is clear that the pledgee, to wit, the respondent, if considered only as a pledgee, has the right to maintain trover for the conversion thereof. Bowers on the Law of Conversion, §§ 392 and 393. The latter section deals with the right of the pledgee to maintain trover against third persons. While there are some cases to the contrary, notably the case of Herring v. Tilghman, 35 N. C. 392, holding to the contrary, the weight of authority supports the rule set forth in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 656, to wit:

> "The owner of evidences of indebtedness, such as bills, notes, bonds, etc., may maintain trover in his own name for their conversion though he could not have maintained in his name an action on the instrument itself. Donnell v. Thompson, 13 Ala. 440; Lowremore v. Berry, 19 Ala. 130, 54 Am. Dec. 188; Clowes v. Hawley, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 486."

The text-writer in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 656, supra, further states:

> "The owner of a note may maintain trover therefor, though there had been no indorsement of the note to him."

Likewise:

> "In trover for check sent by the debtor to his creditor and wrongfully converted by a third person, it is no defense that the check was not received by the plaintiff in absolute payment of his indebtedness."

Thus, even though the check or bill of exchange delivered by Wills to the Canadian Bank was not absolutely payment pro tanto of the indebtedness of Burns to the respondent, the right of the plaintiff to maintain trover therefor existed. The cases are almost legion on the subject of the right to maintain trover by one having either an absolute, a general or a special property in the property converted, and it would serve no useful purpose to review any considerable number of the authorities bearing upon this question cited by counsel in this cause. If it be admitted that the Canadian Bank was the agent of the New Zealand Bank in the transactions which we have detailed, and which we think must be admitted, the weight of authority is overwhelmingly in favor of the maintenance of this cause by the respondent as the principal having a general ownership in the proceeds of the sale of the cargo of copra. As we have shown, the form in which such proceeds are evidenced is immaterial as to the ownership and ultimate right of possession. We conclude that the plaintiff in this action was and is the real party in interest.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BUCK, Justice pro tem.

81 Cal. App. 23

TATTERSON et al. v. STANDARD REALTY CO. et al. (Civ. 5671.)★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 25, 1927. Petition for Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 24, 1927.)

1. Pleading 🔑36(2)—Real estate broker, who joined in salesman's action for commissions, expressly waiving his rights in salesman's favor, could not recover.

Where real estate broker, employing salesman, joined in salesman's action for commission for exchange of property, and set up contract with salesman by which salesman was to have entire commission for negotiating exchange, broker held not entitled to recovery, having waived its rights in salesman's favor.

2. Brokers 🔑42—Real estate salesman, employed by licensed broker, could not recover commission for exchange of property for which he was not employed or compensated by employer (St. 1919, p. 1252, § 1, and §§ 2, 20b [as amended by St. 1923, pp. 93, 98, §§ 1, 9]).

Where real estate salesman changed employment, being entitled to all commissions on old listings under agreement with new employer, who was licensed broker, he could not recover commission for exchange of property under old listing for which he was not employed or compensated by broker for noncompliance with St. 1919, p. 1252, § 1, and sections 2, 20b (as amended by St. 1923, pp. 93, 98, §§ 1, 9), defining real estate salesman as one employed for compensation by licensed broker to negotiate sale or exchange of real estate as whole or partial vocation.

3. Brokers 🔑94—Statute defining real estate salesmen does not authorize salesman to execute contract for exchange of property in own name (St. 1919, p. 1252, and acts amendatory thereof).

St. 1919, p. 1252, and acts amendatory thereof, defining real estate broker and salesman, and requiring license, do not authorize execution of contract for exchange of property by real estate salesman in his own name.

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. Appeal and error 🔑832(2) — Rehearing should not be granted to amend minutes to show striking of part of complaint, where matter alleged appeared elsewhere.

Rehearing should not be granted to permit amendment of minutes of lower court, and to change record on appeal to show striking of paragraph of amended complaint, where matters contained therein appeared in another paragraph of complaint.

5. Brokers 🔑42—Person, not real estate salesman, could not recover commission for exchange of property, though commission was provided for solely by contract of principals (St. 1919, p. 1252, § 2, as amended by St. 1923, p. 93, § 1).

Person not within definition of real estate salesman, under St. 1919, p. 1252, § 2, as amended by St. 1923, p. 93, § 1, could not recover commission for exchange of property, though promise to pay commission was contained in contract between principals to exchange agreement, where seller was not claiming commission as part of consideration, and where amount to be so paid was specifically designated as real estate commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Norman W. Tatterson, in which Carl H. Nieper was joined as coplaintiff, against the Standard Realty Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

G. E. Duke and A. A. Montagne, both of Oakland, for appellants.

Daniel Rygel and George M. Naus, both of Oakland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. Norman W. Tatterson commenced an action against the defendants to recover a sum of money alleged to be due as commissions earned by him in effecting an exchange of real properties. Thereafter the defendants appeared and such proceedings were had that the trial court made an order authorizing the plaintiff to file an amended complaint joining Carl H. Nieper as a coplaintiff. An amended complaint was filed, the defendants demurred thereto, their demurrer was overruled, and thereupon they answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiffs, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appellants present a large number of points, but, in the view that we take of the record, it will not be necessary to consider all of them.

As to the plaintiff Carl H. Nieper, we think that the demurrer of the defendants should have been sustained. In their complaint the coplaintiffs alleged:

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

"I. That at all times herein mentioned the said Carl H. Nieper was and is a real estate broker, duly licensed by the real estate board under the State Real Estate Department Act of the state of California, and doing business as a real estate broker in the state of California, with his principal place of business in the city of Oakland.

"II. That at all times herein mentioned plaintiff Norman W Tatterson was a real estate salesman, duly licensed by the real estate board under the State Real Estate Department Act of the state of California, and in the employ of said Carl H. Nieper as a real estate salesman fully authorized to make contracts of sale or exchange of real property in his own name as the agent of said Carl H. Nieper. That said Norman W. Tatterson did enter into agreement with said defendants with the knowledge and consent of said plaintiff Nieper as his authorized agent and salesman.

"III. That said Carl H. Nieper did agree with said Norman W. Tatterson that he the said Norman W. Tatterson was to have and receive as his compensation for securing the execution of the contract on file herein such sum as the defendants agreed to pay.

"IV. That he hereby waives all of his right in and to the said sum to said Norman W. Tatterson.

"V. That the said defendants G. E. Duke and M. E. Duke, his wife, John Doe and Richard Doe are the owners of the Standard Realty Company, a fictitious copartnership doing business in the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, state of California.

"VI. That on the 15th day of July, 1925, the above-named plaintiff and defendants executed, delivered, and entered into a contract in writing bearing the date of that day, a copy of which said contract is hereby attached and marked 'Exhibit A' and made a part of this complaint.

"VII. That said plaintiff has fully performed all of his terms of the contract, and that said defendants have not performed all of their terms of the contract, to wit, the payment to the said Norman W. Tatterson of the sum of $1,500, as and for commissions for services rendered.

"VIII. That on the 20th day of July, 1925, the said offer of exchange made by the said defendants was accepted in writing by the party of the second part of the said contract hereinbefore mentioned as Exhibit A, and defendants were notified of the said acceptance on the 21st day of July, 1925, by plaintiff Norman W. Tatterson.

"IX. That there is now due, owing and unpaid the sum of $1,500."

Exhibit A, attached to the amended complaint, is an exchange agreement, written on the approved form of the California Real Estate Association, and by its terms the Standard Realty Company offers to exchange properties in the city of Richmond, Contra Costa county, for properties located in the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, for the terms therein designated. A paragraph therein is as follows:

"Norman W. Tatterson of Oakland, Cal., is hereby authorized to act as agent for all parties hereto, and may accept commission therefrom, and, should this offer be accepted by the second party, the undersigned agree to pay said agent $1,500 commission for services rendered to become due on the execution of this agreement by all parties hereto."

The offer purports to be signed on July 15, 1925, by the Standard Realty Company and to have been accepted on July 20, 1925, by an acceptance in writing executed by Maggie Gregg, the owner of the property located in Berkeley. Neither the offer nor the acceptance is signed by any one else.

The complaint pleaded Nieper out of court in favor of his coplaintiff Norman W. Tatterson. In paragraphs III and IV it is alleged:

"That said Carl H. Nieper did agree with said Norman W. Tatterson that he the said Norman W. Tatterson was to have and receive as his compensation for securing the execution of the contract on file herein such sum as the defendants agreed to pay.

"That he hereby waives all of his right in and to the said sum to said Norman W. Tatterson."

On the trial of the case, uncontradicted evidence was introduced in the form of a writing dated June 27, 1925, by which the allegations of paragraphs III and IV of the amended complaint were proved. But in making findings no finding was made in response to said paragraphs.

[1] It follows that the demurrer should have been sustained, because as to Nieper the complaint was insufficient, and, furthermore, that, in the absence of the demurrer, no judgment should have been entered in favor of the respondent Nieper.

[2] As to the respondent Tatterson, the appellants present numerous attacks, the general scope of which is to contend that Exhibit A was illegal, and that the amended complaint did not state facts sufficient, and that the proof was not sufficient to establish a right in favor of Tatterson under the provisions of chapter 605, Statutes of 1919, and the acts amendatory thereof.

The record discloses that, prior to the month of June, 1925, Carl H. Nieper was a duly licensed broker, and that Seulberger-Dunham & Co. was a duly licensed broker; that Tatterson was a duly licensed real estate salesman in the employment of Seulberger-Dunham & Co.; that on the 27th day of June, 1925, he applied to have his license as a salesman transferred from that company to Carl H. Nieper; that it was transferred on the 29th day of June, 1925. It further appears that, at the time Tatterson attempted to make this change, he claimed to have certain listings or unfinished business on hand; that on June 27, 1925, Nieper addressed a letter to Tatterson in which he stated:

"In return for your co-operation and transferring your salesman's license above mentioned I agree to let you retain all commissions or profits from the sales you may make that are now pending."

It further appears that the exchange transaction involved in this case is one of the listings which the plaintiff Tatterson so claimed to have at the time that he became an employee of Nieper, and, except as we have stated, that Nieper never employed Tatterson "for a compensation," or otherwise, to effect the exchange involved in this case. No writing was produced showing or tending to show that Tatterson, in so far as the transaction involving this exchange was concerned, acted or was acting as the agent of Nieper, was employed by Nieper, or compensated by Nieper.

The statute (St. 1919, p. 1252, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1294, and St. 1923, p. 93) provides:

> "Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, copartnership or corporation to engage in the business, or act in the capacity of a real estate broker, or a real estate salesman within this state without first obtaining a license therefor.
>
> "Sec. 2. A real estate broker within the meaning of this act is a person, * * * who, for a compensation, * * * negotiates the * * * exchange of real estate, * * * for others as a whole or partial vocation.
>
> "A real estate salesman within the meaning of this act is one who for a compensation is employed by a licensed broker to * * * negotiate the * * * exchange of real estate, * * * as a whole or partial vocation.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> "One act, for a compensation, of * * * offering for another to * * * exchange real estate, * * * shall constitute the person, * * * making such offer [of] * * * exchange * * * a real estate broker or salesman within the meaning of this act.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> "Sec. 20b. Every officer, agent or employee of any company, and every other person who * * * willfully violates or fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, * * * is guilty of a public offense, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison or the county jail for a term not to exceed two years, or by a fine of not to exceed two thousand dollars. * * *"

From the foregoing provisions contained in the statute it is clear that the Legislature has divided all persons, who for a compensation negotiate for others exchanges of real estate, into two classes—(1) brokers, and (2) salesmen—and has prohibited others (except certain classes of persons not here involved) from engaging in such business without first complying with the statute. It has also placed restrictions and limitations on brokers and salesmen and has provided penalties for violations. In the case entitled Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, at page 593, 185 P. 855, 856 (8 A. L. R. 418), speaking of this particular statute, the court said:

> "Now the single primary purpose of the act is to require of real estate brokers and salesmen that they be 'honest, truthful and of good reputation.' All of its provisions, including the requirement of a license, are but incidental to this single purpose and designed to accomplish it."

Tatterson does not claim he was a broker. He did not allege nor prove, and the court did not find, that he was employed by Nieper to conduct this particular exchange nor that he was so employed for a compensation. On the other hand, Tatterson claimed that it was personal business which he took to the house of Nieper, and that Nieper authorized him to complete it.

[3] The trial court found the facts as alleged in paragraph II of the amended complaint in the words of said paragraph. The expression, "fully authorized to make contracts," was but a conclusion. It was not a statement that Nieper for a compensation had employed Tatterson to make a contract of exchange. The expression that Tatterson was authorized to make contracts of exchange of real property "in his own name" is another conclusion, and, as we think, an improper conclusion on a question of law. The statute does not directly or indirectly authorize that method of executing one of the contracts enumerated in the statute.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [4] Respondents in their petition for a rehearing have urged that a rehearing be granted, so that sufficient time shall be available to them to take the necessary proceedings to amend the minutes of the court below and change the record on this appeal correspondingly. They state that in this way they will be able to show that paragraph IV of the amended complaint was stricken out by the court below. We are not disposed to follow this suggestion, because, even with paragraph IV stricken out, paragraph III of the complaint also shows that plaintiff Nieper has passed over to Tatterson all his interest in the commission.

[5] Respondents, reinforced by new counsel, urge now for the first time that the illegality of the contract sued on is collateral, inasmuch as the promise to pay commissions to Tatterson is contained only in the contract between the principals to the exchange agreement. They claim that this commission is really a part of the consideration due to the seller from the buyer. But this is not a case where the buyer is retaining for himself a part of the agreed consideration, upon the claim that the seller has directed an application of it in performance of a void contract. Here the exchange contract was not consummated, and in this action we are not determining whether the consideration named is due and payable from the defendant to the seller. The clause containing the promise upon which this action is based specifically designates the $1,500 as real estate commission, and this action is brought to recover that sum as such.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

---

81 Cal. App. 398

PEOPLE v. KELLEY. (Cr. 1410.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 18, 1927.)

1. Criminal law 🔑447—In prosecution for obtaining money by trickery, rule that oral testimony is inadmissible to vary written instrument held inapplicable.

In prosecution for obtaining money by trick or device, rule applied in civil actions that oral testimony is inadmissible to vary terms of written instrument is inapplicable, since state was not party to contract and may introduce oral evidence to show defendant's intention in making it.

2. Criminal law 🔑829(4)—In larceny case, striking from instruction direction to acquit if defendant intended to return property held not prejudicial, in view of instruction given.

In prosecution for grand larceny, striking from instruction direction to acquit if defendant intended to return property to owners or give them interest in corporation at their option, under contract, held not prejudicial, where court instructed that felonious intent to permanently deprive owners of property must have existed at time of taking.

3. Criminal law 🔑814(3)—Court need not give instruction related to special theory of defense requiring evidence for its support, in absence of such evidence.

Where offered instruction is related to special or affirmative theory of defense, requiring evidence for its support and as to which there was no evidence, court is not required to give such instruction.

4. Criminal law 🔑829(4)—In larceny case, refusal of instruction to acquit if defendant took property under honest belief that he had right to take it held not error, in view of instruction given.

In prosecution for grand larceny, refusal of instruction to acquit if defendant took property under honest belief that he had legal right to take it held not error, where court instructed that defendant at time of taking must have had felonious intent to permanently deprive owners of property.

5. Larceny 🔑65—Evidence held to support conviction for grand larceny.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for grand larceny, where defendant induced complaining witnesses to part with their money as cash bond to secure position in business conducted by defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

John F. Kelley was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Spicer, of Los Angeles, and A. M. Drew, of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Appellant was found guilty on six counts of an information charging grand larceny. The alleged crimes, as shown by the evidence, consisted in the obtaining of money from certain persons through the operation of a trick or device, by means of a fictitious firm or partnership, for the transaction of a pretended business, in connection with which the victims were induced to yield possession of their money to the defendant.

The principal grounds of appeal as indicated by the briefs are (1) errors in admitting testimony to add to, controvert, or vary the terms of certain written instruments; (2) refusal to give three instructions requested by defendant; (3) that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence in several stated particulars. The nature of the case may be illustrated by the evidence concerning count 1, which charged larceny of the sum of $500, belonging to one Agnes Lubeck. On the 3d day of December, 1925, Mrs. Lubeck executed and delivered to the defendant her check for the sum of $500, which in due course was paid to the defendant. At the same time, she and the defendant executed a contract, in writing, the one with the other, reading as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into by and between John F. Kelley and Agnes Lubeck, on the 3d day of December, 1925, witnesseth: That the said John F. Kelley agrees to employ the said Agnes Lubeck at a salary of $150 per month to act as office manager of that certain business known as the Auto Theft Bureau of America. The said Agnes Lubeck hereby agrees to accept the above-mentioned position at the above-mentioned salary, and to execute said position to the best of her ability. The said Agnes Lubeck hereby pays to the said John F. Kelley the sum of $500, and the said sum is to be used as a bond until March 1, 1926, when, at that time, it is to be returned to the said Agnes Lubeck in cash or in five shares of the common stock of the Auto Theft Bureau of America, at the option of the said Agnes Lubeck. In the event the said Agnes Lubeck takes the amount out in stock, the said Kelley further agrees to buy said stock back again, at the price of $125 per share.

"[Signed] John F. Kelley.
"Agnes Lubeck."

The following facts are gleaned from the testimony of Mrs. Lubeck. On or about November 17, 1925, in response to an advertisement in the Los Angeles Times offering a partnership in a realty firm, Mrs. Lubeck called on the defendant at his office on Sunset boulevard, in the city of Los Angeles. Defendant said to her that he wanted to sell a half interest in his realty business, which he said had been in operation some four years and was a well-paying business; that it would require about $1,700. This interview did not lead to any sale of any interest in the business. A few days later, in a telephone conversation, defendant told Mrs. Lubeck that he had disposed of his real estate business, but that he had something else to offer. In response to that suggestion, Mrs. Lubeck called a second time at defendant's office. He asked her if she would like to manage a crew of girls in a new business. He said that they were going to organize a business in connection with an auto theft bureau, and he would like to have her manage a crew of girls in one of the departments. About December 1, 1925, Mrs. Lubeck went to work in the office of this Auto Theft Bureau as manager of the multigraph department. On the 2d or 3d of December defendant said to Mrs. Lubeck that it would require a cash bond for her position, which would be that of general office manager. She replied that she could give him a surety bond. He responded that it would not do; that he did not need the money, but he wanted a cash bond for good faith; that that cash bond would be placed in trust and would not be needed, "and that it would be my option to get it—I could get it back the 1st of March, in three months time." It was on the basis of these statements made by the defendant, and in reliance thereon, that Mrs. Lubeck paid over to the defendant said sum of $500 and executed the said written contract. The Auto Theft Bureau of America, as described to Mrs. Lubeck by the defendant, was a corporation of which he was president and general manager, which corporation was to engage in the recovery of stolen automobiles in accordance with an elaborately devised scheme for identification of the automobiles of the corporation's customers, and for the detection and recovery of the cars of those customers whenever they should be stolen, and particularly when attempts were made to take such cars to distant places or out of the state. About the 25th of January, 1926, the defendant left Los Angeles, and Mrs. Lubeck did not see him again until he was brought to trial in this action.

Mrs. Lubeck continued her employment in the office of the purported corporation until the 2d day of February, 1926. She received $75, her pay for the first two weeks. Very early during that period she found that instead of an abundance of money the institution was short of funds. Before defendant left for San Francisco he asked Mrs. Lubeck to pay him another $500, saying that "all of this money would be put in a trust, and that there would be an amount of $60,000, * * * that there would always be a certain surplus fund to take care of any deficit in any way, and it could not fail"; that the payment of this additional $500 would be necessary to hold her position further. Fortunately she did not comply with this demand.

Evidence was received showing how the defendant received other sums of money from the several other persons mentioned in the other counts of the indictment. All of the transactions were similar and consisted in obtaining said moneys as "cash bonds" or as "guarantee of good faith" of the victims who were to be honored with positions in the Auto Theft Bureau of America. For the purpose of showing that the intent of the defendant was to trick the applicants into delivering money to him, and that the supposed positions and employments were fictitious, the prosecution introduced evidence showing the condition of the bank accounts of defendant, and other facts concerning the representations of the defendant and his transactions in connection with the supposed business. On the basis of all of this evidence (which we have endeavored only briefly to indicate), the defendant was convicted as first herein stated.

[1] Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting oral testimony over appellant's objection for the purpose of adding to, controverting, or varying the terms of the several written contracts, one of which has been set forth herein. Appellant seeks to apply in this criminal action the rule commonly applied to civil actions under which extrinsic evidence is not admissible to add to, controvert, or vary the terms of a written instrument. He argues that it was erroneous to admit such extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing the intent of the defendant in the transactions; that it was erroneous because the intention of the parties to a contract must be gathered from the contract itself when the terms thereof are not ambiguous, and that on such a contract the intent of the parties is a question of law for the court, and not a question for the jury to decide. There is no merit in the point stated.

"The state is a party to the prosecution but no party to the contract. If the contract when offered by the people is conclusive as against them, it certainly would be a perfect defense if offered by the accused, but it is not possible that the people in the prosecution of a defendant charged with crime can be estopped in any such manner. * * * The defendant's guilt of the offense charged must appear to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the evidence placed before it, and this contract but bears its part in furnishing light—be that light strong or weak—upon the ultimate fact as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. The rules of evidence in civil cases as to a direct or collateral attack upon the contract by any of the parties to it are entirely inapplicable to any thing involved in this case." People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 566, 36 P. 952, 953.

[2] The court struck out from defendant's requested instruction No. 1 that part thereof which would have instructed the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that it was the intent of the defendant to return their property to the owners, "or to give them an interest in the Auto Theft Bureau of America at their option, as is provided in the several written contracts executed between the owners and the said defendant, Kelley, at the time the property was received," then and in that case, it would be the duty of the jury to find the defendant not guilty of the crime of grand larceny. But the court in the same instruction did state that to constitute larceny, as set forth in the several counts of the information, there must have existed at the time of the taking a felonious intent on the part of the defendant to permanently deprive the owners of their property, and that if the jury believed from the evidence that the defendant did not so intend, that then it was the duty of the jury to find the defendant not guilty of the crime of grand larceny. The instruction as given was amply sufficient and the defendant was not prejudiced by the modification of which he complains.

[3, 4] The court refused to give defendant's requested instruction No. 2, reading as follows:

> "If you believe from the evidence that the defendant, Kelley, took the property of the owners mentioned in counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the information under an honest belief entertained by him at the time of the taking that he had a legal right to take the property, then it is your duty, under the law, to find the defendant not guilty of the crime of larceny as charged in said counts, even though he was mistaken in such belief."

Counsel for the people make no criticism of the instruction itself. The only reply made on behalf of respondent is to the effect that no evidence was introduced in support of defendant's theory that he mistakenly used the money of the complaining witnesses under a claim of right in that they were copartners with him. Respondent contends that for this reason the refusal to give the requested instruction was not prejudicial to the rights of defendant. If the offered instruction had been related to some special or affirmative theory of defense, requiring evidence for its support, and as to which there was no evidence, it would not have been the duty of the court to give such instruction. But this instruction was properly applicable to the case because it was directed to the very essence of the prosecution's case, which involved an intent to steal, as a part of the felonious taking of property. Assuming that the instruction was correct, the one and only valid reason for the refusal of this instruction—and we deem it a sufficient reason—is that the rule invoked by the instruction is sufficiently stated in the instruction given by the court that to constitute larceny as set forth in the informaion, there must have existed, at the time of the taking, a felonious intent on the part of the defendant to permanently deprive the owners of their property.

We are further of the opinion that the court's refusal to give defendant's requested instruction No. 3 would be justified by the giving of the instruction last above mentioned, even if this proposed instruction was in all respects a correct statement of the law. But said offered instruction No. 3 would have been misleading to the jury in that it attempted to incorporate with the theory of an absence of fraud or deception a statement of the rule under which written contracts are ordinarily deemed to express the whole agreement between the parties. Under the instructions as given, the jury must have well understood that, in the absence of fraud or deception on the part of the defendant, he should not be convicted.

[5] Finally, appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict in this, that there is no sufficient evidence to prove that the defendant took the money from the complaining witnesses for his own use or with intent to deprive them, or either of them, of the money which he did take and receive, and that there is no evidence sufficient to support the implied finding that the title to said money remained in the respective owners thereof. We are satisfied that there was evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in believing that the defendant falsely represented to the complaining witnesses that the Auto Theft Bureau of America was a corporation; that he was president of the corporation; that "cash bonds" were required from the complaining witnesses in order that they might hold executive positions in said corporation; and that the money received would be put in trust as bond money; all of which was false in fact and false in intention of the defendant. The evidence further shows not only that the checks of the complaining witnesses were cashed by the defendant, but there is evidence tending to prove that the moneys so received from the complaining witnesses were placed by the defendant in his personal bank account, or in an account in the name of the Auto Theft Bureau, for the purpose of being used and which actually were used for purposes other than those indicated in the representations made by the defendant. The evidence was sufficient to establish the fact that the property taken was the property of the complaining witnesses which they intended to leave with the defendant only temporarily and under a promise that it would be returned to them later. The evidence was sufficient as a whole and in its multitude of circumstances, to convince a reasonable mind, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that the pretended auto theft bureau and its pretended business were, in effect, a fictitious organization, with only so much show of realty as was necessary to enable the defendant to fool the trusting individuals from whom by that means he obtained possession of their money. The case is thus brought within the definition of larceny "by trick or device," as explained in numerous decisions. People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 236 P. 944.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

81 Cal. App. 270

BYRNE v. WESTERN PIPE & STEEL CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3184.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 8, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 8, 1927.)

1. Trial ⚷228(1)—Instruction stating necessity of finding negligence and proximate cause held not erroneous for omitting charge on contributory negligence, given in other instructions.

No error lies for omitting mention of the necessity of finding plaintiff's lack of contributory negligence in instructing jury that they must find defendant's negligence the proximate cause of plaintiff's damage before plaintiff may recover; contributory negligence charges being given elsewhere.

2. Damages ⚷113—Measure of damages, where automobile injured cannot be completely repaired, is value before accident minus value after repaired, plus costs of repair.

If an automobile negligently damaged in collision cannot be completely repaired, the measure of the owner's damages is the difference between its value before the injury and its value after repairs have been made, plus the reasonable cost of the repairs.

3. Damages ⚷217—Where automobile injured could not be completely repaired, instruction that damage was either value before minus value after injury, or repair costs, held erroneous.

Instruction that the measure of damages, in a case where an automobile was injured so that it could not be completely repaired, was either the value before the accident minus the value after, or, in the alternative, the repair costs, held erroneous.

4. Highways ⚷184(2)—Burden is on defendant to prove contributory negligence of automobile driver.

Defendant has burden of proving plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, in action for damages resulting from automobile collision.

5. Appeal and error ⚷1033(5)—Appellant cannot complain of erroneous instruction favoring him.

Where court erroneously instructed jury to the effect that appellee had burden of proof, appellant cannot complain, since error favored him.

6. Damages ⚷217—Instructing no recovery under defendant's cross-complaint because insurance company paid damage to automobile, held erroneous, where loss of use also alleged.

Instruction to jury, in action following automobile collision, that defendant could not recover damages under his cross-complaint because the damages to his automobile were paid by the insurance company, held erroneous, since the cross-complaint also asked damages for loss of use of automobile.

7. Appeal and error ⚷1068(3)—Where verdict for plaintiff impliedly found defendant negligent, precluding recovery on cross-complaint, erroneous instruction on cross-complaint held harmless.

Error in a negligence case, in instructing jury that defendant could not recover on his cross-complaint, held harmless, where there was a verdict for the plaintiff which implied that defendant was negligent, so that he could not have recovered on his cross-complaint in any event.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by A. A. Byrne against the Western Pipe & Steel Company of California and H. G. Tallerday. Judgment for plaintiff and against H. G. Tallerday, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant Tallerday for damages sustained in a collision between motor vehicles. Tallerday has appealed from the judgment. The defendants alleged contributory negligence, and Tallerday filed a cross-complaint for damages sustained by him in the collision.

[1] Appellant contends that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence upon the issues raised by the answer and cross-complaint, and that therefore certain alleged errors in the instructions are prejudicial. The defendants requested the court to charge the jury as follows:

> "In order, therefore, to find a verdict for the plaintiff, you must not only find from a preponderance of all the evidence that the defendant was negligent; but also that such negligence was the proximate cause of the damages to the plaintiff; and you must further find that the evidence fails to show by a preponderance thereof that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, however slight, contributing proximately thereto; otherwise your verdict must be for the defendant."

[2, 3] The court struck out the words herein italicized, and gave the instruction as so modified. Appellant says that "an instruction which directs a verdict if the jury finds certain facts to be true is reversibly erroneous, unless it embraces all things necessary to show such liability." But the instruction as given does not direct a verdict for the plaintiff if certain facts are found by the jury to be true. It merely states two facts which must be found in favor of plaintiff before he can recover. In at least three other instructions the court stated that plaintiff could not recover if the jury found that he was guilty of negligence which contributed to the damages sustained by him. The jury could not have been misled by the instruction. The court gave the following instructions, the first at defendants' request and the second at the request of the plaintiff:

---

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

> "The measure of damages for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract is the amount which will compensate for all of the detriment proximately caused. This detriment, in the absence of total destruction of the property, is the difference in the value of the property immediately before and after the injury; provided, however, if the injury be capable of repair at an expense less than the diminution in value of the property as injured, the damage is limited to the cost of making such repair. These different measures of damage are exclusive of one another; that is to say, if the expense of repair is less than the diminution in value, then the measure of damage to be adopted is the cost of repair, and in such event you may not assess any damages because of any alleged diminution in the value of the car."
>
> "If you believe from the evidence that plaintiff is entitled to recover, then in assessing damages you may allow him such sum not exceeding the amount claimed, to wit, $2,391.05, as will compensate him for the loss and damage, if any sustained, as follows:
>
> "(1) Reasonable cost of necessary repairs to the truck, if any.
>
> "(2) The difference, if any, in the value of the truck after it was repaired and its value before it was damaged.
>
> "(3) Reasonable value of the loss of the use of the truck while the same was being repaired, if any.
>
> "(4) Reasonable value of the liquor damaged or lost, if any."

The first of these instructions is substantially in the language of the opinion in Kincaid v. Dunn, 26 Cal. App. 686, 687, 148 P. 235. The instruction is applicable where the injury can be entirely repaired. In Rhodes v. Firestone Tire, etc., Co., 51 Cal. App. 569, 573, 197 P. 392, 394, it is said:

> "The usual measure, however, to apply in the ascertainment of damages in cases where personal property has been negligently injured but is susceptible of repair, and the one we prefer to follow, is that which makes the measure of damages the difference in value immediately before and immediately after the injury, subject, however, to the proviso that if it can be entirely repaired at a less expense than the diminution in value because of the injury, the measure of damages is the reasonable cost of repairs."

The evidence herein shows that the value of the truck after it was repaired was much less than its value before the injury, but that its value after such repairs were made greatly exceeded the total amount awarded for the cost of repairs and depreciation. In repairing a machine which has been injured, it is sometimes necessary to install new parts, with the result that the value of the machine is greater after the repairs have been made than it was before the injury. In such a case it has been said:

> "Evidence of the fair cost of the repairs, made necessary by the injury, less the increased value of the repaired machine, above its value before the accident, was legitimate evidence of the plaintiff's damage." Cadwell v. Town of Canton, 81 Conn. 288, 70 A. 1025; Chapleau v. Manhattan Oil Co., 178 Wis. 545, 190 N. W. 361; Blanke v. United Rys. Co. (Mo. App.) 213 S. W. 174.

It has been held in several cases that, if the damaged property cannot be completely repaired, the measure of damages is the difference between its value before the injury and its value after the repairs have been made, plus the reasonable cost of making the repairs. Monroe v. Lattin, 25 Kan. 351; Larson Bros. Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Kansas City, Kan., 115 Kan. 589, 224 P. 47; Yawitz Dyeing & Cleaning Co. v. Erlenbach (Mo. App.) 221 S. W. 411; Blanke v. United Rys. Co., supra; Coleman v. Levkoff, 128 S. C. 487, 122 S. E. 875; Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Zumwalt (Tex. Com. App.) 239 S. W. 912; Thompson v. Field (Tex. Civ. App.) 164 S. W. 1115; Cooper v. Knight (Tex. Civ. App.) 147 S. W. 349; Metcalf v. Mellen, 57 Utah, 44, 192 P. 676. The foregoing rule gives the plaintiff the difference between the value of the machine before the injury and its value after such injury, the amount thereof being made up of the cost of repairs and the depreciation notwithstanding such repairs. The instruction given at defendants' request is incorrect as applied to the facts of this case, and the one given at plaintiff's request correctly states the law. The appellant cannot justly complain that an instruction requested by him is erroneously favorable to him.

[4, 5] The court correctly defined the term "preponderance of evidence" and in another instruction stated:

> "Before the plaintiff can recover in this action, it must first appear to your satisfaction, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the defendants, or their servant, were guilty of some act of negligence which directly contributed to the accident. It must also appear to your satisfaction that the plaintiff was without fault or negligence on his part which may in anywise have contributed to the accident."

Appellant complains that the two instructions are inconsistent, and that therefore the error therein is prejudicial. But the error therein was against the plaintiff and favorable to the defendants. The burden was on the defendants to prove contributory negligence, but by the instruction quoted the court charged the jury, in effect, that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that he was not negligent and that such proof must be made to the "satisfaction" of the jury. The language of the court in Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 320, 80 P. 92, 93, is applicable to the question here raised. It is there said:

> "The sixth instruction fairly stated the law. Appellants certainly are not injured because in a later instruction the court laid down a rule more favorable to them than the law justifies."

[6, 7] Appellant's machine was damaged in the collision. His cross-complaint alleges that the machine was damaged in a stated amount, and that, in addition to such damage, he was deprived of the use of the machine for 14 days, to his damage in the sum of $140. It appeared at the trial that appellant's machine was insured against accidents, and that the insurance company paid the cost of repairs after the injury caused by the collision. The court instructed the jury that "defendant H. G. Tallerday is not entitled to recover on his cross-complaint by reason of the fact that his damage was paid by his insurance carrier." This was clearly error. Whatever may be the rule as to the cost of repairs which the insurance carrier paid, the instruction is erroneous as applied to the damages claimed for loss of use of the machine. The error, however, was harmless, because, by returning a verdict for the plaintiff against the appellant, the jury impliedly found that appellant was negligent, and that the plaintiff was free from negligence, facts which precluded a recovery by appellant on his cross-complaint without reference to the erroneous instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BUCK, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

In re CLARY'S ESTATE. (Civ. 3114.)★

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 17, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 18, 1927.)

1. Executors and administrators 🔑513(5)—Former opinion, denying jurisdiction to require personal representative of deceased executor to account on distribution of estate of testator, held not res judicata of proceedings against personal representative for accounting (Code Civ. Proc. § 1639).

Opinion on former appeal, refusing to require accounting of personal representative of deceased executor on petition for settlement of final account and final distribution of estate of testator, held not res judicata of proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, to require accounting of personal representative of deceased executor, where former appeal was determined on ground that court had no jurisdiction to determine matter on distribution, but that proper remedy was by petition for accounting.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑513(9)—Account of personal representative is not final as to matters therein which have not been adjudicated.

Account of personal representative, though final as to all matters adjudicated, is not final as to unadjudicated items.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑50—On qualifying, executor becomes voluntary trustee of assets of testator's estate, including debt owed by him to testator.

Executor, on qualifying, becomes trustee of property and assets of estate of testator, including debt owed by him to testator, holding estate for benefit of devisees and legatees under will.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑50—Personal representative of deceased executor could be required to account for his debt due estate at time he qualified despite lapse of time thereafter; statute of limitations being inapplicable (Code Civ. Proc. § 1447).

Personal representative of deceased executor could be required to account to estate for balance due on promissory note executed by executor to testator, notwithstanding lapse of time between maker's qualification as executor and death, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1447, providing moneys due from executor to testator at time executor qualifies become assets of testator's estate in executor's hands, as statute of limitations does not run where parties occupy fiduciary relationship.

5. Limitation of actions 🔑102(1)—Statute of limitations does not run during continuance of fiduciary relationship.

Statute of limitations does not run where parties occupy fiduciary relationship towards each other, so long as such relationship is not repudiated.

6. Executors and administrators 🔑464—Executor's duty to account, being continuous, devolves upon personal representative on death.

Duty of executor to account is continuing duty, which devolves upon his personal representative at time of death.

7. Executors and administrators 🔑75—Personal representative acts in fiduciary capacity.

Personal representative acts in fiduciary capacity with relation to parties interested in estate.

8. Limitation of actions 🔑102(2)—Fiduciary relationship of executor to estate prevents running of statute of limitations.

Fiduciary relationship of executor to estate and parties interested therein stops running of statute of limitations, and precludes reliance thereon in action against personal representative of executor for accounting, irrespective of whether statute might be pleaded in action on debt itself.

---

★For opinion of Supreme Court adopting opinion of Court of Appeal, see 264 P. 242.

9. Executors and administrators 🔑294—Personal representative of testator held entitled to retainer and set-off for debt of deceased executor due estate, as against remote heirs claiming portion distributable to deceased executor.

Right of retainer and set-off for debt of deceased executor due estate could be exercised by personal representative of testator against remote heirs claiming under deceased executor for portion of estate which would have been his, inasmuch as portion of estate distributable to deceased executor could not be given to his heirs direct, but only to deceased executor's estate to be administered upon and then distributed after payment of debts.

10. Executors and administrators 🔑3(1)—Distribution could not be made direct to heirs of deceased legatee, but should first go to estate for administration and distribution.

Distribution of portion of estate of testator given to deceased executor could not be made direct to executor's heirs, but only to estate of deceased executor, to be administered upon and then distributed to his heirs, after payment of debts and ascertainment of right to inherit.

11. Executors and administrators 🔑464—Surviving executor could require accounting by personal representative of deceased executor for debt due estate, though no claim was filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1639).

Surviving executor of testator held entitled to accounting by deceased executor for debt due estate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, providing accounting may be had on petition of successor of executor who dies, notwithstanding no claim was ever filed against estate of deceased executor.

12. Executors and administrators 🔑463—Neither of two executors could avoid duty to account for assets, though coexecutor was under like duty (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1622–1639).

Where two executors qualified pursuant to will of deceased, no one of executors could avoid duty under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1622–1639, of accounting for moneys coming into their hands and for all moneys and properties for which they were chargeable, notwithstanding like obligation rested on coexecutor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased. Proceedings by the surviving executor to require the personal representative of Charles M. Clary, deceased executor, to account for the balance due on a promissory note made and executed by Charles M. Clary to Abraham E. Clary. On appeal from an order requiring an accounting. Affirmed.

Griffin, Boone & Boone and Edward T. Taylor, all of Modesto, for appellant.

Grant & Bailey, of Woodland, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This matter is before us upon an appeal from an order of the superior court, made and entered in the matter of a proceeding had and taken in said estate, as authorized and provided for in section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring the personal representative of Charles M. Clary, deceased, to account to the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, for the balance due upon a promissory note made and executed by Charles M. Clary to Abraham E. Clary.

It appears from the record that on or about the 1st day of August, 1918, Charles M. Clary made, executed and delivered to Abraham E. Clary his promissory note for the sum of $3,000, due one day after date; thereafter, and while this note was uncollected, the said Abraham E. Clary died testate in the county of Yolo, and Charles M. Clary and E. F. Clary, pursuant to the last will and testament of said Abraham E. Clary, were appointed, and on the 6th day of December, 1920, qualified as the executors of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased; thereafter, and on or about the 4th day of April, 1921, the said Charles M. Clary died intestate in the county of Monterey, state of California. Certain payments were made upon said promissory note by the said Charles M. Clary, and, upon the accounting taken and had in the superior court of Yolo county, the sum of $2,965.91 was found to be the remainder due upon said note, against which sum, the distributive share of $1,257.50 otherwise coming to the estate of Charles M. Clary, deceased, from Abraham E. Clary, deceased, was ordered retained as an offset and payment pro tanto of the moneys due from the estate of Charles M. Clary, deceased, to Abraham E. Clary, deceased.

[1] This matter was before this court upon a previous appeal, wherein it was sought to adjudicate questions relative to the indebtedness of the estate of Charles M. Clary to Abraham E. Clary, upon distribution in the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased. Estate of Clary, 71 Cal. App. 22, 234 P. 851. Upon that appeal it was held by this court that the court had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter of an accounting on the part of the personal representative of the estate of Charles M. Clary, deceased, for moneys due the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, upon distribution, and thereupon to order a set-off or retainer of the distributive share of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, which would otherwise be due and payable to the estate of Charles M. Clary, deceased, as payment pro tanto of the indebtedness of Charles M. Clary, deceased, to the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased; that section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure specified the procedure which must be taken in such cases, and that such procedure is now the exclusive remedy; that such an accounting cannot be had upon distribution, nor can such an accounting be had in a suit in equity. The portion of the decree of the superior court sitting as a court of probate purporting to adjudicate these matters was reversed. As we read the opinion of the Estate of Clary, supra, no other questions were adjudicated and determined upon the former hearing of this cause, and therefore there is no basis for the plea of res adjudicata urged by appellant upon this hearing. It is further specifically pointed out in the opinion to which we have referred that the procedure provided by section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the one to be followed by the executor of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, in order to compel the desired accounting. The language of the opinion is, "The proceeding for such accounting must be inaugurated under said section of the Code of Civil Procedure," and then concludes that, as the court did not follow such procedure, the action taken by it was without jurisdiction. The opinion referred to does cite a number of authorities in which it is held that assets cannot be collected upon distribution, but there is nothing in the opinion which prohibits, or in any way tends to prohibit, the superior court of Yolo county, on the going down of the remittitur, from proceeding, if proper pleadings were filed therefor, under section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to enforce the desired accounting.

Upon the going down of the remittitur, after the prior hearing of this cause, the surviving executor of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, instituted proceedings under and in accordance with the provisions of section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure to enforce an accounting by the representative of the estate of Charles M. Clary, deceased, of the amount of property and moneys in his hands belonging to the estate and constituting a part of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, at the time of the death of said Charles M. Clary, deceased, and upon this accounting an order fixing the indebtedness, as we have herein stated, was made in the probate court of Yolo county.

The proceedings had in the first instance, leading to the first appeal and the proceedings had in the appeal now before us, were and are both based upon section 1447 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under the terms of which all moneys due from the executor to a testator at the time the executor qualifies as such become assets of the estate of the testator in the hands of the executor, and hence renders the executor liable for the same as if so much money was in his hands. The note in this case was due at the time of the qualification of Charles M. Clary as executor of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, but against this note the statute of limitations had not yet run. This period would not have expired until some 18 months after the death of Charles M. Clary, deceased. The exact dates are immaterial. No accounting was ever made or rendered by Charles M. Clary, as executor of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, of the amount due upon said note or of what the Codes specify shall be considered as so much cash in his hands, nor was any accounting ever made or had thereof by the personal representative of Charles M. Clary, deceased, until the institution of the proceedings herein. The surviving executor of the estate of Abraham E. Clary filed an acount of his administration of said estate, called a "final account" and also a report therewith. In the account, termed a "final account," the surviving executor, E. F. Clary, made no mention of the promissory note herein referred to, but did attempt, as we have herein stated, to make collection of the same upon distribution as therein prayed for.

[2] Upon this appeal it is urged that the whole matter presented herein was and is res adjudicata; also that the proceeding is barred by the statute of limitations. A number of cases are cited upholding the finality of a final account, from which no appeal has been prosecuted, or which has been adjudicated upon appeal, in addition to urging that the questions involved herein have once been passed upon by this court, which we have just stated to be without merit. That an account becomes final as to all matters adjudicated, the authorities abundantly establish, but it is also true that it is not final as to nonadjudicated items. The text-writer in 24 C. J. p. 1029, § 2484, thus states the rule:

> "A final settlement is conclusive as to all matters, the proper subject of account, included in such a settlement or necessarily involved therein; but it is not conclusive as to matters not included or necessarily involved therein, or as to matters not within the jurisdiction of the court. The settlement is not conclusive as to assets not accounted for in such statement or received thereafter, but as to such assets the personal representative may be required to make a further settlement."

In the Matter of Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 358, 182 P. 303, the Supreme Court, having before it this same question, there said:

> "The settlement of an account is not conclusive, 'except as to such items as are included in it and actually passed upon by the probate court.'"

[3-5] See, also, Estate of Adams, 131 Cal. 415, 63 P. 838, where the same holding is had.

When Charles M. Clary, on the 6th day of December, qualified as an executor of the last will and testament of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, he became a voluntary trustee of the property and assets of the estate of Abraham E. Clary, deceased, holding the same for the benefit of the devisees and legatees, under the terms of the last will and testament of Abraham E. Clary, deceased. Thus, as pointed out in 16 California Jurisprudence, p. 420 et seq., §§ 30 to 37, the rule is that the statute of limitations does not run where the parties occupy a fiduciary relationship toward each other, so long as such relationship is not repudiated. Thus, a guardian may not acquire title by adverse possession against his ward, nor an agent against his principal, nor an executor against the heirs. As to the latter, the rule is stated in this language:

> "Pending the administration of an estate, the possession of an administrator is not adverse to that of an heir; he cannot acquire an adverse title by possession for the statutory period."

In MacMullan v. Kelly, 19 Cal. App. 700, 127 P. 819, the court, having before it the question of the running of the statute of limitations where one occupied the position of a voluntary trustee, thus announced the rule:

